Rockefeller Foundation
Innovation for the Next 100 Years

The Rockefeller Foundation
Annual Report 2011

president's letter.

At the beginning of the second decade of the new millennium, the ground is shifting beneath us. The impacts of climate change are accelerating. The global population is growing rapidly and restlessly. Much of our work at The Rockefeller Foundation focuses on innovating to meet these 21st century challenges. As we present our 2011 Annual Report, it is worth pausing to consider a question fundamental to Rockefeller's mission: why innovation?

Sometimes, it seems a word without weight. Last year, "innovative" had the dubious distinction of being the second-most overused term in LinkedIn's 85-million user profiles. (In my local grocery store, I've even seen the word applied to thin-crust frozen pizza.) But at Rockefeller, innovation is much more than a buzz-word—it is our byword, the past and future of our foundation. We have always understood that in a world of ever-increasing complexity, success goes to the non-linear, the aggregator, the connector. Solutions flow from the innovator.

Innovation—what John D. Rockefeller called "scientific philanthropy"—has defined our mission for nearly a century, as Rockefeller researchers and resources created the field of public health, or launched a Green Revolution in agriculture credited with saving a billion lives. None of these advances were straightforward or predictable. They required reframing problems and recombining insights. Pioneering Rockefeller scientists, for instance, saw food security not just as a problem of agricultural science, but of economics, sociology, and psychology as well. As one of Rockefeller's grantees once observed, "You cannot solve a problem at the same level of consciousness that created it. You must look at the world anew." That grantee was Albert Einstein, and he was right; to solve problems, we must look at the world anew.

Today, at first glance, we see a world in which food insecurity is exacerbated by shifting weather patterns, the search for alternative energy solutions, and rapidly shifting global market dynamics. We see city infra-structure overwhelmed by unprecedented urban migration, and mutating bacteria and viruses developing resistance to vaccines, as they race through populations around the world.

But then we tilt our heads slightly. We bring together experts and range broadly across disciplines. We see with new eyes. We innovate.

Others pioneered microcredit, but Rockefeller is pairing that invention with weather-calibrated microinsurance for farmers in sub-Saharan Africa. The emerging sector of impact investment existed previously, but Rockefeller realized that creating uniform standards would further unleash private capital to alleviate social ills.

Recognizing that the profound impact of innovations are compounded, multiplied, and reapplied, Rockefeller is committed to strengthening the institutions and infrastructure of innovation—the processes of innovation. This year we have focused on six major issue areas: transportation, food security, urban climate resilience, health infrastructure, impact investing, and innovation itself. As you will see in this report, what unites all Rockefeller projects is a desire to harness networks, compile data, and build systems, with an eye toward catalyzing the next big breakthrough.

John D. Rockefeller said, "If you want to succeed you should strike out on new paths, rather than travel the worn paths of accepted success." We have taken our founder's words to heart. Without innovation—without striking out on new paths—our present tools will prove insufficient to overcome the challenges of our time. After all, innovation is not just a word; it is one of the world's most powerful frameworks, because, in a way, it teaches us to reject frameworks. It allows us to size up and take on the 21st century's most insurmountable difficulties by being relentlessly creative.

Innovation is the triumph of the imagination. It's what drives us at Rockefeller, and I urge you to take a moment to see the results.

Strengthening Food Security

cursed crops.

After years of poor maize harvests, Joseph Onyango was at his wit's end, convinced that his clan had cast an evil spell on his farm in western Kenya. How else to explain the failure of his fields? Distressed, he sought advice from his friend, whose far-off fields were flourishing. Joseph's friend had been in contact with researchers from the Kenya Agricultural Research Institute, and his answer both surprised and relieved Joseph.

What was killing his crops, Joseph's friend explained, was not sorcery, but acidity. Spreading a little lime on his fields would raise the soil pH and increase the availability of nutrients. This, in turn, would improve the yield of Joseph's fields. Before long, maize production on Joseph's half-hectare tripled.[1]

Sub-Saharan Africa's nearly 600 million smallholder farmers are widely impacted not by witchcraft, but by harsh geography and sparse agricultural education. Some regions suffer from a shortfall of rainfall, while in others the soil washes away from heavy rain. Western Kenya can boast only about half a million arable acres, and even that land is relatively marginal, with high levels of acidity and low levels of vital nutrients. Harvesting advice is often hearsay, meaning that many farmers have little idea of how to maximize their meager production. And Africa's population is growing, even if its crops aren't.

A Fruitful Start

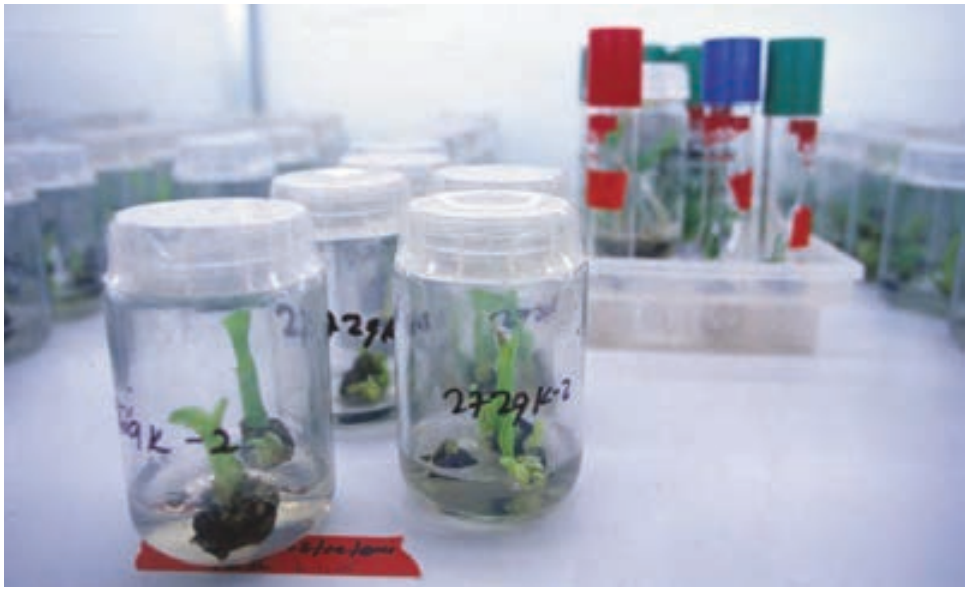
Recognizing the need to address Africa's agricultural challenges, The Rockefeller Foundation and the Gates Foundation joined together in 2006 to form the Alliance for a Green Revolution in Africa. By bringing together government leaders and policymakers, agricultural experts, and smallholders across 13 countries, AGRA aims to create a secure, sustainable agricultural future for Africa's small farmers. Our goal is to halve food insecurity in 20 African countries, while doubling the incomes of 20 million smallholders.

