But since some one may think that the promise of the Saviour prescribes a limit of time to their not tasting of death, namely, that they will not taste of death “until” they see the Son of man coming in His own kingdom, but after this will taste of it, let us show that according to the scriptural usage the word “until” signifies that the time concerning the thing signified is pressing, but is not so defined that after the “until,” that which is contrary to the thing signified should at all take place. Now, the Saviour says to the eleven disciples when He rose from the dead, this among other things, “Lo, I am with you all the days, even until the consummation of the age.” When He said this, did He promise that He was going to be with them until the consummation of the age, but that after the consummation of the age, when another age was at hand, which is “called the age to come,” He would be no longer with them?—so that according to this, the condition of the disciples would be better before the consummation of the age than after the consummation of the age? But I do not think that any one will dare to say, that after the consummation of the age the Son of God will be no longer with the disciples, because the expression declares that He will be with them for so long, until the consummation of the age is at hand; for it is clear that the matter under inquiry was, whether the Son of God was forthwith going to be with His disciples before the age to come and the hoped for promises of God which were given as a recompense. But there might have been a question—it being granted that He would be with them—whether sometimes He was present with them, and sometimes not present. Wherefore setting us free from the suspicion that might have arisen from doubt, He declared that now and even all the days He would be with the disciples, and that He would not leave those who had become His disciples until the consummation of the age; (because He said “all the days” He did not deny that by night, when the sun set, He would be present with them.) But if such is the force of the words, “until the consummation of the age,” plainly we shall not be compelled to admit that those who see the Son of man coming in His own kingdom shall taste of death, after being deemed worthy of beholding Him in such guise. But as in the case of the passage we brought forward, the urgent necessity was to teach us that “until the consummation of the age” He would not leave us but be with us all the days; so also in this case I think that it is clear to those who know how to look at the logical coherence of things that He who has seen once for all “the Son of man coming in His own kingdom,” and seen Him “in His own glory,” and seen “the kingdom of God come with power,” could not possibly taste of death after the contemplation of things so good and great. But apart from the word of the promise of Jesus, we have conjectured not without reason that we would taste of death,

5770 Matt. xvi. 28.
5771 Matt. xxviii. 20.
so long as we were not yet held worthy to see "the kingdom of God come with power," and "the Son of man coming in His own glory and in His own kingdom."
35. Scriptural References to Death.

But since here it is written in the three Evangelists, “They shall not taste of death,” but in other writers different things are written concerning death, it may not be out of place to bring forward and examine these passages along with the “taste.” In the Psalms, then, it is said, “What man is he that shall live and not see death?” And again, in another place, “Let death come upon them and let them go down into Hades alive;” but in one of the prophets, “Death becoming mighty has swallowed them up;” and in the Apocalypse, “Death and Hades follow some.” Now in these passages it appears to me that it is one thing to taste of death, but another thing to see death, and another thing for it to come upon some, and that a fourth thing, different from the aforesaid, is signified by the words, “Death becoming mighty has swallowed them up,” and a fifth thing, different from these, by the words, Death and Hades follow them.” And if you were to collect them, you would perhaps find also other differences than those which we have mentioned, by a comparison of which with one another and right investigation, you would find the things signified in each place. But here I inquire whether it is a less evil to see death, but a greater evil than seeing to taste of it, but still worse than this that death should follow any one, and not only follow him, but also now come upon him and seize him whom it formerly followed; but to be swallowed up seems to be more grievous than all the things spoken of. But giving heed to what is said, and to the differences of sins committed, you will not I think, be slow to admit that things of this kind were intended by the Spirit who caused these things to be written in the oracles of God. But, if it be necessary to give an exposition clearer than what has been said of what is signified by seeing the Son of man coming in His own kingdom, or in His own glory, and what is signified by seeing the kingdom of God come with power, these things—whether those that are made to shine in our hearts, or that are found by those who seek, or that enter gradually into our thoughts,—let each one judge as he wills—we will set forth. He who beholds and apprehends the excellency of the Word, as he breaks down and refutes all the plausible forms of things which are truly lies but profess to be truths, sees the Son of man, (according to the word of John, “the Word of God,”) coming in His own kingdom; but if such an one were to behold the Word, not only breaking down plausible oppositions, but also representing His own truths with perfect clearness, he would behold His glory in addition to His kingdom. And such an one indeed would see in Him the kingdom of God come with power; and he would see this, as one who is no longer now under the reign of “sin which 5772 Matt. xvi. 28; Mark ix. 1; Luke ix. 27.

5773 Ps. lxxxix. 48.
5774 Ps. lv. 18.
5775 Isa. xxv. 8.
5776 Rev. vi. 10.
reigns in the mortal body of those who sin,\textsuperscript{5777} but is ever under the orders of the king, who is God of all, whose kingdom is indeed potentially “within us,”\textsuperscript{5778} but actually, and, as Mark has called it, “with power,” and not at all in weakness within the perfect alone. These things, then, Jesus promised to the disciples who were standing, prophesying not about all of them, but about some.

\textsuperscript{5777} Rom. vi. 12.
\textsuperscript{5778} Luke xvii. 21.
Concerning the Transfiguration of the Saviour.

“Now after six days,” according to Matthew and Mark,⁵⁷⁷⁹ “He taketh with him Peter and James and John his brother, and leads them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them.” Now, also, let it be granted, before the exposition that occurs to us in relation to these things, that this took place long ago, and according to the letter. But it seems to me, that those who are led up by Jesus into the high mountain, and are deemed worthy of beholding His transfiguration apart, are not without purpose led up six days after the discourses previously spoken. For since in six days—the perfect number—the whole world,—this perfect work of art,—was made, on this account I think that he who transcends all the things of the world by beholding no longer the things which are seen, for they are temporal, but already the things which not seen, and only the things which are not seen, because that they are eternal, is represented in the words, “After six days Jesus took up with Him” certain persons. If therefore any one of us wishes to be taken by Jesus, and led up by Him into the high mountain, and be deemed worthy of beholding His transfiguration apart, let him pass beyond the six days, because he no longer beholds the things which are seen, nor longer loves the world, nor the things in the world,⁵⁷⁸⁰ nor lusts after any worldly lust, which is the lust of bodies, and of the riches of the body, and of the glory which is after the flesh, and whatever things whose nature it is to distract and drag away the soul from the things which are better and diviner, and bring it down and fix it fast to the deceit of this age, in wealth and glory, and the rest of the lusts which are the foes of truth. For when he has passed through the six days, as we have said, he will keep a new Sabbath, rejoicing in the lofty mountain, because he sees Jesus transfigured before him; for the Word has different forms, as He appears to each as is expedient for the beholder, and is manifested to no one beyond the capacity of the beholder.

⁵⁷⁷⁹ Matt. xvii. 1; Mark ix. 2.
⁵⁷⁸⁰ 1 John ii. 15.

But you will ask if, when He was transfigured before those who were led up by Him into the lofty mountain, He appeared to them in the form of God, in which He formerly was, so that He had to those below the form of a servant, but to those who had followed Him after the six days to the lofty mountain, He had not that form, but the form of God. But hear these things, if you can, at the same time giving heed spiritually, that it is not said simply, “He was transfigured,” but with a certain necessary addition, which Matthew and Mark have recorded; for, according to both, “He was transfigured before them.” 5781 And according to this, indeed, you will say that it is possible for Jesus to be transfigured before some with this transfiguration, but before others at the same time not to be transfigured. But if you wish to see the transfiguration of Jesus before those who went up into the lofty mountain apart long with Him, behold with me the Jesus in the Gospels, as more simply apprehended, and as one might say, known “according to the flesh,” by those who do not go up, through works and words which are uplifting, to the lofty mountain of wisdom, but known no longer after the flesh, but known in His divinity by means of all the Gospels, and beholden in the form of God according to their knowledge; for before them is Jesus transfigured, and not to any one of those below. But when He is transfigured, His face also shines as the sun, that He may be manifested to the children of light, who have put off the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light, 5782 and are no longer the children of darkness or night, but have become the sons of day, and walk honestly as in the day; 5783 and being manifested, He will shine unto them not simply as the sun, but as demonstrated to be the sun of righteousness.

5781 Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 2.
5782 Rom. xiii. 12.
5783 Rom. xiii. 13; 1 Thess. v. 5.
38. The Garments White as the Light.

And not only is He transfigured before such disciples, nor does He only add to the transfiguration the shining of His face as the sun; but further also to those who were led up by Him into the high mountain apart, His garments appear white as the light. But the garments of Jesus are the expressions and letters of the Gospels with which He invested Himself. But I think that even the words in the Apostles which indicate the truths concerning Him are garments of Jesus, which become white to those who go up into the high mountain along with Jesus. But since there are differences also of things white, His garments become white as the brightest and purest of all white things; and that is light. When therefore you see any one not only with a thorough understanding of the theology concerning Jesus, but also making clear every expression of the Gospels, do not hesitate to say that to Him the garments of Jesus have become white as the light. But when the Son of God in His transfiguration is so understood and beheld, that His face is a sun, and His garments white as the light, straightway there will appear to him who beholds Jesus in such form Moses,—the law,—and Elijah,—in the way of synecdoche, not one prophet only, but all the prophets—holding converse with Jesus; for such is the force of the words “talking with Him;” but, according to Luke, “Moses and Elijah appeared in glory,” down to the words, “in Jerusalem.” But if any one sees the glory of Moses, having understood the spiritual law as a discourse in harmony with Jesus, and the wisdom in the prophets which is hidden in a mystery, he sees Moses and Elijah in glory when he sees them with Jesus.

5784 Matt. xvii. 2.
5785 Matt. xvii. 3.
5787 1 Cor. ii. 7.
39. Jesus Was Transfigured—“As He Was Praying.”

Then, since it will be necessary to expound the passage as given in Mark, “And as He was praying He was transfigured before them,”\(^{5788}\) we must say that perhaps it is possible especially to see the Word transfigured before us if we have done the things aforesaid, and gone up into the mountain, and seen the absolute Word holding converse with the Father, and praying to Him for such things as the true High-Priest might pray for to the only true God. But in order that He may thus hold fellowship with God and pray to the Father, He goes up into the mountain; and then, according to Mark, “His garments become white and glistening as the light, so as no fuller on earth can whiten them.”\(^{5789}\) And perhaps the fullers upon the earth are the wise men of this world who are careful about the diction which they consider to be bright and pure, so that even their base thoughts and false dogmas seem to be beautified by their fulling, so to speak; but He who shows His own garments glistening to those who have ascended and brighter than their fulling can make them, is the Word, who exhibits in the expressions of the Scriptures which are despised by many the glistening of the thoughts, when the raiment of Jesus, according to Luke, becomes white and dazzling.\(^{5790}\) \(^{5788}\) Luke (ix. 28, 29) alone mentions the praying.

\(^{5789}\) Mark ix. 3.

\(^{5790}\) Luke ix. 29.
40. Discussion of the Saying of Peter.

But let us next see what was the thought of Peter when he answered and said to Jesus, “Lord, it is good for us to be here; let us make three tabernacles,” etc. And on this account these words call for very special examination, because Mark, in his own person, has added, “For he wist not what to answer,” but Luke, “not knowing,” he says, “what he spake.”

You will consider, therefore, if he spake these things as in a trance, being filled with the spirit which moved him to say these things, which could not be a Holy Spirit; for John taught in the Gospel that, before the resurrection of the Saviour, no one had the Holy Spirit, saying, “For the Spirit was not yet, because Jesus was not yet glorified.” But if the Spirit was not yet, and he, not knowing what he said, spoke under the influence of some spirit, the spirit which caused these things to be said was some one of the spirits which had not yet been triumphed over in the cross, nor made a show of along with them, about whom it is written, “Having put off from Himself the principalities and the powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in the cross.” But this spirit was perhaps that which is called a stumbling-block by Jesus, and which is spoken of as Satan in the passage, “Get thee behind Me, Satan; thou art a stumbling-block unto me.” But I know well that such things will offend many who meet with them, because they think that it is opposed to sound reason that he should be spoken ill of who a little before had been pronounced blessed by Jesus, on the ground that the Father in heaven had revealed to him the things concerning the Saviour, to-wit, that He was verily Jesus, and the Christ, and the Son of the living God. But let such an one attend more exactly to the statements about Peter and the rest of the Apostles, how even they made requests as if they were yet alien from Him who was to redeem them from the enemy and purchase them with His own precious blood; or let them also, who will have it that even before the passion of Jesus the Apostles were perfect, tell us whence it came about that “Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep.”

But to anticipate something else of what follows and apply it to the subject in hand, I would raise in turn these questions,—whether it is possible for any one to find occasion of stumbling in Jesus apart from the working of the devil who caused him to stumble; and whether it is possible for any one to deny Jesus, and that in presence of a little maid and a doorkeeper and men most worthless, unless a spirit had been with him in his denial hostile to the Spirit which is given and the wisdom, (which is given) to those who are assisted by God to make confession, according to a certain desert of theirs. But he who has learned to refer the roots of sin to the father of sin, the devil, will not say that apart from him either the Apostles were cau sed to stumble, or that Peter denied Christ thrice before that well-known cock-crowing.
But if this be so, consider whether perhaps with a view to make Jesus stumble, so far as was in his power, and to turn Him aside from the dispensation whose characteristic was suffering that brought salvation to men, which He undertook with great willingness, seeking to effect these things which seemed to contribute to this end, he himself also here wishes as it were, by deceit, to draw away Jesus, as if calling upon Him no longer to condescend to men, and come to them, and undergo death for them, but to abide on the high mountain with Moses and Elijah. But he promised also to build three tabernacles, one apart for Jesus, and one for Moses, and one for Elijah, as if one tabernacle would not have sufficed for the three, if it had been necessary for them to be in tabernacles and in the high mountain. And perhaps also in this he acted with evil intent, when he incited him “who did not know what he said,” not desiring that Jesus and Moses and Elijah should be together, but desiring to separate them from one another, under pretext of the three tabernacles.” And likewise it was a lie, “It is good for us to be here;”5798 for if it had been a good thing they would also have re mained there. But if it were a lie, you will seek to know who caused the lie to be spoken; and especially since according to John, “When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father thereof;”5799 and as there is no truth apart from the working of Him who says, “I am the Truth,”5800 so there is no lie apart from him who is the enemy of truth. These contrary qualities, accordingly, were still in Peter truth and falsehood; and from truth he said, “Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God,”5801 but from falsehood he said, “May God be propitious to Thee, Lord, this shall not be unto Thee,”5802 and also,
“It is good for us to be here.”5803 But if any one will not admit that Peter spoke these things from any evil inspiration, but that his words were of his own mere choice, and it is demanded of him how he will interpret, “not knowing what he said,” and,5804 “for he did not know what to answer,”5805 he will say, that in the former case Peter held it to be a shameful thing and unworthy of Jesus to admit that the Son of the living God, the Christ, whom already

5798 Matt. xvii. 4.
5799 John viii. 44.
5800 John xiv. 6.
5801 Matt. xvi. 16.
5802 Matt. xvi. 20.
5803 Matt. xvii. 4.
5805 Mark ix. 6.
the Father had revealed to him, should be killed; and in the present case that, as having seen the two forms of Jesus and the one at the transfiguration which was much more excellent, being well pleased with that, he said that it was good to make their sojourning in that mountain, in order that he himself and those with him might rejoice as they beheld the transfiguration of Jesus and His face shining as the sun, and His garments white as the light, and, in addition to these things, might always behold in glory those whom they had once seen in glory, Moses and Elijah; and that they might rejoice at the things which they might hear, as they talked and held intercourse with each other, Moses and Elijah with Jesus, and Jesus with them.
41. Figurative Interpretation of the Same.

But since we have not yet spent our energy in interpreting the things in the place figuratively, but have said these things by way of searching into the mere letter, let us in conformity with these things, consider whether the aforesaid Peter and the sons of thunder who were taken up into the mountain of the dogmas of the truth, and who saw the transfiguration of Jesus and of Moses and Elijah, who appeared in glory with Him, might wish to make tabernacles in themselves for the Word of God who was going to dwell in them, and for His law which had been beheld in glory, and for the prophecy which spake of the decease of Jesus, which He was about to accomplish;\textsuperscript{5806} and Peter, as one loving the contemplative life, and having preferred that which was delightsome in it to the life among the crowd with its turmoil, said, with the design of benefiting those who desired it, “It is good for us to be here.”\textsuperscript{5807} But since “love seeketh not its own,”\textsuperscript{5808} Jesus did not do that which Peter thought good; wherefore He descended from the mountain to those who were not able to ascend to it and behold His transfiguration, that they might behold Him in such form as they were able to see Him. It is, therefore, the part of a righteous man who possesses “the love which seeketh not its own”\textsuperscript{5809} to be free from all, but to bring himself under bondage to all those below that He might gain the more of them.\textsuperscript{5810} But some one, with reference to what we have alleged about the trance and the working of an evil spirit in Peter, concerning the words, “not knowing what he said,”\textsuperscript{5811} not accepting that interpretation of ours, may say that there were certain mentioned by Paul “desiring to be teachers of the law,”\textsuperscript{5812} who do not know about what they speak, but who, though they do not clearly expound the nature of what is said, nor understand their meaning, make confident affirmations of things which they do not know. Of such a nature was the affection of Peter also, for not apprehending what was good with reference to the dispensation of Jesus and of those who appeared in the mountain,—Moses and Elijah,—he says, “It is good for us to be here,” etc., “not knowing what he said,” “for he wist not what to say,” for if “a wise man will understand the things from his own mouth, and carries prudence in his lips,”\textsuperscript{5813} he who is not so does not understand the things from his own mouth, nor comprehend the nature of the things spoken by him.

\textsuperscript{5806} Luke ix. 31.
\textsuperscript{5807} Matt. xvii. 4.
\textsuperscript{5808} 1 Cor. xiii. 5.
\textsuperscript{5809} 1 Cor. xiii. 5.
\textsuperscript{5810} 1 Cor. ix. 19.
\textsuperscript{5811} Luke ix. 33.
\textsuperscript{5812} 1 Tim. i. 7.
\textsuperscript{5813} Prov. xvi. 23.
42. The Meaning of the “Bright Cloud.”

Next to these come the words, “While He was yet speaking, behold, also, a bright cloud overshadowed them,”\textsuperscript{5814} etc. Now, I think that God, wishing to dissuade Peter from making three tabernacles, under which so far as it depended on his choice he was going to dwell, shows a tabernacle better, so to speak, and much more excellent, the cloud. For since it is the function of a tabernacle to overshadow him who is in it, and to shelter him, and the bright cloud overshadowed them, God made, as it were, a diviner tabernacle, insomuch as it was bright, that it might be to them a pattern of the resurrection to come; for a bright cloud overshadows the just, who are at once protected and illuminated and shone upon by it. But what might the bright cloud, which overshadows the just, be? Is it, perhaps, the fatherly power, from which comes the voice of the Father bearing testimony to the Son as beloved and well-pleasing, and exhorting those who were under its shadow to hear Him and no other one? But as He speaks of old, so also always does He speak through what He wills. And perhaps, too, the Holy Spirit is the bright cloud which overshadows the just, and prophesies of the things of God, who works in it, and says, “This is My beloved Son in whom I am well-pleased;” but I would venture also to say that our Saviour is a bright cloud. When, therefore, Peter said, “Let us make here three tabernacles,”\textsuperscript{5815}…one from the Father Himself, and from the Son, and one from the Holy Spirit. For a bright cloud of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit overshadows the genuine disciples of Jesus; or a cloud overshadows the Gospel and the law and the prophets, which is bright to him who is able to see the light of it in the Gospel, and the law, and the prophets. But perhaps the voice from the cloud says to Moses and Elijah, “This is My beloved Son in whom I am well-pleased, hear Him,” as they were desirous to see the Son of man, and to hear Him, and to behold Him as He was in glory. And perhaps it teaches the disciples that He who was, in a literal sense, the Son of God, and His beloved in whom He was well-pleased, whom it behoved them especially to hear, was He who was then beheld, and transfigured, and whose face shone as the sun, and who was clothed with garments white as the light.

\textsuperscript{5814} Matt. xvii. 5.
\textsuperscript{5815} The text is mutilated.
43. Relation of Moses and Elijah to Jesus. The Injunction of Silence.

But after these things it is written that, when they heard the voice from the cloud bearing testimony to the Son, the three Apostles, not being able to bear the glory of the voice and power resting upon it, “fell on their face,” and besought God; for they were sore afraid at the supernatural sight, and the things which were spoken from the sight. But consider if you can also say this with reference to the details in the passage, that the disciples, having understood that the Son of God had been holding conference with Moses, and that it was He who said, “A man shall not see My face and live,” and taking further the testimony of God about Him, as not being able to endure the radiance of the Word, humbled themselves under the mighty hand of God; but, after the touch of the Word, lifting up their eyes they saw Jesus only and no other. Moses, the law, and Elijah, the prophet, became one only with the Gospel of Jesus; and not, as they were formerly three, did they so abide, but the three became one. But consider these things with me in relation to mystical matters; for in regard to the bare meaning of the letter, Moses and Elijah, having appeared in glory and talked with Jesus, went away to the place from which they had come, perhaps to communicate the words which Jesus spake with them, to those who were to be benefited by Him, almost immediately, namely, at the time of the passion, when many bodies of the saints that had fallen asleep, their tombs being opened, were to go to the city which is truly holy—not the Jerusalem which Jesus wept over—and there appear unto many. But after the dispensation in the mountain, when the disciples were coming down from the mountain in order that, when they had come to the multitude, they might serve the Son of God concerning the salvation of the people, Jesus commanded the disciples saying, “Tell the vision to no man until the Son of man rise from the dead.” But that saying, “Tell the vision to no man,” is like that which was investigated in the passage above, when “He enjoined the disciples to tell no man that He was the Christ.” Wherefore the things that were said at that passage may be useful to us also for the passage before us; since Jesus wishes also, in accordance with these, that the things of His glory should not be spoken of, before His glory after the passion; for those who heard, and in particular the multitudes, would have been injured when they saw Him crucified, who had been so glorified. Wherefore since His being glorified in the resurrection was akin to His transfiguration, and to the vision of His face as

5816 Matt. xvii. 6.
5817 Exod. xxx. 20.
5818 1 Pet. v. 6.
5819 Matt. xvii. 8.
5820 Matt. xxvii. 52, 53.
5821 Matt. xxvii. 9.
5822 Matt. xvi. 20.
the sun, on this account He wishes that these things should then be spoken of by the Apostles, when He rose from the dead.

Relation of Moses and Elijah to Jesus. The Injunction of Silence.
1. Relation of the Baptist to Elijah. The Theory of Transmigration Considered.

"The disciples asked Him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elijah must first come?" The disciples indeed who went up with Jesus remembered the traditions of the scribes concerning Elijah, that before the advent of Christ, Elijah would come and prepare for Him the souls of those who were going to receive Him. But the vision in the mountain, at which Elijah appeared, did not seem to be in harmony with the things which were said, since to them it seemed that Elijah had not come before Jesus but after Him; wherefore, they say these things, thinking that the scribes lied. But to this the Saviour answers, not setting aside the traditions concerning Elijah, but saying that there was another advent of Elijah before that of Christ of which the scribes were ignorant; and, in regard to this, being ignorant of him, they "had done unto him whatsoever they listed," as if they had been accomplices in his having been cast into prison by Herod and slain by him; then He says that according as they had done towards Elijah so would He suffer at their hands. And these things indeed as about Elijah the disciples asked and the Saviour answered, but when they heard they understood that the words, "Elijah has already come," and that following which was spoken by the Saviour, had reference to John the Baptist. And let these things be said by way of illustration of the passage before us. But now according to our ability let us make investigation also into the things that are stored up in it. In this place it does not appear to me that by Elijah the soul is spoken of, lest I should fall into the dogma of transmigration, which is foreign to the church of God, and not handed down by the Apostles, nor anywhere set forth in the Scriptures; for it is also in opposition to the saying that "things seen are temporal," and that "this age shall have a consummation," and also to the fulfilment of the saying, "Heaven and earth shall pass away," and "the fashion of this world passeth away," and "the heavens shall perish," and what follows. For if, by hypothesis, in the constitution of things which has existed from the beginning unto the end of the world, the same soul can be twice in the body, for what cause should it be in it? For if because of sin it should be twice in the body, why should it not be thrice, and repeatedly in it, since punishments, in respect of this life, and of the sins committed in it, shall be rendered to it

5823 Matt. xvii. 10.
5824 Matt. xvii. 12.
5825 Matt. xvii. 12.
5826 Matt. xvii. 13.
5827 2 Cor. iv. 18.
5828 Matt. xxiv. 35.
5829 1 Cor. vii. 31.
5830 Ps. cii. 26.
only by the method of transmigration? But if this be granted as a consequence, perhaps there will never be a time when a soul shall not undergo transmigration: for always because of its former sins will it dwell in the body; and so there will be no place for the corruption of the world, at which “the heaven and the earth shall pass away.”

And if it be granted, on this hypothesis, that one who is absolutely sinless shall not come into the body by birth, after what length of time do you suppose that a soul shall be found absolutely pure and needing no transmigration? But nevertheless, also, if any one soul is always thus being removed from the definite number of souls and returns no longer to the body, sometime after infinite ages, as it were, birth shall cease; the world being reduced to some one or two or a few more, after the perfecting of whom the world shall perish, the supply of souls coming into the body having failed. But this is not agreeable to the Scripture; for it knows of a multitude of sinners at the time of the destruction of the world. This is manifest from consideration of the saying, “How-beit when the Son of man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?”

So we find it thus said in Matthew, “As were the days of Noah so shall also be the coming of the Son of man; for as they were in the days of the flood,” etc. But to those who are then in existence there shall be the exaction of a penalty for their sins, but not by way of transmigration; for, if they are caught while still sinning, either they will be punished after this by a different form of punishment,—and according to this either there will be two general forms of punishment, the one by way of transmigration, and the other outside of a body of this kind, and let them declare the causes and differences of these,—or they will not be punished, as if those who were left at the consummation of things had forthwith cast away their sins; or, which is better, there is one form of punishment for those who have sinned in the body, namely, that they should suffer, outside of it, that is, outside the constitution of this life, what is according to the desert of their sins. But to one who has insight into the nature of things it is clear that each of these things is fitted to overturn the doctrine of transmigration. But if, of necessity, the Greeks who introduce the doctrine of transmigration, laying down things in harmony with it, do not acknowledge that the world is coming to corruption, it is fitting that when they have looked the Scriptures straight in the face which plainly declare that the world will perish, they should either disbelieve them, or invent a series of arguments in regard to the interpretation of the things concerning the consummation; which even if they wish they will not be able to do. And this besides we will say to those who may have had the hardihood to aver that the world will not perish, that, if the world does not perish but is to exist for infinite periods of time, there will be no God knowing all things before they come into being. But if, perhaps, He knows in part, either

5831 Matt. xxiv. 35.
He will know each thing before it comes into being, or certain things, and after these again other things; for things infinite in nature cannot possibly be grasped by that knowledge whose nature it is to limit things known. From this it follows that there cannot be prophecies about all things whatsoever, since all things are infinite.

I have thought it necessary to dwell some time on the examination of the doctrine of transmigration, because of the suspicion of some who suppose that the soul under consideration was the same in Elijah and in John, being called in the former case Elijah, and in the second case John; and that, not apart from God, had he been called John, as is plain from the saying of the angel who appeared to Zacharias, “Fear not, Zacharias, for thy supplication is heard, and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John;” and from the fact that Zacharias regained his speech after he had written in the tablet, that he who had been born should be called John. But if it were the soul of Elijah, then, when he was begotten a second time, he should have been called Elijah; or for the change of name some reason should have been assigned, as in the case of Abram and Abraham, Sarah and Sarrah, Jacob and Israel, Simon and Peter. And yet not even thus would their argument in the case be tenable; for, in the case of the aforesaid, the changes of name took place in one and the same life. But some one might ask, if the soul of Elijah was not first in the Tishbite and secondly in John, what might that be in both which the Saviour called Elijah? And I say that Gabriel in his words to Zacharias suggested what the substance was in Elijah and John that was the same; for he says, “Many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God; and he shall go before his face in the spirit and power of Elijah.”

For, observe, he did not say in the “soul” of Elijah, in which case the doctrine of transmigration might have some ground, but “in the spirit and power of Elijah.” For the Scripture well knows the distinction between spirit and soul, as, “May God sanctify you wholly, and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ;” and the passage, “Bless the Lord, ye spirits and souls of the righteous” as it stands in the book of Daniel, according to the Septuagint, represents the difference between spirit and soul. Elijah, therefore, was not called John because of the soul, but because of the spirit and the power, which in no way conflicts with the teaching of the church, though they were formerly in Elijah, and afterwards in John; and “the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets,” but the souls of the prophets are not subject to the prophets, and “the spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha.” But we ought to inquire whether the spirit of Elijah is the same as the spirit of God in Elijah, or whether they are different from each other, and 5835 Luke i. 63.

5836 Luke i. 16, 17.
5837 1 Thess. v. 23.
5838 Dan. iii. 86. (Song of the Three Children 64.)
5839 1 Cor. xiv. 32.
5840 2 Kings ii. 15.
whether the spirit of Elijah which was in him was something supernatural, different from the spirit of each man which is in him; for the Apostle clearly indicates that the Spirit of God, though it be in us, is different from the spirit of each man which is in Him, when he says somewhere, “The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God;” and elsewhere, “No one of men knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of the man which is in him; even so the things of God none knoweth save the Spirit of God.”
But do not marvel in regard to what is said about Elijah, if, just as something strange happened to him different from all the saints who are recorded, in respect of his having been caught up by a whirlwind into heaven, so his spirit had something of choice excellence, so that not only did it rest on Elisha, but also descended along with John at his birth; and that John, separately, “was filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother’s womb,” and separately, “came before Christ in the spirit and power of Elijah.” For it is possible for several spirits not only worse, but also better, to be in the same man. David accordingly asks to be established by a free spirit, and that a right spirit be renewed in his inward parts. But if, in order that the Saviour may impart to us of “the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and reverence,” he was filled also with the spirit of the fear of the Lord; it is possible also that these several good spirits may be conceived as being in the same person. And this also we have brought forward, because of John having come before Christ “in the spirit and power of Elijah,” in order that the saying, “Elijah has already come,” may be referred to the spirit of Elijah that was in John; as also the three disciples who had gone up with Him understood that He spake to them about John the Baptist. Upon Elisha, then, only the spirit of Elijah rested, but John came before, not only in the spirit, but also in the power of Elijah. Wherefore, also, Elisha could not have been called Elijah, but John was Elijah himself. But if it be necessary to adduce the Scripture from which the scribes said that Elijah must first come, listen to Malachi who says, “And behold I will send to you Elijah the Tishbite,” etc., down to the 5841 Rom. viii. 16.

5842 1 Cor. ii. 11.
5843 2 Kings ii. 11.
5844 Luke i. 15, 17.
5845 Ps. li. 12.
5846 Ps. li. 10.
5847 Isa. xi. 2.
5848 Luke i. 17.
5849 Matt. xvii. 12.
5850 Matt. xvii. 13.
words, “Lest I come and smite the earth utterly.”\textsuperscript{5852} And it seems to be indicated by these words, that Elijah was to prepare for the glorious coming of Christ by certain holy words and dispositions in their souls, those who had been made fittest for this, which those upon earth could not have endured, because of the excellency of the glory, unless they had been prepared before hand by Elijah. And likewise, by Elijah, in this place, I do not understand the soul of that prophet but his spirit and his power; for these it is by which all things shall be restored,\textsuperscript{5853} so that when they have been restored, and, as a result of that restoration, become capable of receiving the glory of Christ, the Son of God who shall appear in glory may sojourn with them. But if also Elijah be in some sort a word inferior to “the Word who was in the beginning with God, God the Word,”\textsuperscript{5854} this word also might come as a preparatory discipline to the people prepared by it, that they might be trained for the reception of the perfect Word. But some one may raise the question whether the spirit and power of Elijah, suffered what was suffered in John, according to the words, “They did in him whatsoever they listed.”\textsuperscript{5855} And to this it will be said on the one hand, in simpler fashion that there is nothing strange in the thought, that the things which assist do, because of love, suffer along with those that are assisted; and Jesus indeed says. “Because of the weak I was weak, and I hungered because of the hungry, and I thirsted because of the thirsty,”\textsuperscript{5856} and, on the other hand, in a deeper sense that the words are not, “But they did unto him whatsoever they listed in him,” for the things which suffered leaned upon the spirit and the power of Elijah, the soul of John being in no wise Elijah; and probably also the body (leaned upon them). For in one fashion is the soul in the body, and the spirit, and the power; and in another fashion is the body of the righteous man in these better parts, as leaning upon them, and clinging to them; but “they who are in the flesh cannot please God; but ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if the Spirit of God dwell in you;”\textsuperscript{5857} for the soul of the sinner is in the flesh, but of the righteous man in spirit. And likewise, further, this might be inquired into, to whom refer the words, “But they did in him whatsoever they listed.”\textsuperscript{5858} Was it to the scribes in regard to whom the disciples inquired and said, “Why then do the scribes say that Elijah must first come?”\textsuperscript{5859} But it is not at all evident that John suffered anything at the hands of the scribes, except, indeed, that they did not believe him; or, as we said also \textsuperscript{5852} Mal. iv. 5, 6.

\textsuperscript{5853} Matt. xvii. 11.
\textsuperscript{5854} John i. 1.
\textsuperscript{5855} Matt. xvii. 12.
\textsuperscript{5856} Cf. Matt. xxv. 35.
\textsuperscript{5857} Rom. viii. 8, 9.
\textsuperscript{5858} Matt. xvii. 12.
\textsuperscript{5859} Matt. xvii. 10.
before, that they were accomplices in the wrongs which Herod dared to inflict on him. But another might say that the words, “But they did in him whatsoever they listed,” refer not to the scribes but to Herodias and her daughter, and Herod, who did in him whatsoever they listed. And that which follows, “So shall the Son of man suffer from them,” might be referred to the scribes, if the former were referred to them; but, if the former refers to Herod and Herodias and her daughter, the second passage will also refer to them; for Herod also seems to have joined in the vote that Jesus should die, perhaps his wife also taking part with him in the plot against Him.

5860 Matt. xvii. 12.

5861 The text is uncertain.
3. Concerning the Epileptic.

“And when they were come to the multitude, there came to Him a man kneeling to Him and saying, Lord, have mercy upon my son.”

Those who are suffering, or the kinsfolk of the sufferers, are along with the multitudes; wherefore, when He has dispensed the things that were beyond the multitudes, He descends to them, so that those, who were not able to ascend because of the sicknesses that repressed their soul, might be benefited when the Word descended to them from the loftier regions. But we ought to make inquiry, in respect of what diseases the sufferers believe and pray for their own healing, and in respect of what diseases others do this for them, as, for example, the centurion for his servant, and the nobleman for his son, and the ruler of the synagogue for a daughter, and the Canaanitish woman for her female child who was vexed with a demon, and now the man who kneels to Him on behalf of his epileptic son. And along with these you will investigate when the Saviour heals of Himself and unasked by any one, as for example, the paralytic; for these cures, when compared with one another for this very purpose, and examined together, will exhibit to him who is able to hear “the wisdom of God hidden in a mystery,” many dogmas concerning the different diseases of souls, as well as the method of their healing.

5862 Matt. xvii. 14, 15.
5863 1 Cor. ii. 7.
4. Spiritual Epileptics.

But since our present object is not to make inquiry about every case, but about the passage before us, let us, adopting a figurative interpretation, consider who we may say the lunatic was, and who was his father who prayed for him, and what is meant by the sufferer falling not constantly but oft-times, sometimes into the fire, and sometimes into the water, and what is meant by the fact that he could not be healed by the disciples but by Jesus Himself. For if every sickness and every infirmity, which our Saviour then healed among the people, refers to different disorders in souls, it is also in accordance with reason that by the paralytics are symbolised the palsied in soul, who keep it lying paralysed in the body; but by those who are blind are symbolised those who are blind in respect of things seen by the soul alone, and these are really blind; and by the deaf are symbolised those who are deaf in regard to the reception of the word of salvation. On the same principle it will be necessary that the matters regarding the epileptic should be investigated. Now this affection attacks the sufferers at considerable intervals, during which he who suffers from it seems in no way to differ from the man in good health, at the season when the epilepsy is not working on him. Similar disorders you may find in certain souls, which are often supposed to be healthy in point of temperance and the other virtues; then, sometimes, as if they were seized with a kind of epilepsy arising from their passions, they fall down from the position in which they seemed to stand, and are drawn away by the deceit of this world and other lusts. Perhaps, therefore, you would not err if you said, that such persons, so to speak, are epileptic spiritually, having been cast down by “the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places,” and are often ill, at the time when the passions attack their soul; at one time falling into the fire of burnings, when, according to what is said in Hosea, they become adulterers, like a pan heated for the cooking from the burning flame; and, at another time, into the water, when the king of all the dragons in the waters casts them down from the sphere where they appeared to breath freely, so that they come into the depths of the waves of the sea of human life. This interpretation of ours in regard to the lunatic will be supported by him who says in the Book of Wisdom with reference to the even temperament of the just man, “The discourse of a pious man is always wisdom,” but, in regard to what we have said, “The fool changes as the moon.” And sometimes even in the case of such you may see impulses which might carry away in praise of them those who do not attend to their want of ballast, so that they would say that it was as full moon in their case, or almost full moon. And you 5864 Eph. vi. 12.

5865 Hos. vii. 4.
5866 Ecclus. xxvii. 11.
might see again the light that seemed to be in them diminishing,—as it was not the light of day but the light of night,—fading to so great an extent, that the light which appeared to be seen in them no longer existed. But whether or not those who first gave their names to things, on account of this gave the name of lunacy to the disease epilepsy, you will judge for yourself.
5. The Deaf and Dumb Spirit.

Now the father of the epileptic—perhaps the angel to whom he had been allotted, if we are to say that every human soul is put in subjection to some angel—prays the Physician of souls for his son that He may heal him who could not be healed from his disorder by the inferior word which was in the disciples. But the dumb and deaf spirit, who was cast out by the Word, must be figuratively understood as the irrational impulses, even towards that which seems to be good, so that, what things any man once did by irrational impulse which seemed to onlookers to be good, he may do no longer irrationally but according to the reason of the teaching of Jesus. Under the inspiration of this Paul also said, “If I have all faith so as to remove mountains;”\textsuperscript{5867} for he, who has all faith, which is as a grain of mustard seed,\textsuperscript{5868} removes not one mountain only, but also several analogous to it; for although faith is despised by men and appears to be something very little and contemptible; yet when it meets with good ground, that is the soul, which is able fittingly to receive such seed, it becomes a great tree, so that no one of those things which have no wings, but the birds of heaven which are winged spiritually, are able to lodge in the branches of faith so great.\textsuperscript{5869}

\textsuperscript{5867} 1 Cor. xiii. 2.
\textsuperscript{5868} Matt. xvii. 20.
\textsuperscript{5869} Cf. Matt. xiii. 31, 32.

Let us now, then, give heed to the very letter of the passage, and first let us inquire, how he who has been cast into darkness and repressed by an impure and deaf and dumb spirit is said to be a “lunatic,” and for what reason the expression to be a “lunatic” derives its name from the great light in heaven which is next to the sun, which God appointed “to rule over the night.”\(^{5870}\) Let physicians then, discuss the physiology of the matter, inasmuch as they think that there is no impure spirit in the case, but a bodily disorder, and inquiring into the nature of things let them say, that the moist humours which are in the head are moved by a certain sympathy which they have with the light of the moon, which has a moist nature; but as for us, who also believe the Gospel that this sickness is viewed as having been effected by an impure dumb and deaf spirit in those who suffer from it, and who see that those, who are accustomed like the magicians of the Egyptians to promise a cure in regard to such, seem sometimes to be successful in their case, we will say that, perhaps, with the view of slandering the creation of God, in order that “unrighteousness may be spoken loftily, and that they may set their mouth against the heaven,”\(^{5871}\) this impure spirit watches certain configurations of the moon, and so makes it appear from observation of men suffering at such and such a phase of the moon, that the cause of so great an evil is not the dumb and deaf demon, but the great light in heaven which was appointed “to rule by night,” and which has no power to originate such a disorder among men. But they all “speak unrighteousness loftily,” as many as say, that the cause of all the disorders which exist on the earth, whether of such generally or of each in detail, arises from the disposition of the stars; and such have truly “set their mouth against the heaven,” when they say that some of the stars have a malevolent, and others a benevolent influence; since no star was formed by the God of the universe to work evil, according to Jeremiah as it is written in the Lamentations, “Out of the mouth of the Lord shall come things noble and that which is good.”\(^{5872}\) And it is probable that as this impure spirit, producing what is called lunacy, observes the phases of the moon, that it may work on him who for certain causes has been committed to it, and who has not made himself worthy of the guardianship of angels, so also there are other spirits and demons who work at certain phases of the rest of the stars; so that not the moon only, but the rest of the stars also may be calumniated by those “who speak unrighteousness loftily.” It is worth while, then, to listen to the casters of nativities, who refer the origin of every form of madness and every demoniacal possession to the phases of the moon. That those, then, who suffer from what is called lunacy sometimes fall into the water is evident, and that they also fall into the fire, less frequently indeed, yet it does happen; and it is evident

---

5870 Gen. i. 16.
5871 Ps. lxxiii. 8, 9.
5872 Lam. iii. 38. Origen reads τὰ καλὰ instead of τὰ κακὰ. that this disorder is very difficult to cure, so that those who have the power to cure demoniacs sometimes fail in respect of this, and sometimes with fastings and supplications and more toils, succeed. But you will inquire whether there are such disorders in spirits as well as in men; so that some of them speak, but some of them are speechless, and some of them hear, but some are deaf; for as in them will be found the cause of their being impure, so also, because of their freedom of will, are they condemned to be speechless and deaf; for some men will suffer such condemnation if the prayer of the prophet, as spoken by the Holy Spirit, shall be given heed to, in which it is said of certain sinners, “Let the lying lips be put to silence.” And so, perhaps, those who make a bad use of their hearing, and admit the hearing of vanities, will be rendered deaf by Him who said, “Who hath made the stone-deaf and the deaf,” so that they may no longer lend an ear to vain things.

5873 Ps. xxxi. 18.
5874 Exod. iv. 11.

But when the Saviour said, "O faithfulness and perverse generation,"⁵⁸⁷⁵ He signifies that wickedness, which is contrary to nature, stealthily enters in from perversity, and makes us perverted. But of the whole race of men on earth, I think, being oppressed by reason of their wickedness and His tarrying with them, the Saviour said, "How long shall I be with you?" We have already, then, spoken in part of the words, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain,"⁵⁸⁷⁶ etc.; but nevertheless also we shall speak in this place the things that appear to us fitted to increase perspicuity. The mountains here spoken of, in my opinion, are the hostile powers that have their being in a flood of great wickedness, such as are settled down, so to speak, in some souls of men. Whenever, then, any one has all faith so that he no longer disbelieves in any things which are contained in the Holy Scriptures, and has faith such as was that of Abraham, who believed in God to such a degree that his faith was counted for righteousness. he has all faith as a grain of mustard seed; then will such an one say to this mountain—I mean, the dumb and deaf spirit in him who is called lunatic,—"Remove hence," clearly, from the man who is suffering, perhaps to the abyss, and it shall remove. And the Apostle, taking, I think. his starting-point from this place, says with apostolical authority, "If I have all faith so as to remove mountains,"⁵⁸⁷⁷ for not one mountain merely, but also several analogous to it, he removes who has all faith which is as a grain of mustard-seed; and nothing shall be impossible to him who has so great faith.⁵⁸⁷⁸ But let us also attend to this, "This kind goeth not out save by prayer and fasting,"⁵⁸⁷⁹ in order that if at any time it is necessary that we should be engaged in the healing of one suffering from such a disorder, we may not adjure, nor put questions, nor speak to the impure spirit as if it heard, but devoting ourselves to prayer and fasting, may be successful as we pray for the sufferer, and by our own fasting may thrust out the unclean spirit from him.

⁵⁸⁷⁵ Matt. xvii. 17.
⁵⁸⁷⁶ Matt. xvii. 20.
⁵⁸⁷⁷ 1 Cor. xiii. 2.
⁵⁸⁷⁸ Matt. xvii. 20.
⁵⁸⁷⁹ Matt. xvii. 21.

“And while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men.”\(^{5880}\) And these things will appear to be of the same effect as those, “that Jesus began to show unto His disciples that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes.”\(^{5881}\) But it is not so; for it is not the same thing “to show unto the disciples that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes,” and, after suffering, “be killed,” and, after being killed, “be raised up on the third day,” as that which was said to them, when they were in Galilee,—which we did not learn before,—that the Son of man “would be delivered up;” for the being delivered up was not mentioned above, but now also it is said that “He is to be delivered up into the hands of men.”\(^{5882}\) As for these matters let us inquire by what person or persons He will be delivered up into the hands of men; for there we are taught of whom He will suffer, and in what place He will suffer; but here, in addition, we learn that while His suffering many things takes place at the hands of the aforesaid, they are not the prime causes of His suffering many things, but the one or ones who delivered Him up into the hands of men. For some one will say that the Apostle, interpreting this, says with reference to God, “He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all;”\(^{5883}\) but the Son also gave Himself to death for us, so that He was delivered up, not only by the Father but also by Himself. But another will say not merely that, but also collecting the passages together, will say that the Son is first delivered up by God,—then about to be tempted, then to be in conflict, then to suffer for men, or even for the whole world that He might take away its sin,\(^{5884}\) —to the prince of this age, and to the rest of its princes, and then by them delivered into the hands of men who would slay Him. The case of Job will be taken as an illustration. “Lo, all that is his I give into thy hands, but do not touch him;”\(^{5885}\) thereafter, he was, as it were, delivered up by the devil to his princes, namely, to those who took prisoners of war, to the horsemen, to the fire that came down from heaven, to the great wind that came from the desert and broke up his house.\(^{5886}\) But you will consider if, as he delivered up the property of Job to those who took them captive, and to the horsemen, so also he delivered them up to a certain power, subordinate to “the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience,”\(^{5887}\) in order that the fire which descen-

\(^{5880}\) Matt. xvii. 22.
\(^{5881}\) Matt. xvi. 21.
\(^{5882}\) Matt. xvii. 22.
\(^{5883}\) Rom. viii. 32.
\(^{5884}\) John i. 29.
\(^{5885}\) Job i. 12.
\(^{5886}\) Job i. 15–19.
\(^{5887}\) Eph. ii. 2.
ded thence on the sheep of Job might seem to fall from heaven, to the man who announced to Job that “fire fell from heaven, and burned up his sheep, and consumed the shepherds likewise.”5888 And in the same way you will inquire whether also the sudden mighty wind, that came down from the desert and assailed the four corners of the dwelling, was one of those which are under the devils to whom the devil delivered up the banquet of the sons and daughters of Job, that the house might fall on the children of the just man, and they might die. Let it be granted, then, that, as in the case of Job, the Father first delivered up the Son to the opposing powers, and that then they delivered Him up into the hands of men, among which men Judas also was, into whom after the sop5889 Satan entered, who delivered

Him up in a more authoritative manner than Judas. But take care lest on comparing together the delivering up of the Son by the Father to the opposing powers, with the delivering up of the Saviour by them into the hands of men, you should think that what is called the delivering up is the same in the case of both. For understand that the Father in His love of men delivered Him up for us all; but the opposing powers, when they delivered up the Saviour into the hands of men, did not intend to deliver Him up for the salvation of some, but, as far as in them lay, since none of them knew “the wisdom of God which was hidden in a mystery,”5890 they gave Him up to be put to death, that His enemy death might receive Him under its subjection, like those who die in Adam;5891 and also the men who slew Him did so, as they were moulded after the will of those who wished indeed that Jesus should become subject to death. I have deemed it necessary also to examine into these things, because that when Jesus was delivered up into the hands of men, He was not delivered up by men into the hands of men, but by powers to whom the Father delivered up His Son for us all, and in the very act of His being delivered up, and coming under the power of those to whom

He was delivered up, destroying him that has the power of death; for “through death He brought to nought him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil, and delivered all them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.”5892

5888 Job i. 16.
5889 John xiii. 27.
5890 1 Cor. ii. 7, 8.
5891 1 Cor. xv. 22.
5892 Heb. ii. 14, 15.

Now we must think that the devil has the power of death,—not of that which is common and indifferent, in accordance with which those who are compacted of soul and body die, when their soul is separated from the body,—but of that death which is contrary to and the enemy of Him who said, “I am the Life,” in accordance with which “the soul that sinneth, it shall die.” But that it was not God who gave Him up into the hands of men, the Saviour manifestly declares when He says, “If My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight that I should not be delivered to the Jews.” For, when He was delivered up to the Jews, He was delivered into the hands of men, not by His own servants, but by the prince of this age who says, concerning the powers which are in the sphere of the invisible, the kingdoms which are set up against men, “All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship Me.” Wherefore also we should think that in regard to them it was said, “The kings of the earth stood side by side, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord and against His Christ.” And those kings, indeed, and those rulers stood side by side and were gathered against the Lord and against His Christ; but we, because we have been benefited by His being delivered by them into the hands of men and slain, say, “Let us break their bonds asunder and cast away their yoke from us.” For, when we become conformed to the death of Christ, we are no longer under the bonds of the kings of the earth, as we have said, nor under the yoke of the princes of this age, who were gathered together against the Lord. And, on this account, “the Father spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all,” that those, who took Him and delivered Him up into the hands of men, might be laughed at by Him who dwells in the heavens, and might be derided by the Lord, inasmuch as, contrary to their expectation, it was to the destruction of their own kingdom and power, that they received from the Father the Son, who was raised on the third day, by having abolished His enemy death, and made us conformed, not only to the image of His death but also of His resurrection; through whom we walk in newness of life, no longer sitting “in the region and shadow of death,” through the light of God which has sprung up upon us. But when the Saviour said, “The Son of man shall be delivered up into 5893 John xiv. 6.