Five years after co-founding AGRA, Rockefeller continues to support the organization as it matures, transitions to new leadership, and expands its partnerships with other key breadbasket countries. Whether improving market access and agricultural education, experimenting with hardier, higher-yield seeds, or replenishing degraded soils through methods like the ones Joseph and his friend have implemented, AGRA's efforts have, quite literally, taken root and borne fruit.

Turning the Tide

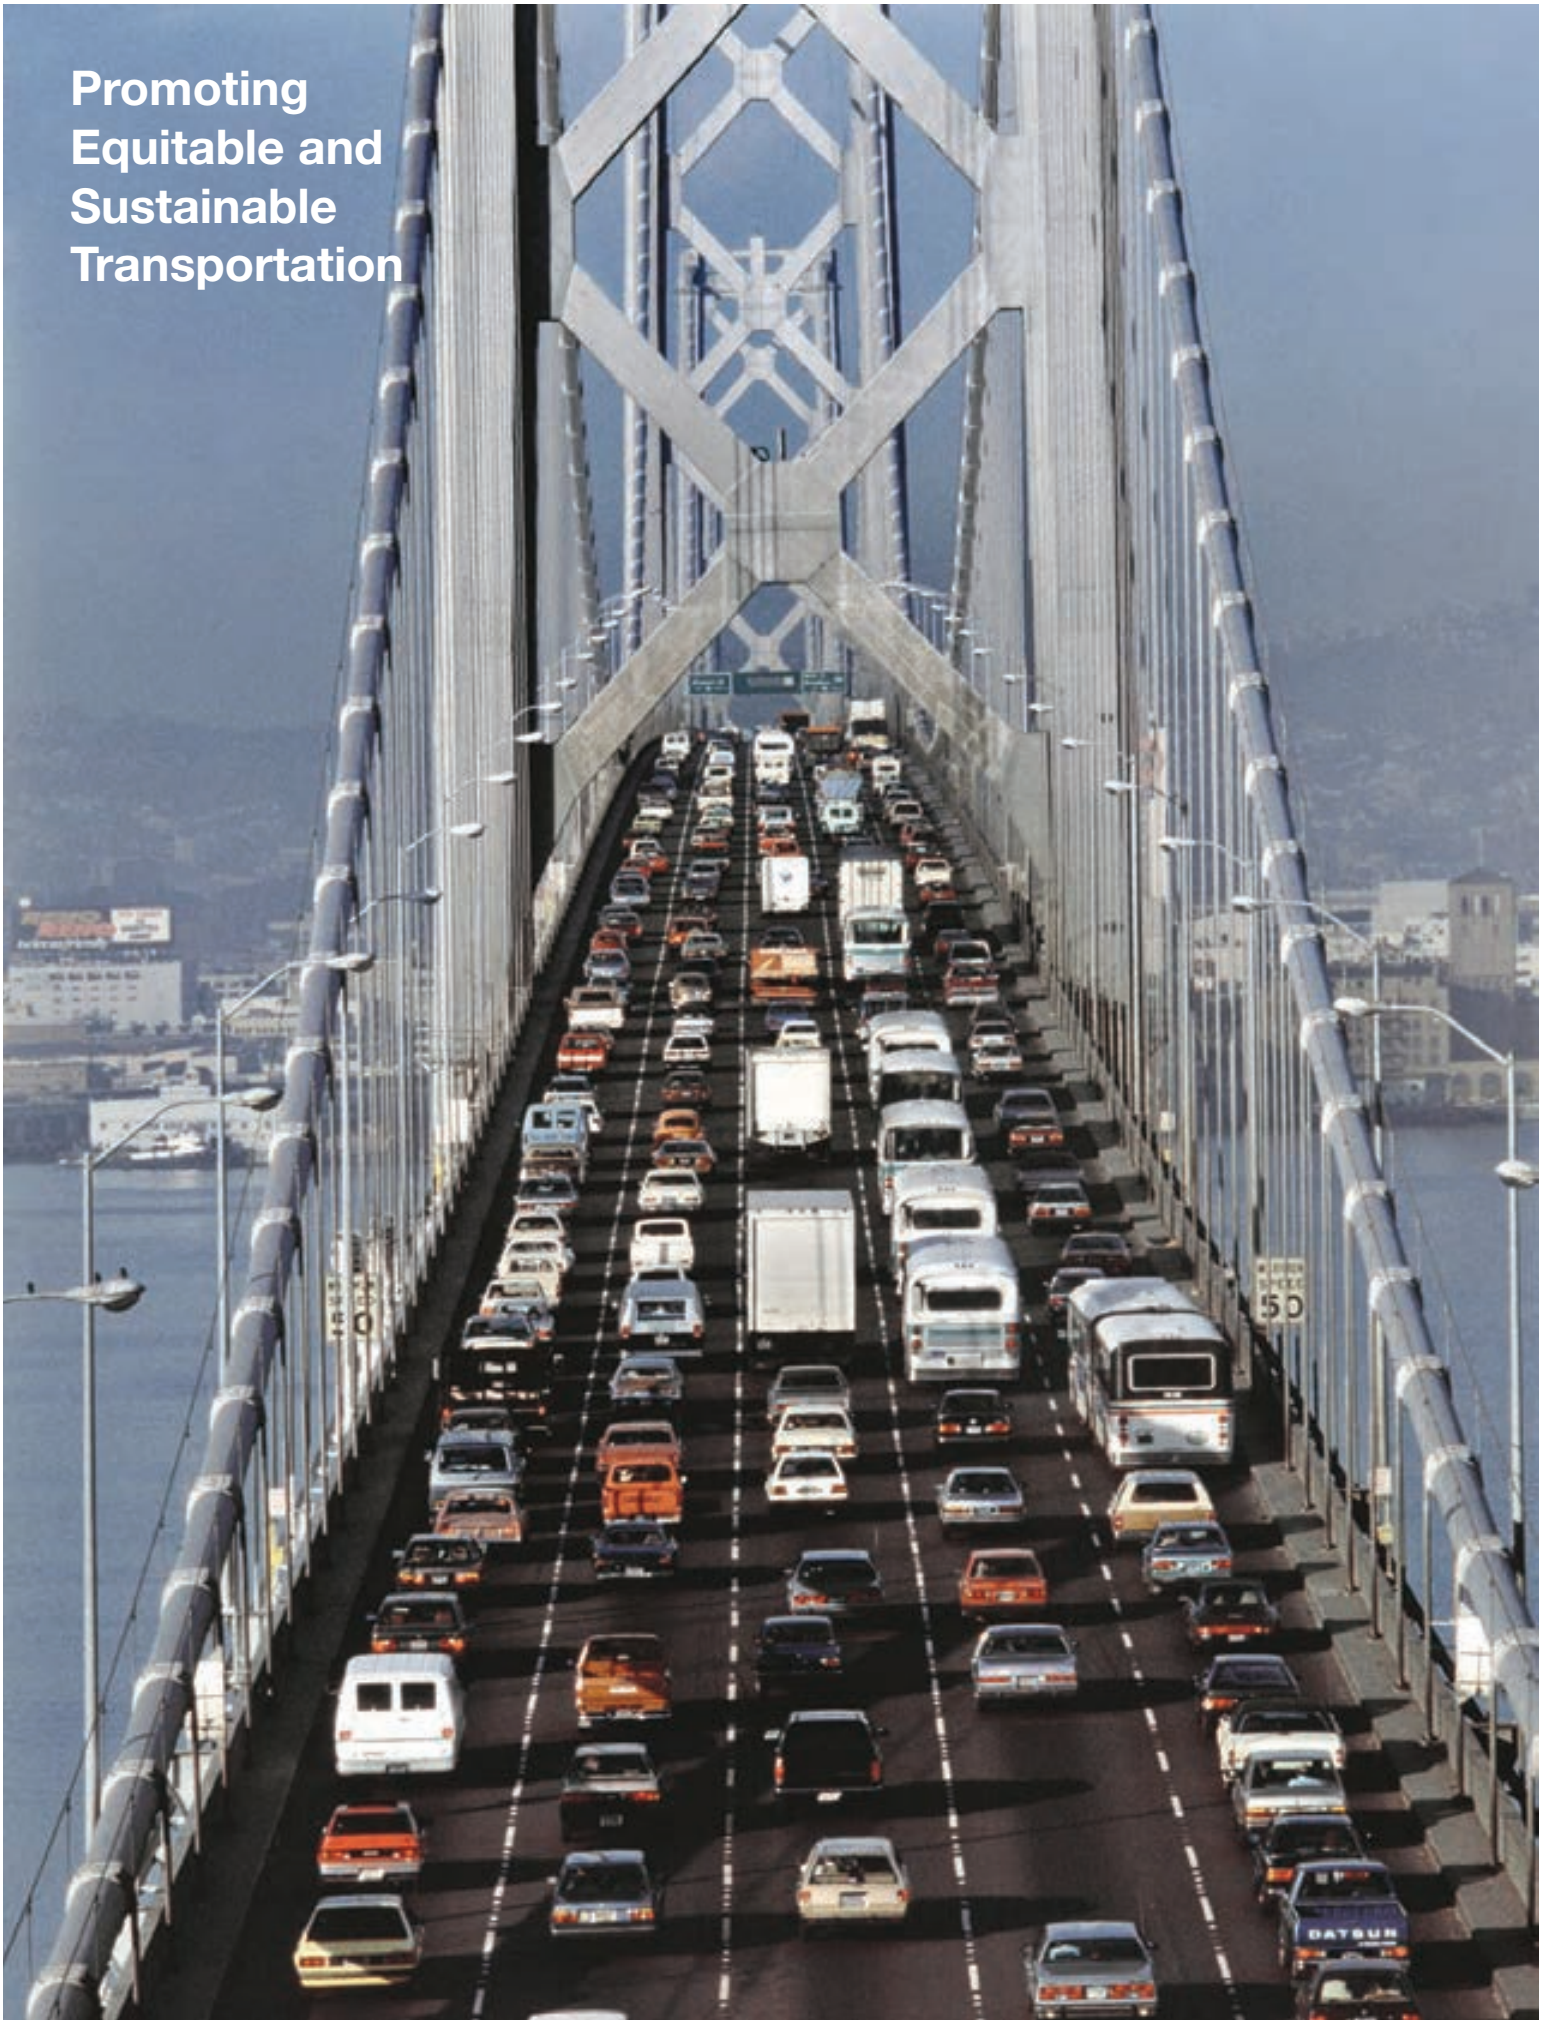
When Norman Borlaug accepted the 1970 Nobel Peace Prize, he declared his belief that "the Green Revolution has not yet been won." Despite the astounding success of Borlaug and other Rockefeller scientists in revolutionizing agriculture to save one billion lives, the "Father of the Green Revolution" believed that food insecurity would continue to plague our planet. He was right.

That is why The Rockefeller Foundation remains as committed to promoting food security today as we were half a century ago. And though the challenge is old, our methods and tools are new. If the rapidly escalating frequency and impact of extreme weather events is undermining our crops, we will work with farmers on the ground and researchers in the lab to engineer more resilient, adaptive seeds. If the rain fails to fall, we will work with policymakers and leading NGOs to create targeted, innovative safety nets for stricken smallholders. With the relentless innovation and commitment to collaboration that has been our hallmark for nearly a century, we will, eventually, turn the tide.



Seeds for Development

Promoting Equitable and Sustainable Transportation



a sprawling problem.

Wildfires. Earthquakes. Drought. These are just a few of the hazards that Southern California must contend with. Then again, one of the most destructive forces in the region is manmade: gridlock.

The average Los Angeles commuter spends more hours stuck in traffic than commuters in any other US city—a whopping 72 hours annually.[1] The impacts are felt across society—and disproportionally amongst poor communities—from lost economic activity, to increased road and vehicle maintenance costs, to adverse health impacts. From auto emissions to lack of physical activity while sitting in traffic for hours on end, lengthy commutes mean an increased risk of disease—including asthma and obesity—and a higher instance of traffic fatalities, the leading cause of death among young Americans.

It's not just LA. The consequences of unchecked development, of suburbs and exurbs extending mile after haphazard mile, threaten the wellbeing of every community in America and the health of our planet. Every year, the average American spends the equivalent of 55 eight-hour workdays in a car.[2] Commuting also releases more than 1.7 billion metric tons of carbon released into the atmosphere,[3] contributing to global climate change.

Implementing Innovation

In 2008, the California legislature passed S.B. 375, the Sustainable Communities and Climate Protection Act, to reduce greenhouse gases by encouraging sustainable transportation and smart growth. The bill sets regional emissions targets, and then requires communities to develop innovative strategies to achieve them. As the state struggles with partisanship and severe budget shortfalls, however, implementing these sustainable growth policies has proven highly challenging.

To facilitate communities meeting their emissions targets, Rockefeller has supported a number of advocacy organizations, including the Resources Legacy Fund, the American Lung Association, and MOVE LA. Together, these groups have launched an effective, coordinated campaign to persuade, educate and support communities executing their smart growth goals. Thanks to these efforts, even one of the most car dependent regions of California—home to nearly half of the state's 37 million residents—voted to dramatically increase funding for public transit and more compact land-use. Rockefeller is helping to prove that if we can develop sustainable communities in the most populous and diverse state in the country, we can do it everywhere.

Growing Together

As The Rockefeller Foundation has grown over the past century, we watched the cities and suburbs around us grow as well. And we acted to ensure they would grow in a positive direction. With a single grant to an unknown young woman named Jane Jacobs, we helped establish the field of urban theory and design in the late 1950s. Later, we directed crucial seed money to community-based development organizations during and after the urban crisis of the 1960s and 70s; and opened new doors to affordable and supportive housing through the 1980s and 90s. In 2011, our work on smart growth drew on a half century's experience of thinking about and working in urban planning, particularly critical as the interconnected and accelerating forces of globalization and urbanization mobilize a worldwide demographic revolution. Our commitment has not wavered, even as we innovate and experiment with new solutions.

Transforming Health Systems

A pregnant woman walks into a health clinic in Dhaka, the capital of Bangladesh, a sprawling metropolis home to more than 16 million people. The woman is experiencing abdominal pain, and she's desperate for help, fearing for the health of her unborn child, and for her own.

But this makeshift clinic is located in the impoverished slum where the woman lives. It is under-resourced and understaffed. There is no doctor on hand, just an untrained, barely-literate health care worker. The clinic has only the most basic supplies and medicine. The closest hospital is miles away. The woman's chances of getting the help she needs seems just as remote.

The health care worker takes out her cellphone. Through an SMS texting service, the worker contacts the main hospital, where a neonatal physician helps to diagnose the woman's condition—gestational hypertension—and prescribe a course of treatment. Despite her pain, the pregnant woman is overcome by relief. She understands her condition, and she's been given the basic yet critical medicine and information needed to protect herself and her baby from further complications.

Re-Imagining Health Care Delivery

In a makeshift clinic, in an impoverished slum, and in less than three minutes, the pregnant woman described above received medical treatment with better technology and faster service than what is available in many parts of the developed world. This is the vision of the BRAC Manoshi maternal and neonatal care service in Bangladesh. BRAC is a leading Bangladeshi NGO and, through its work with a number of partners, a pioneer of mobile-health solutions in the developing world. The Rockefeller Foundation is helping BRAC test and deploy mobile health services that address maternal and child health issues for slum dwellers.