5894 Ezek. xviii. 4.
5895 John xviii. 36.
5896 Matt. iv. 9.
5897 Ps. ii. 2.
5898 Ps. ii. 3.
5899 Rom. viii. 32.
5900 Rom. vi. 4.
5901 Matt. iv. 16.
the hands of men, and they shall kill Him, and the third day He shall rise again,” they were “exceeding sorry,” giving heed to the fact that He was about to be delivered up into the hands of men, and that He would be killed, as matters gloomy and calling for sorrow, but not attending to the fact that He would rise on the third day, as He needed no longer time “to bring to nought through death him that had the power of death.”

5902 Matt. xvii. 22, 23.
5903 Heb. ii. 14.

“And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received the half-shekel came to Peter.”

There are certain kings of the earth, and the sons of these do not pay toll or tribute; and there are others, different from their sons, who are strangers to the kings of the earth, from whom the kings of the earth receive toll or tribute. And among the kings of the earth, their sons are free as among fathers; but those who are strangers to them, while they are free in relation to things beyond the earth, are as slaves in respect of those who lord it over them and keep them in bondage; as the Egyptians lorded it over the children of Israel, and greatly afflicted their life and violently held them in bondage. It was for the sake of those who were in a bondage, corresponding to the bondage of the Hebrews, that the Son of God took upon Him only the form of a slave, doing no work that was foul or servile. As then, having the form of that slave, He pays toll and tribute not different from that which was paid by His disciple; for the same stater sufficed, even the one coin which was paid for Jesus and His disciple. But this coin was not in the house of Jesus, but it was in the sea, and in the mouth of a fish of the sea which, in my judgment, was benefited when it came up and was caught in the net of Peter, who became a fisher of men, in which net was that which is figuratively called a fish, in order also that the coin with the image of Caesar might be taken from it, and that it might take its place among those which were caught by them who have learned to become fishers of men. Let him, then, who has the things of Caesar render them to Caesar, that afterwards he may be able to render to God the things of God. But since Jesus, who was “the image of the invisible God,” had not the image of Caesar, for “the prince of this age had nothing in Him,” on this account He takes from its own place, the sea, the image of Caesar, that He may give it to the kings of the earth for Himself and His disciple, so that those who receive the half-shekel might not imagine that Jesus was the debtor of them and of the kings of the earth; for He paid the debt, not having taken it up, nor having possessed it, nor having acquired it, nor at any time having made it His own possession, so that the image of Caesar might never be along with the image of the invisible God.

5904 Matt. xvii. 24.
5905 Exod. i. 13, 14.
5906 Phil. ii. 7.
5907 Mark xli. 17; Luke xx. 25.
5908 Col. i. 15.
5909 John xiv. 31.

And this may be put in another way. There are some who are kings' sons on the earth, and yet they are not sons of those kings, but sons, and sons absolutely; but others, because of their being strangers to the sons of the kings of the earth, and sons of no one of those upon the earth, but on this very account are sons, whether of God or of His Son, or of some one of those who are God's. If, then, the Saviour inquires of Peter, saying, “The kings of the earth from whom do they receive toll or tribute—from their own sons or from strangers?” and Peter replies not from their own sons, but “from strangers,” then Jesus says about such as are strangers to the kings of the earth, and on account of being free are sons, “Therefore the sons are free;” for the sons of the kings of the earth are not free, since “every one that committeth sin is the bond-servant of sin,” but they are free who abide in the truth of the word of God, and on this account, know the truth, that they also may become free from sin. If, any one then, is a son simply, and not in this matter wholly a son of the kings of the earth, he is free. And nevertheless, though he is free, he takes care not to offend even the kings of the earth, and their sons, and those who receive the half-shekel; wherefore He says, “Let us not cause them to stumble, but go thou and cast thy net, and take up the fish that first cometh up,” etc. But I would inquire of those who are pleased to make myths about different natures, of what sort of nature they were, whether the kings of the earth, or their sons, or those who receive the half-shekel, whom the Saviour does not wish to offend; it appears of a verity, ex hypothesi, that they are not of a nature worthy of praise, and yet He took heed not to cause them to stumble, and He prevents any stumbling-block being put in their way, that they may not sin more grievously, and that with a view to their being saved—if they will—even by receiving Him who has spared them from being caused to stumble. And as in a place verily of consolation,—for such is, by interpretation, Capernaum,—comforting the disciple as being both free and a son, He gives to him the power of catching the fish first, that when it came up Peter might be comforted by its coming up and being caught, and by the stater being taken from its mouth, in order to be paid to those whose the stater was, and who demanded as their own such a piece of money.

5910 Matt. xvii. 25.
5912 John viii. 34.
5913 Matt. xvii. 27.
12. The Stater Allegorized.

But you might sometimes gracefully apply the passage to the lover of money, who has nothing in his mouth but things about silver, when you behold him healed by some Peter, who takes the stater, which is the symbol of all his avarice, not only from his mouth and words, but from his whole character. For you will say that such an one was in the sea, and in the bitter affairs of life, and in the waves of the cares and anxieties of avarice, having the stater in his mouth when he was unbelieving and avaricious, but that he came up from the sea and was caught in the rational net, and being benefited by some Peter who has taught him the truth, no longer has the stater in his mouth, but in place of it those things which contain His image, the oracles of God.

Moreover to the saying, “They that received the half-shekel came to Peter,”\textsuperscript{5914} you will adduce from Numbers that, for the saints according to the law of God, is paid not a half-shekel simply, but a sacred half-shekel. For it is written, “And thou shalt take five shekels per head, according to the sacred half-shekel.”\textsuperscript{5915} But also on behalf of all the sons of Israel is given a sacred half-shekel per head. Since then it was not possible for the saint of God to possess along with the sacred half-shekels the profane shekels, so to speak, on this account, to them who do not receive the sacred half-shekels, and who asked Peter and said, “Doth not your master pay the half-shekel?” the Saviour commands the stater to be paid, in which was the half-shekel which was found in the mouth of the first fish that came up, in order that it might be given for the Teacher and the disciple.

---

\textsuperscript{5914} Matt. xvii. 24.

\textsuperscript{5915} Num. iii. 47.

“In that day came the disciples unto Jesus saying, Who then is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?”⁵⁹¹⁶ In order that we might be taught what it was that the disciples came to Jesus and asked to learn of Him, and how He answered to their inquiry, Matthew, though he might have given an account of this very thing only, has added, according to some manuscripts, “In that hour the disciples came unto Jesus,” but, according to others, “In that day;” and it is necessary that we should not leave the meaning of the evangelist without examination. Wherefore giving attention to the words preceding “in that day,” or “hour,” let us see if it is possible from them to find a way to understand, as being necessary, the addition, “in that day,” or “hour.” Jesus then had come to Capernaum along with His disciples, where “they that received the half-shekel came to Peter,” and asked and said, “Doth not your Master pay the half-shekel?” Then, when Peter answered and said to them, Yea, Jesus giving further a defence with reference to the giving of the half-shekel, sends Peter to drag up the fish into the net, in the mouth of which He said that a stater would be found which was to be given for Himself and Peter. It seems to me, then, that thinking that this was a very great honour which had been bestowed on Peter by Jesus, who judged that he was greater than the rest of His friends, they wished to learn accurately the truth of their suspicion, by making inquiry of Jesus and hearing from Him, whether, as they supposed, He had judged that Peter was greater than they; and at the same time also they hoped to learn the ground on which Peter had been preferred to the rest of the disciples. Matthew then, I think, wishing to make this plain, has subjoined to the words “that take”—the stater, to-wit—“and give unto them for thee and me,” the words, “In that day came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who then is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?”⁵⁹¹⁷ And, perhaps, they were also in doubt because of the preference which had been given to the three at the transfiguration, and they were in doubt about this—which of the three was judged by the Lord to be greatest. For John reclined on His breast through love, and we may conclude that before the Supper they had seen many tokens of special honour given by Jesus to John; but Peter on his confession was called blessed in their hearing, because of his saying, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God;”⁵⁹¹⁸ but again because of the saying, “Get thee behind Me, Satan; thou art a stumbling-block unto Me, for thou mindest not the things of God but the things of men,”⁵⁹¹⁹ they were distracted in mind as to whether it was not he but one of the sons of Zebedee, that was

---

⁵⁹¹⁶ Matt. xviii. 1.
⁵⁹¹⁷ Matt. xvii. 27; xviii. 1.
⁵⁹¹⁸ Matt. xvi. 16, 17.
⁵⁹¹⁹ Matt. xvi. 23.
the greatest. So much for the words “in that day” or “hour,” on which took place the matters relating to the stater.
15. Greatness Varies in Degree.

But next we must seek to understand this: the disciples came to Him, as disciples to a teacher proposing difficult questions, and making inquiry, Who then is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?\textsuperscript{5920} And, in this respect, we must imitate the disciples of Jesus; for if, at any time, any subject of investigation among us should not be found out let us go with all unanimity in regard to the question in dispute to Jesus, who is present where two or three are gathered together in His name,\textsuperscript{5921} and is ready by His presence with power to illumine the hearts of those who truly desire to become His disciples, with a view to their apprehension of the matters under inquiry. And likewise it would be nothing strange for us to go to any of those who have been appointed by God as teachers in the church, and propose any question of a like order to this, “Who, then, is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?” What, then, was already known to the disciples of the matters relating to this question? And what was the point under inquiry? That there is not equality in regard to those who are deemed worthy of the kingdom of heaven they had apprehended, and that, as there was not equality, some one was greatest, and so in succession down to the least: but of what nature was the greatest, and what was the way of life of him who was the least, and who occupied the middle position, they further desired to know; unless, indeed, it is more accurate to say that they knew who was least from the words, “Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven;” but who was the greatest of all they did not know, even if they had grasped the meaning of the words, “Whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven;”\textsuperscript{5922} for as there were many great, it was not clear to them who was the greatest of the great, to use a human standard. And that many are great, but the great not equally great, will be manifest from the ascription of the epithet “great” to Isaac, “who waxed great, and became exceedingly great,”\textsuperscript{5923} and from what is said in the case of Moses, and John the Baptist, and the Saviour. And every one will acknowledge that even though all these were great according to the Scripture, yet the Saviour was greater than they. But whether John also (than whom there was no greater among those born of women),\textsuperscript{5924} was greater than Isaac and Moses, or whether he was not greater, but equal to both, or to one of them, it would be hazardous to declare. And from the saying, “But Isaac, waxing great, became greater,”\textsuperscript{5925} until he became not simply great, but with the twice repeated addition, “exce-ingly,” we may learn that there is a difference among the great, as one is great, and another exceedingly great, and another exceedingly exceedingly great. The disciples, therefore, came to Jesus and sought to learn, who was the greatest in the kingdom of heaven; and perhaps they wished to learn, hearing from Him sometimes like this, “A certain one is greatest in the kingdom of heaven;” but He gives a universal turn to the discourse, showing what was the quality of him who was greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Let us seek to understand, from what is written, to the best of our ability, who this is. “For Jesus called a little child,”\textsuperscript{5926} etc.

\textsuperscript{5926} Matt. xviii. 2.
16. Why the Great are Compared to Little Children.

But first we may expound it in simple fashion. One, expounding the word of the Saviour here after the simple method, might say that, if any one who is a man mortifies the lusts of manhood, putting to death by the spirit the deeds of the body, and “always bearing about in the body the putting to death of Jesus,” to such a degree that he has the condition of the little child who has not tasted sensual pleasures, and has had no conception of the impulses of manhood, then such an one is converted, and has become as the little children. And the greater the advance he has made towards the condition of the little children in regard to such emotions, by so much the more as compared with those who are in training and have not advanced to so great a height of self-control, is he the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. But that which has been said about little children in respect of lustful pleasures, the same might also be said in regard to the rest of the affections and infirmities and sicknesses of the soul, into which it is not the nature of little children to fall, who have not yet fully attained to the possession of reason; as, for example, that, if any one be converted, and, though a man, such an one becomes as a child in respect of anger; and, as is the child in relation to grief, so that sometimes he laughs and plays at the very time that his father or mother or brother is dead, he who is converted would become such an one as little children; and, having received from the Word a disposition incapable of grief, so that he becomes like the little child in regard to grief. And the like you will say about what is called pleasure, in regard to which the wicked are irrationally lifted up, from which little children do not suffer, nor such as have been converted and become as little children. As, then, it has been accurately demonstrated also by others, that no passion is incident to the little children who have not yet attained to full possession of reason; and if no passion, clearly fear also; but, if there be anything corresponding to the passions, these are faint, and very quickly suppressed, and healed in the case of little children, so that he is worthy of love, who, being converted as the little children, has reached such a point as to have, as it were, his passions in subjection like the little children. And with regard to fear, therefore, similar things to those spoken might be conceived, that the little children do not experience the fear of the wicked, but a different thing, to which those who have an accurate knowledge of questions in regard to the passions and their names give the name of fear; as, for example, in the case of children there is a forgetfulness of their evils at the very time of their tears, for they change in a moment, and laugh and play along with those who were thought to grieve and terrify them, but in truth had wrought in them no such emotion. So too, moreover, one will humble himself like the little child which Jesus called; for neither haughtiness, nor conceit in respect of noble birth, or wealth, or any of those things which are thought to be good, but are not, comes to a little child. Wherefore you may see those who are not altogether infants, up to three or four years of age, like to those who are of mean birth, though they may seem to be of noble birth, and not appearing at all to love rich children rather than the poor. If, therefore, in the same way as according to their age children are affected towards those passions which exalt the senseless, the disciple of Jesus under the influence of reason has humbled himself like the little child which Jesus showed, not being exalted because of vainglory, nor puffed up on the ground of wealth, or raiment, nor elated because of noble birth, in particular are they to be received and imitated in the name of Jesus, who have been converted as the Word showed, like the little child which Jesus took to Him; since especially in such the Christ is, and therefore He says, “Whosoever shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me.”

5927 2 Cor. iv. 10.

5928 Or, the Word.
5929 Matt. xviii. 5.
17. The Little Ones and Their Stumbling-Blocks.

But it is a hard task to expound what follows in logical harmony with what has already been said; for one might say, how is it that he who is converted and has become as the little children, is a little one among such as believe in Jesus, and is capable of being caused to stumble? And likewise let us attempt to explain this coherently. Every one that gives his adherence to Jesus as the Son of God according to the true history concerning Him, and by deeds done according to the Gospel, is on the way to living the life which is according to virtue, is converted and is on the way towards becoming as the little children; and it is impossible for him not to enter into the kingdom of heaven. There are, indeed, many such; but not all, who are converted with a view to becoming like the little children, have reached the point of being made like unto little children; but each wants so much of the likeness to the little children, as he falls short of the disposition of little children towards the passions, of which we have spoken. In the whole multitude, then, of believers, are also those who, having been, as it were, just converted in regard to their becoming as the little children, at the very point of their conversion that they may become as the little children, are called little; and those of them, who are converted that they may become as the little children, but fall far short of having truly become as the little children, are capable of being caused to stumble; each of whom falls so far short of the likeness to them, as he falls short of the disposition of children towards the passions, of which we have spoken, to whom we ought not to give occasions of stumbling-block; but, if it be otherwise, he who has caused him to stumble will require, as contributing towards his cure, to have “an ass’s millstone hanged about his neck, and be sunk into the depths of the sea.” For, in this way, when he has paid the due penalty in the sea, where is “the dragon which God formed to play in it,” and, so far as is expedient for the end in view, has been punished and undergone suffering, he shall then have his part in those troubles which belong to the depths of the sea, which he endured when he was dragged down by the ass’s millstone. For there are also differences of millstones, so that one of them may be, so to call it, the millstone of a man, and another that of an ass; and that is human, about which it is written, “Two women shall be grinding at the mill; one is taken and one is left,” but the millstone of the ass is that which shall be put round him who has given occasion of stumbling-block. But some one might say—I know not whether he would speak soundly or erroneously—that the ass’s millstone is the heavy body of the wicked man, which is sunken downwards, and which he will receive at the resurrection that he may be sunk in the abyss which is called the depth of the sea, where

5930 Matt. xviii. 6.
5931 Ps. civ. 26.
5932 Or, be free from. The Vetus Inter. has “extra dolores.” It has had ἐξω instead of ἐξῆς.
5933 Matt. xxiv. 41.
“is the dragon which God formed to play therein.”

5934 But another will refer the creating of a stumbling-block to one of the little ones to the powers that are unseen by men; for from these arise many stumbling-blocks to the little ones pointed out by Jesus. But when they cause to stumble one of the little ones pointed out by Jesus, who are believers in Him, he shall assume an ass’s millstone, the corruptible body which presses heavily on the soul, which is itself hung from the neck, which is dragged down to the affairs in this life, that by means of these their conceit may be taken away, and having paid the penalty, they shall come, through means of the ass’s millstone, to the condition expedient for them.

_5934 Ps. civ. 26._
18. Who Was the Little Child Called by Jesus.

Now another interpretation different from what is called the simpler may be uttered; whether as dogma, or for the sake of exercise, so to speak, let us also inquire what was the little child who was called by Jesus and set in the midst of the disciples. Now consider if you can say that the little child, whom Jesus called, was the Holy Spirit who humbled Himself, when He was called by the Saviour, and set in the midst of the reason of the disciples of Jesus; if, indeed, He wishes us, being turned away from everything else, to be turned towards the examples suggested by the Holy Spirit, so that we may so become as the little children, who are themselves also turned and likened to the Holy Spirit; which little children God gave to the Saviour, according to what is said in Isaiah, “Behold, I and the little children which God has given to me.”

And it is not possible for any one to enter into the kingdom of heaven, who has not been turned away from the affairs of this world, and made like unto the little children who possess the Holy Spirit; which Holy Spirit was called by Jesus, and, descending from His own perfection to men as a little child, was set by Jesus in the midst of the disciples. It is necessary, then, for him who has turned away from the desires of this world to humble himself not simply as the little child, but, according to what is written, “as this little child.”

But to humble oneself as that little child is to imitate the Holy Spirit, who humbled Himself for the salvation of men. Now, that the Saviour and the Holy Spirit were sent by the Father for the salvation of men has been declared in Isaiah, in the person of the Saviour, saying, “And now the Lord hath sent me and His Spirit.” You must know, however, that this expression is ambiguous; for either God sent, but also the Holy Spirit sent, the Saviour; or, as we have taken it, the Father sent both—the Saviour and the Holy Spirit. He, therefore, who has humbled himself more than all those who have humbled themselves in imitation of that little child, is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. For there are many who are willing to humble themselves as that little child; but the man, who in every respect has become like to the little child who humbled himself, in the name of Jesus—especially in Jesus Himself,—in reality, would be found to be he who is named greater than all in the kingdom of heaven. But as he receives Jesus, whosoever receives one such of the little children in His name, so he rejects Jesus and casts Him out, who does not wish to receive one such little child in the name of Jesus. But if, also, there is a difference in those who are deemed worthy of the Holy Spirit, as believers receive more or less of the Holy Spirit, there would be some little ones among those who believe in God who can be made to stumble: to avenge whose being made to stumble the Word says, with reference to those who had caused them to stumble, “It is profitable for him that an ass’s millstone should be hanged about his neck, 5935 Psa. viii. 18.

5936 Matt. xviii. 4.
5937 Isa. xlviii. 16.
and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea.\textsuperscript{5938} Let these things be said in regard to the passage of Matthew before us.

\textsuperscript{5938} Matt. xviii. 6.

But let us consider also the like account in the other Evangelists. Mark,\(^{5939}\) then, says, that the Twelve reasoned in the way as to which of them was the greatest. Wherefore He sat down, and called them, and teaches who is the greatest, saying, that he who became last of all by means of his moderation and gentleness, would as the greatest obtain the first place, so that he did not receive the place of one who was being ministered unto, but the place of one who ministered, and that not to some but not to others, but to all absolutely; for attend to the words, “If any man would be first he shall be last of all, and minister of all.”\(^{5940}\) And next to that He says, that “He,”—Jesus to-wit—“took a little child, and set him in the midst of His own disciples, and taking him in His arms, He said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of the little children in My name receiveth Me.”\(^{5941}\) But what was the little child which Jesus took and placed in His arms, according to the deeper meaning in the passage? Was it the Holy Spirit? And to this little child, indeed, some were likened, of whom He said, “Whosoever shall receive one of such little children in My name receiveth Me.”\(^{5942}\) And Jesus, seeing the reasoning of their heart, as He had eyes that see the reasonings of hearts,—seeing the reasoning of their heart,—without being questioned, according to Luke, “took the little child and set him,” not in the midst alone, as Matthew and Mark have said, but now, also, “by His side,” and said to the disciples, not only, “Whosoever shall receive one such little child,” or, “Whosoever shall receive one of such little ones in My name receiveth Me,” but, now going even a step higher, “Whosoever shall receive this little child in My name receiveth Me.”\(^{5943}\) It is necessary, therefore, according to Luke, to receive in the name of Jesus that very little child which Jesus took and placed by His side. And I know not if there be any one who can interpret figuratively the word, “Whosoever shall receive this little child in My name.” For it is necessary that each of us should receive in the name of Jesus that little child which Jesus then took and set by His side; for He lives as immortal, and we must receive him from Jesus Himself in the name of Jesus; and without being separated from him, Jesus is with him who receives the little child, so that according to this it is said, “Whosoever shall receive this little child in My name receiveth Me.” Then, since the Father is inseparable from the Son, He is with him who receives the Son. Wherefore it is said, “And whosoever shall receive Me receives Him that sent Me.”\(^{5944}\) But he who has received the little child,

---

\(^{5939}\) Mark ix. 33, 34.
\(^{5940}\) Mark ix. 35.
\(^{5941}\) Mark ix. 36, 37.
\(^{5942}\) Luke ix. 46.
\(^{5943}\) Luke ix. 47, 48.
\(^{5944}\) Luke ix. 48.
and the Saviour, and Him that sent Him, is least of all the disciples of Jesus, making himself little. But, so far as he belittles himself, to that extent does he become great; as that very thing, which caused him the more to make himself little, contributes to his advance in greatness; for attend to what is said, “He that is least among you all the same is great;” but in other manuscripts we read, “The same shall be great.” Now, according to Luke, “If any one shall not receive the kingdom of God as the little child, he shall in no wise enter therein.” And this expression is ambiguous; for either it means that he who receives the kingdom of God may become as a little child, or, that he may receive the kingdom of God, which has become to him as a little child. And perhaps here those who receive the kingdom of God receive it, when it is as a little child, but in the world to come no longer as a little child; and they receive the greatness of the perfection in the spiritual manhood, so to speak, which perfection is manifested to all who in the present time receive it, when it is here as a little child.

“Woe unto the world because of occasions of stumbling.” The expression “cosmos,” is used in itself and absolutely in the passage, “He was in the cosmos and the cosmos knew Him not,” but it is used relatively and in respect of its connection with that of which it is the cosmos, in the words, “Lest you look up to the heaven, and seeing the sun, and the moon, and all the cosmos of the heavens, you should stray and bow down to them and worship them.” And the like you will find in the Book of Esther, spoken about her, when it is written, stripping off all her “cosmos.” For the word “cosmos,” simply, is not the same as the “cosmos” of heaven, or the “cosmos” of Esther; and this which we are now investigating is another. I think, then, that the world is not this compacted whole of heaven and earth according to the Divine Scriptures, but only the place which is round about the earth, and this is not to be conceived in respect of the whole earth, but only in respect of ours which is inhabited; for the true light “was in the world,” that is, in the place which is around, conceived in relation to our part of the earth; “and the world knew Him not,” that is, the men in the region round about, and perhaps also the powers that have an affinity to this place. For it is monstrous to understand by the world here the compacted whole formed of heaven and earth, and those in it; so that it could be said, that the sun and moon and the choir of the stars and the angels in all this world, did not know the true light, and, though ignorant of it, preserved the order which God had appointed for them. But when it is said by the Saviour in the prayer to the Father, “And, now, glorify me, O Father, with Thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was,” you must understand by the “world,” that which is inhabited by us on the earth; for it was from this world that the Father gave men to the Son, in regard to whom alone the Saviour beseeches His Father, and not for the whole world of men. Moreover, also, when the Saviour says, “And I come to thee and am no longer in the world,” He speaks of the terrestrial world; for it is not to be supposed that He spoke things contradictory when He said, “And I come to thee, and I am no longer in the world,” and “I am in the world.” But also in this, “And these things I speak in the world,” we must think of the place round about the earth.

5946 Matt. xviii. 7.
5947 John i. 10.
5948 Deut. iv. 19.
5949 Lomm., following Huet. refers to Esther (The addition to Esther, xiv. 2). But the word κόσμος does not occur in this passage. See Judith x. 4; 1 Macc. ii. 11.
5950 John i. 10.
5951 John xvii. 5.
5952 John xvii. 11.
5953 John xvii. 13.
And this is clearly indicated also by the words, “And the world hated them, because they are not of the world.”5954 For it hated us from the time when we no longer “look at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen,”5955 because of the teaching of Jesus; not the world of heaven and earth and them that are therein, all compacted together but the men on the earth along with us. And the saying, “They are not of the world,”5956 is equivalent to, They are not of the place round about the earth. And so also the disciples of Jesus are not of this world, as He was not of the world. And further also the saying, “That the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me,”5957 twice spoken in the Gospel according to John, does not refer to the things that are superior to men, but to men who need to believe that the Father sent the Son into the world here. Yea, and also in the Apostle, “Your faith is proclaimed in the whole world.”5958

5954 John xvii. 14.
5955 2 Cor. iv. 18.
5956 John xvii. 21.
5957 John xvii. 21, 23.
5958 Rom. i. 8.
21. The “Woe” Does Not Apply to the Disciples of Jesus.

But if there is woe unto men everywhere on the earth, because of occasions of stumbling to those who are laid hold of by them; but the disciples are not of the world, as they do not look at things seen, like as the Master is not of this world; to no one of the disciples of Jesus does the “woe because of occasions of stumbling” apply, since “great peace have they who love the law of God, and there is to them no occasion of stumbling.” But if any one seems to be called a disciple, but yet is of the world, because of his loving the world, and the things therein,—I mean, the life in the place round about the earth, and the property in it, or the possessions, or any form of wealth whatsoever,—so that the saying, “they are not of the world,” does not fit him; to him, as being really of the world, shall come that which happens to the world, the “woe, because of occasions of stumbling.” But let him who wishes to avoid this woe not be a lover of life, but let him say with Paul, “The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.” For the saints while “in the tabernacle, do groan being burdened” with “the body of humiliation,” and do all things that they may become worthy to be found in the mystery of the resurrection, when God shall fashion anew the body of humiliation not of all, but of those who have been truly made disciples to Christ, so that it may be conformed to the body of the glory of Christ. For as none of the “woes” happen to any of the disciples of Christ, so does not this “woe, because of occasions of stumbling;” for, supposing that thousands of occasions should arise, they shall not touch those who are no longer of the world. But if any one, because of his faith wanting ballast, and the instability of his submission in regard to the Word of God, is capable of being caused to stumble, let him know that he is not called by Jesus His disciple. Now we must suppose that so many stumbling-blocks come, that, as a result, the woes extend not to some parts of the earth, but to the whole “world” which is in it.

5959 Ps. cxix. 165.
5960 John xvii. 16.
5962 2 Cor. v. 4.
5963 Phil. iii. 21.
22. What the “Occasions of Stumbling” Are.

“And it must needs be that occasions of stumbling come,”⁵⁹⁶⁴ which I take to be different from the men by whom they come. The occasions then which come are an army of the devil, his angels, and a wicked band of impure spirits, which, seeking out instruments through whom they will work, often find men altogether strangers to piety, and sometimes even some of those who are thought to believe the Word of God, for whom exists a worse woe than that which comes to him who is caused to stumble, just as also it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment,⁵⁹⁶⁵ than for the places where Jesus did signs and wonders, and yet was not believed. But as one might undertake to make a collection from the Scriptures of those who are pronounced blessed, and of the things in respect of which they are so called, so also he might undertake to do with the woes which are written, and those in whose case the woes are spoken. But that the woe is worse in the case of him who causes to stumble, than in him who is made to stumble, you may prove by the passage, “Whoso shall cause to stumble one of these little ones which believe in Me, it is profitable for him,”⁵⁹⁶⁶ etc.; for, while the little one who is made to stumble receives retribution from him who caused him to stumble, it is expedient that the severe and intolerable punishment which is written should befall the man who has caused the stumbling. But if we were to give more careful consideration to these things, we should be on our guard against sinning against the brethren, and wounding their conscience when it is weak, lest we sin against Christ;⁵⁹⁶⁷ as often our brethren about us, “for whom Christ died,” perish, not only through our knowledge, but also through some other causes connected with us; in the case of whom, we, sinning against Christ, shall pay the penalty, the soul of them who perish through us being required of us.

---

⁵⁹⁶⁴ Matt. xviii. 7.
⁵⁹⁶⁵ Matt. xi. 22.
⁵⁹⁶⁶ Matt. xviii. 6.
⁵⁹⁶⁷ 1 Cor. viii. 11, 12.
23. In What Sense “Necessary.”

Next we must test accurately the meaning of the word “necessity” in the passage, “For there is a necessity that the occasions come,”\(^{5968}\) and to the like effect in Luke, “It is ‘inadmissible’ but that occasions of stumbling should come,”\(^{5969}\) instead of “impossible.” And as it is necessary that that which is mortal should die, and it is impossible but that it should die, and as it must needs be that he who is in the body should be fed, for it is impossible for one who is not fed to live, so it is necessary and impossible but that occasions of stumbling should arise, since there is a necessity also that wickedness should exist before virtue in men, from which wickedness stumbling-blocks arise; for it is impossible that a man should be found altogether sinless, and who, without sin, has attained to virtue. For the wickedness in the evil powers, which is the primal source of the wickedness among men, is altogether eager to work through certain instruments against the men in the world. And perhaps also the wicked powers are more exasperated when they are cast out by the word of Jesus, and their worship is lessened, their customary sacrifices not being offered unto them; and there is a necessity that these offences come; but there is no necessity that they should come through any particular one; wherefore the “woe” falls on the man through whom the stumbling-block comes, as he has given a place to the wicked power whose purpose it is to create a stumbling-block. But do not suppose that by nature, and from constitution, there are certain stumbling-blocks which seek out men through whom they come; for as God did not make death, so neither did He create stumbling-blocks; but free-will begot the stumbling-blocks in some who did not wish to endure toils for virtue.

\(^{5968}\) Matt. xviii. 7.
\(^{5969}\) Luke xviii. 1.
24. The Offending Hand, or Foot, or Eye.

And it is well, then, if the eye and the hand are deserving of praise, that the eye cannot with reason say to the hand, “I have no need of thee.” But if any one in the whole body of the congregations of the church, who because of his practical gifts has the name of hand, should change and become a hand causing to stumble, let the eye say to such a hand, “I have no need of thee,” and, saying it, let him cut it off and cast it from him. And so it is well, if any head be blessed, and the feet worthy of the blessed head, so that the head observing the things which are becoming to itself, may not be able to say to the feet, “I have no need of you.” If, however, any foot be found to become a stumbling-block to the whole body, let the head say to such a foot, “I have no need of thee,” and having cast it off, let him cast it from himself; for even it is much better that the rest of the body should enter into life, wanting the foot or the hand which caused the stumbling-block, rather than, when the stumbling-block has spread over the whole body, it should be cast into the hell of fire with the two feet or the two hands. And so it is well, that he who can become the eye of the whole body should be worthy of Christ and of the whole body; but if such an eye should ever change, and become a stumbling-block to the whole body, it is well to take it out and cast it outside the whole body, and that the rest of the body without that eye should be saved, rather than that along with it, when the whole body has been corrupted, the whole body should be cast into the hell of fire. For the practical faculty of the soul, if prone to sin, and the walking faculty of the soul, so to speak, if prone to sin, and the faculty of clear vision, if prone to sin, may be the hand that causes to stumble, and the foot that causes to stumble, and the eye that causes to stumble, which things it is better to cast away, and having put them aside to enter into life without them, like as one halt, or maimed, or one-eyed, rather than along with them to lose the whole soul. And likewise in the case of the soul it is a good and blessed thing to use its power for the noblest ends; but if we are going to lose one for any cause, it is better to lose the use of it, that along with the other powers we may be saved.

5970 1 Cor. xii. 21.
5971 Matt. xviii. 8.
5972 Cf. Matt. xviii. 9.
25. The Eye or Hand Allegorized.

And it is possible to apply these words also to our nearest kinsfolk, who are our members, as it were; being considered to be our members, because of the close relationship; whether by birth, or from any habitual friendship, so to speak; whom we must not spare if they are injuring our soul. For let us cut off from ourselves as a hand or a foot or an eye, a father or mother who wishes us to do that which is contrary to piety, and a son or daughter who, as far as in them lies, would have us revolt from the church of Christ and the love of Him. But even if the wife of our bosom, or a friend who is kindred in soul, become stumbling-blocks to us, let us not spare them, but let us cut them out from ourselves, and cast them outside of our soul, as not being truly our kindred but enemies of our salvation; for “whosoever hates not his father, and mother,” \textsuperscript{5973} and the others subjoined, when it is the fitting season to hate them as enemies and assailants, that he may be able to win Christ, this man is not worthy of the Son of God. And in respect of these we may say, that from a critical position any lame one, so to speak, is saved, when he has lost a foot—say a brother—and alone obtains the inheritance of the kingdom of God; and a maimed one is saved, when his father is not saved, but they perish, while he is separated from them, that he alone may obtain the blessings. And so also any one is saved with one eye, who has cut out the eye of his own house, his wife, if she commit fornication, lest having two eyes he may go away into the hell of fire.

26. The Little Ones and Their Angels.

"See that ye despise not one of these little ones." It seems to me that as among the bodies of men there are differences in point of size,—so that some are little, and others great, and others of middle height, and, again, there are differences among the little, as they are more or less little, and the same holds of the great, and of those of middle height,—so also among the souls of men, there are some things which give them the stamp of littleness, and other things the stamp of greatness, so to speak, and generally, after the analogy of things bodily, other things the stamp of mediocrity. But in the case of bodies, it is not due to the action of men but to the spermatic principles, that one is short and little, another great, and another of middle height; but in the case of souls, it is our free-will, and actions of such a kind, and habits of such a kind, that furnish the reason why one is great, or little, or of middle height; and it is of our free-will either by advancing in stature to increase our size, or not advancing to be short. And so indeed I understand the words about Jesus having assumed a human soul, "Jesus advanced;" for as from the free-will there was an advance of His soul in wisdom and grace, so also in stature. And the Apostle says, "Until we all attain unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ;" for we must think that he attains unto a man, and that full-grown, according to the inner man, who has gone through the things of the child, and has reached the stage of the man, and has put away the things of the child, and generally, has perfected the things of the man. And so we must suppose that there is a certain measure of spiritual stature unto which the most perfect soul can attain by magnifying the Lord, and become great. Thus, then, these became great, of whom this is written, Isaac, and Moses, and John, and the Saviour Himself above all; for also about Him Gabriel said, "He shall be great;" but the little ones are "the newborn babes which long for the reasonable milk which is without guile," such as stand in need of nursing-fathers and nursing-mothers, spoken of in Isaiah when he says, about the calling from the Gentiles, "And they shall bring the sons in the bosom, and take their daughters on the shoulders, and kings shall be thy nursing-fathers and their princesses thy nursing-mothers." For these reasons you will, then, attend to the word, "Do not despise one of these little ones," and consider whether it is their angels who bring them in their bosom,

---

5974 Matt. xviii. 10.
5975 Luke ii. 52.
5976 Eph. iv. 13.
5977 Cf. 1 Cor. xiii. 11.
5978 Luke i. 32.
5979 1 Pet. ii. 2.
5980 Isa. xlix. 22, 23.
5981 Matt. xviii. 10.
since they have become sons, and also take on their shoulders what are called daughters, and whether from them are the nursing-fathers who are called kings, and the nursing-mothers who are called princesses. And since the little ones, pointed out by our Saviour, are under the stewardship as of nursing-fathers and nursing-mothers, on this account I think that Moses, who believed that he had been already assigned a place among the ranks of the great, said, with regard to the promise, “My angel shall go before you,” \[5982\] “If thou thyself do not go along with me, carry me not up hence.” \[5983\] For though the little one even be an heir, yet as being a child he differs nothing from a servant when he is a child, \[5984\] and to the extent to which he is little “has the spirit of bondage to fear;” \[5985\] but he who is not at all any longer such has no longer the spirit of bondage, but already the spirit of adoption, when “perfect love casteth out fear;” \[5986\] it will be plain to thee, how that according to these things “the angel of the Lord” is said “to encamp round about them that fear Him, and to save them.” \[5987\] But you will consider, according to these things also, whether these are indeed angels of the little ones “who are led by the spirit of bondage to fear,” “when the angel of the Lord encamps round about them that fear Him and delivereth them;” but of the great, whether it is the Lord who is greater than the angels, who might say about each of them, “I am with him in affliction;” \[5988\] and, so long as we are imperfect, and need one to assist us that we may be delivered from evils, we stand in need of an angel of whom Jacob said, “The angel who delivered me from all the evils;” \[5989\] but, when we have become perfected, and have passed through the stage of being subject to nursing-fathers and nursing-mothers and guardians and stewards, \[5990\] we are meet to be governed by the Lord Himself.

---

5982 Exod. xxxii. 34.
5983 Exod. xxxiii. 15.
5984 Gal. iv. 1.
5985 Rom. viii. 15.
5986 1 John iv. 18.
5987 Ps. xxxiv. 7.
5988 Ps. xci. 15.
5989 Gen. xlviii. 16.
5990 Gal. iv. 4.
27. When the Little Ones are Assigned to Angels.

Then again one might inquire at what time those who are called their angels assume guardianship of the little ones pointed out by Christ; whether they received this commission to discharge concerning them, from what time “by the laver of regeneration,”^5991 through which they were born “as new-born babes, they long for the reasonable milk which is without guile,”^5992 and no longer are in subjection to any wicked power; or, whether from birth they had been appointed, according to the foreknowledge and predestination of God, over those whom God also foreknew, and foreordained to be conformed to the glory of the Christ.\(^5993\)

And with reference to the view that they have angels from birth, one might quote, “He who separated me from my mother’s womb,”^5994 and, “From the womb of my mother thou hast been my protector,”^5995 and, “He has assisted me from my mother’s womb,”^5996 and, “Upon thee I was cast from my mother,”^5997 and in the Epistle of Jude, “To them that are beloved in God the Father and are kept for Jesus Christ, being called,”^5998—kept completely by the angels who keep them.

---

5991 Tit. iii. 5.
5992 1 Pet. ii. 2.
5993 Rom. viii. 29.
5994 Gal. i. 15.
5995 Ps. lxxi. 6.
5996 Ps. cxxxix. 13.
5997 Ps. xxii. 10.
5998 Jude 1.
28. Close Relationship of Angels to Their “Little Ones.”

With reference to the words, “When through the laver I became a child in Christ,” it may be said, that there is no holy angel present with those who are still in wickedness, but that during the period of unbelief they are under the angels of Satan, but, after the regeneration, He who has redeemed us with His own blood consigns us to a holy angel, who also, because of his purity, beholds the face of God. And a third exposition of this passage might be something like the following, which would say, that as it is possible for a man to change from unbelief to faith, and from intemperance to temperance, and generally from wickedness to virtue, so also it is possible that the angel, to whom any soul has been entrusted at birth, may be wicked at the first, but afterwards may at some time believe in proportion as the man believes, and may make such advance that he may become one of the angels who always behold the face of the Father in heaven, beginning from the time that he is yoked along with the man who was foreknown and foreordained to believe at that time, the judgments of God, which are unspeakable and unsearchable and like to the depths, fitly bringing together all this harmonious relationship—angels with men. And it may be that as when a man and his wife are both unbelievers, sometimes it is the man who first believes and in time saves his wife, and sometimes the wife who begins and afterwards in time persuades her husband, so it happens with angels and with men. If, however, anything of this kind takes place in the case of other angels or not, you may seek out for yourself. But consider whether it may not be appropriate to say something of this kind in regard to each angel who is so honoured according to the word of the Saviour, that he is said to behold always the face of the Father who is in heaven. But since in what we said above, that the little ones have angels, but that the great have passed beyond such a position, some one will quote in opposition to us from the Acts of the Apostles, where it is written, that a certain maid Rhoda, when Peter knocked at the door, came to answer, and recognizing the voice of Peter, ran in and announced that Peter stood before the gate; but when they who were gathered together in the house wondered, and thought that it was quite impossible that Peter verily stood before the gate, they said, It is his angel. For the objector will say that, as they had learned once for all that each of the believers had some definite angel, they knew that Peter also had one. But he, who adheres to what we have previously said, will say that the word of Rhoda was not necessarily a dogma, and perhaps also the word of those who did not accurately know, when one as being little and God-fearing is governed by angels, and when now by the Lord Himself. After this, in order to establish our conception of the little one which we have 5999 Cf. Tit. iii. 5; 1 Pet. ii. 2.

6000 The text is perhaps corrupt.
6001 Matt. xviii. 10.
brought forward, it will be said that we need no command about “not despising” in the case of the great, but we do need it in the case of the little; wherefore it is not merely said, “Do not despise one of these,” pointing to all the disciples, but “one of these little ones,” pointed out by Him, who sees the littleness and the greatness of the soul.

6003 Matt. xviii. 10.
29. The Little Ones and the Perfect.

But another might say that the perfect man is here called little, applying the word, “For he that is least among you all, the same is great,” and will affirm that he who humbles himself and becomes a child in the midst of all that believe, though he be an apostle or a bishop, and becomes such “as when a nurse cherisheth her own children,” is the little one pointed out by Jesus, and that the angel of such an one is worthy to behold the face of God. For to say that the little are here called perfect, according to the passage, “He that is least among you all, the same is great,” and as Paul said, “Unto me who am less than the least of all saints was this grace given,” will seem to be in harmony with the saying, “Whoso shall cause one of these little ones to stumble,” and “So it is not the will of My Father in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.” For he, as has been stated, who is now little, could not be made to stumble nor perish, for “great peace have they who love the law of God, and there is no stumbling-block to them;” and he could not perish, who is least of all among all the disciples of Christ, and on this account becomes great; and, since he could not perish, he could say, “Who shall separate us from the love,” etc. But he who wishes to maintain this last exposition will say that the soul even of the just man is changeable, as Ezekiel also testifies, saying, that the righteous man may abandon the commandments of God, so that his former righteousness is not reckoned unto him; wherefore it is said, “Whoso shall cause to stumble one of these little ones,” and, “It is not the will of My Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.”

[As for the exposition of the matters relating to “the hundred sheep,” you may consult the homilies on Luke.]

---

6005 1 Thess. ii. 7.
6007 Eph. iii. 8.
6008 Matt. xviii. 6.
6010 Ps. cxix. 165.
6011 Rom. viii. 35.
6012 Ezek. xxxiii. 12.
6013 Matt. xviii. 6.
6015 Matt. xviii. 12–14.
30. The Sinning Brother.

“If thy brother sin against thee, go, shew him his fault between thee and him alone.”

He, then, who attends closely to the expression, in proof of the surpassing philanthropy of Jesus, will say, that as the words do not suggest a difference of sins, they will act in a singular manner and contrary to the goodness of Jesus, who supply the thought, that these words are to be understood as being limited in their application to lesser sins. But another, also attending closely to the expression, and not wishing to introduce these extraneous thoughts, nor admitting that it is spoken about every sin, will say, that he who commits those great sins is not a brother, even if he be called a brother, as the Apostle says, “If any one that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, etc., with such an one not to eat,” for no one who is an idolater, or a fornicator, or covetous, is a brother; for if he, who seems to bear the name of Christ, though he is named a brother, has something of the features of these, he would not rightly be called a brother. As then he, who says that such words are spoken about every sin, whether the sin be murder, or poisoning, or pæderasty, or anything of that sort, would give occasion of injury to the exceeding goodness of Christ, so, on the contrary, he who distinguishes between the brother and him who is called the brother, might teach that, in the case of the least of the sins of men, he who has not repented after the telling of the fault is to be reckoned as a Gentile and a publican, for sins which are “not unto death,” or, as the law has described them in the Book of Numbers, not “death-bringing.” This would seem to be very harsh; for I do not think that any one will readily be found who has not been censured thrice for the same form of sin, say, reviling, with which revilers abuse their neighbours, or those who are carried away by passion, or for over-drinking, or lying and idle words, or any of those things which exist in the masses. You will inquire, therefore, whether any observation of the passage has escaped the notice of those, who are influenced by their conception of the goodness of the Word, and grant pardon to those who have committed the greatest sins, as well as of those who teach that, in the case of the very least sins, he is to be reckoned as a Gentile and a publican, making him a stranger to the church, after he has committed three very trivial transgressions. But the following seems to me to have been overlooked by both of them, namely, the words, “Thou hast gained thy brother.” It is assigned by the Word to him only who heard, and He no longer applies it in the case of him who has stumbled twice or thrice and been censured; but that which

6016  Matt. xviii. 15.
6017  1 Cor. v. 11.
6018  1 John v. 16.
6019  Num. xviii. 22.
6020  Matt. xviii. 15.
was to be said about him who was censured twice or thrice, corresponding to the saying,
"Thou hast gained thy brother," He has left in the air, so to speak. He is not, therefore, altogether gained, nor will he altogether perish, or he will receive stripes. And attend carefully to the first passage, "If he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother," and to the second passage, which is literally, "If he hear thee not, take with thyself one or two more, that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established." What, then, will happen to him who has been censured for the second time, after every word has been established by two or three witnesses, He has left us to conceive. And, again, "If he refuse to hear them"—manifestly, the witnesses who have been taken—"tell it," he says, "to the church;" and He does not say what he will suffer if he does not hear the church, but He taught that if he refused to hear the church, then he who had thrice admonished, and had not been heard, was to regard him for the future as the Gentile and the publican. Therefore he is not altogether gained, nor will he altogether perish. But what at all he will suffer, who at first did not hear, but required witnesses, or even refused to hear these, but was brought to the church, God knows; for we do not declare it, according to the precept, "Judge not that ye be not judged," until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness and make manifest the counsels of the hearts. But, with reference to the seeming harshness in the case of those who have committed less sins, one might say that it is not possible for him who has not heard twice in succession to hear the third time, so as, on this account, no longer to be as a Gentile or a publican, or no longer to stand in need of the censure in presence of all the church. For we must bear in mind this, "So it is not the will of My Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." For if "we must all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ, that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad," let each one with all his power do what he can so that he may not receive punishment for more evil things done in the body, even if he is going to receive back for all the wrongs which he has done;
but it should be our ambition to procure the reward for a greater number of good deeds, since "with what measure we mete, it shall be measured to us," and, "according to the works of our own hands shall it happen unto us," and not in infinite wise, but either

6021 Matt. xviii. 15, 16.
6022 Matt. xviii. 17.
6023 Matt. xviii. 17.
6024 Matt. vii. 1.
6025 1 Cor. iv. 5.
6027 2 Cor. v. 10.
6028 Matt. vii. 2.
6029 Isa. iii. 11.
double or sevenfold shall sinners receive for their sins from the hand of the Lord; since He does not render unto any one according to the works of his hands, but more than that which he has done, for “Jerusalem,” as Isaiah taught, “received from the hand of the Lord double for her sins;”\(^\text{6030}\) but the neighbours of Israel, whoever they may be, will receive sevenfold, according to the following expression in the Psalms, “Render unto our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom the reproach with which they have reproached Thee, O Lord.”\(^\text{6031}\) And other forms of payment in return could be found, which, if we apprehend, we shall know that to repent after any sin, whatever its greatness, is advantageous, in order that, in addition to our not being punished for more offences, there may be some hope left to us concerning good deeds done afterwards at some time, even though, before them, thousands of errors have been committed by anyone of us. For it would be strange that evil deeds should be reckoned to any one, but the better which are done after the bad should profit nothing; which may also be learned from Ezekiel,\(^\text{6032}\) by those who pay careful consideration to the things said about such cases.

\(^{6030}\) Isa. xl. 2.

\(^{6031}\) Ps. lxxix. 12.

\(^{6032}\) Ezek. xxxiii.
31. The Power to Bind on Earth and in Heaven.