This is a critical issue in Bangladesh, where maternal and neonatal mortality are critical concerns. Bangladesh ranks seventh among the 42 countries that account for 90 percent of all childhood deaths worldwide.[1] A major contributing factor to this terrible statistic is the simple lack of risk assessment, timely intervention, and prioritized treatment for pregnant women.

1—Note: This fact and language taken directly from the BRAC grant memo.

While high-tech hospitals are out of the reach for many people in the developing world, cell phones are widely available. According to the International Telecommunications Union, 79 percent of those living in developing countries have cell phones.[2] BRAC is helping to change the health care equation in Bangladesh by leveraging increasingly ubiquitous mobile technology to deliver basic health care services wherever and whenever they are needed.

Universal Access Through the Innovation Process

New technologies and demographic, epidemiologic, and economic shifts are transforming health systems around the world. At The Rockefeller Foundation, we believe there is a window of opportunity to promote strategies that steer this transformation toward better health outcomes. That's why we focus on "transforming health systems" by brokering new partnerships, searching for sustainable solutions, and—most importantly—fostering innovation through pioneering grantees like BRAC. Today, while universal access to health care remains a distant dream, each new innovation brings us one step closer to the realization of care for all those in need, no matter their economic status or the place they call home.

Linking Global Disease Surveillance Networks

containing the contagion.

When doctors at a hospital in Laos attempted to diagnose a young girl suffering from flu-like symptoms, they came up with more questions than answers. They quickly exhausted their testing and treatment capabilities with no successful diagnosis. Instead of simply administering basic care and attempting to provide the girl some comfort, the doctors contacted a network of colleagues and officials throughout Laos and Thailand. The girl was sent to a hospital in Thailand, where she was ultimately diagnosed with Avian Flu. Multinational health teams were immediately activated and visited 20 separate villages in regions close to the sick girl's home. They interviewed 8,000 families and identified 150 people with flu symptoms. Their quick response helped stem the spread of a dangerous contagion.

Unfortunately, this level of response to an emerging pandemic is the exception, not the rule. In 2009, the H1N1 "swine flu" pandemic spread from Mexico and killed an estimated 300,000-500,000 people.[1] As global hotbeds for infectious diseases, Southeast Asia and Africa were particularly hard-hit. Yet in lives lost and economies disrupted, disease pandemics are threats that know no borders. They can come from anywhere—and be everywhere—in the blink of a microbial eye. Our response must be equally swift.

Detecting and Defeating Disease

Today, our global resources are nowhere near sufficient to monitor and respond to these public health crises. Experts in human, animal, and environmental health frequently remain dangerously uninformed of their colleagues' work, exacerbating the spread of diseases passed from animals to humans. Patchwork public health organizations often lacked strong relationships and open lines of communication. Detecting a deadly disease and deciding upon a course of action can take weeks—and those are weeks we don't have.

That's why The Rockefeller Foundation catalyzed the creation of the Mekong Basin Disease Surveillance Network (MBDSN) in Asia. The network links together six countries—Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar, Vietnam, Thailand, and the Yunnan Province of China—to form new collaborations that can help slow the spread of disease. MBDSN countries collaborate on improving health outcomes, empowering and educating health workers, and slowing the spread of disease by working together to exchange information, training, response efforts, and disaster preparedness.

In addition to financial support, The Rockefeller Foundation has assisted MBDSN by supporting the creation of sophisticated technology tracking of outbreak patterns; regular cross-border information exchange; joint investigation and response; training of health personnel; and disaster preparedness response.

Ending "the Supreme Ill in Human Life"

At The Rockefeller Foundation's very first board meeting, it was argued that since "disease is the supreme ill in human life," curtailing it should be one of the Foundation's primary goals. Rockefeller researchers, with brilliant interdisciplinary insights and relentless efforts, answered the call. They struck down hookworm in the American South and chased malaria out of the western hemisphere. In 1937, the year John D. Rockefeller died, Rockefeller scientists developed a vaccine for yellow fever, a disease so deadly that people stopped shaking hands for fear of transmission. Along the way, the Foundation seeded preeminent schools of public health and international health organizations.

Our task in this 21st century is to carry on The Rockefeller Foundation's legacy of leadership in public health, recognizing that in a fast-paced, globalized world we must build flexible, coordinated systems that can move as quickly as a virus on a 747 airplane. In pursuing this vision, we draw on a rich history. We know from experience that the world can stop the spread of disease when we have ensured the spread of knowledge.

Harnessing the Power of Impact Investing a sweet investment.

For the beekeepers of Bee Natural Uganda Ltd., it was rejection that stung the most. Despite producing high-quality honey and candles for East Africa, when the small honey business wanted to purchase a processing plant and secure working capital, investors turned away. Microfinance organizations said Bee Natural was too big and established. Commercial banks considered them too small and risky. The workers of this environmentally conscious enterprise—70 percent of whom are women—were slipping through capitalism's cracks.

Enter the African Agricultural Capital Fund. Capitalized by Rockefeller and other foundations, and guaranteed in part by USAID, the $25 million fund seeks out agribusinesses with the potential to grow the income and productivity of a quarter million East African households. AACF invested in Bee Natural early, allowing the Ugandan business to improve its processing, employment and training capabilities. Increased yields could quadruple each small farmer's honey income and offer the fund's investors a sweet payoff, as well.

The Missing Middle

The mathematics of social welfare is stark. We have trillions in social needs and only billions—combining all foreign aid and philanthropic donations—with which to address them. For-profit capital markets, though, hold over $100 trillion globally, giving rise to an emerging industry directing a portion of that capital into alleviating climate change, food insecurity, inadequate income, and poor health.