But to me it seems that, to the case of him who after being thrice admonished was adjudged to be as the Gentile and the publican, it is fitly subjoined, "Verily, I say unto you,"—namely, to those who have judged any one to be as the Gentile and the publican,—“and what things soever ye shall bind on the earth,” etc.; for with justice has he, who has thrice admonished and not been heard, bound him who is judged to be as a Gentile and a publican; wherefore, when such an one is bound and condemned by one of this character, he remains bound, as no one of those in heaven overturns the judgment of the man who bound him. And, in like manner, he who was admonished once for all, and did things worthy of being gained, having been set free by the admonition of the man who gained him, and no longer bound by the cords of his own sins, for which he was admonished, shall be adjudged to have been set free by those in heaven. Only, it seems to be indicated that the things, which above were granted to Peter alone, are here given to all who give the three admonitions to all that have sinned; so that, if they be not heard, they will bind on earth him who is judged to be as a Gentile and a publican, as such an one has been bound in heaven. But since it was necessary, even if something in common had been said in the case of Peter and those who had thrice admonished the brethren, that Peter should have some element superior to those who thrice admonished, in the case of Peter, this saying “I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of the heavens,” has been specially set before the words, “And what things soever ye shall bind on earth,” etc. And, indeed, if we were to attend carefully to the evangelical writings, we would also find here, and in relation to those things which seem to be common to Peter and those who have thrice admonished the brethren, a great difference and a pre-eminence in the things said to Peter, compared with the second class. For it is no small difference that Peter received the keys not of one heaven but of more, and in order that whatsoever things he binds on the earth may be bound not in one heaven but in them all, as compared with the many who bind on earth and loose on earth, so that these things are bound and loosed not in the heavens, as in the case of Peter, but in one only; for they do not reach so high a stage, with power as Peter to bind and loose in all the heavens. The better, therefore, is the binder, so much more blessed is he who has been loosed, so that in every part of the heavens his loosing has been accomplished.

6033 Matt. xviii. 18.
6034 Prov. v. 22.
6035 Matt. xvi. 19.
6036 Matt. xvi. 19.
Book XIV.

1. The Power of Harmony in Relation to Prayer.

“Again I say unto you that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them.” The word symphony is strictly applied to the harmonies of sounds in music. And there are indeed among musical sounds some accordant and others discordant. But the Evangelic Scripture is familiar with the name as applied to musical matters in the passage, “He heard a symphony and dancing.” For it was fitting that when the son who had been lost and found came by penitence into concord with his father a symphony should be heard on the occasion of the joyous mirth of the house. But the wicked Laban was not acquainted with the word symphony in his saying to Jacob, “And if thou hadst told me I would have sent thee away with mirth and with music and with drums and a harp.” But akin to the symphony of this nature is that which is written in the second Book of Kings when “the brethren of Aminadab went before the ark, and David and his son played before the Lord on instruments artistically fitted with might and with songs,” for the instruments thus fitted with might and with songs, had in themselves the musical symphony which is so powerful that when two only, bring along with the symphony which has relation to the music that is divine and spiritual, a request to the Father in heaven about anything whatsoever, the Father grants the request to those who ask along with the symphony on earth,—which is most miraculous,—those things which those who have made the symphony spoken of may have asked. So also I understand the apostolic saying “Defraud ye not one the other except it be by agreement for a season that ye may give yourselves unto prayer.” For since the word harmony is applied to those who marry according to God in the passage from Proverbs which is as follows: “Fathers will divide their house and substance to their sons, but from God the woman is married to the man,” it is a logical consequence of the harmony being from God, that the name and the deed should enjoy the agreement with a view to prayer, as is indicated in the word, “unless it be by agreement.” Then the Word repeating that the agreeing of two on the earth is the same thing as the agreeing with Christ, adds, “For where two or three are gathered together in My name.” Therefore the two or three who are gathered together in the 6037 συμφωνήσωσιν.

6038 Matt. xviii. 19.
6040 Gen. xxxi. 27.
6041 2 Sam. vi. 4, 5.
6042 1 Cor. vii. 5.
6043 Prov. xix. 14, ἀρμόζεται.
6044 1 Cor. vii. 5.
6045 Matt. xviii. 20.
name of Christ are those who are in agreement on earth, not two only but sometimes also three. But he who has the power will consider whether this agreement and a congregation of this sort in the midst of which Christ is, can be found in more, since “narrow and straightened is the way that leadeth unto life, and few be they that find it.” But perhaps also not even few but two or three make a symphony as Peter and James and John, to whom as making a symphony the Word of God showed His own glory. But two made a symphony, Paul and Sosthenes, when writing the first Epistle to the Corinthians; and after this Paul and Timothy when sending the second Epistle to the same. And even three made a symphony when Paul and Silvanus and Timothy gave instruction by letter to the Thessalonians. But if it be necessary also from the ancient Scriptures to bring forward the three who made a symphony on earth, so that the Word was in the midst of them making them one, attend to the superscription of the Psalms, as for example to that of the forty-first, which is as follows: “Unto the end, unto understanding, for the sons of Korah.” For though there were three sons of Korah whose names we find in the Book of Exodus, Aser, which is, by interpretation, “instruction,” and the second Elkana, which is translated, “possession of God,” and the third Abiasaph, which in the Greek tongue might be rendered, “congregation of the father,” yet the prophecies were not divided but were both spoken and written by one spirit, and one voice, and one soul, which wrought with true harmony, and the three speak as one, “As the heart panteth after the springs of the water, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.” But also they say in the plural in the forty-fourth Psalm, “O God, we have heard with our ears.” But if you wish still further to see those who are making symphony on earth look to those who heard the exhortation, “that ye may be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment,” and who strove after the goal, “the soul and the heart of all the believers were one,” who have become such, if it be possible for such a condition to be found in more than two or three, that there is no discord between them, just as there is no discord between the strings of the ten-stringed psaltery with each other. But they were not in symphony in earth who said, “I am of Paul, and I of 6047 1 Cor. i. 1.

6048 2 Cor. i. 1.
6049 1 Thess. i. 1.
6050 Ps. xlii.
6051 Exod. vi. 24.
6052 Ps. xlii. 1.
6053 Ps. xliv. 1.
6054 1 Cor. i. 10.
6055 Acts iv. 32.
Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ,6056 but there were schisms among them, upon the dissolution of which they were gathered together in company with the spirit in Paul, with the power of the Lord Jesus Christ,6057 that they might no longer “bite and devour one another so that they were consumed by one another;”6058 for discord consumes, as concord brings together, and admits6059 the Son of God who comes in the midst of those who have become at concord. And strictly, indeed, concord takes place in two things generic, through the perfecting together, as the Apostle has called it, of the same mind by an intellectual grasp of the same opinions, and through the perfecting together of the same judgment, by a like way of living. But if whenever two of us agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of the Father of Jesus who is in heaven,6060 plainly when this is not done for them of the Father in heaven as touching anything that they shall ask, there the two have not been in agreement on earth; and this is the cause why we are not heard when we pray, that we do not agree with one another on earth, neither in opinions nor in life. But further also if we are the body of Christ and God hath set the members each one of them in the body that the members may have the same care one for another, and may agree with one another, and when one member suffers, all the members suffer with it, and if one be glorified, they rejoice with it,6061 we ought to practise the symphony which springs from the divine music, that when we are gathered together in the name of Christ, He may be in the midst of us, the Word of God, and the Wisdom of God, and His Power.6062

6056  1 Cor. i. 12.
6057  1 Cor. v. 4.
6058  Gal. v. 15.
6059  Or reading χωρίζε, following the Vetus Inter, keeps apart.
6060  Matt. xviii. 19.
6061  1 Cor. xii. 25, 18, 25, 26.
6062  1 Cor. i. 24.
2. The Harmony of Husband and Wife.

So much then for the more common understanding of the two or three whom the Word exhorts to be in agreement. But now let us also touch upon another interpretation which was uttered by some one of our predecessors, exhorting those who were married to sanctity and purity; for by the two, he says, whom the Word desires to agree on earth, we must understand the husband and wife, who by agreement defraud each other of bodily intercourse that they may give themselves unto prayer; when if they pray for anything whatever that they shall ask, they shall receive it, the request being granted to them by the Father in heaven of Jesus Christ on the ground of such agreement. And this interpretation does not appear to me to cause dissolution of marriage, but to be an incitement to agreement, so that if the one wished to be pure, but the other did not desire it, and on this account he who willed and was able to fulfil the better part, condescended to the one who had not the power or the will, they would not both have the accomplishment from the Father in heaven of Jesus Christ, of anything whatever that they might ask.

6063 1 Cor. vii. 5.
3. The Harmony of Body, Soul, and Spirit.

And next to this about the married, I am familiar also with another interpretation of the agreement between the two which is as follows. In the wicked, sin reigns over the soul, being settled as on its own throne in this mortal body, so that the soul obeys the lusts thereof; \(^{6064}\) but in the case of those, who have stirred up the sin which formerly reigned over the body as from a throne and who are in conflict with it, "the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh;" \(^{6065}\) but in the case of those who have now become perfected, the spirit has gained the mastery and put to death the deeds of the body, and imparts to the body of its own life, so that already this is fulfilled, "He shall quicken also your mortal bodies because of His Spirit that dwelleth in you;" \(^{6066}\) and there arises a concord of the two, body and spirit, on the earth, on the successful accomplishment of which there is sent up a harmonious prayer also of him who "with the heart believes unto righteousness, but with the mouth maketh confession unto salvation," \(^{6067}\) so that the heart is no longer far from God, and along with this the righteous man draws nigh to God with his own lips and mouth. But still more blessed is it if the three be gathered together in the name of Jesus that this may be fulfilled, "May God sanctify you wholly, and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." \(^{6068}\) But some one may inquire with regard to the concord of spirit and body spoken of, if it is possible for these to be at concord without the third being so,—I mean the soul—and whether it does not follow from the concord of these on the earth after the two have been gathered together in the name of Christ, that the three also are already gathered together in His name, in the midst of whom comes the Son of God as all are dedicated to Him,—I mean the three,—and no one is opposed to Him, there being no antagonism not only on the part of the spirit, but not even of the soul, nor further of the body.

---

\(^{6064}\) Rom. vi. 12.

\(^{6065}\) Gal. v. 17.

\(^{6066}\) Rom. viii. 11.

\(^{6067}\) Rom. x. 10.

\(^{6068}\) 1 Thess. v. 23.
4. Harmony of the Old and New Covenants.

And likewise it is a pleasant thing to endeavour to understand and exhibit the fact of the concord of the two covenants,—of the one before the bodily advent of the Saviour and of the new covenant; for among those things in which the two covenants are at concord so that there is no discord between them would be found prayers, to the effect that about anything whatever they shall ask it shall be done to them from the Father in heaven. And if also you desire the third that unites the two, do not hesitate to say that it is the Holy Spirit, since “the words of the wise,” whether they be of those before the advent, or at the time of the advent, or after it, “are as goads, and as nails firmly fixed, which were given by agreement from one shepherd.”

And do not let this also pass unobserved, that He did not say, where two or three are gathered together in My name, there “shall I be” in the midst of them, but “there am I,” not going to be, not delaying, but at the very moment of the concord being Himself found, and being in the midst of them.

---

6069 Eccl. xii. 11.
6070 Matt. xviii. 20.
5. The Limit of Forgiveness.

“Then came Peter and said unto Him, Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him?” 6071 The conception that these things were said in a simple sense by Peter, as if he were inquiring whether he was to forgive his brother when he sinned against him seven times, but no longer if he sinned an eighth time, and by the Saviour, as if He thought that one should sit still and reckon up the sins of his neighbours against him in order that he might forgive seventy times and seven, but that from the seventy-eighth he should not forgive the man who wronged him, seems to me altogether silly and unworthy alike of the progress which Peter had made in the company of Jesus and of the divine magnanimity of Jesus. Perhaps, then, these things also border on an obscurity akin to the words, “Hear My voice, ye wives of Lamech,” 6072 etc. If any one has already become a friend of Jesus so as to be taught by His spirit which illumines the reason of him who has advanced so far according to his desert, he might know the true meaning, therefore, in regard to these things, and such as Jesus Himself would have clearly expounded it; but we who fall short of the greatness of the friendship of Jesus must be content if we can babble a little about the passage. The number six, then, appears to be working and toilsome, but the number seven to contain the idea of repose. And consider if you can say that he, who loves the world and works the things of the world, and does those things which are material, sins six times, and that the number seven is the end of sin in his case, so that Peter with some such thought in his mind wished to pardon seven sins of those which his brother had committed against him. But since as units the tens and the hundreds have a certain common measure of proportion to the number which is in units, and Jesus knew that the number might be exceeded, on this account, I think, that He added to the number seven also the seventy, 6073 and said that there ought to be forgiveness to brethren here, and to them who have sinned in respect to things here. But if any one going beyond the things about the world and this age were to commit sin, even if it were trifling, he could not longer reasonably have forgiveness of sins; for forgiveness extends to the things here, and in relation to the sins committed here, whether the forgiveness comes late or soon; but there is no forgiveness, not even to a brother, who has sinned beyond the seven and seventy times. But you might say that he who has sinned in such wise, whether as against Peter his brother, or as against Peter, against whom the gates of Hades do not prevail, is by sins of this kind in the smaller number of the sin, but according to sins still worse is in the number which has no forgiveness of sins.

6071 Matt. xviii. 21.
6072 Gen. iv. 23.
6073 Matt. xviii. 22.
6. Concerning the King Who Made a Reckoning with His Own Servants, to Whom Was Brought a Man Who Owed Ten Thousand Talents.

“Therefore I say unto you the kingdom of heaven is likened unto a certain king, who wished to make a reckoning with his own servants.” The general conception of the parable is to teach us that we should be inclined to forgive the sins committed against us by those who have wronged us, and especially if after the wrongdoing he who has done it supplicates him who has been wronged, asking forgiveness for the sins which he has committed against him. And this the parable wishes to teach us by representing that even when forgiveness has been granted by God to us of the sins in respect of which we have received remission, exaction will be demanded even after the remission, unless we forgive the sins of those who have wronged us, so that there is no longer left in us the least remembrance of the wrong that was done, but the whole heart, assisted by the spirit of forgetfulness of wrongs, which is no common virtue, forgives him who has wronged us those things which have been wickedly done against any of us by him, even treacherously. But next to the general conception of the parable, it is right to examine the whole of it more simply according to the letter, so that he who advances with care to the right investigation of each detail of the things previously written may derive profit from the examination of what is said. Now there is, as is probable, an interpretation, transcendental and hard to trace, as it is somewhat mystical, according to which, after the analogy of the parables which are interpreted by the Evangelists, one would investigate each of the details in this; as, for example, who the king was, and who the servants were, and what was the beginning of his making a reckoning, and who was the one debtor who owed many talents, and who was his wife and who his children, and what were the “all things” spoken of besides those which the king ordered to be sold in order that the debt might be paid out of his belongings, and what was meant by the going out of the man who had been forgiven the many talents, and who was the one of the servants who was found and was a debtor not to the householder, but to the man who had been forgiven, and what is meant by the number of the hundred pence, and what by the word, “He took him by the throat saying, Pay what thou owest,” and what is the prison into which he who had been forgiven all the talents went out and cast his fellow-servant, and who were the fellow-servants who were grieved and told the lord all that had been done, and who were the tormentors to whom he who had cast his fellow-servant into prison was delivered, and how he who was delivered to the tormentors paid all that was due, so that he no longer owed anything. But it is probable also that some other things could be added to the number by a more competent investigator, the exposition and interpretation of which I think to be beyond the power of man, and requiring the Spirit of Christ who spoke them in order that

---

6074 Matt. xviii. 23.
6075 Matt. xviii. 23, 34.
Christ may be understood as He spoke; for as “no one among men knows the things of the man, save the spirit which is in him,” and “no one knows the things of God, save the Spirit of God,” so no one knows after God the things spoken by Christ in proverbs and parables save the Spirit of Christ, in which he who participates in Christ not only so far as He is Spirit, but in Christ as He is Wisdom, as He is Word, would behold the things which were revealed to him in this passage. But with regard to the interpretation of the loftiest type, we make no profession; nor on the other hand with the assistance of Christ who is the Wisdom of God do we despair of apprehending the things signified in the parable; but whether it shall be the case that such things shall be dictated to us in connection with this Scripture or not, may God in Christ suggest the doing of that which is pleasing to Him, if only there be granted to us also concerning these things, the word of wisdom which is given from God through the Spirit, and the word of knowledge which is supplied according to the Spirit.

6076 1 Cor. ii. 11.
6077 1 Cor. xii. 8.
7. Exposition Continued: the King and the Servants.

“The kingdom of heaven,” He says, “is likened,” etc. But if it be likened to such a king, and one who has done such things, who must we say that it is but the Son of God? For He is the King of the heavens, and as He is absolute Wisdom and absolute Righteousness and absolute Truth, is He not also absolute Kingdom? But it is not a kingdom of any of those below, nor of a part of those above, but of all the things above, which were called heavens. But if you enquire into the meaning of the words, “Theirs is the kingdom of heaven,” you may say that Christ is theirs in so far as He is absolute Kingdom, reigning in every thought of the man who is no longer under the reign of sin which reigns in the mortal body of those who have subjected themselves to it. And if I say, reigning in every thought, I mean something like this, reigning as Righteousness and Wisdom and Truth and the rest of the virtues in him who has become a heaven, because of bearing the image of the heavenly, and in every power, whether angelic, or the rest that are named saints, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come, and who are worthy of a kingdom of such a kind. Accordingly this kingdom of heaven (when it was made “in the likeness of sinful flesh,” that for sin it might condemn sin, when God made “Him who knew no sin to be sin on behalf of us,” who bear the body of our sin), is likened to a certain king who is understood in relation to Jesus being united to Him, if we may dare so to speak, having more capacity towards being united and becoming entirely one with the “First-born of all creation,” than he, who, being joined to the Lord, becomes one spirit with Him.

Now of this kingdom of the heavens which is likened unto a certain king, according to the conception of Jesus, and is united to Him, it is said by anticipation that he wished to make a reckoning with his servants. But he is about to make a reckoning with them in order that it may be manifested how each has employed the tried money of the householder and his rational coins. And the image in the parables was indeed taken from masters who made a reckoning with their own servants; but we shall understand more accurately what is signified by this part of the parable, if we fix our thought on the things done by the slaves who had administered their master’s goods, and who were asked to give a reckoning concerning them. For each of them, receiving in different measure from his master’s goods, has used them either for that which was right so as to increase the goods of his master, or consumed

---

6078 Matt. xviii. 23.
6079 Matt. v. 3.
6080 Rom. vi. 12.
6081 Rom. viii. 3.
6082 2 Cor. v. 21.
6083 Col. i. 15.
6084 1 Cor. vi. 17.
it riotously on things which he ought not, and spent profusely without judgment and without discretion that which had been put into his hands. But there are those who have wisely administered these goods and goods so great, but have lost others, and whenever they give the reckoning when the master makes a reckoning with them, there is gathered together how much loss each has incurred, and there is reckoned up how much gain each has brought, and according to the worthiness of the way in which he has administered it, he is either honoured or punished, or in some cases the debt is forgiven, but in others the talents are taken away. Well, then, from what has been said, let us first look at the rational coins and the tried money of the householder, of which one receives more and another less, for according to the ability of each, to one are given five talents as he has the ability to administer so many, but to another two as not being able to receive the amount of the man before him, and to another one as being also inferior to the second. Are these, then, the only differences, or are we to recognize these differences in the case of certain persons of whom the Gospel goes on to speak while there are also others besides these: In other parables also are found certain persons, as the two debtors, the one who owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty; but whether these had been entrusted with them and had administered them badly as being inferior in ability to him who had been entrusted with a talent, or had received them, we have not learned; but that they owed so much, we seem to be taught from the parable. And there are found other ten servants who were each entrusted with a pound separately. And if any one understood the varied character of the human soul and the wide differences from each other in respect of natural aptitude, or want of aptitude for more or fewer of the virtues, and for these virtues or for those, perhaps he would comprehend how each soul has come with certain coins of the householder which come to light with the full attainment of reason, and with the attention which follows the full attainment of reason, and with exercise in things that are right, or with diligence and exercise in other things, whether they be useful as pursuits, or in part useful and in part not useful, such as the opinions which are not wholly true nor wholly false.

6085 Matt. xxv. 15.
8. The Principle of the Reckoning.

But you will here inquire whether all men can be called servants of the king, or some are servants whom he foreknew and fore-ordained, while there are others who transact business with the servants, and are called bankers.\footnote{6088} And in like manner you will inquire if there are those outside the number of the slaves from whom the householder declares that he will exact his own with usury, not only men alien from piety, but also some of the believers. Now the servants alone are the stewards of the Word, but the king, making a reckoning with the servants, demands from those who have borrowed from the servants, whether a hundred measures of wheat or a hundred measures of oil,\footnote{6089} or whatever in point of fact those who are outside of the household of the king have received; for he who owed the hundred measures of wheat or the hundred measures of oil is not found to be, according to the parable, a fellow-servant of the unjust steward, as is evident from the question—how much owest thou to my lord?\footnote{6090} But mark with me that each deed which is good or seemly is like a gain and an increment, but a wicked deed is like a loss; and as there is a certain gain when the money is greater and another when it is less, and as there are differences of more or less, so according to the good deeds, there is as it were a valuing of gains more or less. To reckon what work is a great gain, and what a less gain, and what a least, is the prerogative of him who alone knows to investigate such things, looking at them in the light of the disposition, and the word, and the deed, and from consideration of the things which are not in our power cooperating with those that are; and so also in the case of things opposite, it is his to say what sin, when a reckoning is made with the servants, is found to be a great loss, and what is less, and what, if we may so call it, is the loss of the very last mite,\footnote{6091} or the last farthing.\footnote{6092} The account, therefore, of the entire and whole life is exacted by that which is called the kingdom of heaven which is likened to a king, when “we must all stand before the judgment-sent of Christ that each one may receive the things done in the body according to what he hath done, whether good or bad;”\footnote{6093} and then when the reckoning is being made, shall there be brought into the reckoning that is made also every idle word that men shall speak,\footnote{6094} and any cup of cold water only which one has given to drink in the name of a disciple.\footnote{6095}
9. The Time Occupied by the Reckoning.

And these things will take place whenever that happens which is written in Daniel, “The books were opened and the judgment was set;” for a record, as it were, is made of all things that have been spoken and done and thought, and by divine power every hidden thing of ours shall be manifested, and everything that is covered shall be revealed, in order that when any one is found who has not “given diligence to be freed from the adversary,” he may go in succession through the hands of the magistrate, and the judge, and the attendant into the prison, until he pays the very last mite; but when one has given diligence to be freed from him and owes nothing to any one, and already has made the pound ten pounds or five pounds, or doubled the five talents, or made the two four, he may obtain the due recompense, entering into the joy of his Lord, either being set over all His possessions, or hearing the word, “Have thou authority over ten cities,” or “Have thou authority over five cities.” But we think that these things are spoken of as if they required a long period of time, in order that an account may be made by us of the whole times of the earthly life, so that we might suppose that when the king makes a reckoning with each one of his many servants the matter would require so vast a period of time, until these things come to an end which have existed from the beginning of the world down to the consummation of the age, not of one age, but of many ages. But the truth is not so; for when God wished all at once to rekindle in the memories of all everything that had been done by each one throughout the whole time, in order that each might become conscious of his own doings whether good or bad, He would do it by His ineffable power. For it is not with God as with us; for if we wish to call some things to remembrance, we require sufficient time for the detailed account of what has been said by us, and to bring to our remembrance the things which we wish to remember; but if He wished to call to our memory the things which have been done in this life, in order that becoming conscious of what we have done we may apprehend for what we are punished or honoured, He could do so. But if any one disbelieves the swiftness of the power of God in regard to these matters, he has not yet had a true conception of the God who made the universe, who did not require times to make the vast creation of heaven and earth and the things in them; for, though He may seem to have made these things in six days, there is need of understanding to comprehend

6096 Dan. vii. 10.
6097 Matt. x. 26; Luke xii. 2.
6099 Matt. xxiv. 47.
6101 Luke xix. 19. In chap. 12 Origen reads: Be thou also over five cities—as W. & H., and comments on the difference of the reward. The mss. are therefore in error here. in what sense the words “in six days” are said, on account of this, “This is the book of the generation of heaven and earth,”\textsuperscript{6102} etc. Therefore it may be boldly affirmed that the season of the expected judgment does not require times, but as the resurrection is said to take place “in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,”\textsuperscript{6103} so I think will the judgment also be.

\footnotesize
\textsuperscript{6102} Gal. ii. 4.
\textsuperscript{6103} 1 Cor. xv. 52.

Next we must speak in regard to this, “And when he had begun to reckon, there was brought unto him one which owed many talents.”6104 The sense of this appears to me to be as follows: The season of beginning the judgment is with the house of God, who says, as also it is written in Ezekiel, to those who are appointed to attend to punishments, “Begin ye with My saints;”6105 and it is like “the twinkling of an eye;” but, the time of making a reckoning includes the same “twinkling,” ideally apprehended, for we are not forgetful of what has been previously said of those who owe more. Wherefore it is not written, when he was making reckoning, but it is said, “When he began to reckon,” there was brought, at the beginning of his making a reckoning, one who owed many talents; he had lost tens of thousands of talents, having been entrusted with great things, and having had many things committed to his care, but he had brought no gain to his master, but had lost tens of thousands so that he owed many talents; and, perhaps on this account, he owed many talents, seeing that he followed often the woman, who was sitting upon the talent of lead, whose name is wickedness.6106 But observe here that every great sin is a loss of the talents of the master of the house, and such sins are committed by fornicators, adulterers, abusers of themselves with men, effeminate, idolaters, murderers. Perhaps then the one who is brought to the king owing many talents has committed no small sin but all that are great and heinous; and if you were to seek for him among men, perhaps you would find him to be “the man of sin, the son of perdition, he that opposeth and exalteth himself against every God or object of worship;”6107 but if you seek him outside the number of men, who can this be but the devil who has ruined so many who received him, who wrought sin in them. For “man is a great thing, and a pitiful man is precious,”6108 precious so as to be worthy of a talent, whether of gold like as the lamp which was equal to a talent of gold,6109 or of silver or of any kind of material whatsoever understood intellectually, the symbols of which are recorded in the Words of the Days,6110 when David became enriched with many talents of which the number is mentioned, so many talents of gold, and so many of silver, and of the rest of the material there named, from which the temple of God was built.

6104 Matt. xviii. 24.
6105 Ezek. ix. 6.
6106 Zech. v. 7, 8.
6107 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4.
6108 Prov. xx. 6.
6109 Exod. xxv. 39.
6110 1 Chron. xxii. 14.
11. The Servant Who Owed a Hundred Pence.

Only, though he cannot pay the talents, for he has lost them, he has a wife and children and other things, of which it is written, “All that he has.”\(^\text{6111}\) And it was possible that when he had been sold along with his own, he would have prospered if some one had bought him, and, by his worth and the things that were his, have paid the whole debt in full; and it was possible that he might no longer be the servant of the king, but become that of his purchaser. And he makes a request that he be not sold along with his own, but may continue to abide in the house of the king; wherefore he fell down and worshipped him, knowing that the king was God, and said, “Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all,”\(^\text{6112}\) for he was, as is probable, an active man, who knew that he could by a second course of action fill up the whole deficiency of the former loss of many talents. And this truly good king was moved with compassion for the man who owed him many talents and then released him, having bestowed upon him a favour greater than the request which had been made; for the debtor promised to the long-suffering master to pay all his debts, but the Lord moved with compassion for him did not merely forgive him with the idea of receiving his own back as a result of his patience, but even entirely released him and forgave him the whole debt. But this wicked servant, who had besought his master to have patience for his many talents, acted without mercy, for, having found one of his fellow-servants which owed him a hundred pence, he laid hold on him and took him by the throat, saying, “Pay if thou owest.”\(^\text{6113}\) And did he not exhibit the very excess of wickedness who laid hold of his fellow-servant for a hundred pence, and took him by the throat and deprived him of freedom to breathe, when he himself, for the many talents, had neither been laid hold of, nor seized by the throat, but at first was ordered to be sold along with his wife and children and all that was his own; but afterwards, when he had worshipped him, the master was moved with compassion for him, and he was released and forgiven in regard to the whole of the debt. But it were indeed a hard task to tell according to the conception of Jesus who is the one fellow-servant who was found to be owing a hundred pence, not to his own lord, but to him who owed many talents, and who are the fellow-servants who saw the one taking by the throat, and the other taken, and were exceedingly sorry, and represented clearly unto their own lord all that had been done. But what the truth in these matters is, I declare that no one can interpret unless Jesus, who explained all things to His own disciples privately, takes up His abode in his reason, and opens up all the treasures in the parable which are dark, hidden, unseen, and confirms by clear demonstrations the man whom He desires to illumine with the light of the knowledge of the things that are in this parable, that he may at once represent who is brought to the king as the debtor of many talents, and who is the other one who owes to him a hundred pence, etc.; whether he can be the man of sin previously mentioned,\textsuperscript{6114} or the devil, or neither of these, but some other, whether a man, or some one of these under the sway of the devil; for it is a work of the wisdom of God to exhibit the things that have been prophesied concerning those who are in themselves of a certain nature, or have been made according to such and such qualities, whether among visible powers or also among some men, in whatever way they may have been written by the Holy Spirit. But as we have not yet received the competent mind which is able to be blended with the mind of Christ, and which is capable of attaining to things so great, and which is able with the Spirit to “search all things, even the deep things of God,”\textsuperscript{6115} we, forming an impression still indefinitely with regard to the matters in this passage, are of opinion that the wicked servant indicated by the parable who is here represented in regard to the debt of many talents, refers to some definite one.

\(^{6111}\) Matt. xviii. 25.
\(^{6112}\) Matt. xviii. 26.
\(^{6113}\) Matt. xviii. 28.

\textsuperscript{6114} 2 Thess. ii. 3.
\textsuperscript{6115} 1 Cor. ii. 10.
12. The Time of the Reckoning.

But it is fitting to examine at what time the man—the king—in the parable wished to make a reckoning with his own servants, and to what period we ought to refer the things that are said. For if it be after the consummation, or at it at the time of the expected judgment, how are we to maintain the things about him who owed a hundred pence, and was taken by the throat by the man who had been forgiven the many talents? But if, before the judgment, how can we explain the reckoning that was made before this by the king, with his own servants? But we ought to think in a general way about every parable, the interpretation of which has not been recorded by the evangelists, even though Jesus explained all things to His own disciples privately; and for this reason the writers of the Gospels have concealed the clear exposition of the parables, because the things signified by them were beyond the power of the nature of words to express, and every solution and exposition of such parables was of such a kind that not even the whole world itself could contain the books that should be written in relation to such parables. But it may happen that a fitting heart be found, and, because of its purity, able to receive the letters of the exposition of the parable, so that they could be written in it by the Spirit of the living God. But some one will say that, perhaps, we act with impiety, who, because of the secret and mystical import of some of the Scriptures which are of heavenly origin, wish them to be symbolic, and endeavour to expound them, even though it might seem ex hypothesi that we had an accurate knowledge of their meaning. But to this we must say that, if there be those who have obtained the gift of accurate apprehension of these things, they know what they ought to do; but as for us, who acknowledge that we fall short of the ability to see into the depth of the things here signified, even though we obtain a somewhat crass perception of the things in the passage, we will say, that some of the things which we seem to find after much examination and inquiry, whether by the grace of God, or by the power of our own mind, we do not venture to commit to writing; but some things, for the sake of our own intellectual discipline, and that of those who may chance to read them, we will to some extent set forth. But let these things, then, be said by way of apology, because of the depth of the parable; but, with regard to the question at what time the man—the king—in the parable wished to make a reckoning with his own servants, we will say that it seems that this takes place about the time of the judgment which had been proclaimed. And this is confirmed by two parables, one at the close of the Gospel before us, and one from the Gospel according to Luke. And not to prolong the discussion by quoting the very letter, as any one who wishes can take it from the Scripture himself, we 6116 Mark iv. 34.

---

6117 John xxi. 25. will say that the parable according to Matthew declares, “For it is as when a man going into another country called his own servants, and delivered unto them his own goods, and to one he gave five talents, and to another two, and to another one talent; then they took action with regard to that which had been entrusted to them, and, after a long time, the lord of those servants cometh, and it is written in the very words, that he also makes a reckoning with them.” And compare the words, “And when he began to make a reckoning,” and consider that he called the going of the householder into another country the time at which “we are at home in the body but absent from the Lord;” but his advent, when, “after a long time the lord of those servants cometh,” the time at the consummation in the judgment; for after a long time the lord of those servants cometh and makes a reckoning with them, and those things which follow take place. But the parable in Luke represents with more clearness, that “a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return,” and when going, “he called ten servants, and gave to them ten pounds, and said unto them, Trade ye till I come.” But the nobleman, being hated by his own citizens, who sent an ambassage after him, as they did not wish him to reign over them, came back again, having received the kingdom, and told the servants to whom he had given the money to be called to himself that he might know what they had gained by trading. And, seeing what they had done, to him who had made the one pound ten pounds, rendering praise in the words, “Well done, thou good servant, because thou wast found faithful in a very little,” he gives to him authority over ten cities, to-wit, those which were under his kingdom. And to another, who had multiplied the pound fivefold, he did not render the praise which he assigned to the first, nor did he specify the word “authority,” as in the case of the first, but said to him, “Be thou also over five cities.” But to him who had tied up the pound in a napkin, he said, “Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant;” and he said to them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it unto him that hath the ten pounds. Who, then, in regard to this parable, will not say that the nobleman, who goes into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return, is 6120 Matt. xxv. 14, 15.

6121 Matt. xxv. 19.
6123 2 Cor. v. 6.
6124 Matt. xxv. 19.
6128 Luke xix. 22.
Christ, going, as it were, into another country to receive the kingdoms of this world, and the things in it? And those who have received the ten talents are those who have been entrusted with the dispensation of the Word which has been committed unto them. And His citizens who did not wish Him to reign over them when He was a citizen in the world in respect of His incarnation, are perhaps Israel who disbelieved Him, and perhaps also the Gentiles who disbelieved Him.

13. No Forgiveness to the Unforgiving.

Only, I have said these things with the view of referring his return when he comes with his kingdom to the consummation, when he commanded the servants to whom he had given the money to be called to him that he might know what they had gained by trading, and from a desire to demonstrate from this, and from the parable of the Talents, that the passage “he who wished to make a reckoning with his own servants” is to be referred to the consummation when now he is king, receiving the kingdom, on account of which, according to another parable, he went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom and to return. Therefore, when he returned after receiving the kingdom, he wished to make a reckoning with his own servants. And “when he had begun to reckon, there was brought unto him one who owed many talents,” and he was brought as to a king by those who had been appointed his ministers—I think, the angels. And perhaps he was one of those under the kingdom who had been entrusted with a great administration and had not dispensed it well, but had wasted what had been entrusted to him, so that he came to owe the many talents which he had lost. This very man, perhaps not having the means to pay, is ordered by the king to be sold along with his wife, by intercourse with whom he became the father of certain children. What this means in point of truth God may know, and whether He Himself has given insight to us or not, he who can may judge. Only this is our conception of the passage; that, as “the Jerusalem which is above” is “the mother” of Paul and of those like unto him, so there may be a mother of others after the analogy of Jerusalem, the mother, for example, of Syene in Egypt, or Sidon, or as many cities as are named in the Scriptures. Then, as Jerusalem is “a bride adorned for her husband,” Christ, so there may be those mothers of certain powers who have been allotted to them as wives or brides. And as there are certain children of Jerusalem, as mother, and of Christ, as father, so there would be certain children of Syene, or Memphis, or Tyre, or Sidon, and the rulers set over them. Perhaps then, too, this one, the debtor of many talents who was brought to the king, has, as we have said, a wife and children, whom at first the king ordered to be sold, and also all that he had to be sold; but afterwards, being moved with compassion, he released him and forgave him all the debt; not, as if he were ignorant of the future, but, in order that we might understand what happened, it was written that he did so. Each one then of those who have, as we have said, a wife and children will render an account whenever the king comes.
to make a reckoning, having received the kingdom and having returned; and each of them as a ruler of any Syene or Memphis, or Tyre or Sidon, or any like unto them, has also debtors. This one, then, having been released, and having been forgiven all the debt, “went out from the king and found one of his fellow-servants,“6136 etc.; and, on this account, I suppose that he took him by the throat, when he had gone out from the king, for unless he had gone out he would not have taken his own fellow-servant by the throat. Then observe the accuracy of the Scripture, how that the one fell down and “worshipped,” but the other fell down and did not worship but “besought;”6137 and the king being moved with compassion released him and forgave him all the debt, but the servant did not even to pity his own fellow-servant; and the king before his release ordered him to be sold and what was his, while he who had been forgiven cast him into prison. And observe that his fellow-servants did not bring any accusation or “said,” but “told,”6138 and that he did not use the epithet “wicked” at the beginning in regard to the money lost, but reserved it afterwards for his action towards the fellow-servant. But mark also the moderation of the king; he does not say, You worshipped me, but You besought me; and no longer did he order him and his to be sold, but, what was worse, he delivered him to the tormentors, because of his wickedness.6139 But who may these be but those who have been appointed in the matter of punishments? But at the same time observe, because of the use made of this parable by adherents of heresies, that if they accuse the Creator6140 of being passionate, because of words that declare the wrath of God, they ought also to accuse this king, because that “being wroth,” he delivered the debtor to the tormentors. But it must further be said to those whose view it is that no one is delivered by Jesus to the tormentors,—pray, explain to us, good sirs, who is the king who delivered the wicked servant to the tormentors? And let them also attend to this, “So therefore also shall My heavenly Father do unto you;“6141 and to the same persons also might rather be said the things in the parable of the Ten Pounds that the Son of the good God said, “Howbeit these mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them,”6142 etc. The conclusion of the parable, however, is adapted also to the simpler; for all of us who have obtained the forgiveness of our own sins, and have not forgiven our brethren, are taught at once that we shall suffer the lot of him who was forgiven but did not forgive his fellow-servant.

6136 Matt. xviii. 28.
6137 Matt. xvii. 26, 29.
6138 Matt. xviii. 31.
6139 Matt. xviii. 34.
6140 That is, the God of the Old Testament—according to Marcion.
6141 Matt. xviii. 35.
6142 Luke xix. 27.
14. How Jesus Finished His Words.

“And it came to pass when Jesus had finished these words.”

He who gives a detailed and complete account of each of the questions before him so that nothing is left out, finishes his own words. But he will give a declaration on this point with more confidence who devotes himself with great diligence to the entire reading of the Old and New Testament; for if the expression, “he finished these words,” may be applied to no other, neither to Moses, nor to any of the prophets, but only to Jesus, then one would dare to say that Jesus alone finished His words, He who came to put an end to things, and to fulfil what was defective in the law, by saying, “It was said to them of old time,” etc., and, again, “That the things spoken through the prophets might be fulfilled.”

But if it is written somewhere also in them, then you may compare and contrast the discourses finished by them with those finished by the Saviour, that you may find the difference between them. And yet at this point, also, investigation might be made whether in the case of the things spoken by way of oracle the expression, “he finished,” is applied either to the things spoken by Moses, or any of the prophets, or of both together; for careful observation would suggest very weighty thoughts to those who know how “to compare spiritual things with spiritual,” and on this account “speak not in words which man’s wisdom teacheth, but which the Spirit teacheth.”

But perhaps some other one, attending with over-curious spirit to the word “finished,” which is assigned to things of a more mystical order, just as we say that some one delivered to those who were under his control mysteries and rites of “perfecting” not in a praiseworthy fashion, and another delivered the mysteries of God to those who are worthy, and rites of “perfecting” proportionate to such mysteries, might say that having initiated them, he made a rite of “perfecting,” by which “perfecting” the words were shown to be powerful, so that the gospel of Jesus was preached in the whole world, and by virtue of the divine “perfecting” gained the mastery of every soul which the Father draws to the Son, according to what is said by the Saviour, “No one comes to Me except the Father which has sent Me draw him.”

Wherefore also “the word” of those who by the grace of God are ambassadors of the gospel, “and their preaching, is not in persuasive words of wisdom, but in demonstration

---

6143 Matt. xix. 1.
6144 Matt. v. 33.
6145 Mark xiv. 49; Matt. xxvi. 56.
6146 1 Cor. ii. 13.
6147 τελετὰς. Origen’s play on the words ἐτέλεσεν and τελετή cannot be fully reproduced in English. The word τελετή, in reference to the mysteries, meant the rite, or participation in the rite, by which one became perfect; and in later Christian usage it was applied to the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper. See Suicer.
6148 John vi. 44. of the spirit of power,”⁶¹⁴⁹ to those for whom the words of the doctrine of Jesus were finished. You will therefore observe how often it is said, “He finished,” and of what things it is said, and you will take as an illustration that which is said in regard to the beatitudes, and the whole of the discourse to which is subjoined, “And it came to pass when Jesus had finished these words, all the multitudes were astonished at His teaching.”⁶¹⁵⁰ But now the saying, “Jesus finished these words,” is referred also immediately to the very mystical parable according to which the kingdom of heaven is likened unto a king, but also beyond this parable to the sections which were written before it.

---

⁶¹⁴⁹ 1 Cor. ii. 4. πνεύματος δυνάμεως. The omission of the καὶ is strange; for in the Contra Celsum (i. 2) Origen characterises the argument from prophecy as "the demonstration of the Spirit" and the argument from miracles as "the demonstration of power."

⁶¹⁵⁰ Matt. vii. 28.

Only, when Jesus had finished these words, having spoken them in Galilee about Capernaum, then “He departed thence, and came into the borders of Judæa,” which were different from Galilee. But He came to the borders of Judæa, and not to the middle of it, but, as it were, to the outermost parts, where great multitudes followed Him, whom He healed at “the borders of Judæa beyond Jordan,”—where baptism had been given. But you will observe the difference between the crowds who simply followed, and Peter and the others who gave up everything and followed, and Matthew, who arose and followed him; he did not simply follow, but “having arisen;” for “having arisen” is an important addition. There are always those, then, who follow like the great multitudes, who have not arisen that they may follow, nor have given up all that was theirs formerly, but few are they who have arisen and followed, who also, in the regeneration, shall sit on twelve thrones. Only, if one wishes to be healed, let him follow Jesus.

---

6151 Matt. xix. 1.
6152 Matt. xix. 2.
6153 John i. 28.
6154 Matt. ix. 9.
6155 Matt. xix. 28.
16. Concerning the Pharisees and Scribes Tempting Jesus (by Asking) Whether Was Lawful for a Man to Put Away His Wife for Every Cause.

After this it is written that “there came unto Him the Pharisees tempting Him and saying, Is it lawful for a man to wife for every cause?” Mark, also, has written to the like effect. Accordingly, of those who came to Jesus and inquired of Him, there were some who put questions to tempt Him; and if our Saviour so transcendent was tempted, which of His disciples who is ordained to teach need be vexed, when he is tempted by some who inquire, not from the love of learning, but from the wish to tempt? And you might find many passages, if you brought them together, in which the Pharisees tempted our Jesus, and others, different from them, as a certain lawyer, and perhaps also a scribe, that by bringing together what is said about those who tempted Him, you might find by investigation what is useful for this kind of inquiries. Only, the Saviour, in response to those who tempted Him, laid down dogmas; for they said, “Is it lawful for a man to put away his own wife for every cause?” and He answered and said, “Have ye not read that He who created them from the beginning made them male and female?” etc. And I think that the Pharisees put forward this word for this reason, that they might attack Him whatever He might say; as, for example, if He had said, “It is lawful,” they would have accused Him of dissolving marriages for trifles; but, if He had said, “It is not lawful,” they would have accused Him of permitting a man to dwell with a woman, even with sins; so, likewise, in the case of the tribute-money, if He had told them to give, they would have accused Him of making the people subject to the Romans, and not to the law of God, but if He had told them not to give, they would have accused Him of creating war and sedition, and of stirring up those who were not able to stand against so powerful an army. But they did not perceive in what way He answered blamelessly and wisely, in the first place, rejecting the opinion that a wife was to be put away for every cause, and, in the second place, giving answer to the question about the bill of divorcement; for He saw that not every cause is a reasonable ground for the dissolution of marriage, and that the husband must dwell with the wife as the weaker vessel, giving honour, and bearing her burdens in sins, and by what is written in Genesis, He puts to shame the Pharisees who boasted in the Scriptures of Moses, by saying,

---

6156 Matt. xix. 3.
6157 Mark x. 2.
6158 Matt. xxii. 35.
6159 Mark xii. 28.
6160 Gal. vi. 2.
6161 Matt. xix. 4.
6162 1 Pet. iii. 7.
6163 Matt. xxii. 17.
“Have ye not read that He who created them from the beginning made them male and female,” etc., and, subjoining to these words, because of the saying, “And the twain shall become one flesh,” teaching in harmony with one flesh, namely, “So that they are no more twain, but one flesh.” And, as tending to convince them that they should not put away their wife for every cause, is it said, “What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.”

It is to be observed, however, in the exposition of the words quoted from Genesis in the Gospel, that they were not spoken consecutively as they are written in the Gospel; and I think that it is not even said about the same persons, namely, of those who were formed after the image of God, and of those who were formed from the dust of the ground and from one of the ribs of Adam. For where it is said, “Male and female made He them,” the reference is to those formed “after the image,” but where He also said, “For this cause shall a man leave his own father and mother,” etc., the reference is not to those formed after the image; for some time after the Lord God formed the man, taking dust from the ground, and from his side the helpmate. And mark, at the same time, that in the case of those who are formed “after the image,” the words were not “husband and wife” but “male and female.”

But we have also observed this in the Hebrew, for man is indicated by the word “is,” but male by the word “zachar,” and again woman by the word “essa,” but female by the word “agkeba.” For at no time is it “woman” or “man” “after the image,” but the superior class, the male, and the second, the female. But also if a man leave his mother and his father, he cleaves not to the female, but to his own wife, and “they become,” since man and woman are one in flesh, “one flesh.” Then, describing what ought to be in the case of those who are joined together by God, so that they may be joined together in a manner worthy of God, the Saviour adds, “So that they are no more twain;” and, wherever there is indeed concord, and unison, and harmony, between husband and wife, when he is as ruler and she is obedient to the word, “He shall rule over thee,” then of such persons we may truly say, “They are no more twain.” Then since it was necessary that for “him who was joined to the Lord,” it should be reserved “that he should become one spirit with Him,” in the case of those who are joined together by God, after the words, “So that they are no more twain,” it is said, “but one flesh.” And it is God who has joined together the two in one so that they are no more twain, from the time that the woman is married to the man. And, since God has

6164 Matt. xix. 4–6.
6165 Matt. xix. 6.
6166 Gen. i. 27.
6167 Gen. ii. 24.
6168 Matt. xix. 6.
6169 Gen. iii. 16.
6170 1 Cor. vi. 17.
6171 Or, by God the woman is married to the man.
joined them together, on this account in the case of those who are joined together by God, there is a “gift”; and Paul knowing this, that marriage according to the Word of God was a “gift,” like as holy celibacy was a gift, says, “But I would that all men were like myself; howbeit, each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that.”

And those who are joined together by God both mind and keep the precept, “Husbands love your wives, as Christ also the church.” The Saviour then commanded, “What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder,” but man wishes to put asunder what God hath joined together, when, “falling away from the sound faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons, through the hypocrisy of men that speak lies, branded in their own conscience as with a hot iron, forbidding,” not only to commit fornication, but “to marry,” he dissolves even those who had been before joined together by the providence of God. Let these things then be said, keeping in view what is expressly said concerning the male and the female, and the man and the woman, as the Saviour taught in the answer to the Pharisees.

6172 1 Cor. vii. 7.
6173 Eph. v. 25.
6174 Matt. xix. 6.
6175 1 Tim. iv. 1–3.
17. Union of Christ and the Church.

But since the Apostle understands the words, “And they twain shall be one flesh,” we must say that Christ keeping the saying, “What God hath joined together let not man put asunder,” did not put away His former wife, so to speak—that is, the former synagogue—for any other cause than that that wife committed fornication, being made an adulteress by the evil one, and along with him plotted against her husband and slew Him, saying, “Away with such a fellow from the earth, crucify Him, crucify Him.” It was she therefore who herself revolted, rather than her husband who put her away and dismissed her; wherefore, reproaching her for falling away from him, it says in Isaiah, “Of what kind is the bill of your mother’s divorcement, with which I sent her away?” And He who at the beginning created Him “who is in the form of God” after the image, made Him male, and the church female, granting to both oneness after the image. And, for the sake of the church, the Lord—the husband—left the Father whom He saw when He was “in the form of God,” left also His mother, as He was the very son of the Jerusalem which is above, and was joined to His wife who had fallen down here, and these two here became one flesh. For because of her, He Himself also became flesh, when “the Word became flesh and dwelt among us;” and they are no more two, but now they are one flesh, since it is said to the wife, “Now ye are the body of Christ, and members each in his part;” for the body of Christ is not something apart different from the church, which is His body, and from the members each in his part. And God has joined together these who are not two, but have become one flesh, commanding that men should not separate the church from the Lord. And he who takes heed for himself so as not to be separated, is confident as one who will not possibly be separated and says, “Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?” Here, therefore, the saying, “What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder,” was written with relation to the Pharisees, but to those who are superior to the Pharisees, it could be said, “What then God hath joined together, let nothing put asunder,” neither

6176 Matt. xix. 5.
6177 Eph. v. 31, 32.
6178 Matt. xix. 6.
6179 John xix. 6, 15; Luke xxiii. 18.
6180 Isa. i. 1.
6181 Phil. ii. 6.
6182 John i. 14.
6183 1 Cor. xii. 27.
6184 Rom. viii. 35.
6185 Matt. xix. 6.
principality nor power; for God, who has joined together is stronger than all those which any one could conceive and name.
18. The Bill of Divorcement.

After this we will discuss the saying of the Pharisees which they said to Jesus, “Why then did Moses command to give a bill of divorcement and put her away?” And with good reason we will bring forward for this purpose the passage from Deuteronomy concerning the bill of divorcement, which is as follows: “But if a man taketh a wife and cohabit with her, and it shall be, if she do not find favour in his sight because he hath found in her a thing unseemly,” etc., down to the words, “and ye shall not pollute the land which the Lord your God giveth you for an inheritance.” Now I inquire whether in these things according to this law, we are to seek nothing in it beyond the letter seeing that God has not given it, or whether to the Pharisees who quoted the saying, “Moses commanded to give a bill of divorcement and put her away,” it was of necessity said, “Moses, for your hardness of heart, suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it hath not been so.” But if any one ascends to the Gospel of Christ Jesus which teaches that the law is spiritual, he will seek also the spiritual understanding of this law. And he who wishes to interpret these things figuratively will say that, just as it was said by Paul confident in the grace which he had, “A wife is bound for so long time as her husband liveth, but if the husband be dead she is free to be married to whom she will, only in the Lord; but she is happier if she abide as she is, after my judgment, and I think that I also have the Spirit of God” (for here to the words, “after my judgment,” lest it should be despised as being without the Spirit of God, he well added, “and I think that I also have the Spirit of God”),” so also it would be possible for Moses, by reason of the power given to him to make laws, to the effect that he suffered for the hardness of heart of the people certain things, among which was the putting away of wives, to be persuaded in regard to the laws which he promulgated according to his own judgment, that in these also the legislation took place with the Spirit of God. And he will say that, unless one law is spiritual and another is not such, this is a law, and this is spiritual, and its spiritual significance ought to be investigated.

6186 Matt. xix. 7.
6187 Deut. xxiv. 1–4.
6188 Matt. xix. 8.
6189 1 Cor. vii. 39, 40.
19. The Divorce of Israel.

Now, keeping in mind what we said above in regard to the passage from Isaiah about the bill of divorcement, we will say that the mother of the people separated herself from Christ, her husband, without having received the bill of divorcement, but afterwards when there was found in her an unseemly thing, and she did not find favour in his sight, the bill of divorcement was written out for her; for when the new covenant called those of the Gentiles to the house of Him who had cast away his former wife, it virtually gave the bill of divorcement to her who formerly separated from her husband—the law, and the Word. Therefore he, also, having separated from her, married, so to speak, another, having given into the hands of the former the bill of divorcement; wherefore they can no longer do the things enjoined on them by the law, because of the bill of divorcement. And a sign that she has received the bill of divorcement is this, that Jerusalem was destroyed along with what they called the sanctuary of the things in it which were believed to be holy, and with the altar of burnt offerings, and all the worship associated with it. And a further sign of the bill of divorcement is this, that they cannot keep their feasts, even though according to the letter of the law designedly commanded them, in the place which the Lord God appointed to them for keeping feasts; but there is this also, that the whole synagogue has become unable to stone those who have committed this or that sin; and thousands of things commanded are a sign of the bill of divorcement; and the fact that “there is no more a prophet,” and that they say, “We no longer see signs,” for the Lord says, “He hath taken away from Judæa and from Jerusalem,” according to the word of Isaiah, “Him that is mighty, and her that is mighty, a powerful giant,” etc., down to the words, “a prudent hearer.” Now, He who is the Christ may have taken the synagogue to wife and cohabited with her, but it may be that afterwards she found not favour in His sight; and the reason of her not having found favour in His sight was, that there was found in her an unseemly thing: for what was more unseemly than the circumstance that, when it was proposed to them to release one at the feast, they asked for the release of Barabbas the robber, and the condemnation of Jesus? And what was more unseemly than the fact, that they all said in His case, “Crucify Him, crucify Him,” and “Away with such a fellow from the earth”? And can this be freed from the charge of unseemliness, “His blood be upon us, and upon our children”? Wherefore, when He was avenged, Jerusalem was compassed with armies, and its desolation was near, and their house was taken away from it, and “the daughter of Zion was left as 6190  Ps. lxxiv. 9.

6191  Isa. iii. 1–3.
6192  Matt. xxvii. 21.
6193  John xix. 15.
6194  Matt. xxvii. 25.
a booth in a vineyard, and as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, and as a besieged city." 6196

And, about the same time, I think, the husband wrote out a bill of divorcement to his former wife, and gave it into her hands, and sent her away from his own house, and the bond of her who came from the Gentiles has been cancelled about which the Apostle says, “Having blotted out the bond written in ordinances, which was contrary to us, and He hath taken it out of the way, nailing it to the cross;” 6197 for Paul also and others became proselytes of Israel for her who came from the Gentiles. 6198 The first wife, accordingly, not having found favour before her husband, because in her had been found an unseemly thing, went out from the dwelling of her husband, and, going away, has become joined to another man, to whom she has subjected herself, whether we should call the husband Barabbas the robber, who is figuratively the devil, or some evil power. And in the case of some of that synagogue there has happened the former thing which was written in the law, but in the case of others, that which was second. For the last husband 6199 hated his wife and will write out for her some day at the consummation of things a bill of divorcement, when God so orders it, and will give it into her hands and will send her away from his dwelling; for as the good God will put enmity between the serpent and the woman, and between his seed and her seed, 6200 so will He order it that the last husband shall hate her.

6196 Isa. i. 8.
6197 Col. ii. 14.
6198 The text is corrupt.
6199 Deut. xxiv. 3.
6200 Gen. iii. 15.

Now there are those in whose case it has happened that the man dwells with them without having hated them, because they abide in the house of the last husband, who took to himself their synagogue as wife. But also in their case the latter husband dies,\textsuperscript{6201} perhaps whenever the last enemy of Christ, death, is destroyed. But whichever of these things may happen, whether the former or the latter to the wife, the former husband, it says, who sent her away, will not he able to turn back and take her to be a wife to himself after she has been defiled, since “it is abomination,” it says, “before the Lord thy God.”\textsuperscript{6202} But these things will not seem to be consistent with this, “If the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, all Israel shall be saved.”\textsuperscript{6203} But consider if it can be said to this, that, if she shall be saved by her former husband returning and taking her to himself as wife, she will in any case be saved after she has been polluted. A priest, then, will not take to himself as a wife one who has been a harlot and an outcast,\textsuperscript{6204} but no other, as being inferior to the priest, is hindered from doing so. But if you seek for the harlot in regard to the calling of the Gentiles, you may use the passage, “Take to yourself a wife of fornication, and children of fornication,”\textsuperscript{6205} etc.; for, as “the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are guiltless,”\textsuperscript{6206} so he who, casting out his former wife, takes in due season “a wife of fornication,” having done it according to the command of Him who says, when it is necessary, and so long as it was necessary, “He shall not take a harlot to wife,” and, when it was reasonable, He says, “Take to yourself a wife of fornication.” For as the Son of man is Lord of the sabbath,\textsuperscript{6207} and not the slave of the sabbath as the people are, so He who gives the law has power to give it “until a time of reformation,”\textsuperscript{6208} and to change the law, and, when the time of the reformation is at hand, also to give after the former way and after the former heart another way and another heart, “in an acceptable time, and in a day of salvation.”\textsuperscript{6209} And let these things be said according to our interpretation of the law in regard to the bill of divorcement.

\textsuperscript{6201} Deut. xxiv. 3.
\textsuperscript{6202} Deut. xxiv. 4.
\textsuperscript{6203} Rom. xi. 25, 26.
\textsuperscript{6204} Lev. xxi. 14.
\textsuperscript{6205} Hos. i. 2.
\textsuperscript{6206} Matt. xii. 5.
\textsuperscript{6207} Matt. xii. 8.
\textsuperscript{6208} Heb. ix. 10.
\textsuperscript{6209} 2 Cor. vi. 2.

But some one may inquire whether the human soul can be figuratively called a wife, and the angel who is set over her and is her ruler, with whom as her sovereign she holds conversation, can be called her husband; so that according to this each lawfully dwells along with the soul which is worthy of the guardianship of a divine angel; but sometimes after long sojourning and intercourse a cause may arise in the soul why she does not find favour in the eyes of the angel who is her lord and ruler, because that in it there is found an unseemly thing; and bonds may be written out, as such are written, and a bill of divorcement be written and put into the hands of her who is cast out, so that she may no longer be familiar with her former guardian, when she is cast out from his dwelling. And even she who has gone away from her former dwelling may be joined to another husband, and be unfortunate with him, not only, as in the case of the former, not finding favour in his sight because an unseemly thing was found in her, but even being hated by him.\textsuperscript{6210} Yea, and even there might be written out from the second husband a bill of divorcement and it might be put into her hands from the last husband who sends her away from his dwelling. But whether there can be such a change of the life of angels with men, as to amount, so far as concerns their relation to us, to their death, one may put the question rash though it be; but be that as it may, she also who has once fallen away from the former husband will not return again to him, for the former husband who sent her away will not be able to turn back and take her as wife to himself, after she was defiled.\textsuperscript{6211} And if one should dare, using a Scripture which is in circulation in the church, but not acknowledged by all to be divine, to soften down a precept of this kind, the passage might be taken from The Shepherd, concerning some who as soon as they believe are put in subjection to Michael,\textsuperscript{6212} but falling away from him from love of pleasure, are put in subjection to the angel of luxury,\textsuperscript{6213} then to the angel of punishment,\textsuperscript{6214} and after this to the angel of repentance; for you observe that the wife or soul who has once been given to luxury no longer returns to the first ruler, but also besides suffering punishment, is put in subjection to one inferior to Michael; for the angel of penitence is inferior to him. We must therefore take heed lest there be found in us any unseemly thing, and we should not find favour in the eyes of our husband Christ, or of the angel who has been set over us. For if we do not take heed, perhaps we also shall receive the bill of divorcement, and either be bereft of our guardian, or go to another man. But I consider that it is not of good omen to receive, as it were, the marriage of an angel with our own soul.\textsuperscript{6215}

\textsuperscript{6210} Cf. Deut. xxiv. 1–3.
\textsuperscript{6211} Deut. xxiv. 4.
\textsuperscript{6212} Cf. Her. Sim. viii. 3.
\textsuperscript{6213} Cf. Her. Sim. vi. 2.
\textsuperscript{6214} Cf. Her. Sim. vi. 3.
\textsuperscript{6215} The text is probably corrupt. Perhaps it means the marriage of a second angel with our soul.
22. The Marriage of Church Dignitaries.

But, while dealing with the passage, I would say that we will be able perhaps now to understand and clearly set forth a question which is hard to grasp and see into, with regard to the legislation of the Apostle concerning ecclesiastical matters; for Paul wishes no one of those of the church, who has attained to any eminence beyond the many, as is attained in the administration of the sacraments, to make trial of a second marriage. For laying down the law in regard to bishops in the first Epistle to Timothy, he says, “If a man seeketh the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. The bishop, therefore, must be without reproach, the husbands of one wife, temperate, sober-minded,” etc.; and, in regard to deacons, “Let the deacons,” he says, “be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well,” etc. Yea, and also when appointing widows, he says, “Let there be no one as a widow under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man;” and after this he says the things superadded, as being second or third in importance to this. And, in the Epistle to Titus, “For this cause,” he says, “I left thee in Crete that thou shouldest set in order the things that were wanting, and appoint elders in every city as I gave thee charge. If any one is blameless, the husband of one wife, having children, that believe” — of course — and so on. Now, when we saw that some who have been married twice may be much better than those who have been married once, we were perplexed why Paul does not at all permit those who have been twice married to be appointed to ecclesiastical dignities; for also it seemed to me that such a thing was worthy of examination, as it was possible that a man, who had been unfortunate in two marriages, and had lost his second wife while he was yet young, might have lived for the rest of his years up to old age in the greatest self-control and chastity. Who, then, would not naturally be perplexed why at all, when a ruler of the church is being sought for, we do not appoint such a man, though he has been twice married, because of the expressions about marriage, but lay hold of the man who has been once married as our ruler, even if he chance to have lived to old age with his wife, and sometimes may not have been disciplined in chastity and temperance? But, from what is said in the law about the bill of divorcement, I reflect whether, seeing that the bishop and the presbyter and the deacon are a symbol of things that truly exist in accordance with these names, he wished to appoint those who were figuratively once married, in order that he who is able to give attention to the matter, may find out from the spiritual law the one who was unworthy of ecclesiastical rule, whose soul did not find favour in the eyes of her husband because there had been found in her an unseemly thing, and she had become worthy of the bill of divorcement; for such a soul, having dwelt along with a second husband, and having been hated by such an one, can no longer, after the second bill of divorcement, return to her former husband.\textsuperscript{6220} It is likely, therefore, also, that other arguments will be found by those who are wiser than we, and have more ability to see into such things, whether in the law about the bill of divorcement, or in the apostolic writings which prohibit those who have been twice married from ruling over the church or being preferred to preside over it. But, until something shall be found that is better and able by the excessive brilliancy of the light of knowledge to cast into the shade what we have uttered, we have said the things which have occurred to us in regard to the passages.

\textsuperscript{6220} Cf. Deut. xxiv. 4.
23. Some Laws Given by Concession to Human Weakness.

But, even if we have seemed to touch on things too deep for our capacity in the passages, nevertheless, because of the literal expression these things must further be said, that some of the laws were written not as excellent, but as by way of accommodation to the weakness of those to whom the law was given; for something of this kind is indicated in the words, “Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives;”[6221] but that which is pre-eminent and superior to the law, which was written for their hardness of heart, is indicated in this, “But from the beginning it hath not been so.” But in the new covenant also there are some legal injunctions of the same order as, “Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives;” for example, because of our hardness of heart, it has been written on account of our weakness, “But because of fornications, let each man have his own wife and let each woman have her own husband;”[6222] and this, “Let the husband render unto the wife her due, and likewise also the wife unto the husband.”[6223] To these sayings it is accordingly subjoined, “But this I say by way of permission, not of commandment.”[6224] But this also, “A wife is bound for so long time as her husband liveth, but if her husband be dead, she is free to be married to whom she will, only in the Lord,”[6225] was said by Paul in view of our hardness of heart and weakness, to those who do not wish to desire earnestly the greater gifts[6226] and become more blessed. But now contrary to what was written, some even of the rulers of the church have permitted a woman to marry, even when her husband was living, doing contrary to what was written, where it is said, “A wife is bound for so long time as her husband liveth,” and “So then if while her husband liveth, she shall be joined to another man she shall be called an adulteress;”[6227] not indeed altogether without reason, for it is probable this concession was permitted in comparison with worse things, contrary to what was from the beginning ordained by law, and written.

6221 Matt. xix. 8.
6222 1 Cor. vii. 2.
6223 1 Cor. viii. 3.
6224 1 Cor. vii. 6.
6225 1 Cor. vii. 39.
6226 1 Cor. xii. 31.
6227 Rom. vii. 3.

But perhaps some Jewish man of those who dare to oppose the teaching of our Saviour will say, that when Jesus said, "Whosoever shall put away his own wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress,"\(^{6228}\) He also gave permission to put away a wife like as well as Moses did, who was said by Him to have given laws for the hardness of heart of the people, and will hold that the saying, "Because he found in her an unseemly thing,"\(^{6229}\) is to be reckoned as the same as fornication on account of which with good cause a wife could be cast away from her husband. But to him it must be said that, if she who committed adultery was according to the law to be stoned, clearly it is not in this sense that the unseemly thing is to be understood. For it is not necessary for adultery or any such great indecency to write a bill of divorcement and give it into the hands of the wife; but indeed perhaps Moses called every sin an unseemly thing, on the discovery of which by the husband in the wife, as not finding favour in the eyes of her husband, the bill of divorcement is written, and the wife is sent away from the house of her husband; "but from the beginning it hath not been so."\(^{6230}\) After this our Saviour says, not at all permitting the dissolution of marriages for any other sin than fornication alone, when detected in the wife, "Whosoever shall put away his own wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress."\(^{6231}\) But it might be a subject for inquiry if on this account He hinders any one putting away a wife, unless she be caught in fornication, for any other reason, as for example for poisoning, or for the destruction during the absence of her husband from home of an infant born to them, or for any form of murder whatsoever. And further, if she were found despoiling and pillaging the house of her husband, though she was not guilty of fornication, one might ask if he would with reason cast away such an one, seeing that the Saviour forbids any one to put away his own wife saving for the cause of fornication. In either case there appears to be something monstrous, whether it be really monstrous, I do not know; for to endure sins of such heinousness which seem to be worse than adultery or fornication, will appear to be irrational; but again on the other hand to act contrary to the design of the teaching of the Saviour, every one would acknowledge to be impious. I wonder therefore why He did not say, Let no one put away his own wife saving for the cause of fornication, but says, "Whosoever shall put away his own wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress."\(^{6232}\) For confessedly he who puts away his wife when she is not a fornicator, makes her an adulteress, so far as it lies with him, for if, "when the husband is living she shall be \(^{6228}\) Matt. v. 32.

\(^{6229}\) Deut. xxiv. 1.

\(^{6230}\) Matt. xix. 8.

\(^{6231}\) Matt. v. 32.

\(^{6232}\) Matt. v. 32.
called an adulteress if she be joined to another man;" and when by putting her away, he gives to her the excuse of a second marriage, very plainly in this way he makes her an adulteress. But as to whether her being caught in the act of poisoning or committing murder, furnishes any defence of his dismissal of her, you can inquire yourselves; for the husband can also in other ways than by putting her away cause his own wife to commit adultery; as, for example, allowing her to do what she wishes beyond what is fitting, and stooping to friendship with what men she wishes, for often from the simplicity of husbands such false steps happen to wives; but whether there is a ground of defence or not for such husbands in the case of such false steps, you will inquire carefully, and deliver your opinion also in regard to the difficult questions raised by us on the passage. And even he who withholds himself from his wife makes her oftentimes to be an adulteress when he does not satisfy her desires, even though he does so under the appearance of greater gravity and self-control. And perhaps this man is more culpable who, so far as it rests with him, makes her an adulteress when he does not satisfy her desires than he who, for other reason than fornication, has sent her away,—for poisoning or murder or any of the most grievous sins. But as a woman is an adulteress, even though she seem to be married to a man, while the former husband is still living, so also the man who seems to marry her who has been put away, does not so much marry her as commit adultery with her according to the declaration of our Saviour.

---

6233  Rom. vii. 3.

Now after these things, having considered how many possible accidents may arise in marriages, which it was necessary for the man to endure and in this way suffer very great hardships, or if he did not endure, to transgress the word of Christ, the disciples say to him, taking refuge in celibacy as easier, and more expedient than marriage, though the latter appears to be expedient, “If the case of the man is so with his wife, it is not expedient to marry.”6234 And to this the Saviour said, teaching us that absolute chastity is a gift given by God, and not merely the fruit of training, but given by God with prayer, “All men cannot receive the saying, but they to whom it is given.”6235 Then seeing that some make a sophistical attack on the saying, “To whom it is given,” as if those who wished to remain pure in celibacy, but were mastered by their desires, had an excuse, we must say that, if we believe the Scriptures, why at all do we lay hold of the saying, “But they to whom it is given,” but no longer attend to this, “Ask and it shall be given you,”6236 and to that which is added to it, “For every one that asketh receiveth”6237. For if they “to whom it is given” can receive this saying about absolute purity, let him who wills ask, obeying and believing Him who said, “Ask and it shall be given you,”6238 and not doubting about the saying, “Every one that asketh receiveth.”6239 But when there you will inquire who it is that asketh, for no one of those who do not receive has asked, even though he seems to have done so, since it is not lawful to say that the saying, “Every one that asketh receiveth,” is a lie. Who then is he that asketh, but he who has obeyed Jesus when He says, “If ye stand praying, believe that ye receive, and ye shall receive”?6240 But he that asketh must do everything in his power that he may pray “with the spirit” and pray also “with the understanding,”6241 and pray “without ceasing,”6242 keeping in mind also the saying, “And He spake a parable unto them to the end that they ought always to pray, and not to faint, saying, There was in a city a judge,”6243 etc. And it is useful to know what it is to ask, and what it is to receive, and what is meant by “Every one that asketh, receiveth,”6244 and by “I say unto you though he will not rise and

6234 Matt. xix. 10.
6235 Matt. xix. 11.
6236 Matt. vii. 7.
6237 Matt. vii. 8.
6238 Matt. vii. 7.
6239 Matt. vii. 8.
6240 Mark xi. 24, 25.
6241 1 Cor. xiv. 15.
6242 1 Thess. v. 17.
6243 Luke xviii. 1, 2.
6244 Matt. vii. 8.
give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity, he will arise and give him as many as he needeth.” It is therefore added, “And I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you,” and so on. Further, let the saying, “All men cannot receive the saying but they to whom it is given,” be a stimulus to us to ask worthily of receiving; and this, “What son is there of you who shall ask his father for a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent,” etc. God therefore will give the good gift, perfect purity in celibacy and chastity, to those who ask Him with the whole soul, and with faith, and in prayers without ceasing.

6246  Matt. xix. 11.
6247  Luke xi. 11.
Index of Scripture References

Genesis

Exodus

Leviticus

Numbers
27:16 28:1 33:6

Deuteronomy

Joshua
2 3:5 3:7 3:9-10 5:9 5:13-14 6:25

Judges
11:35 20:28

1 Samuel
1:23-24 2:7 16:14

2 Samuel
6:4-5 7:2 16:9

1 Kings
13:2 18:8 18:21 18:33

2 Kings

1 Chronicles

2 Chronicles
20:7 31:14

Ezra
Index of Scripture References

6:1
Esther
4:22
Job Psalms
Proverbs
Ecclesiastes
3:1 12:11 12:11 12:12
Song of Solomon
1:15 2:5
Isaiah
Jeremiah
Lamentations
Index of Scripture References

3:38  4:20
Ezekiel
29:3-5  33  33:11  33:12  34:23  37:1-4  37:11
Daniel
3:20  3:86  6:16  7:10  7:10  7:10  12:3
Hosea
1:1  1:2  2:23  7:2  7:4  9:5  10:12  10:13  14:10
Joel
2:28
Amos
5:10  5:26
Jonah
3 Habakkuk
2:3
Zechariah
3:4  5:7-8  9:9  9:9-10  9:10
Malachi
1:6  3:1  3:1  3:1  4:5-6  4:5-6  4:5-6
Matthew
7:8  7:8  7:8  7:12  7:13  7:14  7:14  7:14  7:14  7:14  7:15  7:15  7:16  7:16  7:17  7:18
8  8:1  8:2-3  8:4  8:5  8:5-6  8:7  8:8  8:10  8:11  8:12  8:13  8:16  8:17  8:17  8:18
Index of Scripture References

14:2 14:2 14:3 14:3-4 14:5 14:12 14:12 14:12 14:13 14:13 14:13-14 14:14 14:14
1022
Index of Scripture References

17:4 17:4 17:5 17:5 17:5 17:6 17:6 17:7 17:8 17:8 17:9 17:9 17:10 17:10 17:10
17:11 17:12 17:12 17:12 17:12 17:12 17:12 17:12 17:13 17:13 17:13 17:14
1023


<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Scripture Reference</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

Mark

Index of Scripture References

Index of Scripture References

16:29 16:30 16:31 17:2 17:3 17:4 17:5 17:6 17:7 17:8 17:9 17:10 17:11 17:12
17:25 17:28 17:29 17:30 17:31 17:32 17:33 17:34 17:35 17:36 17:37 18:1 18:1

1026
Index of Scripture References

John

1:1 1:1 1:1 1:1-2 1:2 1:2 1:3 1:3 1:3-4 1:3-5 1:4 1:5 1:5 1:5 1:6 1:7 1:7
1:7 1:8 1:9 1:9 1:10 1:10 1:10 1:11 1:12 1:12 1:14 1:14 1:14 1:14 1:14 1:15

1027
Index of Scripture References

|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|

1028
Index of Scripture References

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Acts 1:8</td>
<td>1:8</td>
<td>Rome 1:1-5</td>
<td>1:3</td>
<td>1:4</td>
<td>1:8</td>
<td>1:14</td>
<td>1:20</td>
<td>1:25</td>
<td>1:26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>4:11</td>
<td></td>
<td>4:14</td>
<td>1:4</td>
<td>1:8</td>
<td>1:14</td>
<td>1:20</td>
<td>1:25</td>
<td>1:26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>2:10</td>
<td></td>
<td>2:10</td>
<td>2:11</td>
<td>2:11</td>
<td>2:12</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>5:8</td>
<td></td>
<td>5:11</td>
<td>5:28</td>
<td>6:3</td>
<td>6:17</td>
<td>6:20</td>
<td>7:2</td>
<td>7:5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>7:5</td>
<td></td>
<td>7:6</td>
<td>7:6</td>
<td>7:7</td>
<td>7:12</td>
<td>7:17</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>7:29</td>
<td></td>
<td>7:31</td>
<td>7:39-40</td>
<td>8:3</td>
<td>8:5</td>
<td>8:8</td>
<td>8:11-12</td>
<td>9:10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>14:2</td>
<td></td>
<td>14:2</td>
<td>14:9</td>
<td>14:23</td>
<td>14:23</td>
<td>15:19</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>15:24</td>
<td></td>
<td>15:26</td>
<td>16:25</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 Corinthians

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1:1</td>
<td>1:5</td>
<td>1:10</td>
<td>1:12</td>
<td>1:21</td>
<td>1:21</td>
<td>1:23</td>
<td>1:24</td>
<td>1:24</td>
<td>1:24-27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:27</td>
<td>1:28</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td>1:30</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2:9</td>
<td>2:9</td>
<td>2:9</td>
<td>2:9</td>
<td>2:10</td>
<td>2:11</td>
<td>2:11</td>
<td>2:12</td>
<td>2:12</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7:17</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7:29</td>
<td>7:31</td>
<td>7:39-40</td>
<td>8:3</td>
<td>8:5</td>
<td>8:8</td>
<td>8:8</td>
<td>8:11-12</td>
<td>9:10</td>
<td>9:19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9:20</td>
<td>9:20-22</td>
<td>10:1-4</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2 Corinthians

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
<th>Reference</th>
<th>References</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>15:41-42</td>
<td>15:45</td>
<td>15:52</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1029
Index of Scripture References

Galatians

Ephesians
6:12 6:16

Philippians
3:21 4:3 4:3 4:13 4:13 4:13

Colossians

1 Thessalonians

2 Thessalonians
2:3 2:3 2:3-4 2:4 2:8 2:9 2:9-10 2:11-12 2:12

1 Timothy
6:5 6:10 6:16 6:20 6:20

2 Timothy
3:11 3:12 3:16 4:3-4

Titus
1:2 1:5-6 1:14 1:15 2:14 3:1 3:1 3:5

Hebrews

James

1 Peter
4:8 5:5 5:5 5:6 5:13

2 Peter
Index of Scripture References

1 John

Jude
1:1 1:1 1:6 1:7 1:8 1:8 1:8 1:8 1:8 1:10 1:13

Revelation

Judith
8:19 8:30 9:2 10:4

Wisdom of Solomon
2:24 9:6 11:21 12:12 17:1

1 Maccabees
2:11

2 Maccabees
7:28

Sirach
18:7 18:30 27:11 28:25
Index of Greek Words and Phrases

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Greek Word</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ἀγάπη:</td>
<td>448</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀγαπῶσιν:</td>
<td>435</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀκούονται αἱ φωναὶ αὐτῶν:</td>
<td>428</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀνάπαυσιν:</td>
<td>477</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀνδρὶ:</td>
<td>868</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀπαρχὴ:</td>
<td>535</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀπολάβητε:</td>
<td>475</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἁσθενεῖς:</td>
<td>460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἁρμονία:</td>
<td>761</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀνθρώπου:</td>
<td>452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἄνθρωπον:</td>
<td>452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀρμονία:</td>
<td>761</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἀρμόζεται:</td>
<td>976</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἢγια μέρη:</td>
<td>431</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐγένετο:</td>
<td>657</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐδόθη:</td>
<td>431</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐκείνη:</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐκείνῃ:</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐκκακῶμεν:</td>
<td>469</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐλεήθη:</td>
<td>457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐν Χριστῷ:</td>
<td>455</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ:</td>
<td>758</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐν τῷ τέλει:</td>
<td>436</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐπέσαντο:</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐπήνεγκεν:</td>
<td>407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐπιδοχὴ:</td>
<td>445</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐπιδομὴ:</td>
<td>445</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐπίμολη:</td>
<td>445</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐπιπτάς:</td>
<td>426</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐρυμιν:</td>
<td>434</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐτέλεσεν:</td>
<td>998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἔνδοκιος:</td>
<td>548</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐκτικώς:</td>
<td>438</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐξῆς:</td>
<td>953</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table> étaρόδοξοι: 549
ἐκαστὸν τῶν σπερμάτων: 425 ἐγγραφοί: 446 ἐδείξεν: 405
ἐλαβε δικαιοσύνην: 405 ἐξω: 953 ἐπεσάν τε: 10 ἐριν: 405 ἐψεξαν: 415
ἐως θανάτου ἠθλησαν: 405 ἡγωνισμένοις: 766 ἡκριβωκότα: 656 ἱερόν: 758 ἱλασμός: 584
ἱλασμός: 562
ἱλαστήριον: 562 584 ὁ δημιούργος τῶν αἰώνων καὶ ποτὴρ πανάγιος: 436 ὁμιλαί: 524
ὁμή: 789 ὁρμένοις: 461 ὁλον: 473
ὁς καλεταί: 786 ὑμᾶς: 843 ὑπηρεσίας: 418
ὑπομνήματα: 456 ὡς: 476
έπινομὴ: 445
Ἡ γὰρ ὕπανδρος γυνὴ τῷ ζῶντι ἀνδρὶ δέδεται νόμῳ: 868
Α: 559 562 579 580
Κύριος: 469
Λόγοι: 596
Λόγος: 596
Ναζαρηνοῦ: 540
Παρέχειν μικροψυχίαν: 5
Παράλημψηθῆναι: 9
Σελήνη: 509
Χριστοῦ: 402
Ω: 559 562 579 580
αὐτὸς ὥρας: 10
αὐτὴ: 10
αὐτὸς ὥρας: 10
αὐτῶν: 433
αὐτοῦ: 433
αὐτοῦ: 694
αὐτοῦ: 403
βασίλειον: 473 βασιλείαν: 473
βλέπετε πόσος: 457 βλαβεράς: 429
γῆ: 435
γεγωνιωμένοις: 766 γνώσις: 600 γυῶσις: 541
δέους: 402 δεσπότην: 456 δεσπότης: 454 διάδοχη: 445 διανύει: 426
διαφέρον τι: 534 διαφέροντες: 534 διδάσκαλοι: 537 διεσώθησαν: 837 εἷς: 476 εὐάρεστεῖς: 414 εἰς: 476 εὐαριστεῖν: 463 εὐχαριστεῖν: 463 εὐϕαρεστεῖτω: 442
εὐρεθῶμεν: 451
θάνατος ποιμανεῖ αὐτούς—: 452 θέλει: 575 θαυμαστή: 504 θεοῦ: 451
κόσμος: 507 959
κύριος: 457 καὶ: 639
καὶ: 999
καὶ ἀσύνετοι: 440
καὶ ἀσύνετοι: 440
καὶ καὶρόν: 425
καὶ καὶρόν: 425
κατὰ: 639 κατά: 10 10
κατὰ καιρόν: 425 κατὰ καιρὸς τεταγμένους: 441 κατέσκαψεν: 406 κλέπτης: 509
κόσμος: 719
λάβωμεν: 425
λόγος: 476
λόγος ἐνδιάθετος: 827 λόγος προφορικός: 827 λεγεσθαι: 601
λογος: 582 589
ματαιολογίαν: 409 μετὰ: 10
μεταπροδιδόασι: 421 νόμῳ: 868
ναος: 758 οἰκονομία: 504 οὐ: 656 οὐδεμία: 626 οτενοχωρία: 458 πάλαι: 478
παντοκράτωρ: 503 παρα τὴν: 611
παρεκδέξασθαι: 600
πατὴρ γὰρ ἀγαθὸς ὤν: 457 περιστάσεις: 401
πιστεύοντας: 435
πλάσαι: 416 πλήσαι: 416
πλεονεξία: 436 πλῆσαι: 416
πνεύματος δυνάμεως: 999 πονηρίαν: 436 πονηροί: 468 ποτεῖ: 575
πρὸ πάυτων: 606
προετοιμάσας: 434
προευτρεπισός: 903
προσκλήσεις: 422 448
προσκλίσεις: 448
πρωτογέννημα: 535
ραφιδεύτων, συρραπτόντων τῶν ραφιδευτῶν: 529 σὺ ἐκεῖ εἶ: 429
σὺ δὲ ἐμίσησας...ὁ ῥυόμενος: 436 σημειώσεις: 524 σιγῆς: 422 σταυρίσκειν: 9 στερἑωμα: 592 στερεός: 592
συμφωνήσωσιν: 976
συναισθήσεως: 402 συνειδήσεως: 402 σωζομένοις: 461 σωθῆναι: 837
τὰ ἀγαθά: 436
τὰ κακά: 936
τὰ καλά: 936 τάξει: 433
tó: 594
tóμοι: 524
τῆς ἀληθείας: 470
τῆς παραδόσεως ἡμῶν: 407 tῆς πληγῆς: 416
τῶν ἄνω: 758
τῷ ναῷ: 758
τῷ πατρὶ αὐτοῦ τῷ θεῷ: 407 tεθλιμμένη: 673 673 tελετάς: 998
tελετή: 998 998 tημελείτω: 439 tις: 504 tυγχάνομετα: 592 φυγαδευθείς: 405 φυσικά: 513 χαριτί: 586 χωρίζει: 978
χωρίς: 586
Index of German Words and Phrases

(Literarischer: 32
., 493–496; cf: 34
Apologie des Aristides: 492
De evangg. in arab. e simp. Syr: 38
Die vier Evangelien, arabisch, aus der Wiener Handschrift: 257
Die vier Evv: 260
Forschungen: 29
Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons: 33
Gesch. d. altchrist. Lit. bis. Euseb: 34
Geschichte der altchristl.: 6
Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur: 296
Jahrbucher fur Prot. Theol: 528
Nachrichten von der Königl. Gesellsch. der Wiss: 34
Nachrichten von der Königl. Gesell. der Wiss., etc., zu Göttingen,: 33
Polemische und apologetische Lit. in Arabische Sprache: 31
Recension und Rekonstruktion des Textes, von Lic. Edgar Hennecke. (Die Griechischen Apologeten: 492
Tatians Diatessaron, seine bisher. Lit. u. die Reconstruction des Textes nach einer neuentdeckten Handschrift: 32
Texte und Untersuchungen: 6 36
Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Altchristlichen Litteratur: 493
You might also enjoy these classic Christian books from the CCEL:

ANF08. The Twelve Patriarchs, Excerpts and Epistles, The Clementia, Apocrypha, Decretals, Memoirs of Edessa and Syriac Documents, Remains of the First by Philip Schaff

Originally printed in 1885, the ten-volume set, Ante-Nicene Fathers, brings together the work of early Christian thinkers. In particular, it brings together the writings of the early Church fathers prior to the fourth century Nicene Creed. These volumes are noteworthy for their inclusion of entire texts, and not simply fragments or excerpts from these great writings. The translations are fairly literal, providing both readers and scholars with a good approximation of the originals. These writings were heavily influential on the early Church, and for good reason, as they are inspirational and encouraging. These volumes also come with many useful notes, providing the reader with new levels of understanding. Overall, Ante-Nicene Fathers, or any part of it, is a welcome addition to one’s reading list.

Tim Perrine
CCEL Staff Writer

Formats available: PDF, Web, ePub, iBook, Kindle, and others. Visit the Kindle or iBook store or see http://www.ccel.org/ccel/schaff/anf08.html.

ANF07. Fathers of the Third and Fourth Centuries: Lactantius, Venantius, Asterius, Victorinus, Dionysius, Apostolic Teaching and Constitutions, Homily by Philip Schaff

Originally printed in 1885, the ten-volume set, Ante-Nicene Fathers, brings together the work of early Christian thinkers. In particular, it brings together the writings of the early Church fathers prior to the fourth century Nicene Creed. These volumes are noteworthy for their inclusion of entire texts, and not simply fragments or excerpts from these great writings. The translations are fairly literal, providing both readers and scholars with a good approximation of the originals. This volume has Church fathers from both the third and fourth century. These writings were heavily influential on the early Church, and for good reason, as they are inspirational and encouraging. These volumes also come with many useful notes, providing the reader with new levels of understanding. Overall, Ante-Nicene Fathers, or any part of it, is a welcome addition to one’s reading list.

Tim Perrine
CCEL Staff Writer

Formats available: PDF, Web, ePub, iBook, Kindle, and others. Visit the Kindle or iBook store or see http://www.ccel.org/ccel/schaff/anf07.html.
ANF10. Bibliographic Synopsis; General Index

Philip Schaff
ANF10. Bibliographic Synopsis; General Index

Author(s): Schaff, Philip
Publisher: Grand Rapids, MI: Christian Classics Ethereal Library
Description: Originally printed in 1885, the ten-volume set, Ante-Nicene Fathers, brings together the work of early Christian thinkers. In particular, it brings together the writings of the early Church fathers prior to the fourth century Nicene Creed. These volumes are noteworthy for their inclusion of entire texts, and not simply fragments or excerpts from these great writings. The translations are fairly literal, providing both readers and scholars with a good approximation of the originals. This volume is the index. These writings were heavily influential on the early Church, and for good reason, as they are inspirational and encouraging. These volumes also come with many useful notes, providing the reader with new levels of understanding. Overall, Ante-Nicene Fathers, or any part of it, is a welcome addition to one's reading list.

Tim Perrine
CCEL Staff Writer
Contents

Title Page 1
Preface 5
Introductory Note 13
Preface 17
Table of Contents 25
Biographical Synopsis 29
Index of Subjects 297
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers 301
Index of Texts 453
Indexes 561
  Index of Pages of the Print Edition 562
THE WRITINGS OF THE FATHERS DOWN TO A.D. 325

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS

VOLUME 10

I. BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS
   ERNEST C. RICHARDSON, M.A.

II. GENERAL INDEX
    BERNHARD PICK, PH.D.

III. ANNOTATED INDEX
     WILLIAM DIPUCCIO

Edited by

A. CLEVELAND COXE, D.D.

HENDRICKSON PUBLISHERS
Hendrickson Publishers, Inc.
P. O. Box 3473
Peabody, Massachusetts 01961-3473

ISBN 1-56563-092-0

Printed in the United States of America

Second printing—June 1995

Volume 10 of the Ante-Nicene Fathers, Bibliography and General Index, contains a newly prepared Annotated Index of Authors and Works of the Ante-Nicene, Nicene, and Post-Nicene Fathers, First and Second Series © 1994 Hendrickson Publishers, Inc. All rights reserved. No part of this work may be used or reproduced in any manner without written permission of the publisher.
GENERAL PREFACE.

To provide the student of the Ante-Nicene Literature with a copious General Index was necessary to the work which, in eight volumes, comprises the original twenty-four and not a little additional material. But the General Editor felt, at every step of his own undertaking, the need of a systematised Bibliography, to which scholars intolerant of merely superficial attainment might be referred for the entire mastery of any particular subject. It is not unlikely that our countrymen are about to enter on such studies as require the aid of the Ante-Nicene Fathers, in the spirit of honest and very earnest research, and it is cheering to observe that patient industry and unwearied continuous effort in the investigation of great questions is no longer to be considered impossible in our hurried and hasty American modes of life. He, then, who means to understand these volumes thoroughly, and to use them for the benefit of others, must have the keys of knowledge at hand. To supply such keys is of itself the task of none other than a specialist and an expert. The introductory notice of the Rev. Dr. Riddle will inform the reader that I am indebted to him for committing to Professor Richardson the labour of compiling the Bibliography which I had proposed, and which, in my opinion, has been so admirably performed. His work, though it falls below his own standard of all that could be desired, is practically exhaustive, and I rejoice to present it to American scholars as honourable to our literature, and especially to its author. It is most creditable to the Theological Seminary at Hartford that such a work has been completed within its walls, and largely by the aid of its library, which must be especially rich in a collection of rare works, indispensable to a performance of this description. May I venture to say, in behalf of the Commonwealth of Letters and the interests of Learning in America, that I have reason to believe that for this wealth of resources we are all debtors to the enlightened munificence of Newton Case, Esq., of Hartford.

I have felt it due to my sense of obligation to those who have added such an important supplement to my own work on the Ante-Nicene Fathers not only to express in this way my warmest thanks, but to add in a note,1 brief biographical data, which will record here their previous labours in behalf of learning and of Christianity.

A. C. C.

August 2, 1887.

1 For which I am chiefly indebted to the Scheff-Elling Encyclopaedia of Living Divines (Supplement). New York, 1889.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES.

1. RIDDLE, Matthew Brown, D.D., was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., Oct. 17, 1856; B. A. (Jefferson Coll., Penn.), 1879; theological education at New Brunswick, N.J., 1893; Chaplain New Jersey Regiment, 1861; at Hoboken, N.J., Pastorate (Reformed), 1864-65, and at Newark, N.J., 1865-69; studied in Europe, 1887-71. Since then, Professor of New Testament Exegesis in the Hartford Theo-
GENERAL PREFACE.

...logical Seminary. Elected to a corresponding professorship in the "Western Theological Seminary," at Allegheny, Penn., Feb. 15, 1887, he is about to enter upon his new duties at that place, in the immediate vicinity of his native town. For a list of Dr. Riddle's learned and valuable contributions to Theological Literature, see the Schaff-Herzog Supplement, p. 182. His important contributions to this series will be found in the seventh and eighth volumes. He was conspicuous as a member of the New Testament company of the American revisers in the recent Bible revision.

2. Pick, Bernhard, Ph.D., was born at Kempen, Prussia, Dec. 19, 1842; educated at Breslau and Berlin, and in the "Union Theological Seminary." New York, 1868. Engaged in pastoral duties in New York and elsewhere (Lutheran) from 1863 till 1881, and now in Allegheny, Penn. Member of the German Oriental Society (Halle-Leipzig), 1877, and of the American Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, 1884. His literary and theological works are noted, as above, p. 168. In compiling indexes to later volumes of this series, as well as in the authorship of the General Index, he has rendered most valuable service.

4. Richardson, Ernest Cushing, born at Woburn, Mass., Feb. 9, 1855; B.A. at Amherst, 1880; theological education (Congregationalist), at the Hartford Theological Seminary, 1882-4. Since 1884 he has conferred great services upon his Alma Mater, as Librarian of that Seminary, a position for which his eminent qualifications may be inferred from the Bibliography here subjoined. His publications are enumerated in the Schaff-Herzog Supplement, p. 179. He is announced to edit Eusebius' "Life of Constantine," and to translate the "Lives of Illustrious Men" of Jerome and Gennadius for the "Post-Nicene Fathers," edited by Dr. Schaff, and now in course of publication. He has had, since 1884, a prominent position as Assistant Secretary to the "American Library Association," and is one of the Lecturers in the Columbia College "School of Library Economy."
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

BY

ERNEST C. RICHARDSON, M.A.,

Librarian of Hartford Theological Seminary, and Assistant Secretary of the American Library Association.

WITH AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

BY MATTHEW B. RIDDLE, D.D.
INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THE General Editor of the American Edition of the "Ante-Nicene Fathers" was kind enough to commit to me the task of preparing a Bibliography of the entire series. A plan of arrangement was, after conference, agreed upon; being substantially that adopted in this volume. The original design was to include this new matter in volume viii. The exacting labors connected with the preparation of other matter, published in vols. vii and viii, made it necessary to call upon some expert for assistance. The Rev. Mr. Richardson, the librarian of Hartford Theological Seminary, was close at hand, and had, as I knew, gathered material adapted for the purpose in view. It soon became apparent to me that he could do the work much more satisfactorily, both to himself and to the public, if it were entrusted almost entirely to his skill and patience. The proposal to issue a supplementary volume gave time for better results, and Mr. Richardson gladly availed himself of this opportunity for perfecting the work. In view of what he has done, it is simple honesty to allow his name to appear on the title-page as author. My duty to the public is fulfilled when I have made this explanation.

Mr. Richardson, in his Preface, gives a statement of his method. It seems proper that I should here express my cordial appreciation of his fidelity, persistence, and unwearied efforts to render the various lists as complete as possible. Only those who have attempted a similar task can fully understand how much it costs to secure fitness and accuracy in such a bibliography. Having witnessed throughout the scholarly spirit in which Mr. Richardson has ungrudgingly given himself to this task, I cannot refrain from bearing testimony to it in this Introductory Notice. May others be stimulated to more successful labour by the abundant helps he has here indicated to them.

M. B. RIDDLE.

Hartford, July, 1887.
Preface

PREFACE.

The plan of this work, as suggested by the General Editor, through Dr. Riddle, was a "complete synopsis" of the literature relating to the works included in THE ANTE-NICENE FATHERS. Its purpose is to furnish a guide to a further critical study for those who have been stimulated by the present quickened interest in the study of the Church Fathers in America, and especially to open the field of modern German critical scholarship. This latter idea was a design particularly cherished by the Editor-in-Chief.

The treatment is one which the author's own method of study, and eleven years' experience in furnishing tools for College and Seminary students and professors, suggests as, on the whole, the most practical: 1. Monographic; 2. By (a.) Editions chronologically arranged; (b.) Translations, ancient and modern, each language chronologically arranged; (c.) Literature alphabetically arranged.

A full method would include also a synopsis of: (1.) Manuscripts; (2.) Sources. Toward these the author had made some collections, but found it impossible to complete in the limited time at disposal. The references to the "Veterum testimonia" in Migne, Galland, and elsewhere, partially supply the place of a synopsis of sources, and the author hopes to carry out his design, formed some years since, and publish in some shape, within a few years, a synopsis of ms. of Ante-Nicene Literature with references to published descriptions where any exist.

The alphabetical arrangement has been adopted under Literature. Gebhardt and Harnack's capital monographs to the contrary notwithstanding, as, on the whole, furnishing more easily the information for which men consult such a work. Experience shows that most students use such a bibliography by authors: (1.) One comes soon to know what shade or weight of scholarship, Harnack, or Zahn, or Funk, Lightfoot, or Schaff, and so on, represent, according to their various scholarship or tenor, and his first use of a list is to see who have written on the subject, and where their results can be found. (2.) The views of some one are referred to, and one consults such a list to verify the reference and find where those views are expressed. For this latter use a special effort has been made to supply page-references, as a time-saving device.

The first aim of the work is exhaustiveness. This is peculiarly necessary in the use of American students in order that the scanty and heterogeneous collections on which American scholars must depend for tools may yield all that they have on the subject. It is a constant embarrassment that there is not a single adequate theological library in America, and the student has to use every device to cull what he can from secondary sources. The American student thus works at an immense disadvantage, and must do so until there is somewhere a library which will compare, e.g., with what medical men have in the Library of the Surgeon-General's office.

Literal exhaustiveness is, of course, even more undesirable than impossible. The author has at hand, for example, a very large number of Encyclopaedias, Histories of
Preface

Popea, Councils, Doctrine, Life, N. T. Introductions, works on Archeology, etc., etc., etc., which have more or less patristic matter, while his notes of general histories of the Ante-Nicene period alone number about five hundred. The greater part of these add absolutely nothing for critical study, and little even to the most accessible of the sources indicated, so that the criterion has been everything that has fairly entered into the critical discussion of a work judged largely in the following:

Method. (1.) The examination and direct analysis of such standard works and periodicals as were available. (2.) The exhausting of such monographs as could be obtained, e.g., those in Gebhardt u. Harnack's Patrois apost. (3.) The exhausting of (a) the general bibliographies of Chevalier, Engemann, Hofmann, Oettinger, Winer, Poole, Graesse, Brunet, etc. (b) The palaeographies of Walch, (Caillet), (Clarke), (Bunsen), Permanneder, Alzog, Nirochi, (Schmid). (c.) The articles in the Encyclopaedias of Herzog-Plitt-Hauck, Schaff-Herzog, Lichtenberger, Wetzer u. Welte (first edition). McClintock and Strong, Erach u. Graber and the Britannica, and the dictionaries of Smith, Smith and Wace, Hoefer and Michaud. (d.) The literary histories of Tenet, (Ebert), Schönenmann and Reuss. (e.) The church histories of Schaff, Kurtz, Hergenrother, (Hase), (Hagenbach), (Baphideis). (f.) The foot-notes of various monographs, and general works, e.g., "Supernatural Religion."

In addition to these all the minor sources available have been used, especially in the vexatious and difficult matter of the Editions and Translations. In the matter of the later literature the most fruitful source has been the periodical literature, especially the twelve volumes of the Theol. Literaturzeitung.

Purely bibliographical references (i.e., to Graesse, etc.) are in general omitted. Chevalier and Darling are no exception to this rule, since they contain brief notices of the authors. A few works of very little critical value have been admitted, either because they are in English, where there is scanty English literature, or because of some subject where there is little literature, or for some other reason, e.g., Waite, Stowe, Blackburn, etc.