As a largely untested industry, impact investing faces challenges ranging from the need for shared infrastructure to a set of standards and metrics that can help generate the greatest possible social impact. Crucially, the field lacks strong mechanisms linking investors to businesses on the demand side—the small and emerging enterprises (SME's) like Bee Natural. These businesses account for more than half the GDP and employment of developed countries, but less than a fifth of GDP and employment in the developing world. We can't lift the bottom billion, without first filling in the "missing middle."

In addition to our ongoing efforts to standardize and institutionalize impact investing infrastructure, The Rockefeller Foundation is pioneering new equity vehicles for SME investment and development. This unique AACF consortium—managed by Kampala-based Pearl Capital Partners and supported by the Rockefeller, BMGF, and Gatsby foundations, USAID, and J.P. Morgan—is directing long-term risk capital to scale agribusinesses that create jobs, contribute to food security and deliver financial returns.

Along with its Bee Natural investment, AACF has, quite literally, provided seed capital to two East African seed companies. Each employs roughly 200 people, and AACF's investments have enabled them to provide greater and more varied maize, soy, sorghum, and rice seeds, while pushing for improved agricultural technology and local infrastructure. The AACF is a prime example of how government, civil society, and the private sector can work together to provide employment opportunities for the poor through impact investments, and it represents the first stage of a potential pooled equity Partnership for African Agriculture.

A Second Philanthropic Revolution

When John D. Rockefeller established The Rockefeller Foundation a century ago, he created the field of global philanthropy and revolutionized global giving. For the first time, private capital was directed toward public needs. It was $183 million of Rockefeller's own money, wisely distributed, that directly led to a yellow fever vaccine and lifesaving agricultural innovations. His was the original impact investment.

Today, Rockefeller's foundation is pioneering a second philanthropic revolution, once again unlocking the vast resources of private capital for the good of the globe. Impact investing offers us the chance to honor and update Rockefeller's original investment so it can have the greatest possible impact in the coming century.

Harnessing Innovation to Accelerate Impact planning for the worst.

Rioting in a dozen cities around the world as millions take to the streets to protest an increase in food prices. The Nile slowing to a trickle, causing food shortages and the spread of epidemics throughout Cairo's poor neighborhoods. The bankruptcy of a major American city, precipitated by the closing of its once thriving port. These were the fabricated—yet very possible—scenarios presented to the participants of The Rockefeller Foundation's inaugural Innovation Forum in 2011.

Highlighted by the presentation of The Rockefeller Foundation Innovation Award to Dr. Sania Nishtar of Pakistan, Jane Weru of Kenya, the global organization Kiva Kids and President Bill Clinton, the annual Innovation Forum was launched in 2011 to gather some of the most creative and inventive minds from the worlds of business, government, civil society and journalism to bring innovation to bear on urgent challenges facing poor or vulnerable people around the world. Convening in New York on July 27, we focused our efforts on three key issues—urbanization, water security and food security.

Reframing Problems

Participants gathered in breakout sessions and viewed vivid mock news-casts outlining the future problems that could result if we do not adequately address these key issues. The conversations in the breakout sessions revolved around reframing these problems—and through the reframing of them—the unearthing of new solutions.

After pouring through the transcripts of the breakouts, we created thirty-four areas for big ideas across a full range of development topics. Then, we recruited even more outside voices to reframe and combine some of these ideas into six core areas of opportunity:

- Urban Blueprinting—replicating environments that fuel entrepreneurship and foster innovative culture in emerging cities, and restructuring incentives to inspire creative responses and revitalize urban spaces;

- Anchoring Regions—enabling cities to use existing anchors more effectively and realize new ones, and allocating services and expertise to overcome political obstacles that hamper regional cooperation;
- Civic Pioneering—empowering municipal leaders with new models for learning and breaking with short-term thinking to build a practice around long-term vision setting;
- Irrigating Efficiency—ensuring the adoption of micro-irrigation technologies;
- Farming Now—recreating a renewed belief and deep sense of purpose among farming communities and creating peri-urban farming areas that draw young people; and
- Decoding Data—focusing on the data that is most useful and actionable.

Issuing Challenges

Of these six areas, the first three are being tackled through our own grant-making and the latter three were presented to the world in an open invitation to problem solving through our 2012 Rockefeller Foundation Innovation Challenge. The Innovation Challenge engaged a variety of audiences in a number of ways—including a Twitter Conference—to discover the best solutions to these challenges. Eventually we received almost 2,000 responses, with entries coming from all corners of the globe. From these 2,000, eight were chosen as the most promising, giving each winner the opportunity to apply for a $100,000 grant from the Foundation to help further develop their ideas.

A Signature Approach

For almost 100 years, The Rockefeller Foundation has enabled innovations that have resulted in huge improvements to the well-being of humanity. From funding an unknown scholar named Albert Einstein in 1913 to founding the field of public health and supporting the work of Norman Borlaug, the father of the Green Revolution, The Rockefeller Foundation has always been committed to identifying innovations, scaling them and applying them to the most pressing challenges facing humankind.

The annual Rockefeller Foundation Innovation Forum and its Challenge Grants demonstrate our abiding commitment to bringing our signature innovative approach to bear on the increasingly complex problems facing humanity in the 21st century.

Developing Climate Change Resilience: Asian Cities Climate Change Resilience Network

shelter from the storm.

Do Thi Phuong Thao lives with her two children in the central Vietnamese city of Da Nang, in the Son Tra District. She sells sticky rice on the streets of the city, which is cradled between the ocean, rivers, and mountains. This geography makes Da Nang particularly beautiful, but also vulnerable to natural disasters, such as typhoons and floods. Thao knows the dangers all too well. The rainy season often brings floodwater to her neighborhood and damage to her home. Storm winds have torn off her roof in the past. With destructive weather increasing in frequency and ferocity, she fears for her livelihood and the safety and security of her family.