The fullness and accuracy of titles are limited by the necessity of doing so much of the work from secondary sources. The author has verified and enlarged as far as time and tools would permit, and, while regretting defects which must exist, can only say that most of the titles are the result of the collation of several references, and embody the corrections of innumerable mis-citations.

Abbreviations. The abbreviations adopted are those of the references themselves, or such as have become the familiar forms. The forms of English periodicals are usually those of Poole's Index, although in many cases these are lengthened for reader recognition. The citation of German periodicals is very various, but a guide is given by cross-references in the list in the Appendix.

The Appendix includes supplemental matter introductory to the study of Patrology or aiding in the use of the foregoing Synopsis: (1.) A full list of works on Patrology, in which a special effort has been made to straighten the editions of the earlier modern works—a bibliographical Chinese puzzle. (2.) A very limited list of works quoted in the Synopsis which seemed to need enlarged titles or descriptions, and especially where the edition which is quoted is not the latest, as in the case of Wetzer u. Welte, Hergenrother, and Westcott's Canon. (3.) A full list of periodicals referred to in the Synopsis. This is included, although it falls very far short of the ideal symmetry which the author would like, and which might be secured with time. Because of the need of such a list in the lack of uniform reference, 2. As a contribution in one of the most deficient fields of theological literature, the bibliography of theological periodicals.

The author has worked with the very practical purpose of furnishing just what he found desirable in his own method, and, recognizing the limitations of the work, can only say that he has spared no pains nor effort to make the work as complete and exact as time and tools would permit. If it shall prove as useful to others as he expects it to be to himself, he will not regret the time which he has somewhat reluctantly spared from more direct critical work.

May the very practical and direct results of modern, critical patriotic scholarship stimulate those who love Him who is the Truth, to a more eager, unwearied, unremitting, humble, unprejudiced study, in His Spirit, of every circumstance which confirms and illumines the story of His life on earth, to the glory of His name.

The author takes this opportunity to express his thanks to the Rev. Messrs. Ropes and Gillett of the Andover and the Union (New York) Theological Seminary Libraries, to Mr. Whitney of the Boston Public Library, and very particularly and warmly to Mr. Cutter of the Boston Athenæum Library, for special favors in the use of works of reference, and to the various helpers whose interest in the work has contributed to increased accuracy.

HOSMER HALL, HARTFORD, July, 1887.

ERNEST C. RICHARDSON.
TABLE OF CONTENTS.

VOLUME I. ........................................... 1-59
I. St. Clement. Epistle to the Corinthians ................. 1-5
II. Mathetes. Epistle to Diognetus .................. 5-7
III. Polycarp. Epistle to the Philippians .......... 7-10
IV. Ignatius. Epistles ........................................... 10
Martyrdom ........................................... 10
V. Barnabas. Epistle ........................................... 13
VI. Papius. Fragments ........................................... 16-19
VII. Justin Martyr. Various works .................. 19-21
VIII. Irenaeus ........................................... 24-25
VIII. Irenaeus ........................................... 26-49

VOLUME II. ........................................... 41-42
I. The Pastor of Hermas ................. 41-43
II. Tatian ........................................... 47-53
III. Theophilus of Antioch .................. 53-58
IV. Athenagoras ........................................... 58-63
V. Clement of Alexandria .................. 63-68

VOLUME III-IV. ........................................... 64-48
I. Tertullian ........................................... 64-66
II. Minucius Felix .................. 66-70
III. Commodian ........................................... 70
IV. Origen ........................................... 70-75

VOLUME V. ........................................... 75-105
I. Hippolytus ........................................... 75-77
II. Cyprian ........................................... 77-82
III. Caesarius ........................................... 82-86
IV. Novatian ........................................... 86-90
V. Appendices ........................................... 90-94

VOLUME VI. ........................................... 94-100
I. Gregory Thaumaturgus ................. 94-96
II. Dionysius of Alexandria ......... 96-98
III. Julius Africanus .................. 98-100
IV. (1.) Anastasius .................. 100-102
(2.) Alexander of Cappadocia .... 102-104
(3.) Theognostus of Alexandria .... 104-106
(4.) Eusebius of Alexandria ...... 106-108
(5.) Theodorus of Alexandria .... 108-110
(6.) Hilary ........................................... 110
(7.) Paphnutius .................. 110-112
(8.) Malchus ........................................... 112
V. Archelaus ........................................... 112
VI. Alexander of Lycopolis .......... 112-114
VII. Peter of Alexandria .......... 114-116
VIII. Alexander of Alexandria .... 116-118
IX. Methodius ........................................... 118
IX. Methodius ........................................... 118
X. Arianus ........................................... 118

VOLUME VII. ........................................... 118-123
I. Lactantius ........................................... 118-120
II. Venantius Fortunatus ................. 121-123
III. Asterius Urbanus ................. 123-125
IV. Victorinus ........................................... 125
V. Dionysius of Rome .................. 125-127
VI. The Teaching of Twelve Apostles .......... 127-129
VII. Constitutions of the Holy Apostles .... 129-132
VIII. The Homily ascribed to Clement .... 132-134
IX. Early Liturgics ........................................... 134

VOLUME VIII. ........................................... 134-176
I. The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs .......... 134-136
II. Theodotus ........................................... 136
III. The Two Epistles Concerning Virginity .......... 136-138
IV. Pseudo-Clementine Literature .......... 138-140
V. Apocrypha of the New Testament .......... 140-142
(1.) The Protevangelium of James ........ 142-144
(2.) The Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew .... 144-146
(3.) The Gospel of the Nativity of Mary ...... 146-148
(4.) The History of Joseph the Carpenter .......... 148-150
(5.) The Gospel of Thomas ................. 150-152
(6.) The Arabic Gospel of the Infancy .......... 152-154
(7.) The Gospel of Nicodemus .......... 154-156
(8.) The Letter of Pontius Pilate concerning Our Lord Jesus Christ .......... 156-158
(9.) The Report of Pilate to the Procurator concerning Our Lord Jesus Christ .......... 158-160
(10.) The Report of Pontius Pilate .......... 160-162
(11.) The Giving up of Pontius Pilate .......... 162-164
(12.) The Death of Pilate .......... 164-166
(13.) The Narrative of Joseph .......... 166-168
(14.) The Avenging of the Saviour .......... 168-170
(16.) Acts of Paul and Thecla .......... 172-174
(17.) The Acts of Barnabas .......... 174-176
(18.) The Acts of Philip .......... 176-178
(19.) Philip in Heliopolis .......... 178-180
(20.) Acts of Andrew and Matthias .......... 180-182
(21.) Acts of Peter and Andrew .......... 182-184
(22.) Acts and Martyrdom of St. Matthew the Apostle .......... 184-186
(23.) Acts of the Holy Apostle Thomas .......... 186-188
(24.) Consummation of Thomas the Apostle .......... 188-190
Table of Contents
Table of Contents

| (24.) | Martyrology of the Holy and Glorious Apostle Bartholomew | 103 |
| (25.) | Acts of the Holy Apostle Thaddæus | 103 |
| (26.) | Acts of the Holy Apostle and Evangelist John the Theologian | 103 |
| (28.) | Revelation of Moses | 104 |
| (29.) | Revelation of Exodus | 104 |
| (30.) | Revelation of Paul | 104 |
| (31.) | Revelation of John | 104 |
| (34.) | The Book of John concerning the Falling Asleep of Mary | 104 |
| (33.) | The Passing of Mary | 104–105 |
| VI. | The Decretals | 105 |
| VII. | Memoirs of Edessa and ancient Syrian documents | 106–109 |
| Addæus | 106–107 |
| Jacob of Sarug | 107 |
| Habib | 107 |
| Gura | 107 |
| Moses of Chorene | 107–108 |
| Bardesan | 108 |
| Ambrose (of Alexandria) | 108–109 |
| VIII. | Remains of the second and third centuries | 109 |
| (1.) | Quadratus | 109 |
| (2.) | Ariste of Pella | 110–111 |
| (3.) | Meilo | 110–111 |
| (4.) | Hegesippus | 111–112 |
| (5.) | Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth | 112 |
| (6.) | Rhodon | 112–113 |
| (7.) | Maximus, Bishop of Jerusalem | 113 |
| (8.) | Claudius Apolinarius, Bishop of Hierapolis and Apologist | 113 |
| (9.) | Polyaretes | 113–114 |
| (20.) | Theophilus, Bishop of Caesarea in Palestine | 114 |
| (11.) | Sulpicius, Bishop of Antioch | 114 |
| (12.) | Apollonius | 114–115 |
| (13.) | Pseudo-Tertullian, The Alexandrian Philosopher | 115–116 |
| (14.) | Pseudo-Tertullian, Letter of the churches of Vienna and Lugdunum | 116 |

Appendix

| I. | Patrology | 117–123 |
| (a.) | Ancient and Medieval | 119 |
| (b.) | Modern | 119–123 |
| II. | Various works | 123–129 |
| L. Bibliographies | 123–124 |
| II. | Encyclopedias | 124 |
| III. | Collections | 125–126 |
| Connects | 126 |
| Lives of Saints | 126 |
| IV. | Church Histories | 126–128 |
| V. | Miscellaneous | 128–129 |
| III. | Periodicals | 129–133 |

Index

| | 135–136 |
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

Note.—For fuller titles, editions, and criticisms of various analyzed works, see Appendix.

VOLUME I.

I. ST. CLEMENT. Epistle to the CORINTHIANS, etc.

I. Editions.

JUNIUS, PATR. (Patrick Young) Gr. lat. Cons. 1634. 4°, 1677. 4°. [Conjectures in red ink. Generally followed until Wotton.]

MAEDEUR, JACQ. J. Gr. lat. Helmi, 1654. 8°.

FELL, RO. Gr. lat. Cons. 1669. 12° [1 ep. 1691]; 1677. 12° [2 ep. added].

COYLER, P. J. E. Gr. lat. In his: Patr. ap. Par. 1672. 8°. I. 1 ep. 1694. 12°. (The Latin translation often followed.)

GOLDSMITH, P. Gr. lat. Lond. 1687. 12°, 1694. 12°. (Unequal editions.)

BEKES, CAR. Fulder. 1788. 8°.

PATR. AP. Gr. Lett. Bas. 1831. I. (7)

HESTER, G. J. In: Patr. ap. Tub. 1832. 8°; 1843. 8°.

[Taken by Hester, Dressel, Hilgenfeld, etc. Cf. Apo.]

MURRAY, ED. BI. Codex N. T. Triur. 1846.

MAEDEUR, E. Gr. lat. Lond. 1855. 4°. [Photo. fac-sim.]

BEYER, P. E. Const. 1825. 8°. [Based on new ms. The foundation of all later.]

II. Translations.

[Ms. in Camb. Soc. Lib. Ed. by Brindley, annotated by Lightfoot (1871).]

Latin.

See under editions. In general only translations without text are included here, and so throughout.

ROS, PA. In: Mella patr. Lond. 1670. 8°.

HUGO, A. Erford. 1665; 1669. [Gr. Chem. 36-45; 11, Chem. 25-35.]

LEGRAS, AN. In: Livr. sacr. Part. 1717. 8°. 1722. 2 v. 12°.

Dutch.

English.

BURTON, WM. Lond. 1654. 4°. Repr. 1652. 4°.

WAKE. Lond. 1652. 8°. 3-21, 1-83; Lond. 1710. 8° [Greatly improved]. Lond. 1740. 8°. 1-27, (2) 1-42, 1737. 8°; 5th ed. 1759 [77]; Harford, 1826. 8°. 1876; Lond. 1828. 8° [New ed.]; Lond. 1849. 4°; 1860. 8°. Phil. 1849. 8°; also, Mantua, 1850, and in: Bickersteth Ch. Th. 1838. 12°.

ABERDEEN, 1806. 8°. [Sources]

CRAWFORD. Lond. 1825. 8°. 1824. 8°; also in: Whittingham, Ap. S. N.Y. 1820. [Based on Wake.]

COX, H. J. Lond. 1836.

HODGE, Lond. 1872.

LIGHTFOOT. In: St. Clement, App. (Combr. 1877.)

345-79.

French.

THOBIUS, AN. [Cousin] Angers, 1682. 8°.

ROCHSATE, AN. In: Pctr. ap. Lond. 1732. 8°. II; 1741. 2 v. 12°.

(1)
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

33
Biographical Synopsis

CLEMENT OF E.

DEMAID. Gesch. d. Volken Israel. (1853) VII. 256-.

— Verit. ad crist. (1792) 40-2.

— Bibl. lat. med. et inf. æt. (1794) I. 1101; (1797) I. 303.

FAZAK. Interpretation. (1886) 166-7.

FRAUDE. J. In: Schenkel. Biblioth. (1871) III. 452. [Date of Ep.]

— In: Thol. Quartalschr. LVIII. (1876) 265. (The Bayreuthians.)

— In: Thol. Quartalschr. LXVI. (1883) 125-3.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

GIESER. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.

GERHARD. Church Hist. (1867) I. 479-9.

— In: Galland. Bibl. rer. patr. (1755) I. xi; also in: Migone. ford. ed. I. 87-152.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNONYMPS.

CLEMENT OF R.

Biographical Synopsis.

Ludov. In: Gerhard Schott: Epistolae III. (1854) ii. 65, 68.

— De Clementis Rom. Epistola ad Corinth. prius disputat. Z. 1854. 8°. (VIII. 188.) ['The most im.

— Chronol. de Reis Biscopis. (1861) 145-160.

— Opus. d. Christianism. (1873) 20-20 [Diss.]

LIMPHER. Hist. ab. patrim. (1752-174). 1,1, 11-97. (=Migne) 2.5.

LUTZENBERG. D. NTlichen Lehrlehrer. (1854) II. 34.

MACI.: In: Theol. Quartalsbl. III. (1833-35) 823. (=De MACH.: In: Theol. Quartalsbl. III. (1833-35) 823. (=De

MCLAUGHLIN and S. CYLD. (1874) II. 376-8.

— Hib. (=Clement n'est jamais accompli un travail aussi parfait, etc.) (=in a serious, then admirable)

MANGOLD, D. Romerbrief u. s. w. (1866) 169.

MISHEREE: Dis. (1852) 32-44.

MOHRER, E. B. B. ach. Saeculatorum (c.1475) I. cxxvii-v. (Aquat. Roll. 1856) [Copy of a copy]

443. (1860) 647. [f.]

NODER, B. Bibl. in: Theol. Quartalsbl. (1856) 443. (1860) 647. [f.]

NOTH, B. Bibl. in: Theol. Quartalsbl. (1854) 270-1 (1854)

443. (1860) 647. [f.]

Biographical Synopsis

I. MATHEMATICS.

Epitome to Diogenes.

II. PHILOSOPHY.

Epistola to Diogenes.

(Ep. to Diogenes)
Biographical Synopsis

III. Literature.

Biographical Synopsis

III. Translations.

Latin. Ancient.

(1) Dionysius Areopag. (1) Par. 1508 P. 4th.
(2) Dionysius Areopag. et al. Vetus. 1502 P.
(3) Dionysius Areopag. et al. Argentor. 1515 P.
(4) Dionysius Areop. et al. Parv. 1513 P.
(5) Ignatius et al. Basil. 1520 P. Argentor. 1527 P.
(6) Ignatius, et al. Amst. 1540 P.
(7) Ignatius, et al. Vetus. 1545 P.
(8) Clementina et al. Assisiens. 1546 P.

In: Mephistopheliana. Basil. 1500 P. 7th.
In: Orthodromogaphia (Herolda). Basil. 1555 P.
In: Orthodromographia (Orywendes). Basil. 1559 P.
(10) In: Bibliotheca (De La Elida). 1575 P.
(11) In: Bibliotheca (De La Elida). 1575 P.
(12) In: Bibliotheca (De La Elida). 1575 P.
(13) In: Bibliotheca (De La Elida). 1575 P.
(14) In: Bibliotheca (De La Elida). 1575 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.

In: Apollonius. Bar. 1515 P. 1515 P.
Biographical Synopsis

PUBLICATIONS

Biographical Synopsis

POLYCARP

Clemens Alexandre. In: Liber quae divae, etc.

Clement. Paul Rom. (1845-50) I. Ann. 219, 166. II. 201.

Cotta. § 272-286.

— Churches of Asia. (1880) passim.

Davidson. Introd. N. T. in. 512.

Donaldson. J. Hist. Ch. in. 1846-51. 1. 159-200.

Eichhorn. Hist. crit. IV. c. 15.

— In: Thol. Lex. (1882).

Giesebrecht. Church Hist. (1868) I. 270-3.

Grobeck. G. De fama et die passio. et Polycarp. Cod. 1743. 496. (Grodeck zit. zu Deutsche, 117).

Harnack. Hist. of Doct. I. (1880) 57, etc.

— Kirchengesch. (1888) 3-20-42.

— In: Thol. Lex. (1882).

— In: Expositor (1885) 401-14; (1886) 9-23; 175-92.

— Rev. of Lightfoot.

— In: Thol. Lex. (1882).

— In: Thol. Lex. (1882).

Hegesipp. Kirchengesch. (1879-80) I. 89-90; III. 38.

Knecht. (1880) I. 227-35.

Hincks. Hist. of Doct. I. (1880) 57, etc.

Hulstens. Hist. of Doct. I. (1880) 57, etc.

Husser. Hist. of Doct. I. (1880) 57, etc.

I. 38.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNONYM.

POLYCARP

[Biographical Synopsis]

LITHE. Hist. ecci. (1879) II. 4-6. 194-204.

JUDYES. Psalms. In: Ez. nom. crit. (1873) 90-133.

KESSE. Aus d. Urgeschichtsh. (1873) 145.

LADNER. M. C. Credibility. Lond. 1924. 87. II. 189-91.

LEMOYNE. St. in: Vies de t. Leg. Hist. 1876. 4.

REYSS. Recherches sur l'Egypte. (1823) 255.

REYSS. Life of P. Lond. 1847. 325.

SACHS. J. J. in: Contemp. XXV. (1879) 217-30.

SACHS. Poly. in: Nach. (1871) 1-97.

SCHICK. St. in: Zehnt. (1878) 181-214.

SCHRÖDER. S. M. M. Festschr. (1873) 574-776.

SEPP. St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel. (1875) 67-136.

SCHMIDT. Röm. Staatsverwaltung. I. (1875) 357.

SCHMIDT. In: Jahrb. d. christ. Ord. (1872) 216.

SENNER. A. B. K. zu Erc. (1875) 223.

SENOR. Hist. d. christ. II. 7-8.

SCHMIDT. De Ratz. Chr. 161.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.

SCHMIDT. In: Forsch. (1879) 4.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

I. Editions.

1. The English Church in the Reign of Charles II. (1683).

II. Translations.

IV. IGNAZIUS. EPISTLES.

1. To the Romans. (49).
2. To the Corinthians. (50).
3. To the Galatians. (51).
4. To the Ephesians. (52).
5. To the Philippians. (53).
6. To the Colossians. (54).
7. To the Thessalonians. (55).
8. To the Timothy. (56).
9. To the Titus. (57).
10. To the Philemon. (58).

(continues...)

Galen.

ARNOLD, Jef 1700. 9.
GÜPPEN, Henk. 1723. 8.

III. LITERATURE.

ALDOLI, Patro. (1697) 47-32.
BURLINGTON, Trinity 1(1) 6-14.
BURLINGTON, Trinity 2(1) 5-6.
CARSTENS, Canonicum. (1860) xxviii. 4. 134. 174. 197. 217. 222. 244.
COHEN, Lives of Bibles. (1840) 12. 177. 20.
FLEET, Hist. ecc. (1843) 1. 346. 246.
HARMANCE, A. Zeit u. Ignaz. (1847) 4. 479. 479.
KIRCHEN, (1847) 201. 209.
MORSE, Church Hist. 1857. 1. 492. 143. 333.
NIESCHULZ, Patr. (1881) 1. 129-131.
OBERST, Hist. ecc. (1846) 1. 120-123. 1797-1802. 119-219.
ZAHN, in Gebelsh. H. E. Patr. ap. 1887-1889.

See above. Many of the numbers refer to the Martyrology.

Note: Gentleness of the Martyrdom. For B. Hildebrand, Lichtenberg, Agrippa, Schauber, Kain, 1200-1204.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPIS.

IGNATIUS

JACOBUS. Osn. 1836; 1840; 1847; 1853. 8°. 269–519. s. u. Clement 1.
HESPEL. 1735; 1742; 1847; 1855 s. u. Clement 2.
CRISTELL. Rug. 1845. 8°.
RETHMAYR. Monat. 1844. 12°.
BUNGEN, C. C. J. (7 vols.) Hamb. 1838.
PETRINIUS, M. J. (Gr. lat. syn. annot. etc.). Lips. 1849.
BÜNEMER: Antisak. d. a. (1854.) I, 11-10. [Poet. 120.
LEIPF. 1859.
FRANC. Patr. ap. (Tl. 1838.) 172-243.
—— Long. Patr. ap. (Tl. 1838.) II, 24-123.
LIGHTFOOT. (Short rec. vi.) Apokr. Patr. II. (1838) I, 15-560. [v. 11.]

II. Translations.

Latin.

(9) Colen. 1478. [Deshirts.]
(10) Paris. 1498. 4°.
(14) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(16) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(17) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(18) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(19) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(20) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(21) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(23) Paris. 1510. 4°.

French.

(26) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(27) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(28) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(29) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(31) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(32) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(33) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(34) Paris. 1510. 4°.
(35) Paris. 1510. 4°.

German.

(36) Amsterdam, 1525.
(37) Amsterdam, 1525.
(38) Amsterdam, 1525.
(39) Amsterdam, 1525.
(40) Amsterdam, 1525.
(41) Amsterdam, 1525.
(42) Amsterdam, 1525.
(43) Amsterdam, 1525.
(44) Amsterdam, 1525.
(45) Amsterdam, 1525.

Italian.

(46) Venice. 1525.
(47) Venice. 1525.
(48) Venice. 1525.
(49) Venice. 1525.
(50) Venice. 1525.
(51) Venice. 1525.
(52) Venice. 1525.
(53) Venice. 1525.
(54) Venice. 1525.
(55) Venice. 1525.

Spanish.

(56) Seville. 1525.
(57) Seville. 1525.
(58) Seville. 1525.
(59) Seville. 1525.
(60) Seville. 1525.
(61) Seville. 1525.
(62) Seville. 1525.
(63) Seville. 1525.
(64) Seville. 1525.
(65) Seville. 1525.

Arabic.

Biographical Synopsis

IGNATIUS

52
Biographical Synopsis

Ignatius' claim to inspiration. In: Chr. Obs, XL (1849) 249-250.

ITTE, Hist. eccle. (1790) II, 1-9, 92-103.

KÖRNER Hs. Vorl. Legenda verna 36 (1846) 155-156.

KOHRS, Disparitatum Trierianum, 40-41.

KUYPER. A. u. Clement R.

Kuyper. A. u. Clement R.

JAUCH. In: Lichtenberg. Enzyk. (1877-82) VI 455-56.

KÜSTER. Comm. de Ev. II. E. (1863).

KIRCHHEUSER. Quellenmaterial. B. T.

KÜSTER. Ur. synopt. ev. der.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

LANGL. In: Ench. u. Guther. XVI (1859) 57-8.

Biographical Synopsis

Martyrium Ignatii. See below.

MAYERHOFER, Edn. patri. schr.

Meyer. Apostelgesch. (1879).

Millanger. Hist. der Ch. II. (1863) 103.

Litzsch. Ch. 1. 56.

Mommsen. G. S. S. S. (c. 1479) XVI, 11-12.

Müller. D. E. Sch. 1. 74.

Munzinger. Dogmenges. (1847-9) I 114, etc.

— E. In: Am. Church R. II. (1858) 94-5.

— E. In: Am. Church R. II. (1858) 94-5.

Naegele. Hist. dogmata. (1859) 196-211. (v. 1).

— E. In: Am. Church R. II. (1858) 94-5.

Neerpeld. Et. N. T.

Niederer. Gesch. Ch. K.

Nord. Generalis of Ignatius. (1846) 46, etc.

S. J. E. Sigl. 1849. (V. Rich coll., especially regarding Orient. versions.)
Biographical Synopsis

I. Editions.

II. Translations.

English.

III. Literature.

See above for literature.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSES.

V. BARNABAS. EPISTLE.

I. Editions.

UBERHORN, Gr. lat. Cerm. 1653. 4o. [1st ed. All copies burned in 1684.]

MENDEL, HUSO, Gr. lat. Paris, 1655. 4o. [Posthumous.]

VON I. ISAAC (ign. et) Gr. lat. Amst. 1656. 4o.

LAND, 1656. 8o. p. 207-254.

MADER, J. J. Gr. lat. Helmst. 1655. 4o.

COTERELUS, Gr. lat. Paris. 1672. 8o.; Ed. Clericus. Antw. 1691. 4o. 1674. 4o.

[VEY] (Hermes and) Gr. lat. Amst. 1685. 4o. [Not by Hermes, but his notes are included.]

LE MOYNE, Gr. lat. Lugod. Patr. 1052. 4o. In: Variorum. CLERICUS, 1685. 72. 1724. 4o. u. Coterelus.

KUSSEL, RICH. Gr. lat. Land. 1746. 8o.

GALLANDIUS, Gr. lat. 1676. 8o.; in: Bibl. patr. I.

FRIEDEL, L. Patr. Pat. Lugod. 1677. 11.

HEFFEL, Tiv. 1839; 1843; 1847; 1855. u. Clement. R.

SMITHERSON, S. [Stud. Text.]

GRENBERG, 1844. 8o.

REITESEY, PHI. AP. Monach. 1846.

MURAY, Codex N. C. Turt. 1847. L.

DRESEL, Patr. ap. Lips. 1851; 1863. 1-45.

VOCHE, Nicola. vol. cl. Turt. 1855. [K.]

HILDEPohl, M. [N. extra coram soc.] 1862. 2. 1877.

MÜLLER, Gr. lat. Lips. 1869. 8o.; in: De Wette. Esg. Hambl. N. T.

COTTINGHAM, Gr. lat. engl. Land. 1877. 8o. [Gebhardt. W. & P. ed.]

HILDEPohl, Gr. lat. Lips. 1877. 8o.

SHARP, S. Gr. engl. Land. 1880.

PIER (Tiv. 1883.) I. 3-59.

II. Translations.

Latin.

LEHRCHEN. In: Live. aapoc. 1717. 1st: 1742. 192.

English.

WACE, Land. 1655. 8o. 170-214; Land. 1710. 8o. [Greatly improved.]

LAND, 1719. 8o. 66-77. (2) 157-175; 1719. 8o. 57th ed. 1818 [71]; Herford, 1834. 8o. 233-265; Large, 1840. 8o. [Termed]: Large, 1840. 8o.; 1866. 8o. [Ed. Philo. 1869.]

KENDALL, G. H. Land. 1877. [Cott. Cottingham.]

French.

BIBL. ANTOFRAY, (1717) III.

German.

"M. G. A. M. M." [Arnold?] 1605 (Not 1606) 12.

GRIESEB. (Br. u. Sehr.) Hamb. 1723. 8o. 1-45.

ARNOLD, GOTTEN. 1728. 8o. 1st. Continued Arnold’s Erster Märta, etc., p. 134.

RUSSEL, 1776.

SCHMIDT, Werke d. Kirche, I. (Vind. 1742. 1747.)

HEFFEL, Tiv. 1840. 8o.

SCHÖNLEB, Apoc. Vind. 1865.

RINKEI, Vind. 1873.

Italian.

GALLOZOLI, C. Bat. Vene. 1779. 8o.

Rusinian.

In: Christiarnjoa Tsch水中 (1755.)

TURCZANINOW, Moscov. 1856.

III. Literature.

ALFORD, H. In: Smith’s Bible Dict. I. (1853) 617-8.

ALNOG, PATR. (1861) 30-3.

ANGEL, Synopsis. 1852. p. 52.

AXENTIUS, CREANDA HIER. (1798) I. 10-20.

BACONSON, An. (1858) 51-57; 485; 4-14. CF. FAGI.

CRISIRI (1859) 54-49; 49; 2.

BARNADES, Hist. de P. (1866)

BARNADES, ANTOF. (1867) 1843-6.

BAUMGARTEN-CRUSINSKI, Degmena. (1828) 8. 4-1.

BAUMGARTEN-CRUSINSKI, L. (1857) 145.

BEETHOLDT, Edl. in A. U. N. VII. (1819) 200-2.

BEETLE-MANSELL, Edl. 1. d. N. VII. (1873) 149, 280-1.

BRATISLAVIUS, O. In: Der Katholik. (1875) 241-449.

D. APOTOL B. MAURER, 1868. 3.

ERTHEIDER, FRIEDMANN, Lep. 1855. 8o.

BULL, Works. 1843. 8o. V. 415 VI. 246.

BUNSEN, Hippolytus. (1854) I. 53-7.

BLINDWEK (1866) 187.

BUCKTON, Divinity of Christ. (1829) 1-9.

BURFORD, J. C. Ap. 1858. 1. 2.

CASSIAN, Hist. Br. u. i. (1740) 18-21.

CILLES, Hist. gnom. en soci. (1729) I. 498-505.

(16)

60
Biographical Synopsis

HILGENBERG, E. In: W. Thoms. (1828) 2, 11.

HESSE, B. In: D. J. L. (1852) 190.

HERMANN, E. In: D. E. (1853) 2.

HERMANN, J. In: R. (1850) 3.

HILDEBRANDT, J. In: J. E. (1829) 3.

HILDEBRANDT, K. In: R. (1856) 3.

Biographical Synopsis

LIsLE. In: Jeneser Literatur. (1872) 491–
Lit. Thel. IV. (1845) 963– also in: Magae. Patroc. gr. II. (1883) 290– (1872) 70–7.
MCCENLACKEN and S. CAM. (1876) I. 670–
MANN. W. C. VAN. Een vragstukken bij het geboortejaar van Barnabas’ brief. — Letter, A. D. Een vragstukken bij Dr. van Manen’s kritiek. In: Theol. Tijdschr.
(1854) 398–408.
[M. and the Jewish ritual.]
Calend. No. 1. 1857. 367–
MELLER. s. u. Clement
MELLER. Proef. in d. Decis. 1645; also in:
Magae. Patroc. gr. II. (1883) 659–64.
MENA. B. Jud. de Sarab. et ejus epist. Part.
1843. 40;
MICHAELS. Einb. NT. III. 11.
MILLER. W. In: Smith and Wace. Dict. I. 209–
MÖRNER. Patrologie ed. Reutymyr. (1840) 89–
MONUMENTUM BISDOM. Sanctuarium. (c. 1470) I
[IVII–Nulli.]
MÜLLER. Kirchengeschichte. (1856) I. 20–u. cixi
MÖRNER. Hist. und polit. Leben St. Peters-
MÜNNER. In: Is. u. d. NT. II. (1829) 232–
NACH. Hist. ed. c. de B. 1887.
NAANER. Church Hist. (1874) I. 657–8, et pass.
— Placing and Training I. 159–
NAUSDORF. Einb. N.
NISCHL. In: Der Katholik. (1881) 425–33.
"To which, I refer;
NITSCHE. Dogmengesch. I. (1870) 100–4, 6.
NOGIER. Hist. et c. de B. (1826) 143–
NORTON. Gerichtsber. Gasp. I. (1840) 4, etc.
OCHS. Selecta. Patro. (1890).
OTT. In: acta s. Bolland. (1868) Jan, II. 421–3 (c. 415–7); annua, 453–60; (c. 424–50), ibid, c. 559–60; 420–50. 5.
POTENIUS. (Kirchengeschichte) Wolfen. 1735–40. 4.
PFELDERS. D. Paulinianus. (1823) 390–
(Derselin of B.)
PUCKELIUS. PLACED. Vita s. Barnab. apostolico.
Milano, 1640. 47; 1718. 4.
REDER. G. F. Doctrina foedris quae posit. F. P. ap.
RISER. Hist. de la cebal. curi. I. (1864) 393–4; Eng.
II. 1796.
— Gesch. N. T. (1874) I. 362–3; Tr. Engl. (1884)
37–5, 522–4. 4.
(1866) 84–
— Der sogenannte Brief des Barnabas. Beitr. 1873. 4.
RITSCH. Einb. d. a-Athik. K. (1879) 549–
RIVMUS. Chir. secut.
ROBERTS DONALDSON. Introd. note. In: Anti-133–5.
ROGER. I. C. De authent. ep. Barn. Hom. 1827
[37]. 40.
RODOLPH. J. O. Hist. interpr. I. (1796) 42–
RODOLPH. K. Die Kirchengesch. I. (1790) 276–
RUMP. In: Rev. de Théologie. (1861).
RUNCIE. De Barnabae. Arend. 363. 8;
SCHAFF. Hist. Ch. Church II. (1886) 651–8.
SCHMITZ. E. C. Kirchengesch. (1852) 477–
SCHOFER. Kirchengesch. (1772–4) II. 277–3.
SCHULTZ. In: Neuct. Theol. Annal. (1839) 943–
SCHURER. Lehrb. d. NTlichen Tisch. (1874) 355–
SCHWOROCK. Unterrichts. Leipzig, 1875.
SCHWAB. N. Orig. apocr. chris. Milan, 1854. 393– SCHWARZ. Ann.
SCHWENDIN. (Säntischem Jesus) 1802.
SCHWENKEL. Ed. 2. München, 1.
SCHWENKEL. Kirchenverh. 1743. 3–
SCHWENKEL. Gesch. ch. Leibnitz. Ercyd. (1877–82)
SCHWENKEL. Supranatural Religion. (1879–)
I. 322–39; II. 221–31; III. 7–.
SCHWARZ. In: Biogr. Univ. Michaelis. 1842–45. III.
1095–10.
SCHWARZ. Florens apostol ad Hier cust. (1903) 17–
SCHWARZ. In: Nov. u. Obr. u. L. VII. (1881) 303–5.
SCHWARZ. Mm. (1792) I. 468–15, 865–600; XVII. 377–
SCHWARZ. I. 760–
SCHWARZ. In: Augs. al. (1857) 2853–
SCHWARZ. Notitia ed. c. libal. Simul. (1866) 137– — Was wurde uns Erw. u. w. (1866) 96–
SCHWARZ. In: Zeitschr. u. Thel. (1855).
SCHWARZ. Das Leben Jesu. (1838)
SCHWARZ. In: Lichtenberger. Ercyd. (1877–82)
SCHWARZ. Uberzeugung. H. philos. (1890) 278.
SCHWARZ. u. av. in vat. 1850. Now.
SCHWARZ. u. in vat. 1850. Now.
SCHWARZ. u. in vat. 1850. Now.
SCHWARZ. u. in vat. 1850. Now.
SCHWARZ. u. in vat. 1850. Now.
SCHWARZ. u. in vat. 1850. Now.
SCHWARZ. u. in vat. 1850. Now.
VI. PAPIAS. FRAGMENTS.

1. Editions.

GALLAND. Bibl. patr. vet. v. 1765. I. 316-400.

KOUTER. Rel. sac. (Quez. 1481-8) II. 1-94.

FREY. Patr. ap. 1871. 114-356.

For opinion of text of individual fragments see Oehler & Hartack (1891).

II. TRANSLATIONS.

III. LITERATURE.

AUBRECHT. In: Thes. Orient. 1841. p. 11.

ALMÖLD. Greek Text. 1868. Proleg. I.

ALOIS. Patroli. 1876. p. 53-5.

ANGLER. Synopsis Evv. 1852.

BASISZAKREICH. Dogmengesch. (1822) 85. [v. 1]

CHRISTIAN. Das Martyr. Evangel. 1851.

FRIEDKIND. Dogmengesch. (1822-3) I. 67, 68.

EIN. A. u. N. T. III.

FRIEDRICH. I. 1863. 379-80.

CAVE. Scri. ex. hist. 1837 (4-5) I. 47-2.

CELLIERE. Hist. gen. aut. 1879 (1) 183-71. (1879)

CHRISTIAN. Dogmenhist. (1877-80) 177-8.

CHRISTIAN. R., 1823-4. 11, 69.

CROOK. Sac. hist. (1820-1) I. 95.

CRITZ. Herf. I. 1853.

DINZEL. In: Kyp. ev. (1853) 217.

EICHHORN. E. N. T. III. 1854.

EIN. A. (1853) 36.

EIN. TH. Rev. IV. 1859.

DONALDSON. Hist. Chr. Lit. 1855. 4-6. 312-9.

DÖPFER, (1874) 321-4.

DÜMMLER. Das Leben d. Christ. (1884) 137-40.

DÜMMLER. Der Apostel (1828) 195-8.

EIN. A. u. N. T. III.

EIN. P. I. I. 185.

DINZEL. Lit. (1862) 39-52, 400.

EIN. A. u. N. T. III.

FABRICIUS. Bibl. gr. (1712) V. 185-6. (1712) 151-3. (1796)

FRIEDMANN. E. N. T. 2 Aug. 1850.

GALLAND. V. Abriss. 1849.

FREY. Patr. ap. 1871. 114-356.

For opinion of text of individual fragments see Oehler & Hartack (1891).
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

OSMANN, H. - Zecher, f. und Th. (1874) 122.
GÜCKLER, Gemmafrucht. N. T. (1854).
HAEHNLE, Hist. of Dietl. I. (1850) 57. etc.
HALDEN, Col. orient. Crit. (1831) 63-65. [315-318].
- YORK, N. P. "'Parole Imaginarii' -- "Mystagogius.
HALLENS, L. Erw. an. spec. pars I. (1851).
HASE, Kirchengesch. (1885) I. 249-270.
KRAMER, Neust. Zecher, (1851) 80 et al.
HINSENFORSTER, Die Offenbarung Joh. II. (1882) 38-93.
HERZOG, Kirchengesch. (1870-80) I. 17; III. 5.
HERZOG, Die Kirchengesch. II. (1860) 19.
HERZOG, A. Die Evangelien (1861).
- KAHN, (1861) 135.
- In: Zeit. f. und Theol. X. (1867) 179.
- In: Die Nov. Th. 1875. S. 52 ff. 256 ff.
- In: Zeit. f. und Theol. XXII. (1877) 9.
- Joachim, N. C. (1879) 337.
- In: Zecher, f. und Th. (1885) 114-8.
HÖRNLE, Introduct. H. (1890) IV.
HUG, Einl. Th. I. Th. (1894).
LÖDING, V. A. Zugleich.
JUTTE, Hist. ecc. (1890) II. 49-50, 243-51.
KATZEN, L. Rev. der Theol. (1884).
41. 2 S. 353 ff.
- In: Stud. u. krit. XVI. (1863) 249-52.
KLEIN, A. Die Kirche. (1869) 359.
KLEINHACKEL, Das Markusevangel. (1869) 326.1
KURZ, Kirchengesch. (1865) I. 108.
LÖRCK, Emil. in Oriens. (1853) 374-5.
- MCINTYRE, S. Cyc. (1874) VII. 638.
MAURICE, Eod. Hist. (1840) 100-1.
MEHL, E. E. F. II. (1853) 48-9; XXVI. (1856) 605-6.
MAYER, H. F. Ev. Math. (1843) 4-5; M. II. (1841) 3-6; Joh. (1856) 2-6, etc., etc.
MILLIKEN, John the Presbyter. In: Journ. of sac. Lit. (1897) 296-MIMAI, S. Sac. eccl. 8.
MOHLER, Patrologia (1860) 197-0.
MÖHRING, Church Hist. (1872) I. 314. 96-0.
NORDHEIM, E. N. T. (1890).
NÜRSTER, Recens. Schol. Log. in: Hahler Lit.
NOORT, G. N. Th. (1864) 134-5. II. 51-3.
PHILLIP, Dialog. 35.
POTER. In: Dog. Univ. Michaud. (1862-65) XXXII.
PETERS, C. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETRITZ.-REIMMER. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETRITZ.-REIMMER. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
PETTIFORD. In: Theol. Meisterhen.
Biographical Synopsis

VII. JUSTIN MARTYR. VARIOUS WORKS.

I. Editions.

(Adventis. ad Gentes.) Paris, 1539. 80.

STEFANNUS, ROE. (Opera.) Paris, 1531. 80.

STEFANUS, HEIN. (Epist. ad Diogn. et Crescia.) Paris, 1536. 12mo. 1676. 80.

BRUNELLO,HEIN. (Cohortatio.) Romans, 1536. 80.

II. Translations.

MESUS, PHILIP. (Excerpta latina.) Antwerp, 1563. 80.

LANYON, J. (Opera.) Brussel, 1556. 80.

ROUS, PH. (Vicia.) Paris, 1556. 80.

The translation of Justin Martyr’s works has been a subject of scholarly interest for centuries. His discourse provides a rare glimpse into the religious and intellectual climate of the 2nd century C.E. Justin’s works, among them the Dialogue with Tryphon, have been translated into numerous languages, offering insights into the development of Christian thought and its reception by other cultures.
Biographical Synopsis

Justin Martyr

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

Dio.

Justin, C. H. Kjekshus, 1856. 4th.

English.

Kerke, W. (Apol.) Lond. 1799. 2d. 8vo. rep. 1716. 2v. 8vo. [3rd.]

Humphreys, D. (Rev.) Lond. 1714. 8vo. [In his . . . Aiken.

Brown, H. (Dialogue) Lond. 1755. 2v. 8vo. 1846. 8vo. [1st ed. and 1st ed.]

Moses, A. (Eth. to Gen.) Lond. 1757. 8vo. [In press.]

Dalemeil, D. Edinb. 1778. [2d.]

Clericall, Genn. 1823.

Library of the Fathers. XL. Lond. 1861. 8vo.

French.

Maton, Jean de. (Oeuvres) Par. 1554. 9vo. 2 ed. Par. 1559. 4to.

Duches, Martin. Cohl. Stat. 1580. 2d.

Fontaine, P. (Apol.) Par. 1679. 12mo. Par. 1686. 12mo. [Latin by Chastel Galtier.]

Gignoux [?]. In: Pères de l'Égl. Par. 1837-43. 12mo.

German.

Hedius, D. (Chal.) Kehlach. 1329. 4to.

Gunther, J. Otto. (Dogmat. theol.) Ham. 1724. 8vo.

Goerz, J. A. (De monarchia). Nürnberg. 1717. 48vo.

Kittendorf, A. (Orakel d. gen.) In his: Die Apoc.

[Genuss. 1819. 8vo. 173-7]

Krenkel, N. (Hist.) Basel. 1822. 8vo.

Richard, F. A. A. Kempten. 1830. 16vo. [The Reformation.

Italian.

Russian.

Methoct, J. (De monarchia) Mosc. 1787. 4to.

Smirnov, M. (Selections) Mosc. 1787. 8vo.

Clementiowicz, I. (Dialogue) S. Petersb. 1797. 8vo. (J. Apol.)

Chalifilbuzfetz, N. T. (1845) 2v. 12mo.

Persian.

Pereze-nazneu. Mosc. 1865.

III. Literature.

Alios. (1850) 171-2.

Angier. Synops. (1852).

Bartholomew, A. (1831) 130, 3-51; 133, 145, 1-27; 150, 17-18. 184, 10-20-184, 11-17.

Berthold. Einf. u. N. T. (1873) 112.

Blackburn. Hist. of the Church. (1879) 34-5.

Blume. (1875).

Bonnier, A. In: Vies des sauf. Par. 1845.

Bonnier, W. D. Manich. (1875).

Bouvier. (1875) 321-2.

Biographical Synopsis

JUTIN MARTYR

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

Christina Observe. III. (1806) 69-71.
— (1839) 76-84, 184-187.
Cunningham. Hist. theol. (1870) I. 134-139.
Churches of Asia (1850) 38.
Dasent. Ueber die einzelnen Christenmenschen u. d. Schr. d. J. u. w. w. In: Beitrag zur Befündung des ältesten Christentums d. e. neuesten Philos. (Ulm, 1793) 8°.
Dantwitz. Introd. N. T. (1841) 1, 120, etc., etc.
— Dissert. in Irenarch. (1839) p. 256. (3).
— Die christliche Kirchengesch. (1838-50) 340-400.
Biographical Synopsis

JUSTIN MARTYR

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNONYM.

LEBENSCHEIN, Ch. Bibl. univ. (1807) VII. 15-31; also in: Leidensechr., Kirchenschr. (1774) I-16.
LEIBNIZ, F. D. C. Diglot. histor. (1793) III. 8-166.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

JUSTIN MARTYR

- APC. 3, 4. (1862). (In reply to Mühl.)
- Church Hist. (1872) I. 140-6, 148-50, 150-52.
- Church Hist. (1872) I. 140-6, 148-50, 150-52.
- G. C. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
- CHURCH, C. H. (1856) 1-3.
Biographical Synopsis

J. MARTYR

I. Editions.

A. Latin (Acta sanctorum L. 1635 ff.)

B. Gallandus (in: Bibliotheca sacra, vol. 1, 1694-97)

II. Translations.

B. Other translations among the works

VIII. IRENAUS

I. Editions.

A. Erasm. (in: Acta sanctorum, vol. 1, 1657)

B. Gallandus (in: Bibliotheca sacra, vol. 1, 1694)

Biographical Synopsis

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

82
Biographical Synopsis

Faw, C. M. Bes, fr., de Mosis. In. . . . . . .
Fenster, R. W. C. de eispo su. in, tert. ser. Chr. Cl.
Regiments. 1775. 4.
Fink. T. W. St. Pius X.
Fitch. J. W. St. Pius X.
Fiske. A. L. De inu ad, in, opera, fidelibus, in-dole, doctrina, et dignitate. Comm. hist.-crit. premoni-to. Erinner. 1886. 4.
For. E. I. S. Werek.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
Am. Prod. R. XVI. 1857. 239.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.
II. TATIAN.

I. Editions.

FRETUS, J. Tigur. 1546. P. [With translation by Gesner.]
DECARIS. Ver. 1624. P. In Acta.
(JEROME M. and Callixt. 1640. P. [With notes by Kortlandt.]
WORTH, WILL. Gr. lat. Strasb. 1750. P.
MOLITOR, FRIEDR. (Justin M. and Paris. 1742. P.)
SS. pat. opus. polem. Wurzb. 1777. 8.
[Massuet.]
HARMSCH. In: Texte, etc. I. 1761-237.

(Bibliography)

The remains of the Diatessaron have been gathered by Zahn in his Vorhersage u. Gesch. d. N. T. Kanons I. Erlangen, 1881. 8. The source is the Armenian translation of Epiphanius Symon’s commentary published in the works of Ephraem, 1530, and translated into Latin by Auder, which translation was revised and published by Möninger, Venet. 1846, 8 (77, 352, 353). In 1813, Zahn, in: D. k. kirchenh. XXX. 8. 173-175; and in: Zschr. f. Kirchengesch. (1850) 241-270.

II. Translations.

Latin. (Ortis.)

GESNER. (Ortis.) Tigur. 1546. P. And in various editions.

(Translations)

English.

French.

German.

ZIEGLER, (Ortis.) In: Weke d. K.-V. II. (Kempten. 1850. 4.

GROSS, H. (Ortis.) Kempten. 1872. 168. (The Reiss.)
BIORGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

DANIEL, H. A. Tachaus der Apologion. Ein Beitrag zur Dogmengeschichte. "Helle, 1837. 8." "[Contains a complemement of the older literature." (Stair.)"

DERRICK. Einb. Mt. Ev.

DRECKER. Apologist, etc. de Eunomist. natalis hum. partibus placet. Gene. 1852. pt. III.

EYNE. Nouv. bibl. d. extr. (1868-) 1. 127, 859.

EICHNER. Bibl. N. T. 2.

EPHRAIM SYRUS. Commentary on Tatian. Trans. by M. M.

FELLMIER. Einführung in die Exegese. (1851) 490-99.

FERNE аль. Les apologistes chrétiens de I. siècle. 1858.

GROSS. Kurf. Unterrichts. Jahrb., etc.

GROEBNER. Geschichts. N. T.

HAGENBACH. Hist. d. Christ. (1850) 50, etc.

HASE. Kirchengesch. (1884) I. 245-9.

HOLM. Nouv. bibliog. III. 2 (1856) 446.- "Tatian, c. 07.

HÖGERMORNER. Kirchengesch. (1880-81) I. 269, 137.

HÖGERMORNER. Kirchengesch. (1880-81) I. 269, 137.

HODGSON. Hist. d. Christ. ill. 29, (Honor. Aug. 1, 3)

HOLZMANN. Alleg. Gesch. Lex. (1750-51)

HÖER. Canon N. T. (1878) L. 387-90.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HOLZMANN. Die Geschicht. der Christ Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HORNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.

HÖRNER. Die Geschichte der Kirche. (1865) II. 228-97.

HÖRNER. Versuch. (1859) I. 137-5.
III. THEOPHILUS OF ANTIoch.

I. Editions.

Ad Amphillicum.

Grend., Conr., Gr. in: Figari, 1526, 9.

Clemens, Const., Gr. in: Orthodoxographe, Basel, 1536, 7; 258–280; 1859, 11.

Justinius, Co. in: Apologia, 1592, 12; 1579, 9.

Fall, J. Gr. in: Zopf, 1624, 12.

Manasse, F. in: Figari, 1722, 9; 1747, 9.

Oehlrich, in: Wittenberg, 1777, 12.

Müller, Gr. in: Kurtz, 1836, 10; 1843, 9.

[Manasse, Otto, etc.]

Coep. Apol. VIII. Torna, 1861.

Commentata.

Möntz, (Pegnius.) Gr. in: Patrologia, gr. VI, 1857, 9.

Grabe, (Fragmus.) Gr. in: Spicilegium patrum, 1700, II, 218–9.

See Latin translations.

II. Translations.

Latin.

Opera: In: D. Ldii, 1789; 1809; 1815; 1814, 22.

Clemens, V. Ad Autol. Zurich, 1746.

English.

Batty, Joseph. A Tertullian's Prescription and. s. c. 1729, 9.

Landbl., 1860, 8.

French.

Wolff, 1754.

Hermann, Gott. in: Handschr. 1779, 9.

Theiss, W. F. in: 1832, 9.

Lett., J. Koepfchen, 1872, 10; [The Theolmayer-Theologica Bibliotheca.]

Russian.

III. Literature.

Alcid. (Patern.) 1873, 95.

Ander, Synops. evv. (1854) 270.

Ant, B. St. Justin, etc. in: Patrologia, 1851, 9; 1874, 8.

Hugnet, Christian. Dogmengesch. 1858, 73, 9.

II.

Bock, Dogmengesch. 1859, 97, etc.

Baudot, Étude lat. 1, 1882, 9.

Bellarmine-Larre, Rev. eccl. 1875, 9.

Bretzke, Dogmengesch. 1822, 96, etc.

Breuer, Hist. crit. phil. 1875, 911, 9.

Cavalli, Rev. eccl. lit. 1875, 9.

Living, 1890, 773–779.

Critérium, Magnier, II, IV, 431, 9.

Chevalier, Kyr. d. sources hist. (1857–60) 2195.

Dulcin, Schott, 1850, 11, 11.

Cunliffe, (Paul.) 1875, 92, 101, 9.

Cotta, Kirchenhist. 1869–77, 917.

Darling, Cyclop. bibl. 1871.

Dorn, in: Patrologia, 1867, 279–79.

Dufour, (Paul.) 1875, 91, 9.

Engel, in: Festschr. z. prot. Theol. (1879) 481. [Against the Ad Autol.]

De verit. in: Ciiel. (1727) 15–7.

Farnham, Interpretation, 1806, 14.

Furnel, Hist. eccl. (1891) 15–9.

Freund, Apologia, etc. 1806, 11.

Graydon, in: [Bill. Lettres, 1812, 917–917.

Hughes, C. G. in: Lehrbuch u. Literaturgesch. 1838, I, 944.

Hartmann, Hist. der Dichter, 1, 1850, 99, etc.

Koch, (1885) 1, 935–936.
Biographical Synopsis

THOPhilOS A.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

ATHENAGORAS

1. EDITIONS

GNERUS, Conan (Legato.) Gr. lat. Tiguri, 1557, 8°. Basil, 1555.

STYMQHAR, H. Gr. lat. Par. 1535, 8°. (From by Com. Germain.) Also in: Deoctonos deipnosophistac et mysterio. Tiguri, 1559, p. [De rep. Legat. Basili. 1555–56.]

DUCATIS, FRONDO. In his: Acta. bibl. par. Par. 1654, 8°.

MOYRE, G. Gr. lat. Par. 1696, 8°; also: Col. 1696, 8°. FRIED, JOSE. Colon. 1658, 8°.

REICHENDORF, A. Gr. lat. Acta, 1684–9, 8°.

RECKZWY, J. Gr. lat. Acta, 1774, 8°.

OBRECHT, F. Gr. lat. Acta, 1774, 8°.

MAYNE, G. Gr. lat. Par. 1797, 8°. [Marburg, 1797.]

OTTEN, J. Gr. lat. Acta, 1769, 8°.

MAYNE, F. A. Gr. lat. Acta, 1856, 8°. [Marburg, 1856.]

100
Biographical Synopsis

II. Translations.

Latin.

Petrus Marcellis. (Res.) Par. 1492; 4°. (Lat. tr. of Gen. Value.)

Lancus. B. 1635.

Pirro Sperandio. (Leg.) Colon. 1587; 8°.

English.

Bridges, Richard. Lond. 1713, 8°.

Humphrey, Dan. Lond. 1714; 8°.

Ed. Core. II. (1875) 120-62.

French.

Flamand. (? Gay Gaius.) (Leg.) Par. 1574.

Ferrier, Renald de Bardonay. 1577; 4°.

Kesler, L. (Rec.) Bruxell. 1712, 3°.

German.

Zedler. In Oeuvres de K. de. (Kempten, 1802.)

Bender, A. Kempten, 1875, 10°. (The Bibliographer's Thesaurus, 1816.)

Italian.

Paleti, Girolamo. Venet. 1552; 4°; also Vesc. (1735) 4°.

Goethe. (S. Er. 1830, 3°.)

Italian.

Kraus, J. J. (In Proceedings of the Acad. of Science.)

Ate. The work entitled, 'Du vero et verit. Amore.' Par. 1660; 4°; tr. 1670, the Apostrophe (Monat). 'Graece prae praef. de Gaietio.' Cappel, Prat. Observe des bannis. Par. 1662; 8°; Deidric. Hist. de Fideles (1662) 14.9.

III. Literature.

—Hist. de Eng. 1725-90; 8°.

Bogaert-Crombe, Dognemans. (1832) 175-4, 3°.

Bayle. Dict. crit. (1741) 116; 82.

Beardmore. 'Bibl. lat. (1884) 122.

Bolckem. S. In. Lichensbuh. Encycl. (1877-82) 1. 89.

Blackwenn. Hist. of Church. (1879) 60; 80.

Burtin. Ducy of Christ. (1824) 3-1.

—Trinity. (1834) 28-33.

Burse. Ch. Lth. (1812-9) 4, 14.

Carrig. In: Proc. (1825) 5-0.

Cave. Ser. excl. Hist. (1743-5) 8-78.

Cecil. Apoll. de morte des noms de Peg. Ch. 8.

—Hist. gên. d. aut. sec. II. (1730) 11-23; L. (1852) 49-7.

Chevalier, Rép. d. sources hist. (1877-86) 184.

Clarke. Sacred Lit. (1839-1) L. 105-11.

Clement. Bibl. veteris.

Cutler. Beiträge. 1.

Dunst, Nons. bibl. d. aut. excl. (1697) L. 141.

Engelhardt. Dognemans. (1839) 232, etc.

Fouqué. In: Ancare Apologiales. (Ath. 1856, 8°.)

Hagedorn. Hist. of Doct. (1850) 39, etc.

Hansard. Dognemans. (1830) 35-8.

—Also in: Hesper. III. 575-2.

Hiichten. R. Straube. Schola Alex. (1787) 24-5.

Hollstein. Bibl. in d. N. T. (1848) 120.

Hopen. D. van. De. Inscriptiones &c. antiquae legiones Athenagoras pro Christianis. (Ath. 1754, 4°.)

Kadjee, H. E. De cod. ms. Ath. Laconianae distincte aliqua variata lect, quae viderint, continst. (Ath. 1833, 4°.)

Kienbrocker, Quellenbuch.

Kriil. Topicalis. (Dogenmans, 3°.)

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA.

I. Editions.

Victorius, Pet. Gr. Florunt. 1556. P.

Sterkens, G. Gr. Hadriac. 1552. P.

Dinndorf. Osnab. 1869. 4 v. 8°. ["Disappointing. Finally put together."]

(Extra doors.)

Fell, J. Osnab. 1635. 4 v. 8°.

Semades, Gr. lat. Of. Trag. od. 1815. 8°; also in: Opusc. par. ed. Basel. 1811. 8°. I.
Biographical Synopsis

Account of the Life of (39)

CLEMENT OF A.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS OF CLEMENT OF A.

B. H. Gr. lat. *Regiomontan, 1831. 8°. [In the volume of scholaral notes. Segar's text needed.]

(Hymnus)

BRUCKNER, H., *B. S. G. Georgii Nasonani Car

rense, etc. Roman, 1890. 8°.

In: *Metaphrasat Isambeli Salutis seu nostrae natura... Porto, 1606. 8°.

In: *Poetae, gr. christiani. *Par. 1609. 8°.

PIPER, MARIUS. Gr. lat. *Gautin, 1835. 8°.

(Supplementum Clementinorum)

The interesting collection of fragments which passes under the name of this work has the following history:

FELL, J. in ed. of *Quae diversa salut. (1863).

ITUN. Lp, 1700.

FOFFER, (1715) p. 104-33.

ZHAIN, F. *Gucch. d. N.T. Karkos. III. *Edi tion. 1850. 8°. [First collection, and discurity.

(12 p.)

In various relations there have also been published the following:

B. lat. in his: *Hippolytus opera. (Hamb. 1716-18) II. 60-95.

In: *Excerpta ex Theol. Gr. lat. in his: *Bibl. gr. 4°. V.

(1716) 134- (Lit. tr. and notes of Commentar.)

GALLAND, H. lat. in his: *Bibl. patr. *Veset. P.

(1716) 135-7.

ROYAL. (Hymnus Fragm.) *Re. act. (1826-8) I. 1357-70.

BUNNIN. (Hymn.) *Ante. *Ancient, (1834) 137-

66. (Pref.) 167-225. (Text) 347-90. (Latin fragm.)

III. Translations.

Latin.

HERBERT, GENT. *Search, 1851. [The *Stocheia not

CAULAU ET GUILLO. (Tournay, Mimosas F. *Hipp tolus and. *Par. 1829. 8°.

French.

COUSIN, D. (Est. ad gen.) *Par. 1834. 12°.

POJTIN, NIC. *Par. 1662. 8°.

GERMEN. *Par. de *Phil. *Par. 1838. 8°.

German.

ARNOLO, GOTT. (Excerpta Theol.) In his: *Kiechel.

HESS, WOLFERT AND WILHELM. *Kempf, 1825-6. 16°.

[The *Katholische Theol. Bibl.]

III. Literature.

Account of the Life of *Alexandria.

In: *Ed. RJ. *LXXII. (1813) 397.

ALZOG, Patrolo. (1867) 122-38.
Biographical Synopsis
Biographical Synopsis

Tertullian

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

English.

STUART, JOHN. (in the British Museum.) Lond. 1556. 8.

BROWNE, J. (Apoll.) Lond. 1655. 4.

KERSW, W. (Apoll.) Lond. 1579. 8; Lond. 1716. 8.

IVY, J. (Praefer.) Oxon. 1722. 8. [Incomplete.

CHATEAUBRIAND, CORB. 1832. 8.

HUMBERT. Lib. VII. (1685); XI. (1869); XV. (1874); XVIII. (1870).

IVY. 1165. 7-766; 779-77; IV. (1865).

French.

MAZARD, AUR. ER. (Teeser.) Par. 1862.

VALLIER, DE (Pall.) Par. 1864. 12.

HUMBERT. PAR. 1864. 12.

PETIT, J. B. Par. 1714. 4; 1714. 8.

IHUE, B. (Prefer.) 1737. 12.

CALVET, (De spec.) Par. 1864. 12.

COISSIER. (De spec.) PAR. 1865. 12.

GOURY, (De spec.) Lyon. 1828. 8.

ADAMAU. 1833. 12.

HUMBERT. PAR. 1864. 12.

COISSIER. PAR. 1865. 12.

LALANNE, (Erst.) PAR. 1853. 12.

ITALIAN.

BARONI, ROMA. 1798. 8.

FALCHI. PAR. 1798. 8.

RUSIAN.

AYASHAN TIVANDO. MOSC. 1802.

SPANISH.

URBAN, C. MAD. 1813. 8.

BARCELONA. 1829. 8.

MARCHESI. (Adi. Mart.) CIV. 1844. 4.

MAD. 1817. 8; 1799. 8.

C. (De spec.) BARCELONA. 1844. 4.

CIV. 1844. 4.

III. Literature.

[ALLEN, TIERC.] Dionysius of Tertullianus vita et scriptus s.1. et 2., 2. ed. PAR. 1864. 8.

ALONSO, PATR. (1869) 168-192.

ARMAND-BARTHELEMY, AN. (Dei.) Tert. et Cypr. O.R. 1865. 4.

ARMAND-BARTHELEMY, AN. (Dei.) Tert. et Cypr. O.R. 1865. 4.

AURICULUM, P. (Dei.) VITAM. 1664. 4.

BUELLHOUTZ, H. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BUNHN, J. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BUNHN, J. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BUNHN, J. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BUNHN, J. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BUNHN, J. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.

BURET, C. (Dei.) (1885) 496.
Biographical Synopsis

HAECKEL, ALB. Territorial's Leben und Schriften. Erlebn.
-1877, 8°.

HAPPI, M., Auslese (zu Territor., dem papst. c. 5. de spectaculis c. 120). In: Hermes. L. (1860) p. 259-335. - 1861, 4°.

VAR. (Tert. ad marty. Idl.) In: Hermes. V.
(1871) p. 150; in: Opuscula. III. 2, p. 323.

CONCILIA. In: Opuscula. III. (1876) p. 216; in: Opuscula. III.
2, p. 350.

1881. 4°.

Frankfurt a. M. 1880. q°. [Lpz. 1880?]

Quartalschr. (1835) I. 30.

HERGENRODT, Kirchenges. (1799-80) I. 104-6.
168. III. 47-53.

KESSLING, CARL. Territor. s Lehrs aus seinen Schriften.

Erdin. (1793) 299.-Suppl. VI. 196.

CHAS. mit. post hum. apud. Tert. cap. in: Miss.
Groning. II. 347.

Erdin. I. 2 (1871) p. 103-111.

HEUSON, C. Der ver. (1895) p. 155.
HOPMANN, J. G. Sept. Flaminus Territor. quaesitum
(48 p.)

Sprache des Kirchenlebens. fascic. I. et II.

HOLZER, P. und THEWASSER, S. In: Ante-N. Lib. VII.
(1868) viii-eight. XVIII. (1870) viii-ext. Index.
539-5, 539-6, 567-3, 676-17-18.] V. 126-6.

HUMMELS, E. A. Ed. in d. M. T. (1886) 156-8, etc.

HUNZER, G. Works. (1775) 27-44.

HOVEN, J. D. VAN. Specim. adversat. ad Tert. Apol.

HÜBNER, Ph. K. (1845) 100-104.

HÜBNER, EM. Über die pseudoterritorianische
Geschichte der Eigenhänden. Diss. Lpz. 1875. q°.

JÖHL, O. Histor. eccles. (1709) II. 62-78. 236-41.

Ante-N. Lit. XVII (1866) 103.

1866. 8°.

JOSEPH, I. Text of philo.-crit. misc. (1799) II.

KAYS, O. E. Theological History of the Second and Third Centuries, illustrated by the writings of Ter-

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.

KLEIN, K. E. Der Eber Tert. A. D. pal. u. d.
Jahr seines Ehelebens. in: Theol.
Quartalschr. (1870) p. 579-581.
Biographical Synopsis

TERTULLIAN

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

1. de Terentio. (1761) 113.
[Genius of the book of the prescriptions.]
2. de Terentio. (1762) 1102.
[Oba. toucher de biarz de Chorine.
3. Demonstrationes evangelicae de Tertullian, Origene, Eucli, etc. Tractatus en franca, annatae et publicae, 1825-1826. 20 v. 19.
6. M. et al. (1805)
II. MINUCIUS FELIX.

I. Editions.

II. MINUCIUS FELIX.
Biographical Synopsis

MINCUS FELIX

ENGLISH.

Lutet. 1643. 4°. [With Cyprius De iodo.- mulch.]. 1645. 4°. [Cyprius. 1645. 4°. Quasi. 1571. 12¢.]

Redon. 1645. 12¢.

Cyprius. [Lud. Bat. 1672. 8°. 1672. 8°.]

FRANCIS.

1650. 4°. [With Cyprius.]

BIBL. MAX. PARI. (1672.) III.

BOUCHARD, P. A. Kid. 1665.

Lat. in. L(ipsi) 1665. 12¢.

1712. 8°. Glasgow 1679. 8°.

CILLARIUS, C. V(et)ra. 1699. 8°. L(ovis). 1748. 8°. [With Cyprius.]

LINDEN. L(ovis). 1790. 8°. [With Cyprius.]

1793. 8°. [His.

1794. 8°.

GALLAND. In: Bibl. patr. II. (1765) 377.

GROVENOR, J. [Pr. 1693. 8°. [With Vol. II. of Cyprius.]

HERIOT. Lat. pet. L(ipsi) 1831. 8°.

MCRAIT, E. De. Turf. 1836. 8°.

OBERHALLER, In: Genetral. Bibl. patr. XIII. (1847. 8°.)

HOHON, A. Commod. 1853. 8°.

KAYSER, o. 1853. 8°.

MEYER. Patr. Lat. XIII. (1855) 239-376.

HAHN, P(eter) 1858. 8°. [Comm. Lat. 11.

HOPPER, H. Opus patr. XV. In(clus). 1871. 16°.

CORNELIUS, Jo. Patr. Bat. 1881. 8°.

BARKHEIM. Leipzig 1886. 8°.

II. Translations.

Dutch.

Aust. van de Heurnen. 1838. 8°.

BULYER, M. A. Aus. 1899. 8°.

DEGASPER, P(eter) 1374. 8°.

ENGLISH.

JAMES, RICHARD. Corun. 1836. 12°.

LAVON, P. L(ond.) 1845. 8°.

COMBE, E. Lond. 1703. 8°.

L(don) 1738. 8°.

FRENCH.

MASE, G. De. Par. 1637. 4°.

DE LAUNOY, N. E. Par. 1640. 4°. 1640; 1650; 1673; 1676; 1680; 1687; 1692; 1693. 8°. [With De Genovius: Test. Italian.]

RUEY, P. DU. PAR. 1665. 12°.

PREDAZIO, A. Lyon. 1836. 8°. [With De Genovius: Test. Italian.]

GEOLOGIS. [77] In: Picts de l'egl. Par. 1837-43. 8°.

GERMAN.

Bercin. 1762. 8°.

ROUSSEAU, J. H. Mem. 1822. 8°.

LERAAT, J. B. L(ipsi) 1870. 8°.

ALBEE, D. Priester 1882.

BERENSON, A. Komol. 1831. 16°. [The Kleinmayer-Theklis.]

DOMERK, BRENN. Erlangen. 1876. 8°. EB. 8°.

ITALIAN.

POLE. Ven. 1736. 8°. 322.

III. Literature.

ALDEN. Patr. 1876. 163-165.

ALGON. Patr. 1879. 163-165.

PENNING. In: Mem. Acad. de l'Acad. 1634. 12°. [With Acad. de l'Acad. 1634. 12°.]

SERVIS. 1784. 112.

DE RUYTER, W. 2. 113. 3. 301. 5. 5.

HAGENMAYER, Hist. of Did. 1 (1860) 39-50, etc.

HASS, L. Hist. 1885. 1. 233. 1. 1. 53. 3. 408. 3. 192. 1. 2. 177. 3. 39.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

MINUCIUS FELIX

— Conjecturae, (Containing: Minuci Felix, c. 16.) In: Hermes. VIII. (1894) p. 249. also in his: Opera. III. i (1895) 634.

HERMANN, Kirchengeschichte, (1879-80) p. 105-6.

II, 41-2.

— Ost. für Geschichte und Theologie in: Min. Epp. V. 476.

— Ost. für Geschichte und Theologie in: Min. Epp. V. 347.

HORNIK, Die viri illustri. (Honor, August. i. 59.)

— Ost. für Geschichte und Theologie in: Min. Epp. V. 476.

— Ost. für Geschichte und Theologie in: Min. Epp. V. 476.

III. COMMOMIAN.

I. Editions.

(Bibliographies, critical and historical commentaries, and other secondary sources related to Comminian literature and scholarship.)

II. Translations.

English

III. Literature.

Alden, Patologia (1896) 340-2.

Arté, E.: Essai d'intérêtuation d'un fragment du carême apologieque de Commin (1852) 219-220.

Bendel, E.: Ebd. 1884 162 (18).

Brock, Or. Lit. (1889-9) I. 77-8.

Cellier, Hist. gen. et moral. IV. (1733) 179-81; III. (1854) 175-83.

Clarke, Sacred lit. (1830-1) I. 173-4.

Clavet, Rome. (1854-50) II. 220.

Dowdwell, Disc. de Comp. In: Anselm Quodlib. and in ed. of Scholastic.

S. t.Territorial.

Bibl. med. sac. (1756) I. 110-112.

Beutler, Kirch. (1879-80) I. 105-161.

Lichtenstein, Ebd. (1873-83) III. 280-4.

M. Clément, D. Commin. (1875) II. 347.

Müller, Patrologie. (1849) 927.

Nahon, Liebn. of dogmas. (1858) 171. (18.)

— Church Hist. (1872) I. 686-9, 68, 225-9, 237, 286, 305, 259 et pass.

Now, Bibl. Gla. (Hofmeier) XII. (1852) 355-6.

Oudin, Comm. d. scriptur. edd. (1720) I. 159-200.

Supp, Bellet. (1725) 76.

Perny, Bibl. patr. (1845-1) I. 422 Ill. 589-7.

Schratt, Hist. Church. II. (1886) 857-6.

Schiemann, Arch. d. patr. (1875) VI. 450-548.

Schöner, Kirche. (1707) IV. 439-444.

Youn, History of the Commin. ed. by Young, Van de Cruyff, Bruns, Passmore, Miller, Smith, Best, Bibl. Tendach. (1879) 61-42.

IV. ORIGEN.

I. Editions.

(Works)

De la Ruy, Ge. Lib. (1732-39) 5 v. 9 v.

Oberthür, Fr. Lib. (1856-57) 5 v. 9 v.

Lommatsch, Lib. (1831-48) 5 v. 9 v.

Biographical Synopsis

ORIGEN

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

I.

LATIN.

WETTSTEIN: (Cont. Marc., Ad mar., Susani.) Gr. lat. Basil. 1674; 4v.
SYNCEIRUS, GuIL. (Cont. Celsum, Philolaia.) Gr. lat. Canteb. 1668; 4v, 60. 1677; 4v.
(OPUSCULA.) Gr. lat. Paris, 1713; 2 v. P.

II.

LATIN.

II.

ENGLISH.

HITNER, W. Lond. 1756.

II.

ITALIAN.

TOLENTE, J. P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

PORTUGUESE.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

GERMAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

ITALIAN.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

FRENCH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.

II.

SPANISH.

SHENK, P. In: BIBL. PATR. 1717; 4v.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

132

Biographical Synopsis.
Biographical Synopsis

HALLOX, PIERRE. Origines defensae, sive Origines Adamantiani presbyteri amatoris (juxta vitae, virtutes, documens librum. IV. Const. 1649. P
HESSE, J. Der wahre Begriff d. Originalen. II. 246-50, 497-508.
Biographical Synopsis

KREEFFE, Theol. (1843) 1. 4°.
KÖTZE, Kirchengeh., (1865) 1. 119—21. 4°.

LEWIS, Works. (1841) II. 488—537. 4°.

LONGH. Hist. s. patr. IX (1732) 1—62. X. (1734) 35.

MADDOX, Trinity. DE.

MEISSEL, J. De origines et originae exinct. Lit. *Lud.

MELK, Trinity.

MEISSEL, J. De origines et originae exinct. Lit. Lud.

MURCIER, *Phil.

MÖLLER, Patrolog. I. (1848) 525—565.

MÜLLER, B. De. Prolegomena. Phil. (1775) II. 491—493.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

MÜLLER, *Phil.

MÜLLER, D. De origines et originae exinct. In: Lit. Lud.

Biographical Synopsis

ORIGENS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

READING, W. Notae in De Oratione. Lond. 1838; also in Migne. Patrolog. Gr. XI. (1857) 1631-38.

REUTER. Gesch. N. T. (1874) II. 23-5, 255-8; Tr. Eng. (1886) 316-9, 352-7; (v.-2).

REUMANN. Encyclopædia Neuchâtel. 1815-18.

RUTHER. Chr. philos. (1841) 1. 495-564.

RIVUS, DION. DE. Encyclopaedia de Hieronymo Episcopo et Origeni ... Romae, 1793. 3 v. Lugdun., 1782. 40.

ROBERTSON. Hist. ed. Church. (1845) I. 73-125.

ORY. G. I. R. A. Letter to Resolution concerning Originals and the chief of his opinions. Lond. 1864; also in the Phoenix (1870) I. 1-85.

SCHATTMANN, CARL. Hist.-phil. p. 1853.

SAYWARD. J. T. Was Origens ein Universalist? In: Univ. Q. XXXII. (1873) 175.

SCHADE. Grundriss des Christentums. II. (1877) 21-2.

— Hist. d. Church. II. (1883) 358-90.

SCHULZEN, F. C. Marcionitum. (1884) III. et passim.

SCHUM. Patrolog. (1886) 850-2.

SCHUMANN, J. A. Dissertatio de lapsu Origenis. Helmeri. (1866) 4 v. (O. et L.)

SCHWAB, ANGL. AN. patr. (1750) IV. IV.

SCHMIDT, K. Em. (1873) 194-305. 20. 30-3. 102-69. XVIII. 20-60. 157-9.

SOUDERM. Hist. Ecclesiae. VIII. 290.

SUPERSTITIONI RELIGIONIS (1857) 725.

TAORMINI, PET. Ragionamenti sul primo libro di Origene contro Cels. Pavia. 1856. 6.

THEODORIT. Hist. Eccles. V. 247.

TILLIARD. Dissert. s. div. notae. (1742).

TYLLOT. Mémoires. III. (1858) 494-495, 753-77.

TRITTNER. Spec. eccl. 30.

TUBERWEY. Hist. philos. (1875) 175-9.

VICTORIA'S BELTAC. Spec. hist. XII. 1-2, 8-15; XIX. 89.

VINCENzo, A.M. Origines ab ipseipsis et haecsec nota in certiora institutionibus vindicata. Roman, 1856. 8.

VITALI. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 9-10 et pass.

WALCOTT, W. C. Commentarius et Illustratione Origines de libri Christi etiam futuri disputatio. Leipzig, 1777. 40.

— Origines in doctrina de divinitate Christi. Fran, 1729. 40.

— Bih. parisi. (1834) 84-186, 377-5.

WERNER, J. F. De schola Origines s. c. Wittenberg. 1744. 40.

WENSTAFF. Camden. (1875) 354-61.

— Bih. in the Church. (1877) 12-7.

— Origen and the Beginnings of Christian Philosophy. In: Cent. Contemp. XXXV. (1878) 242-4; 249-7; 500-5; Lit. and I. XXXII. (1878) 85-7; CXLII. (1878) 237.

— WERNER. Claud. (1881) 114-121, 269-283.

WRAY, J. H. In: M'Cintoch and S. Cyc. (1874) VII. 425-432.

ZELLER, G. A. Apostol. (1843) 70.

ZÖKNER, F. Dissertatio de ecumenico Origine Adamantii. Giessen, 1708. 4 v. (O.)

Note 1. All special illustrators on the Philosophians. whether, ascribed to II. 4Th. 9Th., is not under Hippo-

Note 2. For compact summary of material points, with illustrative quotations, compare Hughenberg, 1878.

VOLUME V.

I. HIPPOLYTUS.

1. Editions.

(Works)

FABREJOS, J. A. GR. LT. Hist. 1786-18. 2 v. 8.

GALLAND. In: Bibl. phil. H. (1760) 495-544.

LADELLE. Leh. und Land. 1838.

(Philosophians)

138
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

HIPPOLYTUS

I. Translations.

PLATO

Corsini, J. "(Platoni). Gr. lat. 1859. 8°.

Müller, C. "(Platoni). 1821. 8°. (1st ed. of revised work. Publishes under name of Origines.)

CRUCCHI, P. 1806-9. 8°.

(Continued.)

Canetti, G. lat. in his: Lect. antiqu. 1602. II. 491.

Labbe, C. lat. 1829. I. 2261.

(Continued.)

 Scaliger, in his: De sched. temp. 1854.

Pach, H. lat. 1827. I. 353.

Blum, in his: Dia. Sign. etc. Roma, 1645 (37).

(Second edition.)

Buchner, Ar. in his: Liber de temp. 1846. (4th).

Simonton, (De theolog. et licent.) In: Opera Part. 1806. P. 583.

Compl., (XII. sp.) in: Acad. nov. patri. gr. lat. II. 1848. P. 451-842.

Lambertin. (De Salomonis libris.) In: Comment. de Bibl. Vulc. VIII. (1883) 390-393.

La Motte, (Contra Gentes.) In: Vars. 1854. I. (12th Slat. 1854. I. 24-63).

Wood, C. C. (Profil. in Prov. IX. 1-5.) Gr. lat. 1562. 4°.

Bull, (Polletta, Danieli, Roma, 1772.)

Rothisch, (Cost. lager. Noet., coll. op. 1858. I. 21-49.)

Harrer, (Comites S. Hippoli. Ambrose et eod. Rom. e. e.) lat. ann. et prolegomeni.) Munich, 1890.

Bandsenius, (Danieli). Frith, 1877.

II. Translations.

LUTHER

Pittr, J. (Various.) Lat. Lat. Part. 1829. 8°.

Cebula, 1829. 8°.

In: Jubi. Opera. 1854. 18°.

Torquemada, (De theolog. et licent.) in: Canzini Lettue, etc. 1854. 4°. 154-154. [With Greek.

Also in: Cambi, Lett. mod. 1854. 4°. 244-245. Also in: S. Morci. Par. 1859. 1. 620-620.

(De theolog. et licent.) in: Collectanea Anastasi Biblioth. Lat. 1852. 8°. 244.

(Macaron and Salmoins, 1828. 25-628. IX. 1869. II. 141.) Ed. Corp. V. 1866. 6-258.

(16)

French.

III. Literature.

Aillard, P. L'apologie du IVe siecle. Martyrion de saint Hippolytus, etc., d'après les poèmes de Prudence. In: Revue des poésies, hist. 1881. 24-249.

Alzog, Petrol. 1869. 112-112.

Arbeselma, T. De prisci reformatae historico, Origines nomine ac philosophorum titulum, recente vulgata, commentata. Roma, 1865. 8°. (193 p.)

Curiaci, custodi (1881) E. E. 245-245.

Bekker, Ann. 1850. 121, in (add. 32). 300. 1-10.

——, Dogmengesch. 1853. 1875.

Bavaria, (1860) 1876. 1878.

Bavaria, (1875) 24, in (add. 32). 300. 1-10.

Baltzgerak, (Christian.) Dogmengesch. (1833) 254-254. 4.

——, Dogmengesch. 1853. 1853.

Bavaria, (1860) 1876. 1878.

Bavaria, (1875) 24, in (add. 32). 300. 1-10.

Baltzgerak, (Christian.) Dogmengesch. (1833) 254-254. 4.

——, Dogmengesch. 1853. 1853.

Bavaria, (1860) 1876. 1878.

Bavaria, (1875) 24, in (add. 32). 300. 1-10.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

HIPPOLYTOS.

INFREY.

HAGENBACH. Hist. of Doct. I. (1590) 229.

HAENDL, K. W. Commentatio historiae critica de Hippolyto episcopo, tertii saeculi scriptore. Gottingae, 1792.

— In: Ziehe, f. hist. Theol. (1874) 170-7. (1875) 38-.

— In: Ziehe, f. hist. Theol. (1875) 38-.

HASE. Kirchengeschichte. (1858-) I. 299, 313-3, 322-2, 371.

HASENKÖFFER. In: Thol. Quaest. (1780) 224.

HESCH. Kirchengeschichte. (1859-60) II. 181. III. 73.

HEUSCH. A. Disertiati, in qua don-rule ut quaeque episcopus fuerit. S. Hippolyto. Cegeing. 1573. 4° also in: Prati. Gottingae. acad. (1798) 299-

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.

— Thekologische Bibliothek. XLI. (1870) 288-290.
Biographical Synopsis

Hippolytus

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPTIC.

MAIT. Set. vet. coll. (1829) I. ii. 242.

Martyrium Cyriaci, Hippolytii, etc. Gr. lat. In: Migne. Patrolog. gr. X. (1851) 1124-5.

Milman. Int. Chr. J. 66.

Möller. Patrolog. T. (1890) 98.

Moret. Rom. 1752.

Niebuhr. Dogmengesch. (1852) I. 165-5.

Norton. Introd. de Theo. Quart. (1861) 659-9; (1862) 467. [Gorges' Remarque testimony to II. 942-70.]

Oudemans. E. E. Quaestiones Hippolytianae specimen. Tournai. 1854. 8. (113 p.)

Phi. Life. (1875) 182.

— Martyria (1840) 565-9, 638-9, 653-49.

— Heracle. (1751) 340-16.

Silvestri. B. De considerationi storici morali sopra sancti Ippolyti martyris. Rome 1884. 150.

Tischendorf. 18.

— Hippolytus und die römis. Zeitgeschehen, oder die Philo.

sophumena und die verwandten Schriften nach Ur.

sprung. Composition und Quellen untersucht (Quellen d. Kirchengeschichte. I. 1) Zürich. 1855. 20.

Westcott. Canon. (1875) 374-5.

Wisseling. F. Ceb. d. Satuc d. H. In: Stud. u. Krit. XXXIII. 1875. 4°. (This fragment is missing in Paristeria.)

Wodrow. Ch. St. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome in the earlier part of the third century, from the new discovered Philosophumena. London. 1853. 2°.

Wood. C. Ch. Hippolytus Fragmenta ed. probo. IX. 1-3. 2. et 4th. Lips. 1703. 4°. (This fragment is missing in Paristeria.)

Worldworth. Ch. St. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome in the earlier part of the third century, from the new discovered Philosophumena. London. 1853. 2°.

— Remarks on Roman. 1855. 80. (3)

Compare also literature under Origine.

Note 1. The Philosophumena is ascribed to Hippolytus by Jacobs, Pachier, Placent. Gaiseric, Rufinus, Hilary, Eusebius, Volusius, Overbeek, Heracle, and almost universality, but it is doubted by Miller, Lippers, Newatius, Jungenann, and others; ascribed to Caeser de R. H. by Newatius, by Arnulfini, to Tertullian by Crollus and De Rossi, and to Origen by Miller, Lantua, and others.

Note 2. For exact translation of time and place compare Schaff.
II. CYPRIAN.

I. Editions.

(See also)

ANDREAS, J. ("Epist. et Opuscula") Romae, Superbium et Panormiti, 1471. P. (Does not contain "Enarrationes"

[Memmingen, A. Kried, 1477] [or Treatises and Epistles not imprinted.]

[Deventer, B. Pfeffer, c. 1477] [in ital. 1457. Cf. Grammaticus.]

Por. 1496. P. (?)

Por. 1514. 4°. Roostell and Waterloes.

Basil. 1519. [?] (1573)

Cobhmat, Hier. Joseph, 1530. P.

Erasmi, Basili. 1520. P. 1521. P.; Colom. 1522. 2 v. 8°.

Basil. 1523. P. [1525. P.; Colom. 1525. 8°.]; Anglic. 1526. 2 v. P.; Basil. 1530. 1526. P.; 1531. P.

Graevius. Colom. 1544. P.; 1549. P.

Fons. 1547. P.

Post. F. Massa, 1551. P. [Readily by Latinus Lahir, or.

Morello. Paris. 1564. P.

Pallorus, in Annu. 1568. P. 1589. P.; Por. 1574.

Roveretus. Basil. 1582. (?)

Goulart. Genev. 1595. P.

Birman, Log. Par. 1601. P.; 1610. P.

Perrault. Par. 1666. P. [After Rigalet.]

Por. 1679. P.

Caillet. Par. 1737. 8°. [On Basilian.]

Bonnet. 1787. 8°. (on Basilian."

Goldhenn, D. J. L. Lips. 1758. 8°. In Geselsd. v. II. 111.

Engl. und Par. 1847. 8°. [After Basilian."

Krahnell, (to Opuscula.) Thib. 1833-3. 8°.

Rostet. (4 Opuscula.) In Spec. edn. op (1858) I. 265-259.

Michel. "Patrol. lat. IV. (1865) 163-172.

Hartel. Quid. Vindobonae. 1862. 3 v. 8°. [In the Vienna Corp. Soc. Eclog."

Epistola"

(See also)

(De Lingu Cr.) "Miracle," 1446. 8°. [With works of Pius.

(Carmine.) Por. 1500.

Farrers. R. F. Christ. 1454. 955.

Biographical Synopsis.

S. I. 1603. 8°.

Rigalt. In: Minuciu Felis, Octavia, etc. "Evrem. 1602. 16°.

Por. 1643. 4°. [Rigalt's close.]

In: Minuciu Felis, Octavia, etc. "Evrem. 1603. 8°.

(De sancto sancto.)

Heliast. 1539. 8°.

Stephanus. J. "Evrem. 1639. 8°.

(Other)

(De XII. alia.) a. L. et a. "Cologne, Uriel Seil."

(De orat. dom.) "Evrem. 1453. 8°. 16°."

(De Scotiarum.) "Evrem. 1539. 8°."

(De orat. dom.) a. L. 1537. 8°.

(Epi. ad mot.) "Evrem. 1639. 8°.

(Depo. consc.) "Evrem. 1559. 8°.

(Epistle) "Evrem. 1539. 8°.

(Francio. Bart.) "Evrem. 1539. 8°.

(Some Epis.) In: "Evrem. 1571. 8°.

(Torquemada. J. C. (Ed. ad poen.) "Evrem. 1551. 8°.

Mial. A. (De polis.) In: "Evrem. 1551. 8°.

(Miguel. F. ad Lexicon Papali.) In: "Evrem. 1551. 8°.

II. Translations.

English

Evelyn, Th. A "Sveti and Devote Sermon of Holy Saint Cyprian of Mortalities." Lond. 1534. P.

Pavlil, Th. A "Sermon of St. Cyprian, made on the Lord's Prayer." Lond. 1539. P.

St. Cyprian's Sermon on the Mortalities of Man." Lond. 1539. 16°.

Branle, John. (Two sermons.) Lond. 1553. 8°.

Story, John. ("Certaine Workes") Lond. 1560. 8°.

Pike. (Sermon.) Lond. 1565.

Buckingham, Clement. (Verses, Prayers, Patience.) Lond. 1575. 8°.

Falls, John. ("Of the Church") "Evrem. 1681. 4°.

Burritt, G. "Evrem. 1686. 8°. 1714. 8°.

(Tynestall, William.) (James.) St. Cyprian's discours to Donatus; done into English metre. Lond. 1575.

Collins, J. (Manners of the pagan world, Consolatory discourse, and on patience. Lond. 1576. 8°.

Marshall, Nath. (Great works.) Lond. 1717. P.

Hobson. (The Unity of the Church.) Lond. 1825.

(Upon the Church. In: "Evrem. 1839."

(Upon the Church.) In: "Evrem. 1849.

Pusey, G. A. ("Worlds") "Evrem. 1849. 3 v. 8°.

(Epistles) In: "Evrem. 1849."

Wallis, R. E. In: "Evrem. 1849."

Flower, W. B. ("Select treatises") Lond. 8°. In: "Evrem. 1850."

People's Library of the fathers.

Read, J. B. "Tracts of condemned." Pearson, J.
Biographical Synopsis

CYPRIAN

Prensc.

FORREST, D. DE B. (Sermone.) Pars. 1766. 8o.

DANSAL, L. (Du mal qu'appert Peuvic.) Orbiscul. 1766. 8o.

TELEON, JAC. Pars. 1574. 8o. [*Deus salutis, 8v, and y translation by S. Samuel, assigned to this year.]

(XII. maitris d'Alen.) Pars. 1757. 8o.

LAVOA, D. DE. (Des cert. dom. mortuaria.) Pars. 1664. 8o.

LONGERE. (Oeuv.) Pars. 1672. 4v. Rouen. 1718. 2v. 4o. Pars. 1722. 2v. 4o.

LÉONARD, JAC. (Lettere chioase.) Amst. 1688. 19.

(De la singularité des circes.) Pars. 1718. 19.

COILLON, M. N. S. Pars. 1827. 2v. 8o.

GENOUDIE. (72.) In: P. de Vagel. Pars. 1537-43. 8o. (Dans de la poste.) Pars. 1759. 19.

JOSSE, D. (De la mort.) Pars. 1856. 19.

TIHRAUT. (Cov.) Tower. 1666. 1v. 8o.

KORDIN. (De Paulic. de l'Egl.) Pars. 1758. 19.

German.

GRUMM. Air ekl. ii. d. Vater-Umer. Augst. 1821. 8o.

AMMACH. MICHEL. (Freigeg. Sch.) Amst. 1553. 19.

HORNSLIKLENK, C. C. (Achete Werke.) Hers. 1750-80. 8o.

FEUEREINZ. (Echte Werke.) Mittelein. 1818-20. 4 Th. 8o.

ZIESLER. In: Weche d. K. V. V, VI, VII. (Kempken, 1812.)

WEITMANN, J. G. (Echte Werke.) Kempken. 1848-69. 3v. 8o.

KRAUSENBERGER. (August. Sch.) Aug. 1828. 8o.

ULH. U. Kempken. 1859-69. 19. (The Nahrma.)

WILHELM, EUGER, and UHL. Kempken. 1358-80. (The Nahrma.)

AMMANN, N. Cyprianus von den zwei Tribus mächsltren dieser welt. Rindlingen. (1949.)

Italian.

CASTROOLY. RAPARFIO. (D. Tituli di duo sorte di marit.) Fric. 1569. 8o.

CUTO, GULL. (Trattato di due libri de donne.) Vien. 1577. 4v. Rom. 1654. 8o.

CORDER. TH. (Cicoria sulla Paternita.) Padon. 1577.

CARLO, A. (Sermone sopra l'eleisonia.) In: Opera. VII. 1812.

Portuguese.

ALEVROU. L. AN. DE. (Tractado sobre a unidade da irma.) Lisboa. 1857. 8o.

Spanish.

Obras de San Cipriano, obispo y mártir, traducidas al castellano y endecasílabos con notas y usa del salmo por el Dr. D. Joaquin Antonio del Camino. Palmañi, 1857. 8v. 4o.

Swedish.

GROSCH, JO. (De ovat domin.) Rostock. 1615. 8v.

III. Litereature.

Art. protonomologia. In: Martini et Damisi. Thesaur. III. also in: Migne, Patro. Lat. III. (1855) 1557-66, etc, etc.

ALEXANDER, NAPLON. In: Zacaria. Thes. theolog. 1769. IX. 110-11.

ALGON. PATRIO. (1876) 192-204.

ARNOUDES-BASTIDE, AN. FR. Tristilions en Cyprien comparé comme litterateur. Sens. 1848. 8v.

BASCH. Gesch. Litt. Sup. (1837) II. 50-55.

BELLERUS. De vit. ac prisc. R. Pont.

BINGHAM. Origines. IV.

BLACKMORE. Hist. of Church. (1853) 469.

BOURJANG. Kirchend. (1873) I. IV. = (pp. 118-173.)

BOUH. Opuscul. hist. et ant. eccl.

— Trinit. (1881) 107-116.

BURLE. Chr. Lit. (1858) 1. 30-1.

CAULAC. Intro, in ss. Pat. (1858) 2-104.

CAVERNE. Sci. eccl. hist. lit. (1740-3) 1. 126-8.

— Livre (1740) 376-95.

CHILIERI. Hist. gen. aut. sac. III. (1733) 1-222; II. (1855) 257-387.

CLAEKER. Zacaria lit. (1830-1) 1. 177-187.

COPLIN. Lives of the saints. (1848) 384-312.

CUMMERS. F. E. See之下.

CONTROUX, BAMP. Lect. 1839.

COOPER. Free ch. of the. Hiber. of the (1664-1767) 257.

COOKE. Dissertat. theol. (1864) 257.

CORDEAUX. Dissertat. theol. (1864) 257.

COTTI. J. A. Examen histo. crit., etc. (1733) 1-222. (1750) 257-387.

CROOKH. Hist. of the. (1850) 219-25.

DALLAS. De ver. sin pari.

DAVOLD. Cyep. Sup. (1834) 244-5.

Biographical Synopsis

D'aurynv, J. H. M.
Christianorum et sacratissimae uppmoket idem cruxim kyriam.
Schr. 1871. P. (1871).
— St. Cyprian and his Times.
In: New Eng. XXXI.

Davis:
Cardaghe, etc.

De Rossi:
Rom. water.

Dowell, T.
C Depos. Or. 684, 64, 69, 69, 69, 69.

D'Uden:

Ehret:
Gesch. Lit. Mitt. 64.
(1874). P. 14-61.

Engelhardt:
Dogmenges. I. (1893). 213. etc.

Eugene, E. H. VII. 3.

Fabrius:

— Bibl. gr. X. 215.

Fairfax:

Fairfax:
T. S. Cyprian and his Letters.
(1899). P. 87.

Feinberg:
Error. See Fechter.

Fischer, J. M. E.
S. Cyprianus, sive de doctrina Terruli evangeliz. Erfurt. 1754. 4°.

Fleharty:
176-185, 224-25, 232-25, 237-28, 251-25, 370-25, 370-28,
325-28, 325-29, 4.

Feichtmayr:
B. de Biblioth.
(1712). P. 565. 4°.

Frey:
Conc. Trier.
(1912). P. 45.

Freud:
C. E. S. Cyprianus et sive de doctrina Terrul evangeliz. Erfurt. 1754. 4°.

Freud:
De vet.
(1769). P. 319.

Garay:
Test. Ital. 1266.

Gey, A.
In: Lichtenberger. Encycl. (1784-87). III.
257-259.

Gibbon, J. F.
[The lit. S. Cyprianus et sive de doctrina Terrul evangeliz. Erfurt. 1754. 4°.

Grierson:
Descr. and Coll. c. 16.

Gubbitz:

Gudrun:

Gueymarck, J. S. Cyprianus, epist.
Cardaghe, de Romani pontificia primativa atque memorabilis eodem annos sanctis.
Wittenberg. 1790. 8°.

Guillem:
C. C. [Christianismorum] sive Petri Stefani.

Guizot:
Hist. de la vie de S. Cyprianus.

Hagen:
Hist. sive de doctrina Terrul.
(1855). P. 325-255.

Hais:
Rom. L. 1 (1890). 1-6, etc.

Hagemeister:

Hahn:
Rom. 6. 1880. 8°, 350-4.

Hase:

Haupt:
M. C. [Christianismorum] sive Petri Stefani.

Hau:

Havet:
C. S. Cyprianus, epist.
Cardaghe, de Romani pontificia primativa atque
memorabilis eodem annos sanctis.
Wittenberg. 1790. 8°.

Heckel:

Hieke:
Schr. 1891-96.
III. 41-2, 53-81.

Huther:
C. S. Cyprianus, sive de doctrina Terrul.

Jusupin:

Klein:
Das kirchliche
und Geschichte.
(1875). 111.

Koehler:
O. d.

Koehler:
O. d.

Koehler:
O. d.

Koehler:
O. d.

Koehler:
O. d.

Koehler:
O. d.
Biographical Synopsis

Cyprian

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPTIC.

CYPRIAN.

ROBERTSON. Hist. of Church. (1857) I. 161-2, 162-3.

RICHARD. De la controverse entre St. Etienne et St. Cyprien au sujet de l'apostasie des hérétiques. Paris, 1858. 8°.

SCHREIBER. Hist. Interm. II. (1788) 197-208.

ROUSSEAU. Cour exposé de la doctrine ecclésiastique de St. Cyprien, précédée d'une petite biographie de cet évêque et de quelques mots sur ses œuvres. Strasb. 1867. 8°.

RUDOLPH. Christ. Heigl. I.

RULL, GIL. El Cypriánick. Bishop. Lond. 1669. 4°. (Appendix to Book.)

SALIS. De epigraphia veterum. (1740) 8-9, 90-91.

SALISSON. G. In: Harmathium. I. (1873) 83-6, 90-1, 96-97. (The Complete of psalm.)

SCHOFF. Cresc. of Christianism. II. (1775) 20-1.

SCHABBETZ. S. W. Justin M.

SCHAEFFER. In: Weimar u. W. Kirch.-Lese. (1847-54) II. 266-269.

SGLEM. Patrolog. (1859) 60-2.

SCHÖNMEYER. Bibl. patr. lat. (1703) 77-134.

SCHMID. L. Bibl. patr. (1790) VI. 1-268.

SCHMIDT. Conder de valere bapt. haevert. Monast. 1866.

SEMERLIN. Tisch. patr. (1871) I. 730-745.

SEGT. Dict. patr. (1851) I. 179-222.

SHEPHERD. E. J. Hist. Chs. of Rome. (1851) 120-130.

SHEPHERD. A. G. On the genuineness of the writings ascribed to Cyprian. Lond. 1852. 8°.

SHEPHERD. On St. Cyprian. In: Chr. Obs. LIV. (1854) 308-309.

SIEVERD. Sac. cact. c. iii. p. 63.

THURAU. Geschichte u. chronologie von St. Cyprian, ev. d. Catharine... Tourn. 1809. 3°. (1839.)

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

III. CALUS.

I. Editions.

ROETH. Rel. sac. (1865-70) II. 123-133.

Note: Only the fragments are authentic. The ascription of various other works to Calus is not maintained.

II. Translations.

English.

SALMON. In: Anti-Nic. Lib. IX. (1869) II. 124-62.

I. Literature.

ALDOW. Patrol. (1857) II. 21-2.

BRAUNFREIT. Dogmenges., (1828) 155. [-v. 1]

BUSSER. In: Hippolytos and his times. Lond. 1853.