From Climate Uncertainty to Long-Term Security

Countless families in large cities and small villages across Southeast Asia are confronting the same frightening scenario faced by Thao and her children. It's easy to imagine the feeling of helplessness. Extreme weather events are hard to predict and impossible to control. And how can families struggling to make ends meet possibly invest in the infrastructure of their modest homes to protect against destructive storms?

That's why the Da Nang Women's Union has developed an innovative program that offers low-interest loans to families throughout Da Nang. The loans enable families to reinforce their homes and make them more resistant to storms. The program also disseminates storm-resistant design and construction techniques through the training of local households to monitor construction and through the development of technical construction guidelines.

In 2011, thanks to the Asian Cities Climate Change Resilience Network (ACCCRN), Thao was able to apply for a loan to protect her home from extreme weather and to secure her family's long-term safety. The Da Nang Women's Union aims to support 320 households with home improvement loans by 2014. Ultimately, project managers hope this approach will be replicated in provinces throughout Vietnam.

Resilience Through Innovation

The Rockefeller Foundation is committed to helping at-risk communities strengthen their ability to prepare for and absorb adverse climate impacts. ACCCRN is the centerpiece of this effort in Southeast Asia, and a landmark climate change mitigation coalition in the developing world. ACCCRN works in 10 pilot cities in Thailand, Vietnam, Indonesia, and India, to build the capacity, knowledge sharing, and scalability needed to help their citizens to adjust to a warming world. The Rockefeller Foundation has committed $60 million to ACCCRN to develop innovative approaches for cities to build physical and structural resilience to withstand and recover from the impacts of climate change and sharing lessons learned with other cities and countries. With Rockefeller support, ACCCRN is developing approaches that will enable its interventions to be adopted at scale.

One million people are moving to cities in the developing world every five days. And over the next 30 years, 60 percent of the world's population increase will occur in Asian cities alone. These cities are the epicenter of risk when it comes to global climate change. Mitigating this risk requires building resilience in the face of a changing climate. And building resilience requires innovating in the face of new challenges. That's where The Rockefeller Foundation comes in—leveraging its century-long history of developing and deploying new innovations to help the world overcome unprecedented challenges.

Developing Climate Change Resilience: Horn of Africa Risk Transfer for Adaptation watching and waiting.

Medhin Reda watches for rain. When she isn't farming or looking after her family, Medhin looks up at the sky apprehensively, fretting about the increasingly irregular rainfall in her rocky corner of northern Ethiopia. Not long ago, the rains came six weeks late to Tigray, and the teff crop that is her livelihood suffered. So Medhin watches and waits, the uncertainty hanging in the dry air.[1]

It's a vicious cycle that keeps millions mired in subsistence-level conditions. Many of the world's poorest farmers live on marginal land, eking out an existence tilling poor soils on steep hillsides, praying for rain. Climate change threatens their already precarious living, with African crop yields projected to drop 10-20 percent by 2050. Yet these smallholders often have nowhere to turn, and no way to plan for the impending upheaval. Most microfinance institutions are wary of lending to such poor credit risks. So when drought or disaster strikes, the farmers sell off what little they have and hope the next season will be better. Their children—forced to abandon the classroom to work the family fields—will also watch and wait.

Micro Insurance, Macro Impact

In response to these critical climate challenges, The Rockefeller Foundation—in partnership with Oxfam, the Swiss Re insurance company and local farmers—has helped develop an innovative, weather-indexed microinsurance system that compensates farmers in the event of insufficient rainfall. In 2011, the success of this Horn of Africa Risk Transfer for Adaptation (HARITA) model led us to join with the United Nations World Food Programme to scale HARITA into a four-country Rural Resilience Initiative.

Now, 13,000 Ethiopian smallholders like Medhin Reda pay their insurance premiums by working on critical projects for their communities —building irrigation systems, fertilizing fields, and re-vegetating the hillsides. Now when drought hits, Medhin's insurance payout allows her to feed her family, and even send her youngest daughter to school. And the community labor she and others do is making their region of northern Ethiopia more resilient to the harsh impacts of a changing climate. Recently, 1,800 Ethiopian farmers successfully received their payouts, and soon, thousands more will have the chance to see their incomes, their children, and their communities grow, even when their crops don't.

A Matter of Survival

In the United States and other Western nations, climate change is the subject of debate—its cause, its effect, and the policy implications of a warming world. In the developing world, however, climate change is a matter of survival. Climate change has caused weather patterns to shift, droughts and floods to ravage local communities, crops to fail and economies to falter. It is against the backdrop of climate change that today, across the globe, more than a billion people are chronically hungry. Over the next decade, one hundred million more will go to bed with empty stomachs.[2] The implications of climate change—from agriculture to economics to urbanization—are just beginning to be felt. That's why The Rockefeller Foundation's Climate Change Resilience Initiative supports strategies and services that help communities cope with the impacts of imminent and worsening global climate disruption.