BUSE. Chr. Lit. (1858-9) I. 10-20.

CAIROLI. Quellen u. w. III. 307-407, etc.

EHRLER. Hedi. ges. u. sch. (1730) II. 366-10. 239-41; I. (1850) 961-3.

CHAPK. Caucutology. (1880) 210, 275, 343-4.

CERVANTES. Esp. d. sozfr. hist. (1877-85) 374.

CLAY. Sacred I. (1851-7) 1. 150.

CLAYTON. Phil. Rom. (1851-3) I. 417; II. 418.

CUNNINGHAM. Churches of Asia. (1868) passim.

DILLKORF. Hippolytos and Callistus. (1876) 270-.

DUPTAIN. Ed. crit. (1868-8) I. 291.

DURKEN. In: Biol. Univ. (Middlet.) (1824-5) VI. 379.

FAKIR. ed. (1715) V. 267; VIII. 254-6.

GALLONG. Bibl. patr. Franc. I. 764. II. 228-1; III. 228-1.

GIEBHEL. Church Hist. 2d ed. I. 295.

HELENSBERGER. Kirch.gesch. 1759-80. I. 168; III. 71.

IDT. Ed. histor. (1799) II. 59-7.

KURZ. Kirch.gesch. 1885. I. 182-.

LAMOTHE. Ecd., (1779-82) II. 266-7.

LAMOTHE. Jour. de Philol. (1805) II. 48.

LUMPER. Hist. u. antiqu. (1799) VII. 17-35.

M'COUNCIE and S. Cudl. (1794) II. 43-.

MÖLLE. Rev. (1875) 460.

NEUMANN. Chr. hist. (1876) I. 396, 397, 565, 690; III. 184.

NICKEL. Philol. (1831-5) I. 261-.

OBERL. lat. ecc. (1746-70) III. 15-179; (1795) III. 5-8.

PERHASE. Bibl. patr. (1843) 795-94.

PHOTOI. Bibl. Cod. 48.

PRESSEIS. Martyr. (1879) 365-7.

REINH. Gnom. T. I. (1876) II. 35-1. Eng. (1884) 319. [-v. 1]

SCHNEIDER. Rev. du Lyon. (1861) II. 410-4.

SCHÖHNER. Kirchen. (1772-7) III. 426-8.

SCHWEITZ. Hemit. select. (1876).

STROHRA. Histor. Fut. II. 3. III. 2.

TILLEMONT. Mémoires. III. (1866) 174-7.

TIRABOSCHI. Soci. ital. (1850) II. 1. 360.

VOLC. Hippolytos u. d. sin. zelugnis. (1855) 60-71.

WATC. Hist. Rel. u. (1888) passim.

WALCH. Bibl. Patr. (1824) 218.

WESTCOTT. Chron. (1873) 374.

WORTH. Hippolytos. Lond. 1890.

For literature, compare under Hippolytos and works on Eusebius, in Hist. Ecd. II. 25-6, 346-6.
Biographical Synopsis

GREGORY THAUM.

VOLUME VI.

I. GREGORY THAUMATURGUS.

I. Editions.

(See Vol. 2.)

GALDANUS, Gr. lat. Biblioth. Patr. (1788. P.) III. 385-897. XIV. 117-.

(Germain’s text.)

(Epistola canonica.)

Gr. lat. In: Biblia. Parisii, 1624. P. VII.

ROSE: Rel. soc. (1846-8) III. 231-283.

(Margaritae.)

(Epistola fidei.)

GLASSER, N. Gr. lat. In: Leoni M. ep. ad Florinum. Harba, 1614. P. I.-

(Anti-helvetians.)

(See tr.)

Vogelius. (Vogelius.) In: Cyril. Alex. Liber de Trin. 1604.

— Gr. lat. 1622. P. [With homilies of Maximus and St. Justin of Antioch.] (See above.)

(B Sed.)

(See 3rd ed.)

Note: As account of the two synods previously see Nitsch. Patrologia. I. 1681. 386.

II. Translations.

Latin.

(See 3rd ed.)

OECULAPPIATUS. (Epist. canon. in: Theophylact.) In: Theophylact. 127-8.

II. Biblioth. Parisii, 1575.

In: Catholicos pontifex. Pari. 1593. P. (Margaritae.)

OECULAPPIATUS. Libri. 1592. P. 225-34.

(Other.)

OECULAPPIATUS. (Cassianus.) Basil. 1518. P. 9.

(De anima.) In: Biblioth. Parisii, 1575. P. VIII. 45.

(De anima.) In: Biblioth. Parisii, 1575. P. III.

In: Biblioth. Parisii, 1575. P. III.

(Oeculapppius.) In: Biblioth. Parisii, 1575. P. III.

(Oeculapppius.) In: Biblioth. Parisii, 1575. P. III.

In: Antic.-Neb. Libri. XX. (1657) 7-76. Ed. Cosmi. VI. (1685) 7-76.

German.

MARQUET, J. Kemp. 1737. P. 106. [The Ratzeburger-Thisbeus Bibl.]

III. Literature.

ALEXANDROS, NAPOLI, N. Hist. exc. VI. 79.

BARTASSI. Theos. Mon. (1775) 1. 27-35.

BARTASSI-HENRICUS. Dogmengesch. (1832) 217-8. (p. 1)

BAYLIS. De spiritu sancto libri. 29.

BAULMECQ. Theos. Mon. (1775) 1. 27-35.

BECK. Dogmengesch. I. (1865) 288-97. (p. 1)

BELLEMER-LAUREL. Sor. exc. (1728) 48-59.

BULL. Works. V.

BUNGE, Chr. Lib. (1826-9) 127-9.

CAVALLI, Intro. ad Patr. (1825) 104-16.

CAVE, Sor. exc. hist. lib. (1760-1) 132.

— Lives (1860) 1. 396-416.

CELLER, Hist. gen. sac. sac. III. (1732) 327-25.

CHAPLAIN, Bibl. histor. (1787) 290-1.

CLARK, Letters (1826-7) I. 175-7.

CLIVELTON, Fami Rom. (1845-9) 1. 247, 273, 301, II. 418.

COTTA. § 308-402.

DAKIN, Cyclop. bibl. (1863) 1739-50.

DOWNE, Per. of Christ. II. (1867) 170-235.

DEWIT, Nov. bibl. ant. exc. (1688-8) I. 530.

EYCLIC, Brit. (9th ed.) XII. 151.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

II. DIONYSIUS OF ALEXANDRIA.

I. Editions.

GALLANDO. Gr. lat. 1788. P. XIII. 3.

MACHER. Scr. Dr. Gr. lat. Roman, 1794. P. 1.

BERTRANDUS. (Seu Orbis) Gr. lat. Basil, 1556. 128.

TURQUINS. Fr. 2 (app.) Gr. lat. Roman, 1608. 84. Repr. in Bibl. patr. Paris. XI.

BERGER. (Ep. ad Basiliem) Gr. lat. in his Pandect. Osiris, 1792. B. VII. 8.

MAL. (Pragm. Clam. max. 1858) X 478.

MOINE. (Ep. ad Paulum V.) Gr. lat. Patrologia. Lat. V. 1844. 89-100.

II. Translations.
Latin.

Hiemontius. (Ep. sec. 18.) 1610. P.

No. imp.* Eid. bibli. patr. II. 445-7

Eid. bibli. patr. lat.

Part. 1704. XI. 6. 184-9.

Territor, Pr. (2 opp.). 1677. 8°.

Int. Bibli. patr.

Marc. 339.

Eng.

Salmond, S. D. F. In: Ante-Necr. Libr. XX. (1871) 161-266.

Wallis, R. E. In: Ante-Necr. Libr. XXXI. (1871) 399-400.

[Note: Salmond's work.]

German.

III. Literature.

Alexander, Nathanael. Hist. Ecl. sec. III. Dass XIX.

Aeg. Patr. (1850) 157.

Athenaeum. De mor. Chryseil. De syrm. etc.

Baronius. Annal. (1539) 248, 251, 253, 50-100; 260, 5-101, 263, 2-5, 59-71; 266, 2, 266, 5-56, 266, 7-102.

Card. Greg. Liber. (1850) 248, 3- 31, 266, 31, 266, 4.

Birk, S. De spir. sancto. XXXIX. Int. Opp. om. (Farrar, 1821. III. P.)

Bang. Hist. de l'ebbe. I. 111.

Bauernfeind-Croquet, Dom. Dogmengesch. (1807) 217. [4. 1.]

Bleich. Dogmengesch. I. (1804) 341.

Balko. Doct. l. I. (1850) 159.

Bull. Ann. eccl. (1720) 64.

— Trinit. (1831) 133-6.

Bose. Chr. Litt. (1825-9) l. 23.

Calci. Petro, Paulo, et IV. aliis Alexandr. et fert. aliis.

Cathar. Com. Ant. cit. Rel. 1576-99.

Mart. Ann. eccl. et al. (1834) 240-1.

Möltner. Patr. (1857).

Müntzer. Dogmengesch. (1847-8) l. 264-99, 446-50.

Maxim. Patr.* (In: Doctr. Dorothea Alexandrin.

Access. Apocalypsis santis. (Paris 1731).

Church Hist. (1872) 160-6. 251, p. 1.

Stöckle. Dogmengesch. I. (1870) 159-50.

Nov. Bibl. Gen. (Hoefer) XIII. (1853) 675-7.

Outromeyer, Ioseph. Diction. d. Deuneikon.

Richter. Chr. Hellen. Doroth. Alex.

Ritter. Chr. Philo (1847) 16-10.

Rodenh. Hist. of Church. (1870-7) 128-6.

Rohde. Die Evangelien der Dreyer.

Rücker. Aeg. (1860) 402.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPTIC

JULIUS AFRICANUS

I. Editions.

GALLAND, Bibl. vet. patr. II. (1866) 329
Rooth. Rel. nov. (1848-51) II. 219-339
Mone. Gr. lat. In: Patrol. gr. X. (1857) 51-108; XI. (1857) 41-8

II. Translations.

Salmond, S. D. F. In: Anti-Neo-Lib. IX. (1869) 184-202; Ed. Corp. VI. (1886) 129-319

III. Literature.

Alzog. Patrol. (1838) 256-7
Augustine. Retract. II. c. 7, § 2
Baronius. Ann. (1598) 222-23
Buxtorf. Annu. II. 416
BAUMÉS. Exégr. I. (1824) 135
Bellarmine-LaGrue. Sci. ecol. (1745) 43
Duch. Ch. Lit. (1828-9) I. 27

Ciceronis. Hist. cœp. p. 207
Cicero. Hist. gen. aut. eco. II. (1704) 643-4; II. (1854) 24-5
Cicero. Canonicus (1880) 127-8
Cicero. Rep. c. duc. nat. (1857-60) 141
Clarke. Sacred Lit. (1830-1) I. 179-82
Cluny. Fact. Rom. (1843-40) I. 234-235; II. 418
Darling. Cyclop. bibl. (1854) 149
De la Salle. In: Magne. Patro. gr. XI. (1847) 37-42
Dulcin. Bibl. des arts. écl. (1692) I. 307
Einstein. Cat. scv. eco. 6. In: Asservant. Bibl. orient. III. 1, 14
Encycl. Brit. (9th ed.) I. 273
Fabbro. Bibl. Gr. (1707) V. 345-46; VI. 285-286; VII. 503-504; VIII. 505-506; IX. 354-360; X. 581; XI. 585-589
—Bibl. med. aut. IV. 593
Farrer. Interpretation. (1886) 207-8
Février. Hist. Patrol. I. 345-6
Peyr. Hist. ecol. (1691-1) II. 112-6
Gros. Church Hist. (1868) I. 223-4
— Kirchengeschichte. (1879-80) I. 15; III. 8
Hesychius. De vir. ill. 63. (Hemer. Augst. I. 64.)
— Ep. ad Mainz. 54
Korte. Kirchengeschichte. (1884) I. 127-3
La Maitre. Dictionnaire de l'histoire et des annales de l'antiquité. Paris, 1879, 8
Lardner. Creedal History. (1832) II. 417-428
Lecl. Bibl. ecol. (1723) II. 809
Le Quien. Sacra parallel. In: Opera om. II. 445
Lumbrux. Hist. ec. patr. (1790) VII. 76-98
M'Clenock and S. Cyclic (1847) IV. 1092-3
Mill. On the mythical interpretation of the Gospels. p. 201
Müller. Proslog. I. 577-601
Nylander. Church Hist. (1874) I. 709
Niebuhrius. Call. Hist. ecol. V. 21
Nicephorus. Hist. @. I. 591-593
Nicephorus. Patro. (1858) I. 327-330
Olivet. Rel. ex. (1745-7) III. 102-103; (1749) III. 247-31
Paut. Recueil IV. 501
Permanens. Bibl. patr. II. (1843) 376-408
Pictavius. Bibl. cod. 54
Pres. Heres. (N.Y.) 376-79
Reid. Palaeorient. Vol. 47, 758
Rosenkilde. Hist. Interpret. III. (1807) 577-597

(68)
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

ANATOLIUS, Tho.

Salmon, G. In Smith and Wace. Dict. I, 537.

Thiessen, Melchior. De Julia Africana quaestione observanda. 1693.

Titus. Mores Lib. III (1865) 254-8, 682-5.

Tertiarius. Sch. exch. 38.

Note: Afrorumius is found variously in the alphabetical index under Afrorumius, or Spath, or Spath.

IV. (ii.) ANATOLIUS.

I. Editions.

Note: The Greek fragment of the C. P. the Frang. was found in Eusebius, etc., in various ed.

II. Translations.

Latin.

Buchner. Deor temp. (1632), 37, 42.

Galland. Bibl. patr. III. (1695) 545-.

III. Literature.

Brockel. Hist. chr. phil. (1879) III, 459-62.

Caye. Sch. exch. hist. Li. (1740-1) I, 136; (1689) p. 50.

Chir. Hist. gen. d. auct. san. III (1732) 204-14; II (1895) 432-3.

Biographical Synopsis

IV. (c.) THEOGNOSTUS OF ALEXANDRIA.

I. Editions.

GALLAND, Bibl. patr. III. (1697) 692-3.
ROTH, ed. sacq. (1846-5) III. 495-492.
MOIR, gr. lit. in: Petrol. gr. 8. (1857) 239-42.
And in editions of Athenaeus and Photius.

II. Translations.

Latin.
SCHRAMEK, in: Anal. sc. patr. VI.

English.
ED. CORN. VI. (1880) 155-6.

III. Literature.

ALSDORF, Petrol. (1876) 558.
BURTON, Thoty. (1859) 137-4.
BUCHAR, Chr. tr. (1859-61) 1-40.
CAVANIL, Soc. ercl. hist. lit. (1740-5) I. 146.
CELIDIOS, lsecl. gen. ant. soc. III. (1752) 398-401, 402-405.
CLAUDEL, Rés. d. sources hist. (1787-88) 218.
CLERRE, Essais lit. (1752-3) I. 197-94.
DOOWELL, Dissert in re Lactanci. (Joum. 1869, 488-9.
DONNE, Paroch. of Christ. II. (1860) 173-5.
DUPIN, Nouv. lisecl. ant. soc. (1685-6) 1-16.
FABRIXIUS, Bibl. gr. (1741) VI. 370-1; IX. 408. (ab. VII. 308-11; XI. 119-20).

GALLAND, Bibl. vit. III. (1697) 243-4.
GUINICHE, De Schol. Alex. (Holl., 1834) I. 98; II. 307.

HEDIGER, Kirchenges. (1879-80) I. 106; III. 72.

HILSCHER AND STRAUSF. Schola Alex. (1776) 26.
HURTH, Orig. Hellen. II. II. 353-4.
ED. MIGNE, Patr. gr. XVII. 785-6.

JENNER, Gurl. Lex. (1760-1).
SUG, 1789-71.
LUMPER, Hist. sac. patr. XIII. (1799) 450-50.
MCCLINTOCK AND S. CYG. (1874-5) X. 334.
MUENSCHER, Dogmenges. (1874-8) 845.
NEUERER, Hist. der H. (1874) 713.
NISCHLE, Petrol. (1851-2) I. 410-5.
OSSE, Intro. ecl. (1745) III. 432-3.
PERRIDGE, Bull. patri. II. (1865) 331-7.
SALONIUS, Introcl. (1859, 86) p. 488.
SCHRÖECK, Biblioth. Cod. 106.
SCHRAMEK, Herms. (N.Y.) 395-6.
—MARTY, (1859) 317.
ROSENBÜHLER, Hist. interpr. III. (1757) 137-8.
ED. CORN. VI. (1880) 145-6.
SCHAPF, Hist. der Ch. (1854) 886-96. [9 E.]
SCHRÖECK, Kirchenges. (1776-1786) IV. 425-6.

IV. (d). PIERUS OF ALEXANDRIA.

I. Editions.

ROTH, ed. sacq. (1846-5) III. 273-333.

II. Translations.

English.
ED. CORN. VI. (1880) 135-6.

III. Literature.

ALSDORF, Petrol. (1876) 158.
BARONIN, Ann. (1859) 326-36.
CAVANIL, Soc. ercl. hist. lit. (1740-5) 1-40.
CELESTE, Hist. gén. nat. soc. III. (1752) 348-50; II. (1863) 405-7.
CELESTE, Rés. d. sources hist. (1855) 379.
CLERRE, Essais lit. (1752-3) I. 178-74.
DUPIN, Nouv. lisecl. ant. soc. (1685-6) 1-16.
FABRIXIUS, Bibl. gr. (1741) VI. 370-1; IX. 408. (ab. VII. 308-11; XI. 119-20).

(79)
IV. (f.) PHILEAS.

I. Editions.

MAPPET, Sch. (Ad Meltemum.) In: Ostrian. ltr. III. (Pompeii, 1758) 1-18.

GALLAND, Bibl. patr. IV. (1768) 61-.

ROTHE, Rel. sacr. (1848-50) IV. 83-111.

Note. The Ad Meltemum is extant only in the Latin version.

II. Translations.

ENGLISH.

III. Literature.

BUSSER, Chr. ltr. (1828-9) I. 41-5.

CAVE, Sac. sacr. ex. ltr. (1740-2) I. 152.

CHILDE, Bibl. sacr. III. (1858) 456.

DUPIN, Vert. sacr. (1868-9) 218.

CLARKE, Sacred lit. (1830-1) I. 107.

COPPEN, Comment. liter. In: Acta ss.olland.

(XVIII) Ang. IV. 59-94.

DUFUY, Now. bibl. aut. sacr. (1868-9) I. 797.

EBBENUS, Bibl. Ecd. VII.

FABRICATION, Bibl. gr. (1849) VII. 306.

DE BIBL. med. soci. (1850) VII. 306.

PETR. Patrolog. gr. (1857) 156-70.

LARDNER, Credulissimum. II. 153-4.

LUMPER, Hist. patr. XIII. (1799) 604-16.

NEAL, Church Hist. (1852) I. 143.

PERSEPHAIDES, Biblioth. patr. II. (1842) 45-9.

SCHNEIDEBERG, In: Herzerl. Real-Enc. (1877) XV. 49-.

SCHRÖDER, Comment. liter. (1874) III. 606-10.

TILEMONT, Mémoires. IV. (1856) 558-8, 577-8.

ARCHIELAUS.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

A. CLINTON. Enl. Rom. (1845-50) I. 301; II. 425.

B. DARLING. Cyclop. bibl. 1836.

C. DOPPEL. Now. bibl. ass. eccl. (1868) I. 571.

D. ECHER. Hist. eccl. VII. 50.

G. GALLAND. Bibl. vet. patr. III. (1767) XXXVI; also in: Migne. Patr. gr. X. (1837) 157-96.

H. HEGGELER. Kiesenhagen (1869-80) I. 168; III. 75.

K. LIMBUR. Hist. m. patr. XIII. (1900) 345-50.

L. NOE. Church Hist. (1872) I. 605.

M. NISCHL. Patr. (1888) I. 346.

N. FRANKER. Bibl. patr. II. (1843) 565-6.

P. TILLMANN. Mémoires IV. (1896) 299.

Q. TRITHEM. Sor. eccl. 45.

V. ARCHIELAUS.

I. Editions.

A. VALENIUS. In: ed. Socrates. (August. 1877) 197-203. [Latin only.]

B. ZACCHIA. In: Collect. mon. vet. (Rom. 1658. 4 vols.)

E. ROXTH. Rel. sac. (1842-5) V. 1-206.

F. MIGNE. Patr. gr. X. (1857) 1425-38.

Note. According to Zaccaria the Acts were first composed in Syriac. Fragments also exist in the Greek, but the larger part exists only in a Latin translation for the Greek.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

A. ALZOG. Patr. (1876) 119-20.

D. BORTON. Divinity of Christ. (1829) 430-433.

E. BRICE. Chr. lit. (1826-7) I. 37.

F. CAYE. Sor. eccl. hist. I. (1740-3) I. 144; II. IV. 17.

I. CLARK. Sacred Hist. (1877-93) I. 212.

J. CLAYTON. East Rom. (1450-200) I. 319; II. 431.

M. DODSON. Nov. bibl. ass. eccl. (1845-6) I. 578.

N. EPHESIUS. Heseris. 66.

O. FABRICKIUS. Bibl. gr. (1712) V. 252-3. (27. VII. 273-5).

R. GUDKIN, ANTON. ALPHABET OF TIBET. (Amst. 1762. 4 vols.) 393.

S. HAUL. Kiesenhagen (1869-70) II. 328.

T. LITHUN. De vit. ill. II. (Honor. August. I. 72).

V. LUNDBERG. Hist. m. patr. XIII. (1799) 328-42.

W. MCLENDON. Scholars and S. Cyril. (1874) I. 374.

X. MIDDLETON. Church Hist. (1873) I. 485-92.

Z. NOE. Bibl. patr. II. (1843) 667-34.

PHILONE. Bibl. 85 p. 342.

PRESKIE. Hierog. (? 7-15).

SOCRATES. Hist. eccl. I. 10. 76.

ZACCHIA. Cell. mon. vet. eccl. (1868) III-XVII.

For literature compare also articles on Moses and Manichæism.

VI. ALEXANDER OF LYCOPOLIS.

I. Editions.

A. COMBETUS. In: Auct. bibl. patr. II. (1876) 26. [Lat. only.]

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

A. ALZOG. Patr. (1876) 120.

C. CHERVALLI. Hist. des Manich. II. 347-58.

G. FABRICKIUS. Bibl. gr. (1712) V. 290. (27. VII. 373. 344).

I. GALLAND. Vet. patr. bibl. IV. 41-5 also in: Migne. Patr. gr. XVII. (1857) 409-12.

L. LE QUEEN. Quene Hist. II. 597.

M. LUNDBERG. Hist. m. patr. XIII. (1799) 328-42.

N. MORGAN. Hist. des Manich. I. (1854) 455.

O. NISCHL. Church Hist. I. LXIV. 494. LXV. 495. LXX. 500.

P. PERMANDE. Bibl. patr. II. (1843) 634.

Q. PERMANDE. Bibl. patr. II. (1843) 634.

174
VII. PETER OF ALEXANDRIA.

I. Editions.

GALLAND. In: Bibl. patr. IV. (1768) 91.
ROUGHT. Rel. stitch. (1868–83) IV. 29–32.

(Cont.)

In: Miscellanea. Basil. 1550. [Latin only.]
HEROLDUS. In: Othodokosographia. Basil. 1555. [Latin only.]
CHYRARIUS. In: Orthodoxos. Basel. 1560. [Latin only.]
COLOR. Libri. 1665. [Latin only.]
DRAVOUS. Franc. Pur. 1560. P.
LABBE. Gr. lat. In: Concill. I. (1617) 952.
BEAUDIER. In: Pandette chronolog. II. (1772) 1–13.
HARDON. Gr. lat. In: Concill. I. (1745) 225.
SCHMIDT. In: Anal. et. patr. VII. (1784) 261.

And in all collections of canonists.

(Other)

PETAVIUS. (1 Figm.) In: Usuardns. (1630) 396.
LABBE. (De div. Fign.) Lat. In: Conv. III. (1671) 508.
SOLY. IV. (1671) 516. (Sermon. Fign.) V. (1671) 622.
HARDON. (De div. Fign.) In: Conv. I. (1715) 1591.
MAL. (De Fign.) In: Sac. vet. nov. coll. VII. (1839) 426. 85, 96, 124, 207–9.

II. Translations.

Engl.

III. Literature.

ALEXANDER, NATHANIEL. Hist. eccl. (1758) IV. 357.
ATAZANDAR. Apologia contra Arriano. c. 39.
BALLLOT. Vida dei santi.
BARBUCUS. "Scrip. Lat. I. (1886) 179. [see also.]
BARTON. Divinitate Christi. (1812) 408–9.
CAPRI. Sac. eccles. hist. (1767–76) I. 175.
CICERONE. Hist. gen. aut. sec. IV. (1723) 17–75. III. (1865) 56–61.
CLESARIDUS. Rer. d. sources hist. (1877–80) 1797.
CLARKER. Sacris. Lit. (1830–1) 211.
DARLING. Cyci. bibl. 354.
DOUGFEW. Dissertationes. ed. Peters. c. VI. 51.

CLEVIT. In: Biogr. Univ. (Michael) 1845–46. XXXIII. 247.
LE CHINN. Orn. christ. II. 397.
MCMILLAN and S. Cyc. (1874) VII. 85.
MINARD. Sac. et. coll. 32.
SNAKE. Eastern Ch. Alexandria. I. (1847) 90, etc.
SPRINGER. Church Hist. (1872) II. 231–2: 409, 473, 474.
STOLZ. Hist. patriarch. Alex. p. 60.
SCHMIDT. Sac. et. coll. (1870) 3. 144.
SCHMIDT. Sac. et. coll. (1876) VIII. 49–50.
SCHUB. Vita. de. (1618) XII. 326–7.

VIII. ALEXANDER OF ALEXANDRIA.

I. Editions.

FABRICIUS. (Figm.) In: Bibl. gr. VIII. (341–2).
GALLANDUS. (De Ar.) In: Bibl. patr. IV. (1768) 441–2.
LABBE. (De Ar.) In: Bibl. patr. IV. (1768) 441–2.

NOTE. The Epistle to Alexander is from Theodoret. Hist. Eccl. I. 4, on the Epistle to the Cathol. and the Epistle from Alexander, the Epistle to Epimachus from Maximus. Compare the editions of their works.

II. Translations.

Engl.

III. Literature.

BECKET. Hist. Ch. p. 11.
BROMTON. Trinity. (1831) 135–6.
Biographical Synopsis

Bibliographical Synopsis

Bosius, Chr. lat. (1829-5) I. 472.

Chirat, Hist. gen. natt. sec. IV. (1733) 101-193. III.

Chir, Gr. lat. (1829-5) I. 472.

Claret, Sacred Lit. (1890-5) I. 472.

Charles, Canonicity, (1829) 720.

Erdmanns, Erich. vindic. p. 40. 19.

Ephraim, Hist. 79. 9.

Egbert, Vita Const. II. 60. 84.

Facies, Gr. gr. (1757) VIII. 350-9. (2. 275-9).

Hermann, Hist. of Cost. I. (1890) 267.

Heer, Kirchengesch. (1855) I. 472.

Le Quien, Oriens christ. 3.

McClintock and Strong, Cyc. (1873) I. 126.

Mai, B. M. nov. patr. II. 539.; also in: Migne. Patro. gr. XVIII (1857) 587-8.

Müller, Pastor. V. (1860) 7.

Montfaucon, Berli. de. Epistol ... in una navatia Rotha de baptista parvis a Albanorum paterum haec de tempore mortis Alexander episcopi Alexandriac in ano aditus Albanus Magni. Parsiis. 1710. 8° et 39.

Munatius, De sacris. ordin. III. p. 30.

Nelles. Environ Ch. in: Alexandrius, I. (1847) 115. 89.

Nemes, Hist. of dogmas. (1858) 429-9 (r. 17).

—Church Hist. I. 159. 723; II. 215. 492; 410. 414. 415. 419. 423. 475. 478.

Pier, Bibl. gr. (1890-5) I. 899-91.

Remondot. Lit. orient. I. 381.

Schaff, Hist. Ch. III. (1884) 660. (81).

Schram, Asl. in: Eun. (1878) VII. 642-587.

Sophonias, Hist. exc. I. 5. 67.

Söderblom, Hist. exc. I. 12.

Theodoret. Hist. exc. I. 5. 4.

Worthington, Church Hist. (1851) 443-448.

For literature see especially single studies and works on Aramism.

IX. Methodius.

I. Editions.

Comenius, Franc. Gr. lat. Paris. 1616. 8°. (Deleted also Anmphibolica.)

(Gerinoni.)

Allatius, Leo. Gr. lat. Romae. 1635. 8°.

(Other.)

Fantisius, P. (Hemclius.) Gr. lat. Anto. 1558. 8°.

Meursius, (Hemclius.) In: Vinea divina. Lexed. 1659. 8°. II. Opera. Fert. 1741. 4°. VIII.

Note. The Renieris published first in Latin s. 1. et al. (Rheusty, Fidel. 8°, and then 1658, 1. 1747, 8°. Per. 1656, 8°. Biol. in. 8°. Biol. in. 154. 8°, Biol. 156. 8°. Biol. 152. 8°, Biol. 150. 8°. 81. 169. 8°, is clearly of later origin. For literature compare Morison in Stang. 174. 336.

II. Translations.

Latin.

English.

German.

III. Literature.

Aldrich, Patro. (1897) 159-61.

Allatius, Diocese of Meth. Script. In his ob. of the Convizum.

Baronius, Abr. 1890-2. 82. Ch. Fidel. (1889) 104-3.

Boz. Dogmengesch. I. (1855) 251, etc.

Buxton, Dict. of Christ. 1859. 435-447.

Busse, Chr. Ih. (1826-8) I. 30-92.

Caye, Soc. exc. lit. Hist. (1843-5) I. 150-2; II. 1. 27.

Cellerier, Hist. gen. nat. sec. IV. (1723) 25-45. III.

Charteris, Canonicity, (1880) 351.

Cheravek, Rer. de sources hist. (1877-86) 126-90.

Clarke, Sacred Hist. (1827-9) I. 200-266.

Darlington, Cyclop. barb. 1904.

Duffing, Dict. der. 1806-9.

Grevius, Canonicity, (1880) 351.

Hendriksen, Comm. 1. 150-2; II. 1. 27.

Eisenmenger, Harri. 64.

Fabricius, Bibl. gr. (1605) V. 255-9; IX. 486-9. (pp. VIII. 260-71; X. 753-5.

Greisen, Jac. de Cr услуг. (1861) 165. III. 97. II. 342. 410.

Hahn, Hist. of Cost. I. (1850) 309.

Biographical Synopsis

HEROBRONUS. De vit. ill. 84. (Hieron. August. I. 84.)

JAHN. S. Methodius Patroclus seu Patroclanius s. primum civis, gravis. a Methodi redact. demonstrat. Hist. 1860. gr. 8°. (Xxii. 260 p.)

JEREMIES. Hist. church. (1873) 182-3.

KURZ. Kirchengesch. (1873) I-72-3.

KLEIN. Creolitische Wurz. (1873) III. 181-201.

LEWIN. Bib. sac. II. 850.

LEQUIEN. Oriens Christianus. (Paris, 1740. III. P. 796.

LEMBERGER. Encyl. (1879-80) IX. 1267-9.

LEMER. Hist. sac. XIII. (1799) 426-52. 942-22. M.

MAL. Script. vet. nov. coll. VII. 1.

METH. Q. Rev. (1871) 162.

MILMAN. Hist. Lat. Christianity.

MÜNCH. Dogmengesch. (1817-8) I. 420.

NAPOL. Hist. dogm. (1863) 121. (Xii.)

NOLZ. Church hist. (1873) I. 590-70. 720-1. 846-88.

NÜHR. Bib. stor. (1873) 158-9.

OCRER. Int. ecc. (1746-7) IV. 258-9. 260-7. 1749-

ORDIN. Comment. de script. ecc. (1722) I. 290-336.

POMMERED. Bibl. patr. (1841-2) I. 651-88.

PFORST. Biblia. 234-7.

PFLUM. Martyr. (1857) 370-1.

REICH. Gesch. N. Y. Eng. II. (1864) 315-313.

RITTER. Chr. philos. (1841) II. 4-14.

ROSSNER. Bibl. d. K.-II. (1776-80) 256-337.

ROSEN. Hist. ineff. (1870) 729-732.

SAMBON. Int. in Smith. and Wace. Dict. III. 1009-11.

SCHAFF. Hist. church. II. (1880) 809-12.

SCHMIDT. Patrolog. (1879) 129-56.

SCHRAM. Anal. sa. patr. (1790-6) IV. 341-665.

SOCRATES. Hist. ecc. IV. 13.

STOLL. Jo. In. act. SS. m. Sept. V. 733.

SUDAN. In. eiv. Lexicon. II. 500-303.

Supernatural Religion. II. (1872) 192.

TRENTO. Dialog. I. in ej. app. (Hist. 1669-74. V. 8°.) IV. 37.

TULLIEN. Mémoires. (1849) V. 466-74. 765-9.

WETR. In. Libr. Univ. (Michael) (1842-53) XXVIII. 172.

WEYGOTT. C. of. (1842) 856-5.

X. ARNOBIUS.

I. Editions.

SABATINI. PauNus. Roman. 1543(2). P. [Oecolomus HMC.

X. ARNORBUS."
Biographical Synopsis
Biographical Synopsis

LACTANTIUS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

LACTANTIUS

Rostrochi, 1476. p.

Vincelli, Papae de Coloni. 1478. p.

Vincelli, 1483. p. (7)

Vincelli, Thes. de de Ragonensiis, 1490. p.

Vincelli, Benelleis, 1493. p.

Vincelli, 1494. p.

Vincelli, 1497. p.

Tuculius, Marianus. Florcet, S. Ioan. 1513. p.

Tuliicinns, S. Ioan. 1520. p.

Batini, 1521. p.

A: 1532.

Lugd. 1532. 12th.

Atqui, 1539. p.

Par. 1563. p.

Atqui, 1568. p.

Lugd. 1599. 12th.

Biblioth. Par. 1639. p. L. 1639. 8th.

Dresser, M. Lips. 1593.

Lugd. 1616. 10th.

Thuesius, A. Lugd. 1621. 8th.

Sarcke, Th. 1764. p.

Oester, A. 1696. 8th.

Casselius, C. Lugd. 1658. 8th.

Walcher, J. G. Lugd. 1715. 8th. 1745. 8th.

Binnenn, J. L. Lugd. 1739. 8th. Hol. 1786-3. 2 v. 1747.

Le Bru and du Frecent. Lit. Par. 1748. 3 v. 4th.

Xaverius, Romea, 1754-1759. 14 v. 8th. [ad editione non anno at superiore annuadisse habitur.

Obrecht, Writ. 1783-4. 2 v. 8th. (Opera posth. s. patrone. VI. VII. VII.

Blumius, 1831. 8th.

Fritschius, G. F. In. Gervetus's Bibl. patr. eccles. selecta. (Lips. 1842) X. XI.

Iyon, 1845. 8th.

(Books Inedited.)

Par. 1500.

Venet. 1516. 8th.

Genes. 1639. 8th.

Jalowere, D. (Br. V.) Estab. 1577. 8th.

(Epithalamia.)

FRAPRUS, C. M. Par. 1710. 8th.

In: Gionatae et Venet. Lat. VI. (1712) 458-65.

DAVIS, J. C. Camb. 1718. 8th.

(Worship of God.)

Colen. 1406.

TOMASUS. Par. Colerarius. 1530. 8th.

WILBERCUS, J. P. 1542. 8th.

GOELIODER, G. L. Ceres, 1715. 8th.

(Proconsular.)

BALDUNUS. In: Marc. Par. 1679. 8th. II. 1-46, 345-345 (also separately.) Par. 1679. 8th.

Dellas, J. J. L. 1689. 8th.

COLMUS, J. 1684. 8th.

TOMASUS, N. Par. 1690. 4th.

Hallerius, Diur. Prog. et. Soc. ed. 1692. 8th. and new file-page ed. 1693.

LE NOURE, N. Par. 1670. 8th.

In: Apol. ad Bibl. max. Par. 1715. 8th. II.

EYRESWART. Cames, 1833. In: Opusc. sec. patr. III.

RAUL, F. X. de. Louvain, 1835. 8th.

GEOFFRAGE, L. L. 1851. 12th.

ROUSSE, Par. 1854. 8th.

(Phrenes.)

HALM. Textborrowings. Sitz.-berichte der k. k. Akad. Wiss. 1892.

(Phenom.)

S. L. et. a. 2. (128); s. l. et. a. 4. (84); s. l. et. a. (Zoeb.-It.) 4. (45)

Lipk. Tom. 1504. 8th.

Fichetius, A. Lugd. 1610. 8th.

CEREDA, F. Par. 1679. 8th.

BENNECK, J. L. Lugd. 1739. 8th. Hol. 1786-3. 2 v. 1747.

Zoeb. 1786-3. 2 v. 8th.

LE BRUS and du FRECENT. Lit. Par. 1745. 4 v. 4th.

BAXERUS, Romea, 1754-1759. 14 v. 8th. [ad editione non anno at superiore annuadisse habitur.

OBERTHER, Writ. 1783-4. 4 v. 8th. (Opera posth. s. patrone. VI. VII. VIII.

BIANUS, 1831. 8th.

Fritschius, G. F. In. Gervetus's Bibl. patr. eccles. selecta. (Lips. 1842) X. XI.

Iyon, 1845. 8th.

(78)
Biographical Synopsis

LACTANTIUS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

(579)

LACTANTIUS

Biographical Synopsis

LaBouchere, P. (Notes in Bib. De Morra, etc.) In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 187-236.

Baeder, B. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 247-250.

Baeder, F. M. E. "Relatio". In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 251-252.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 5-12.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 13-20.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 29-36.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 37-44.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 45-52.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 53-60.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 61-68.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 69-76.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 77-84.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 85-92.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 93-100.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 101-108.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 117-124.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 125-132.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 133-140.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 141-148.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 149-156.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 157-164.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 165-172.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 173-180.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 181-188.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 189-196.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 197-204.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 205-212.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 213-220.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 221-228.

Baeder, M. In: Migne, PatroL, IX. (1864) 229-236.
Biographical Synopsis.

LACTANTIUS

Biographical Synopsis of Lactantius.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

VENANTIUS FORTUNATUS

I. EDITIONS.

This work is almost always treated under Laestasia. Those who may wish to compare with the other works of Venantius will find it in: Migne, Patrol. Lat. LXXXVIII. (1862) 9-532, a reprint of Luchti's ed. (Romae, 1756-7). 27. 8 vols. For other editions and translations see especially Bume, Chr. Lit., Engelmann, Brunet, and Geiss.

II. TRANSLATIONS.

English.

III. LITERATURE.

The following references, selected from such as chance to be in hand, and excluding all mentioned by Chevalier, are included simply as a contribution to the literature of V. F. Few if any of the references mention the Easter work.

BOYER. Chr. II. (1828-9) I. 185-6.

CHEVALIER, B. In: D. dantesque hist. (1875-76) 758.

CLINTON, FRED. Rom. (1845-50) I. 867, 923; II. 483.

DUBREUILLE, H. D. dantesque hist. (1875-76) 758.

ECKERT, A. Des animaux sauvages indiscute au 6° siècle par Fortunat, etc. Mémo. 1874. 8°. (50 p.)

HERZOG, H. D. dantesque hist. (1875-76) 758; I. 415; III. 160.

MILLERS, E. in: Patrolog. gr. X. (1877-78) 463.

ORIN, L. de. (1756-60) X. 109-9, 183-5; XX. 50.

RAHM, J. D. Hist. im song. N.Y. 1869.

SAMUEL, H. IX. (1886) 527-8.

SCHOPF, K. Kirchen. (1775-76) XVI. 162-3.

YOUNG, W. M. In: Smith and Wace, Lec. II. 352-3.

III. ASTERIUS URBAN.

I. EDITIONS.

GALLAND. Bibl. patr. III. (1767) 277-.

MÉDÉE. Gr. lat. in: Patrolog. gr. X. (1871) 445-56. [Galland, text.]

And in the various editions of Eusebius.

II. TRANSLATIONS.

English.

III. LITERATURE.

BAULT, D. In: Nov. coll. concil.

CAYE. Sc. ecc., hist. lib. (1740-3) I. 85.

CHEVALIER. Bibl. patr. III. (1877-78) 180.

CLARKE. Sacrae Hist. (1899-1) I. 172.

DODWELL. Dissert. 4. Cypr. § 11. [For Asterius Urban author.]

DUMOULIN. Notes on Eusebius.

EDERER. Hist. ecc. V. 16. 17.

FAURE. Bibl. gr. I. (1715) VIII. 615. (169 IX. 525.

HODGKIN. Notes on Eusebius.

LEMMA. Hist. pat. (1890) VII. 473-4.

NOGENT. Hist. ecc. IV. c. 33.

Biographical Synopsis

IV. VICTORINUS.

I. Editions.

MASSIANUS. (Apoc.) Bologna, 1828.

CAYE. (De fide mundi.) In: Hist. Ill. II. p. 417. 1876.

GALLANDU. Bibl. pat. IV. (1768) 49-108.

MIGNE. Patr. Lat. V. (1844) 281-284.

ROUTH. Rel. sacr. (1846-58) III. 431-438.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

BELFARMONIUS. Leg. sacr. (1725) 50-8.

BERTONI. Cartularium. Mag. 1808.

BLEEKE. Vocab. 3. (Apoc.) p. 58.

BEHRE. Chr. Lit. (1858-70) 140-1.

CASSEDOPLANUS. Inst. divina. 7, 9.

CIVITAN. Sac. hist. eccles. (1742-9) L. 147-51.

CHAPTELET. Canonicitas. (1850) 351-2.

CHEVALIER. Rép. d. sources hist. (1877-80) 2295.

CLAVELL. Hist. Sac. (1845-50) III. 431.

COPPENS. (Apoc.) 1804-6. VI. 827-3.

DAHLSTEDT. Die Kommentare d. Victorinus. Ti. 1890.

DASSON. Bibl. sacr. conc. (1886) 259-275.

HERMANNUS. D. v. h. ib. III. 74. (Homer. D. v. h. 75). 1886.

JÄCHER. Geschichte. L. 1791-8. (1)

KRETS. Kirchen. (1839) I. 127.

LARIC. Historia. (1851) III. 162-85, 297-306.

LEONIS. Bibl. sac. II. 1005.

LICHTENSTEIN. Esched. (1787-88) XII. 264-5.

LINDEN. Hist. sac. patr. XIII. (1765) 602-75.

MCLINTOCK and S. CYRIL. (1874) L. 725.

MÖHLER. Patr. I. (1890) 901.

MÜHLENS. Dogmengesch. (1819-21) II. 431-52.

NEUMAYER. Church Hist. (1887) I. 197; II. 376 et pass.

NIXELE. Patr. (1888) I. 360-5.

NOYER. Bibl. Gen. (Hosea) XIV. (1866) 121.

PERMANDEB. Bibl. patr. I. (1834) 51. 500-1.

PEREMBERG. Martyr. (1792) 308.

REIFFER. Hist. Rom. Lit. (1877) III. 261-263.

RÜTH. Gen. sac. (1845-50) III. 359-403.

SCHÖNHEIM. Bibl. patr. lat. (1886) 414-7.

SCHWAB. Kirchen. (1770) 445-3.

SPRITZER. Hist. Rom. Lit. (1873) III. 261-263.

TREMPEL. Hist. (1855) 416.

Wol. Creatio authenticae, Apocalypsis et al. s. spiritus.

V. DIONYSI US OF ROME.

I. Editions.

MANSI. Coll. concill. I. 1000-5.

MIGNE. Patr. lat. V. (1846) 122-38.

ROTH. Rel. sacr. (1845-48) III. 359-403.

SCHRAM. (1874-75) IV. 111-2.

And in all editions of Athanasius.

II. Translations.

Latin.

III. Literature.

ALDR. Patr. (1865) 145.

ATHANASIUS. Ép. de Sententia Dionysii.

BUTLER. Hist. of the Popes. I. (1793) 24-5.

REYNOLDS. Hist. of the Church. (1820) 24-5.

TRINITY. Patr. Lit. (1831) 130-132.

BUSTOS. Chr. Lit. (1848) 51-5.

(82)
VI. THE TEACHING OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

I. Editions.

BRÜNING, W. (Brennan, O.J.) Εἰς τόν δόξαν του Αυτοκρατοροῦ, Κανανεαί, 1833–1834. [In Greek.]

FRIEDRICH. In: Ztschr. f. Kirchenh. (1884) 3. 89–121.

WÜNSCHE. In: Lehrs. (1884) 2. Cf. Lit.

II. Translations.

DANISH.

HILVER. 1884. Cf. Lit.

VOLTO, C. Ephesians, 1884. Cf. Lit.

DUTCH.

ENGLISH.

De ROMESTON. Oxf. and Lond. 1884. 8t. Cf. Lit.

HALL and NAMER. In: S. S. Times. (Phila. 1884, Apr. 3 & 12.) Cf. Lit.

In: Contemp. R. (May, 1884.) Cf. Lit.

HITCHCOCK and BROWN, A. V. 1884. 8t. 1885. 8t. also in: Indian Evangelical Rev. (Calcutta, Jan. 1885.) Cf. Lit.

STARRICK and SMITH. Amer. 1884. Cf. Lit.

In: Lott’s Theol. Quart. 1884, July.

FRENCH.

GERMAN.

Biographical Synopsis
Biographical Synopsis
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

III. Literature.

Allie, F. Remarks upon some Places of Mr. Whiston's Books, either printed or Manuscript. Lond. 1711. 8°

Baumann, C. Doctrines. Dogmengeschichte. (1832) 8°. 1876-77

Bauer. In: "Ztt. BZ". (1838) 131

Bauernfeind, W. Tractatus of W. Bauernfeind concerning the Apostolic Constitutions. 1712. 8°

Codex canon. Ch. e. IX. See below.

Bickell. Gesch. des Kirchenrechts. (1853). 8°

Boscher. Das Apostolische. 8°

Breuker. J. Stud. u. Krit. LVI. (1883) 5-32

Bruno. Julichia. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1874. 8°

Busch. Def. Sac. 8°. 83-6

Busch. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1874. 8°

Buder, J. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1874. 8°

Christian Remembrancer. XXVII (1854) 333.

Christian Rev. XXII. (1854) 200-204

Cotterell. Patr. ap. Const. 1734. 8°; also in: Mg., Patric, gr. I. (1857) 509-20

Cottrell. Jacob, P. De constitutibus apostolicis. Tod. 1746. 8°

Cromer, Z. Gesch. d. Kanons. 200

Cunningham. Churches of Asia. (1890) 26-7

Donaldson, J. In: "Ztt. BZ". (1873). 800-200

[Add. notes. Ed. Const. 200-8]

Edwards. Some Observations upon the Apostolical Constitutions. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1878-79

Ephraim. Hist. 70. 10. 11. 12. 75. 80. 75. 80

Esther. Church Hist. (1859). 242

Farrant. Church Hist. (1859). 242

Farrer, E. An Essay upon Two Anecdoty Manuscripts of the Bodleian Library, and that Ancient Book called "The Discourse of the Apostles," which is said to be extant in them. Wherein Mr. Whiston's Mistakes about both are plainly proved. Exeter, 1711. 8°. "Ztt. BZ". 1712. 8°. CE Mem. of Literature. T. I. 314-316

Hase, Kirchenlagen. (1825). I. 416

Heinrich. R. C. Const. Const. H. 193 (2d ed. 1873)

Hildesheimer. Kettlergesch. (1884) 44-9

Hoff. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1874. 8°

Jackson. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1869. 169

Kraemer, U. De constitutionibus apostolicae. T. I. 184

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De indole et origine canones et constitutionum apostolorum. In: "Ztt. BZ". 1879. (77)

Lagardere. De in...
Biographical Synopsis

I. Editions.

Norgin. (Lat. only.) In: Concil. Paris. 1525. 8°.

Bollandists. Gr. lat. Instruction. 1517. 8°.

CHAP. Gr. lat. in: Concilia ital. Concil. 1512. 8°.

L. P. V., etc. See above.

CUTBER. Gr. lat. in: Opera. Col. 1475. 8°.

Eggerius. Gr. lat. Wittelsbach. 1614. 4°.

Gr. lat. Paris. 1500. 8°.

Ferrarius. Gr. lat. in: Synodum, 1517. 8°.

Atlas. Gr. lat. in: Synodum, 1517. 8°.

BONHOEFL. J. J. Apostolos. 1733. 8°.

HARTMANN. J. D. Gr. lat. in: Entsche. 1796. 8°. p. 204.

HERFEL. Gr. lat. in: Conciliar Gesch. 1875. 8°.

Also in most of the editions of the Constitutions, and in various collections of Canons.

II. Translations.

Cyprian.

Lagrange. In: Rel. jur. eod. 1856.

Cyprian.

III. Literature.

BENEF. Land. 1798.

BRID. W. G. (Bishop of St. Asaph, d. 1708.)

Dodd, S. P. Pandectae Canones S. G. Apostolorum et Conciliorum. 1760-75. 8°.

BICKELL. Legitimac de Can. Apost. in: Codex patris. 1782. 1. 422.