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION'S MISSION TO PROMOTE THE WELL-BEING OF PEOPLE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD HAS REMAINED UNCHANGED SINCE ITS FOUNDING IN 1913. TODAY, THAT MISSION IS APPLIED TO AN ERA OF RAPID GLOBALIZATION. OUR VISION IS THAT THIS CENTURY WILL BE ONE IN WHICH GLOBALIZATION'S BENEFITS ARE MORE WIDELY SHARED AND ITS CHALLENGES ARE MORE EASILY WEATHERED. TO REALIZE THIS VISION, THE FOUNDATION SEEKS TO ACHIEVE TWO FUNDAMENTAL GOALS IN OUR WORK. FIRST, WE SEEK TO BUILD RESILIENCE THAT ENHANCES INDIVIDUAL, COMMUNITY AND INSTITUTIONAL CAPACITY TO SURVIVE, ADAPT, AND GROW IN THE FACE OF ACUTE CRISES AND CHRONIC STRESSES. SECOND, WE SEEK TO PROMOTE GROWTH WITH EQUITY IN WHICH THE POOR AND VULNERABLE HAVE MORE ACCESS TO OPPORTUNITIES THAT IMPROVE THEIR LIVES. IN ORDER TO ACHIEVE THESE GOALS, THE FOUNDATION CONSTRUCTS ITS WORK INTO TIME-BOUND INITIATIVES THAT HAVE DEFINED OBJECTIVES AND STRATEGIES FOR IMPACT. THESE INITIATIVES ADDRESS CHALLENGES THAT LIE EITHER WITHIN OR AT THE INTERSECTIONS OF FIVE ISSUE AREAS: BASIC SURVIVAL SAFEGUARDS, GLOBAL HEALTH, ENVIRONMENT AND CLIMATE CHANGE, URBANIZATION, AND SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC SECURITY. CURRENT INITIATIVES, AS WELL AS AREAS BEING EXPLORED FOR FUTURE INITIATIVES, ARE DESCRIBED ON THE FOUNDATION'S WEB SITE AT WWW.ROCKEFELLERFOUNDATION.ORG, WHICH IS CONTINUALLY UPDATED. 990PF, PART VII-B, LINE 5(C)	EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY GRANTS AND PRIS

GENERAL EXPLANATION STATEMENT 32

THE FOLLOWING TEXT RELATES TO THE STATEMENT 21, THE EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY STATEMENT, IN RESPONSE TO PART VII-B, LINE 5C.

PROSPECTIVE GRANTEES ARE ASKED TO FURNISH INFORMATION IN ORDER TO ENABLE THE FOUNDATION TO DETERMINE WHETHER THEY HAVE RECEIVED A DETERMINATION OF 501(C)(3) STATUS FROM THE U.S. INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE OR MAY BE CONSIDERED THE EQUIVALENT OF A TAX-EXEMPT CHARITY, IF FORMED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES. PROSPECTIVE GRANTEES WITH RESPECT TO WHOM THE FOUNDATION IS BELIEVED TO HAVE "EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY" OBLIGATIONS ARE INFORMED BY LETTER, BEFORE PAYMENT IS MADE ON A GRANT, OF THE RESPONSIBILITIES IMPOSED UPON THE FOUNDATION AND ITS GRANTEES BY THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986, AS AMENDED. EACH GRANTEE MUST AGREE IN WRITING TO THOSE TERMS AND CONDITIONS, INCLUDING THE OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL AND SUBSTANTIVE REPORTS ON HOW FOUNDATION GRANT FUNDS ARE EXPENDED. THE REPORTS THAT ARE RECEIVED ARE REVIEWED FOR GENERAL ACCURACY, SUFFICIENCY AND COMPLIANCE WITH THE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF THE GRANT. ADDITIONAL INFORMATION IS REQUESTED FROM GRANTEES IN INSTANCES WHERE REPORTS ARE CONSIDERED INADEQUATE. WHERE THE FOUNDATION HAS NOT RECEIVED FINANCIAL OR SUBSTANTIVE REPORTS FROM A GRANTEE WHEN EXPECTED, FOUNDATION STAFF FOLLOW UP IN SEVERAL WAYS, INCLUDING REMINDERS THAT ARE SENT AT REGULAR INTERVALS AFTER REPORTS ARE EXPECTED AND PERSONAL FOLLOW-UP BY PROGRAM STAFF THROUGH TELEPHONE, MAIL AND E-MAIL.

THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT LISTS GRANT AND PROGRAM-RELATED INVESTMENT EXPENDITURES WITH RESPECT TO WHICH THE FOUNDATION HAS EXERCISED EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY. WHERE THE GRANTEE'S NAME IS FOLLOWED BY AN ASTERISK (*), THE GRANTEE ORGANIZATION IS EITHER A PRIVATE FOUNDATION, A PRIVATE OPERATING FOUNDATION, OR A FOREIGN PRIVATE-FOUNDATION EQUIVALENT. ALL OTHER GRANTEES ARE NON-501(C)(3) ORGANIZATIONS OR ORGANIZATIONS FOR WHICH THE FOUNDATION HAS NOT MADE A REASONABLE DETERMINATION OF 501(C)(3) EQUIVALENCY STATUS THAT RECEIVED GRANTS FOR CHARITABLE PROJECTS AND MAINTAINED PAYMENTS IN SEGREGATED FUNDS AS REQUIRED BY TREASURY REG. 53.4945-6(C).

THE DATES OF THE REPORTS SHOWN ARE EITHER FINANCIAL REPORTS OR NARRATIVE REPORTS. IF A PARTICULAR GRANT EXPENDITURE IS SHOWN TO HAVE BEEN FULLY EXPENDED BY THE GRANTEE BUT THE FOUNDATION HAS NOT YET RECEIVED ONE OR MORE NARRATIVE REPORTS, THE FOUNDATION WILL REPORT ON THE STATUS OF THE EXPENDITURE ON OUR 2012 990-PF. UNLESS OTHERWISE NOTED, THE REPORTS RECEIVED WERE FOUND TO BE IN ORDER AND TO SHOW THAT THE FUNDS WERE FULLY EXPENDED FOR THE PURPOSE OF THE GRANT.

REPORTING STATUS IS AS OF 10/15/12.