Buchin. Isag. 1855.

Canons.

Canons.

Canons.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

HOMILY OF CLEMENT

Biographical Synopsis.

206

BRYNNHÖLZerin. Constantine, 1876, 8°. [In new copy with missing portions.]

GERHARDT W. HARTACK. Libri. 1874. 8°. p. 110-143; 1877. 8°.

FONIX. Thal. 1878. 8°; 1881. 8°.

Note 1. For further details regarding the above edition compare under Clément of Rome, to whom it was formerly ascribed, and with the editions of whose authors the above title nearly resemble.

Note 2. Until the publication of the remaining portions by Brynholz in 1870 only fragments of this work are known.

II. Translations.

WAKE. Lond. 1693. 8°. 156-30, 531-477; Lond. 1710. 8° [Greatly improved]. Lond. 1719. 8°. 531-9, (2) 347-57; 1727. 8°, 5th ed. 1818 [7]; Hartford, 1834. 8°, 5th ed. 213-77; Lond. 1812. 8°, (2) B. 1846. 8°. Philos. 1846. 8°.

French.

MAINET. In: St. Clement. II. (Paris, 1884. 8°) 176-184. [Epistles of Clement, tr. 190. 1904-5]

Note. In the general translations under Clement of Rome contain the Homily; but the English translations of Burton, that of Abbé Cuvier, and that of Clavardier (the German of Arnold and Hering (1), seem to contain only the first epistle.

II. Literature.

DEITELMAIER, I. A. See Merlet.

HARE. Kirchenrecht. (1850) I. 284.

HOCHMEISTER. Archiv. in d. N. Ü. (1880) 122.

KIRCHER, B. Compar. (1886) I. 104-5.

KUMMER. Credibility. Words (1841) II. 55-7.

MCCLEINTOCK and S. CYCIL. (1834) II. 382.

NICHOL. Patr. (1852) I. 71-9.

SCHMIDT. Ueber den problem, Schriften & apost. VV. (1875).

WEISS, CON. (1876) 177-183.

IX. EARLY LITURGIES.

It is impossible to decide on a method which shall give an exhaustive treatment of the ancient liturgies in the brief time and space and with few books at command. The collection made is, however, and in its place better supplied by the following references: (1) For general study the Introductory Notice in VII. p. 249-30 of this series. For a complete list of the liturgies in Schaff Church Hist. V. 3. pp. 547-8, and the very full list at the end of the article Liturgy, in Smith and Cheisham. Dict. of Christian Antiquities, p. 3 (Herald, 1881). 251-6. Note, however, the following suggestion of a practical working apparatus.

ANONIMUS.

DAVIS. Codex liturgicus. Edin. 1847. 4 v. 8°.

ENGLISH. Lond. 1859. (3) do. Lond. 1866. (Greek). 3 do. English. 1868. 3 do.

Tetraologia liturgica; sive S. Chrysostomi, S. Jacobi, S. Marci et alii, quibus acceedit Ordo Monasticus parallelum ordinis. Lond. 1849.

[Reprint.]

LITURGIA PRIMITIVA. Hierosolimitanae; etiam Liturgiae S. Iacobi. Lond. 1744.

RENANDOT. EUSEI. Liturgiarum Orinatissimae Collectio. Par. 1716. 2 v. 8°. repr. 1879.

SWAINSON, C. D. The Greek liturgies, chiefly from original authorities. Lond. 1848, 8°.

WALKER, C. In: M'Culloch and S. Cyclop. (1847-4) V. 496-504. [Very convenient tables.]

ZIEBROCKI, C. G. In: Herzog, Real-Enc. IX. (1885) 759-801.

The asterisks indicate simply such things as the author has found most convenient in his own use. Add perhaps Renan and Schaff. See also list of works which Bp. Cox has found especially useful in his studies, p. VII. of this series.

The following is the authorship of the translations in this section.

THEODOTUS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPTIC.

I. Editions.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

Augustin, Ers. dass G. Arnold die Valentinian fugam. Tis med. vorschr. noch treul. ubersehnt habe. Clem. 1791, 4a.

II. THEODOTUS.

I. Editions.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

Augustin, Ers. dass G. Arnold die Valentinian fugam. Tis med. vorschr. noch treul. ubersehnt habe. Clem. 1791, 4a.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPTIC.

CHARTERIS. Chronology. (1880) xxvii.

COTTRELL, J. M. Modern criticism and Clement's epistles to the Corinthians, first pointed out in 1735, or their Greek version, newly discovered in Antiquitates Paulinianae. With an appendix containing newly found versions of fragments of the Apocalypse of Malachi. London, 1884. 8°.

DE SELLE, PATRICK. I. (1830) 164.

FEUILLAND, F. G. Historia recensionis controversiarum de Clementi Romani episcopo. Lipsiae, 1755.

GARBE, SPIELER. I. 261 ad XII.

HEYLIG, IN: Weitert. u. K. Klee-Lex. (1847-54) II. 386.

HERBST. (?). IN: Theol. Quartbrev. (1829) 539-552.

MCCaNG and S. C. Clyd. (1874-5) II. 323.

NOELLE, PATRICK. I. (1840) 67-60.

NEMAUCH. Church Hist. I. (1874) I. 659.

NIESSN. PATRICK. 1832-1 I. 71-72.

WESTCOTT. Curs. (1878) 183 (Note 183).

Note 1. The above list is mainly supplementary to the list under Clement of Rome.

Note 2. The disposition to dub the Clementine authorship of this epistle was begun by Lassere and Veenen, and has become the general view; but the opposite view has been strongly maintained by Westcott, Gallaud, Moller, Chalmers, Bache, Zingerlet, Niehs, and especially by Villael and Beelen.

IV. PSEUDO-CLEMENTINE LITERATURE.

I. and II. Editions and Translations.

(a) Recognitions.

I. Editions.

GARBE. (Fragm.) Gr. Lat. IN: Spicil. patr. (1700) I. 389-390.

The Greek is lost. The work has come down to us in the Latin translation of Rufinus, and the first part in a Syriac translation.

II. Translations.

Syria.

LAGARDE, PATRICK. I. 1584. 8°. [Bibliography IV. 1, and fragments of the Homilies.]
Biographical Synopsis

CLEMENTINE LIT.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

LACASUS, P. F., Clementina. [1865] Foolscapp. 3. [Descripta, qua sub Ges. nom. circum litteras.]

— Symmela. 1. (1877) 2-3; 105-112.

LEHMAN, N. Die erkenntnistheoretischen Schriften u. bes. Einblick in ihr literarisch-verhältniß. Ges. 1890. 5°.

LIGHTFOOT, Commentary on Galatians. 4th ed. p. 316.

(Rev. of Lehmann.)

— Ebd. Quellenbrief. (1884) 1. 146.

— Die Cl. Rom. epist. ad Cor. p. 164.

LUMPER, H. in: patr. VII. (1900) 43-76.

MARCH, E. Decl. (1834) 248.

MCEINTURCH and S. Cyc. (1874) II. 383.

MATTHEW, Dr. D. N. J. U. L. 1874. 8°.

MEIER. Dogmengeschichte. Giesen, 1860. 5°.

MULLER, J. Die Clementinen im letzten Jahrh. (1881-1884) 8°.

MOHLER, U. L. (Regensburg, 1840) 111.

MUNCH, Dr. u. H. E. (Alinea et Fleisch. 1752) 1. 83.

NEURIST, H. L. (1891) I. 12-6. [Ch. v. R.]

NEUBRANTZ, D. in: Gepflogen. 1. (1886) 42-6. [Rev. of Lehmann.]

NEUFHAHN, De theologia dogmatica. (Amsterdam, 1700) V. I. 11.

PHILIPPUS. Cod. CXXI.

V. APOCRYPHA OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

I. Editions.

KRANZ, MICH. (Saratov). Apocrypha, h. s. narrations de Christo, Maria, Joseph, cognations et familles de Christ, extra Biblia, etc. 1st. Cathedras Mart. Luderi, parvi, gr. & lat. Basel. 1587. [4. 6. 69.]

Note 5. Schilling gives full literature of early discussions on the Apocrypha. (Of, especially, p. 40-69, 170-71.) But the more scientific and extensive literature on the subject has been published in recent times. (Note 6.)

VI. CATALOGUE OF THE TEXTS OF THE APOCRYPHA.

— Evangelia apocalyp. L. 1536. 8v. in. alt. 1576. 4v.

— Apocalypse of Baruch, L. 1549. 8v. in. alt. 1576. 8v. in.

— Apocalypse of the Jews, L. 1549. 8v. in. alt. 1576. 8v. in.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.

220

APOSTOLY OF JAMES.

Biographical Synopsis.
Biographical Synopsis

PSEUDO-MATTHEW

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

NATIVITY: JOSEPH

I. Translations.

English.

JONES. See under crit.

COOPER. Apocr. (1867) 3-26.

WRIGHT. Syr. apocr. (1866). (7)

II. Literature.

CAVE. S. Exp. eccl. hist. lit. I. (1740) 14.

CHARTERIS. Canon. Eccles. (1850) 2-3. 256. 484.

HOLZMANN. Einl. in d. N. T. (1866) 546.

JONES. Canon N. T. 1899. II. 120-104.

LEPSCH. In: Smith and Wace. Dict. II. 702-3.

TUCHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1840) xxxviii-xlix.

WALTER. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1831) 189-210. at pass.

III. Literature.

COOPER. Apocr. (1867) 281-3.

II. Translations.

English.

COOPER. Apocr. (1867) 281-3.

I. Editions.

WALLIS. GEORGE. A. L. (1722).

FABRICIUS. (Fragm.) 309-316.

TUCHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1840) xxxviii-xlix.

WALTER. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1831) 189-210. at pass.

(3.) The Gospel of the Nativity of Mary.

1. Editions.

WALLIS. A. L. (1722).

HOLZMANN. Einl. in d. N. T. (1866) 546.

JONES. Canon N. T. 1899. II. 120-104.

LIPSCHEI. A. A. In: Smith and Wace. Dict. II. 702-3.

WALTER. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1831) 189-210. at pass.

I. Editions.

WALLIS. GEORGE. A. L. (1722).

FABRICIUS. (Fragm.) 309-316.

ZORN. Anno. (Fragm.) Sahidic lat. 1820.

TUCHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1840) xxxviii-xlix.

WALTER. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1831) 189-210. at pass.

II. Translations.

English.

COOPER. Apocr. (1867) 281-3.

III. Literature.

COOPER. Apocr. (1867) 281-3.

(4.) The History of Joseph the Carpenter.

1. Editions.

WALLIS. GEORGE. A. L. (1722).

FABRICIUS. (Fragm.) 309-316.

ZORN. Anno. (Fragm.) Sahidic lat. 1820.

TUCHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1840) xxxviii-xlix.

WALTER. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1831) 189-210. at pass.

(5.) THE GOSPEL OF THOMAS.

I. Editions.

Cotelerius. In: Nota ad omni. apocr. 6, 17. [Fragment.- from Paris ms. XVI. century,]

II. Translations.

English.

Ed. Com. VIII. (1880) 393-404.

III. Literature.

Charlton. Canonicity. (1880) 41.

Waite. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 147-76.

Ed. Com. VIII. (1880) 393-404.

(7.) THE GOSPEL OF NICODEMUS.

I. Editions.

Hull. Gr. (Henri 1854) 1-15.

manic translations." Waite.

Thesiger. Gr. lat. Ev. apocr. 1853. 211-42.

II. Translations.

Anglo-Saxon.

English.

German.

Berliner Bibel, and other.

III. Literature.

Amersbach. K. Um die Identität des Verfassers des germanischen Evangeliums Nicodemus mit Heinrich Heiser, dem Verfasser des gleichen Paraphras der Apostel-.

Bp. Broome, 1835. 46.

Braun, J. W. J. De Tiberi Christo in d. n. n. f. in der. nume.

reißer, cont. Zurna, 1834.

Braun, C. De indole estet. et. usw. Evangel. Nicod. E.

Charters. Canonicity. 1880. 4, 13-4, 446-5.

Goth. Bibl. 1. 762.

Biographical Synopsis

III. Literature.

I. Editions.

BIRCH. His. view. 1864. p. 154.

II. Translations.

II. Translations.

English.

II. Literature.

III. Literature.

and the literature of the Gospel of Nicodemus.
Biographical Synopsis

Pilate; Joseph; Avenging

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

ACTS OF PETER AND PAUL

I. Editions.

COAPER. Apocr. gsp. (1867) CTX-CX.
HOFMANN. In: Herzet. Real-Enc. (1877-) I 519.
TICHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1851) Ixxi-xxiii.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 220.

II. Translations.

BEECH. R. J. F. Melet. 1904.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 219.

III. Literature.

COWPER. Apocr. gsp. (1867) XXI-XXII.
HOFMANN. In: Herzet. Real-Enc. (1877-) I 519.
TICHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1851) Ixxxiii-xxxiii.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 219.

The literature of the Gospel of Nicodemus.

(13.) THE NARRATIVE OF JOSEPH.

I. Editions.

BIRCH. Hor. N. 1854.
TILLOT. A. J. (1853) 436-47.

II. Translations.

COOPER. Apocr. gsp. (1867) 438-43.
WALKER A. In: Ante-Nic. Lib. XVI. (1873) 37-44.
Ed. Cocc. VIII. (1886) 468-71.

III. Literature.

COOPER. Apocr. gsp. (1867) CXXVIII.
TICHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1853) lxxix-lxxx.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 219.

The literature of the Gospel of the Saviour.

(14.) THE AVENGING OF THE SAVIOUR.

I. Editions.

TICHENDORF. Ev. apocr. (1853) 468-69.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

CLANTAR, A. A. Dissert. apol. Pauli. apostoli in Multan, etc. Venetiis, 1746.
DUCANGE, Gloss. med. et inf. gracc. s. v. Balaam, nephilim, etc. Fabriano, 1786.
FABRER, Cod. apocr. N. T. (1715) 725-6.
HOFMANN. E.Pr. in: d. N. T. (1886) 566.
HOFMANN. Hist. edd. (1799) I 45-6.
KUHNN, Kirchengeschichte. (1868-) I 133-4.

(100)
Biographical Synopsis

II. Translations.

Latin.

Huxley. east. in: Procli Comment. in Aristot. Metaphys. II. 207b (1823-4)

II. Literature.

Latin.

Huxley. east. in: Procli Comment. in Aristot. Metaphys. II. 207b (1823-4)

III. Literature.

Latin.

I. Editions.

II. Translations.

English.

I. Editions.

Huxley. east. in: Procli Comment. in Aristot. Metaphys. II. 207b (1823-4)

II. Translations.

Latin.

Mazocchi. east. in: Procli Comment. in Aristot. Metaphys. II. 207b (1823-4)

I. Editions.

Huxley. east. in: Procli Comment. in Aristot. Metaphys. II. 207b (1823-4)

II. Translations.

Latin.

Huxley. east. in: Procli Comment. in Aristot. Metaphys. II. 207b (1823-4)

II. Literature.

Latin.

III. Literature.

Latin.

(11) BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

BARNABAS; PHILIP.
Biographical Synopsis

ANDREW AND M.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS. PETER AND M.; MATTHEW

FABRICIUS. Cod. spec. N.T. (1719) 730-80.
HOLTMANN. Ital. in d. N.T. (1886) 536.
JENKINS. Caron N.T. (1719) I. 381.
LIPMANN. Apokr. Apocrypha. II. ii. (1835) 1-22.
ROSENBERG. Bibl. d. K.-V. IV. (1777) 35-9. (34 f.)
WAITE, H. Th. Ch. Rel. (1886) 123.

(19.) PHILIP IN HILLAS.

Literature.

TSCHEHNDORF. Acts. p. xxxvi-

I. Editions.

WOOD, KARL. CHERYK. Epist... de martyrio S. Andrei. Lips. 1747.
TSCHEHNDORF. Acts. spec. (1851) 105-11.
MIGROS. Patrolog. gr. II. (1847) 215-58. (TSCHEHNDORF.)

II. Translations.

English.

III. Literature.

GALLAND. Vet. patr. bibl. Port. 1755. I. 1. xxvii-
HOLTMANN. Ital. in d. N.T. (1886) 547.
KURTH. Kirchengesch. (1885) I. 134.
FOESSEND. Herzog. (N.Y.) 160-1.
ROSENBERG. Bibl. d. K.-V. IV. (1777) 567.
WAITE, H. Th. Ch. Rel. (1881) 125.

(20.) ACTS OF ANDREW AND MATTHEW.

I. Editions.

TSCHEHNDORF. Acts. spec. (1851) 139-60.

II. Translations.

Ethiopic.

MALAN. In: Ctenarch. spec. 147-64.

Anglo-Saxon.

GRIMM, JAKOB. Andreas u. Elea. Karol. 1840. [Contains the Anglo-Saxon form of the Acts of Andrew and Matthew.]

English.

III. Literature.

HOLTMANN. Ital. in d. N.T. (1886) 547.
FOESSEND. Herzog. (N.Y.) 160-1.
TSCHEHNDORF. Acts. spec. (1851) 105-11.

(21.) ACTS OF PETER AND ANDREW.

I. Editions.

WOOD. pp. 407.

II. Translations.

Ethiopic.

MALAN. Certain ap. 184-9.

Old Slavic.

III. Literature.

WAITE, H. Th. Ch. Rel. (1881) 34 et pass.

(22.) ACTS OF MARTYRDOM OF ST. MATTHEW THE APOTLE.

I. Editions.

TSCHEHNDORF. Acts. spec. (1851) 121-5.

II. Translations.

Ethiopic.

III. Literature.

TSCHEHNDORF. Acts. spec. (1851) 121-5.

(183)
Biographical Synopsis

THOMAS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

I. Editions.
THILDE. Leips. 1823. 80.
TICHENDORF. Acta apoc. (1854) 160-234.
BRONNER. Suppl. ad apoc. 1883 (?). [Supplies Nubian missing fragments.]

II. Translations.
Syriac.

III. Literature.
FABRICIUS. Cod. apoc. N. T. (1791) 919-38.
HILGEBEN. In: Zuchl. II. vatis. Theol. XVII. (1833) 383-4. [Rev. by Bourani, 1931.]
HOLTZMANN. Einl. in d. N. T. (1886) 547.
JONES. Canon N. T. (1928) I. 246-6.
KURTZ. Kirchenges. (1889) I. 234.
LIPPIUS. Apostelgesch. (1885) 225-347.
PETERSON. Helv. (N. F.) 160-72.
SIMON. Nov. obs. de texta, etc. p. 7.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

MARTYRDOM OF THE HOLY AND GLORIOUS APOSTLE THADDAIUS.

I. Editions.

II. Translations.
Armenian.
MOESSNER. Vita et martyrium S. Bartholomaei, insert. (1877). (Latin transl. from the Armenian.)

ENGLISH.

III. Literature.
— Apok. Apostelgesch. II. II. (1884) 24-106.

Note. Perhaps identical with the Pseudo-Apollini Latin. Cf. especially Mousinger.

(26.) ACTS OF THE HOLY APOSTLE THADDAIUS.

I. Editions.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

(27.) ACTS OF THE HOLY APOSTLE AND EVANGELIST JOHN THE THEOLOGIAN.

I. Editions.
ZAHN. Erlangen. 1850. p. 238.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.
KURTZ. Kirchenges. (1885) I. 234.
— Apok. Apostelgesch. (1884) 24-106.
LIMBURG. Historia. (1953) 4-34.
MRCHEN. (1953) 4-34.
PETERS. Helv. (N. F.) 160-72.
SIMON. Nov. obs. de texta, etc. p. 7.
TICHENDORF. Acta apoc. (1851) 243-40.

Note. Much of the above literature relates to other Acts of John. For the editions and thorough treatment of various Acts, and recensions, translations, etc., not included in this series, consult Lipsius's admirable monograph.

(103)
Biographical Synopsis

I. Editions.

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) 1-23.

II. Translations.

English.

Ed. Core. VIII. (1886) 582-6.

III. Literature.

Dillmann. In: Herzog Real-Enc. VII. (1860) 317-.

Löcher. Offiz. Jb. (1859) 217-.

(29.) Revelation of Esdras.

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) 3-66.

[Lib. III, ed.]

[61-62]

(30.) Revelation of Paul.

I. Editions.

Tischendorf. Gr. Apoc. apoc. (1866) 34-69. [Eng. translat. of the Synoptic added.]

II. Translations.

Syriac.

English.

Ed. Core. VIII. (1886) 575-81.

III. Literature.

Depauw. Bibl. peregr. II. 94.

Schweizer. Einleitung in d. heil. Schriften. II. (1843) 192.

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) xxiv-xviii.

— In: Studen. (1851) 111.

(31.) Revelation of John.

I. Editions.

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) 70-94.

II. Translations.

English.

Ed. Core. VIII. (1886) 582-6.

III. Literature.

Houthem. Enl. in: N. T. (1886) 551-.

(32.) The Book of John Concerning the Falling Asleep of Mary.

I. Editions.

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) 93-112.

II. Translations.

English.

Ed. Core. VIII. (1886) 587-91.

III. Literature.

Bonnier, M. In: Ztschr. f. wiss. Theol. XXIII. (1886) 235-47. (Die kleinsten Schriften u. d. —)

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) xxiv-xvi.

Compare below.

(33.) The Passing of Mary.

I. Editions.

Tischendorf. Apoc. apoc. (1866) 113-36.

Beckel. In: Theol. Quartalschr. (1866) 459-.

II. Translations.

Syriac.

Arabic.

English.

Ed. Core. VIII. (1886) 593-8.

III. Literature.

Bonnier. See above.

236
VI. THE DECERTALS.

The purpose and limits of this Synopsis compel, as a question of relative value, the omission of almost all the references gathered on this topic, leaving only the following suggestions.

I. Editions.

Müller. Patr. gr. x. (1837) 9-18, 106-143, 155-208. And in all editions of Pseudo-Itho-ber, various collections of councilas, etc.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

Space is taken, however, on account of his relation to Hippolytus, for the following supplementary titles on Callistus, which, with two exceptions, exclude all titles given in Chevalier.

CALLISTUS.

Callistus and his council. In: Dubr. R. XXXV. (1855) 437.

History of Callistus. In: Month. VIII. (1867) 1, 181-2, 285-.

Lemmer. Hist. ass. patri. XIII. (1790) 75-60.

McCulloch and S. Cyril. (1874) I. 29.

Morally. G. H. In: Smith and Wace, Dict. I. 500-1.

VII. MEMORIES OF EDESSA AND ANCIENT SYRIAC DOCUMENTS.

I. Editions.

Cukerton, W. M. Septuagint Syriacum. Containing the traditions of Bardesia, Meliton, Anthonius, and Mara. Lond. 1835. [Introduction, Text, Translation, Notes.]

— Ancient Syriac Documents. With a Preface by W. Wright. Lond. 1846. 4°. [King of Edessa, Doctrines of the Apocalypse, Doctrines of the Apocrypha, Books of the Apocrypha, etc.]

Phillips. The Doctrine of Addai the Apostle, with an English translation and notes. Lond. 1816.

II. Translations.

Cukerton, see editions.

The correspondence of Christ and Abgar is found in —

III. Literature.

Bürkle. B. W. Sch. VIII. 417.

Hildebrand, J. J. In: Fem. Jüng. Gesch. jetz. (Zürich, 1774) 148- (Gysenius.)

In: Christl. Magaz. (Pfeininger), III. (1780).

Rosenberg, L. Th. Legenden. I. (Berlin, 1809) 32.

Stolberg. In: Gesch, u. w. X. (Kempten, 1810) 457-3.

Partially, or complete translations are frequent.

ARABIC.

2, 8.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

MOSES OF CHORESE. (History.)

(Editors.)

Scores. C. T. In Smith and Wace. Dict. II. 832.

MOSES OF CHORESE. (Literature.)

Annier. 1869. Le Véritable. 1875. 2 v. 89.

Langlois. V. Historien de l'Arménie. Par. 1867. II. 47-175.

Johannes, J. S. Peter. 1889. 2 v. 89. [Very poor.]

Emun. J. B. Moscov. 1858.

CHEVALIER. Rev. d. sources hist. (1877-86) 1061-2.

A. In: Rev. d. sources hist. (1842) 224.

Emun. J. B. Moscov. 1850. 80. 98 p.

Garabedian. 1851. 5. 129-50. (Colluthus de mars.)

Haig. 1860. 13.

Le Cited. Civil. 1864. 1.

Le Cited. Civil. 1864. 1.

Marchand. In: Rev. d. sources hist. (1852) 4-5.

Migne. Patrodo. Gr. CXVI. 141-144.

GUTH.

ASSEMA. Marriott. I. 221.

Basil. Menot.

JACOB OF SAMTFR. De vita et scriptis s. Jacobii.

Barnabas Sarug in Heterotomia episcopi dissertatio historico-theologica. (1861) 80. (50-82 p.)

Bennet. H. (1833) 1834.

Le Véritable. 1834. 1849.

Le Véritable. 1834. 1849.

Le Véritable. 1834. 1849.

Pratt. See above.

French.

Fanti. G. E. (1841) (By Munich Baron.)

Italian.

Johannes, J. S. Peter. 1889. 2 v. 89. [Very poor.]

Emun. J. B. Moscov. 1858.

(Literature.)

— In: Rev. d. sources hist. (1842) 224.

Emun. J. B. Moscov. 1850. 80. 98 p.

Garabedian. 1851. 5. 129-50. (Colluthus de mars.)

Haig. 1860. 13.

Le Cited. Civil. 1864. 1.

Le Cited. Civil. 1864. 1.

Marchand. In: Rev. d. sources hist. (1852) 4-5.

Migne. Patrodo. Gr. CXVI. 141-144.

GUTH.

ASSEMA. Marriott. I. 221.

Basil. Menot.
Biographical Synopsis

244
VIII. REMAINS OF THE SECOND AND THIRD CENTURIES.

I. Editions.

Grass, Gr. lat. Spicil. patr. (1700) II. 119-25.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

Bartholomew, Ann. (1858) 128, 1.

Humilmen-Gregius, Dogmenges. (1832) II. 92. [v.1;2]

Baum, Dogmenges. I. (1867) 334; II. 2.

Bouquet, Dogmenges. (1825-31) I. 37; etc.

Burch, Chr. Lit. (1889-9) 1. 6.

Cave, Sert. evang. hist. Lit. (1741) I. 52.

Culler, Hist. gen. aut. sec. (1798) I. 685-90; II. (1858) 400-3.

Chater, Comment. (1880) 66.

Chevalier, Rép. d' sources hist. (1879-86) 1899.

Clarke, Sermo ed. (1834-1840) I. 147. [v.5;8]

Clavell, Pseudo Rom. (1843-50) I. 110; II. 402.

Dornier, Poesen van Christ. I. (1884) 119-20; 376-7.

Duménil, Hist. aut. eccl. (1696) 1. 95.

Ephraim. Hist. gr. (1712) V. 180. (2. VII. 154-5.)

— Vers. ingl. Christ. (1751) 166.

Galland, Eccl. script. (1851) I. 658-901.

Herkenrotter, Kirchenges. (1899-90) I. 56; III. 37.

Herrrod, De v. III. ep. (Hon. August. I. 30.)

Hers, Eccl. hist. (1877) I. 175.

Ivett, Hist. eccl. (1799) II. 49-51, 444.

II. ARISTOS OF PLEIA.

I. Editions.

Grass, Gr. lat. Spicil. patr. (1700) II. 127-33.

Routh, Rel. sec. (1827-6) I. 91-109.

In: Migne, patr. gr. V. (1827) 177-86.

Note. Fragments gathered from Hesychius, Eusebius, Martyrs, and Origen. See note.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

Busse, Chr. Lit. (1805-9) I. 8.

Cave, Sert. evang. hist. Lib. (1741) I. 88.

Cellerier, Hist. gen. aut. sec. (1792) I. 692-5; II. (1827) 404-5.

Cave, Sermo ed. (1794-5) I. 454. [v.1;2]

Dirk, Poesen van Christ. I. (1865) 121-2; 378-9.

Fabrice, Hist. gr. (1712-3) V. 189-221; VII. 96. (2. 745-61; VII. 175-8.)

Giesbert, Kirchenzeug. (1887) I. 442.

Harnack, Liebert, ib. Apoll. (1832) 315-33.

Hesychius, Epit. de Galat. III. 13, etc.

Ivett, Hist. eccl. (1799) I. 96.

Kurtz, Kirchenges. (1864-6) II. 111.

Biographical Synopsis

(4) Hegesippus.

I. Editions.

Galland, Bibl. patr. II. (1760) 59–61.

Flower, Fr. Opus. posthumae, Roman. 1763, p. 81.

Schultheiss, In: Speli phil. I. (1833) 204–26; 1863–6; 1875–75.

(1892) 191–5.

II. Translations.

Engl.

III. Literature.

— Kirchengesch. I. 86.

Baeßie, In: B. Or. (1854) 151.

Bellarmine-Louise. Scr. ecol. (1875) 286.

Bill, G. F. (1875) 286.

Birch, C. V. Patr. (1837–8) II 197.

Cavall, Quellen z. Gesch. u. W. III 345–8.

Cate, C. Ecol. (1840) 345–8.

Cellarius, Hist. gen. ant. soci. (1780) II 1109–24.

(1883) 473–5.

Chanziner, Canonicity. (1889) latv-lat. 127–9; 199, 227, 228.

Chapalier, Rep. de, souvenirs hist. (1883) 1006.

Clarke, Sacred Hist. (1830–1) II 193.

Clinton, Fasti Rom. (1831–2) I 141, 149; II 409.

Creedger, Gesch. des N. T. 27.

Cremer, Churches of Asia. (1861) pass.

Denz, De Eusebii Cass. (1781) 115.

Donnellan, Hist. Chr. lit. 1864–6 I 112–21.

Ens, J. In: Hegesippus text. der coelest origin. Tract. 23. 1871.

Flora, (Franz.) De quodam Hegesippi fragm., etc. (1879) 40. (Franz.)

Fletcher, Gesch. des N. T. 1875; P. VII 82; also in: Migne. Patr. gr. V. (1857) 1701–2.

Halle, Exe. orient. script. (1856) II 452–74.

Hieronymus. De vir. il. (1884) I 15.

— Hegesippus u. die Apostelgeschichte. I. 118.

— Die Kirchengesch. der Apostelgesch. II. 118.

Hoffmann, Gesch. des N. T. 135–9.

Kehr, Geschichte der Kirchengeschichte (1868) 260–18.

Koerner, Gesch. des N. T. 35.

Kohler, Geschichte der Kirchengeschichte. (1885) 39.

Larimore, Commendable. (1861) 115.

Luthardt, K. J. Die Kirchengeschichte. (1874) 114–17.

M‘Clintock and S. Cyc., (1872) I 145.

Nitsche, K. P. Der Kirchliche Standpunkt Hegesippus. (1875) 181–2. (Apog. 1863.)

Oe, Gesch. des N. T. (1872) II 1025.

Pexskard, Bibl. patr. (1842) I 161–2, 212–16; 293–82.

Ritschel, Gesch. des N. T. (1874) II 18, 67; tr. (Eng. (1888) 130, 304.

Schrader, Gesch. des N. T. 1875; P. VII 82; also in: Migne. Patr. gr. V. (1857) 1701–2.

Scholemann, Biblioth. X, p. 265.

Scholastic, Theol. XXI, p. 147–149.

Scholastic, Theol. XXV, p. 147–149.

Scholastic, Theol. XXVII, p. 147–149.
Biographical Synopsis

Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth

Editions
- Greek: Gr. lat. Spcl. patr. (1700) II. 214-8.
- Routh: Rel. sacri. (1846-8) I. 175-201.

Translations

Literature
- Baronius: Ann. (1590) 175, S. 11-5.
- Beethoven: Dogmengesch. (1822-3) I. 52, etc.
- Blachernus: Hist. of Church. (1875) 33.
- Bosan: Chr. lit. (1828-9) II. 8-9.
- Cave: Ser. eccl. hist. (1741) I. 77.
- Chelius: Hist. gen. sac. sac. II. (1730) 80-3. I. (1858) 404-5.
- Champion: Cenotaph. (1800) 44-5. 197.
- Challoner: Rep. & sources hist. (1770-86) 366.
- Clarke: Sacred lit. (1806) I. 101.
- Clinton: Paul Rom. (1845-60) I. 167. 169. IV. 410. V. 628.
- Conring: In: Eras. & Gracch. I. 120. (1594) 359.
- Coffin: Lives of hist. (1748) 203-4.
- Coxe, A. C.: Intro. note. In: Ed. C. VIII. (1886) 769.
- Donaldson: Hist. Chr. Lit. (1864-6) III. 214-20.
- Dowser: Person of Christ. I. (1846) 19-20.
- Eusebius: Hist. eccl. II. 25: III. 41: IV. 21, 23, 35.
- Fabricius: Bibl. gr. 1705. (1712) V. 191. (2. VII. 164-3).
- Feast: Hist. eccl. (1697) I. 480-3.
- Hallock: Real. orient. script. (1836) II. 759-89.
- Hase: Kirchengesch. (1858-1) 163.
- Hirschber: In: K. u. Mol. (1875) A. I. 714-5. (3. 730-41.)

Rhodon

Editions
- Olshausen: Monumenta. I.
- Gallandius: Bibl. patr. II. (1796) 144-7.
- Moore: Patrolog. gr. V. (1527) 133-8.

Literature

Translations
Biographical Synopsis

MAXIMUS; CLAUDIUS APOLLINARIS.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

Maurer, Hist. sc. pat., IV. (1876) 5-77.
Nau, Ch. Hist. (1877) I. 467, 474, 475.
Nuschel, Petrol. (1881) I. 233-7 (n. 111).
Roth, Dogmengesch. I. (1846) I. 347; Petrol. gr. V. 133-7.
Tillemont, Mem. hist. ecle. (1692) III. 64-5.
Trithemius, Sc. eccl. 23.

I. EDITIONS.

Gallandus, Bibl. patr. II. (1765) 146-7.
Roth, Rel. sac. I. (1874) 347-11; II. (1846) 77-107, 108-21.
Mige, Petrol. gr. V. (1873) 1339-56.

II. TRANSLATIONS.

English.

III. LITERATURE.

Birge, Chr. (1838-9) I. 15.
Caye, Cer. eccl. hist. lit. (1790-3), (1841) I. 55.
Cellarius, Hist. gr. ant. sac. II. (1736) 266; I. (1738) 537.
Hundem, De vi. ill. 47. (Hemer. August. I. 48.)
Luscher, Hist. s. pat. IV. (1841) 13-1.
Mæ sic etc. and S. Cyri., (1874) V. 943-9.
Naunster, Church hist. (1872) I. 721.
Perrmann, Bibl. patr. (1842) II. 214-5.

(8.) CLAUDIUS APOLLINARIS, BISHOP OF HIERAPOLIS AND APOLLOGET.

I. EDITIONS.

II. TRANSLATIONS.

English.

III. LITERATURE.

Barenburg, Ann. (1885) 137-7.
Bauer, Dogmengesch. I. (1846) 259.
Shelby, J. A. Das Leben u. Wirken des h. Apollinaris.
Bem, 1857. 127.

(9.) POLYCRATES.

I. EDITIONS.

Gallandus, Bibl. patr. II. (1766) 160-.
OEBERLIN, Monumenta, I.
Roth, Rel. sac. (1846-8) II. 9-36.

II. TRANSLATIONS.

English.
Biographical Synopsis
Biographical Synopsis

III. Literature.

BUSER. Chr. lit. (1848–9) I, 15–6.
CAYE. Scg. schol. hist. (1767–81) I, 1741 I, 94.
COXYDE. Canon. xii. (1882) 184.
CHWALIK. Rép. d. souvenirs hist. (1877–80) 1858.
CURZON. Churches of Asia. (1888) pass.
HIERONYMUS. De vir. ill. 45. (Honor. August. I, 46.)
LIGETT. Euseb. (1837–42) X, 676.
LUMMER. Bibl. sa. patr. IV. (1810) 25–81.
LUTHARDT. St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel. (1875) 48–9.
MAURER. Hist. eccl. (1845) 243–5.
NEANDER. Church Hist. (1872) I, 106–250.
PRESEES. I, 186–7.
MARX. (1879) 243–8.
SEIFERT. Germ. Scg. eccl. 3.
SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. II. (1875) 189, 406, 473.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 415.

(10.) THEOPHILUS, BISHOP OF CARSEND, IN PALESTINE.

I. Editions.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

BUSER. Chr. lat. (1828–9) I, 16.
CAYE. Scg. schol. (1745) I, 87.
DUPIN. Bibl. eccl. (1685) I, 178.
FABRICE. Bibl. gr. (1712) V, 194–211 XII, 653. (2nd VII. 169–71.)
HIDROLYN. De vir. ill. 43. (Honor. August. I 44.)
ITEN. Getl. Lex. (1790–1).
LUMMER. Hist. sa. patr. IV. (1785) 31–7.
MUCAMUR. De vir. III. (1875) 233.
NEAL. Eastern Chr. Antiphol. (1871) 34–5.
NEANDER. Church Hist. (1879) III, 177.

(11.) SERAPION, BISHOP OF ANTIOCH.

I. Editions.

GALLAND. Bibl. patr. II. (1766) 167–
KONIG. Bibl. sac. (1768–8) 447–452.

II. Translations.

III. Literature.

BETHUEL. Dogmenges. (1822–3) I, 34, etc.
BUSER. Chr. lat. (1828–9) I, 16.
CHERRIER. Hist. gén. art. usq. III. (1790) 205–7; I. (1858) 538–9.
CHWALIK. Rép. d. souvenirs hist. (1877–80) 205.
EBERHARD. Hist. eccl. VI, 12.
GASS. In: Hertzog, Real. Enc. (1877–8) XIV, 126.
HARMS. Dogmenges. (1886) 468.
HIDROLYN. De vir. ill. 43. (Honor. August. I, 44.)
HILGERS. Sehral. Schola Alex. (1786) 80.
HURBE. Gelehr. Lex. (1765–70).
LICHTENBERGER. Encycl. (1787–8) XI, 539.
LUNTHER. Bibl. sa. patr. IV. (1786) 48–53.
MOHLER. Patrologia. (1849–50)
NEAL. Eastern Chr. Antiphol. (1871) 29–63.
NIESCH. Patr. (1831–) 1, 203, (4th.)
NOWOG. Bibl. Gen. (1861) 475.
OEST. Hist. eccl. (1766–8) II, 241–5; (1769–) II, 639–42.
PERMANDE. Bibl. patr. (1842) II, 265–70.
SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. (1871) I, 47–2; II, 166–17.
TRETHEM. Bibl. eccl. 77.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1881) 409 and pass.
WESTCOTT. Canon. (1897) 383–7.

(12.) APOLLODORUS.

GALLAND. Bibl. patr. II. (1766) 397–
OLDSHEIM. Monumenta. I.
Biographical Synopsis

II. Translations.

English.

III. Literature.

ACTA. In: Rutili. 72.

Acta in Romand. (1673) Ap. II. 335-6. (38, 516-7.)

BUNGE. Chr. Hl. (1828) ii. 122.

CABERCI. S. Apol. apol. 1. 86.

CHAPELIER. Hist. gen. aut. soc. II. (1799) 229-31; I. (1818) 40-4.

CHAPLAIN. Canonicity. (1880) 340.

CHAPLAIN. Rép. d. sources hist. (1877-80) 25.

CLERKIN. Sacred lit. (1830-4) I. 126; II. 215.

CLONTON. Fasti Rom. (1845-60) I. 221; II. 413.

DRASSER. J. In: Apol. 1. 22.

EUGENIUS. Hist. eccl. V. 18-21.

FAUR. Bibl. gr. (1795) (1792) V. 191. (277, 452.)

FLEURY. Hist. eccl. (1801) I. 355-6. (7)

HEZIOS. De vir. ill. (1797) 536. (Cf. Schaff-Herz. 1. 146.)

HIERONYMUS. De vir. ill. II. (Honor. August. I. 42.

HOFMANN. Hist. eccl. (1799-1801) ii. 12-3.

LARDNER. Credibility of the works (1834) II. 21-34.

LIECHTENBERGER. Eusebi. (1875-76) I. 425.

LUBEL. Bibl. sacrae. (1777) I. 190-400.

LUMM. Hist. eccl. (1785) IV. 1-3.

LUMM. Hist. patr. V. (1800) 1-8.

LUMM. In: Smith. On the Author of the Fourth Gospel. (1875) 140.

MÜNZER. Biblioth. Ital. (1755) ii. 89-90.

NEUARD. Church Hist. (1873) i. 118.

NURSE. Petr. (1830-3) I. 203.

NUNN. Bibl. Gr. et Rom. (Hoefer) (1828) 710.

O. Hist. eccl. (1796) III. 3-61; (1799) III. 8-9.

PERMANDES. Bibli. patr. (1845) I. 213.

RUSSELL. Acta sine (1698) 21-34 (33-17).

SCHOLT. Hist. (1880) 240-41.

SCHRAMM. Kirchenkreis. (1792) III. 168.

SCHULT. Vite sae. (1684) 184.

TEILMONT. Mem. hist. eccl. (1692) III. 55-9, 613-5.

THIMME. Sac. (1852) 61.

(13.) PANTANEUS, THE ALEXANDRIAN PHILOSOPHER.

I. Editions.

HALLOES. Ill. conc. orient. sec. (1852) 125.

ROTH. Rel. sacr. I. (1844) 373; II. (1844-5) II. 373-182.

MION. Patrolo. gr. V. (1878) 334-35. (In ed. of Theodoret.)

II. Translations.

English.

III. Literature.

ALOZI. Kirchenges. I. 102.

BAUER. Dogmengesch. (1865) 418, (8 II.)

BRENNER. See. (1826-31) I. 1, etc.

BLACKWELL. Hist. of Church. (1879) 150-1.

BUNGE. Hippolytus. (1884) I. 23:1-6.

BUNGE. Chr. Hl. (1828) 1-20.

CABERCI. S. Apol. apol. 1. 86.

CLERKIN. Sacred lit. (1830-4) I. 126; II. 215.

CLONTON. Fasti Rom. (1845-60) I. 221; II. 413.

DUPIN. Bibl. aug. eccl. (1699) I. 184.

EUSEBIUS. Bibl. gr. (1877-78) XVII. 214.

HOFMANN. Hist. eccl. V. 10.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.

HOFMANN. De vir. ill. (1797) 536.
Biographical Synopsis

PSEUD.--IRENAEUS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

SCHEID. Patroli. (1879); (1886) 48.-
SCHMIDT. Kirchenkreise. (1772) III. 191-2.
II. 457-61.
SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. (1875) I. 471; II. 191.
TILLEMONT. Mém. hist. ecd. (1695) III. 170-4. 649-50.
TRALHÖSLH. Stor. lett. Ital. II. 368.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1891) 218-6.
WESTCOTT. Union. (1875) 226-9.
VII. 615.
159).

Note. Compare Encyclopedia articles and other literature on the Arianist School.

(14.) PSEUD.--IRENAEUS. (LETTER OF THE CHURCHES OF VIENNA AND LUGDUNUM.)

I. Editions.

OLDHAUSEN. In: Münchener. Berol. (1820). and in all editions of Ephesius.

II. Translations.

Eng. Lit.

LARDNER. Works. VII. (1831) 156-176.
DALYMOLE. (Lord Hailes.) Account of the martyrs at Smyrna and Lyons. Edinb. 1776.

PRATTEN. P. B. In: Anti-Wic. Lit. XXII. (1877) 17.

III. Literature.

218, 219-2, 226, 259-3, 265, 266, 266.
CLAIRK. Sacred Lit. (1850-1) 104.
COOK, A. C. Introd. note. In: Ed. Comm. VIII. (1886)
777-8.
CONNINGHAM. Churches of Asia (1880) 273-82.
DONALDSON. Hist. Chr. Lit. 1864-6 III. 259-85.
GALLAND. Vet. patr. biibl. (1792) 288. I. ed. 1816;
also in: Migne. Patroli. gr. V. (1872) 190-6.
HERZOG. Kirchenlex. (1872-80) I. 201; III. 38.
ITCIUS. Hist. ecd. (1709) II. 47-8.
KILLEN. Ancient Church. (1865) 296-6.
LARDNER. Credibility. Works (1831) II. 159-185.
LEIGHTON. Apoc. Patr. II. (1885) 499-500.
LITURG. Hist. Liturg. II. (1784) 282-294: IX. (1793)
541-67.
LUTHARDT. St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel.
(1873) 45.
MAURER. Ed. Hist. (1854) 214-60.
CHURCH. Hist. (1874) II. 214-215.
SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. (1875) II. 200-4, 250-6, 324-5.
WAITE. Hist. Chr. Rel. (1887) 216-217.

Note. The above work is a favorite and is literature abundant. Supplement this catalog by works on Irenaeus, commentaries on Ephesius, all works on Martyrs, and especially works on the history of Lyons.
Biographical Synopsis

APPENDIX.

1. PATROLOGISTS.

(a) Ancient and Medieval.

Contains: Hieronymus, Germain, Isidore, Honorius, Sigebertus, Marcus Casilionis, but omits Hesychius.

Contains: Hieronymus, Isidore, Honorius, Sigebertus, Marcus Casilionis.

HEINRICI. († 415.) Hieronymi de viris illustrissimis libri accessit. Germaini catalogus virorum illustrorum. Ex evocatione Grae. Heidelberg. Leipzig, 1799. 8°, (xv. 177 p.) To the year 580, 140 writers, beginning with the apostles. The work is also quoted in Catalogus scriptorum ecclesiasticon et de scriptoribus ecclesiasticis.

ISIDORUS. (Hispalensis 1. of Seville, † 636.) De viris illustribus. Compare the editions in Fabricius and Magni. 45 chapters. Editions to see.

LIPPERFROTH. (of Toledo, † 685.) De scriptoribus eccl. Compare ed. above. [Add. 16 chapters to Isidore.]

MAGNE. (of Lyon, † c. 1115.) De illustriis ecclesiasticis. 45 chapters. [Add. to Isidore.]

GERMANUS. († 1148.) De scriptoribus eccl. et scen. IV. [Take without addition from Hieronymus, Germain, and Isidore.]

SUGGERIUS GEMBACHENSI. († 1168.) De scriptoribus eccl. et scen. 15 chapters.

(b) Modern.

Biographical Synopsis

DUPIN, Louis Elie. (1657-1709. Prof. Dr. of the Sorbonne-Jansenists.) Nouvelle bibliographie des auteurs ecclésiastiques, contenant l'histoire de la vie; la catalogue, la critique, et la chronologie des leurs ouvrages.
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

PATROLOGISTS.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.

Biographical Synopsis.
Biographical Synopsis

PATROLOGIES

JEJBRICK, History of the Christian Church. (1842.) See under Church Histories.

KARNER, MEYER (C. R.) Uber die göttliche Erlöschung in den Schriften des heil. Vaters, oder Grundzüge der Kirchengeschichte. Luzern, 1832. 8°. ["Unterdruckt."]

KURTCHE. See under Church Histories.

LAMBERT, JACOB. Die Dienstboten der Kirche et Geschichte der scriptorium ecclesiasticum, quas antiquitatem Bellarmine. Paris, 1660. 2 v. 8°. ["Unterdruck."]

LAND, J. B. (R. C.) Patrology. Boston, 1809. 8°. ["Unterdruckt."]

LANDER, N. The credibility of the gospel history. Lond. 1773-35. 12 v. 8°. Also in Works. Lond. 1788. 11 v. 8°. 1819. 5 v. 4°. 1827. 10 v. 8°. 1831. 10 v. 8°. 1838. 10 v. 8°. ["Unterdruckt."]

LARIN (F.) Scriptura patrum; a Looking-glass of the Fathers, wherein you may see each of them drawn, characterized, and displayed in their true colours. Lond. 1745. 12°.

LOECKER, CAES. (Proc.) De patribus africani liber duo. Rotterdam, 1722-4. 2 v. 8°.

LUFTER, GOTTFRIED. (Benedictin.) Historia theologica et canonum historia historica, quae ab initio saec. i. a. Sancti Petri usque ad annum 1769. 8°. ["Unterdruck."]

MACARIUS, of St. Elias. (R. C.) Institutiones patrologiae. Grazia, 1871. 8°. ["Unterdruck."]

NEBBI, JOSEF. (R. C.) Leben der Patrologie und Patrologie. Mains, 1851. 8°. ["Very convenient and useful manual, especially for the Patrological school."]

NIETER, CH. Bibliothèque sacrée grecque-latine. Paris, 1856. 8°. ["From Momms to St. Thomas Aquinas." Of some use for the synopsis and description of editions."]

NOBREDA, J. P. Les Pères de l'Église latine. Leur vie, leurs œuvres, leur temps. 1858. 2 v. 12°.

OQUIN, CARMER. Supplementum de scriptoribus ecclesiasticis a Bellarmine usque ad annum 1460. Parisiis, 1666. 8°. - Constitutum Bibliothecae Medii ævii, 1679. 4°. "(Amst.)"

PETROZZI, F. (Proc.) Bibliotheca patrologica. Lips. 1766-5. 2 v. 8°. (Brief account, with large extracts in German translation. "Valuable in its line." Auth.)

RUF, JOH. LEONE. (R. C.) Kurze Patrologie. Stuttgart, 1848. 8°. ["Unterdruck."]

SANTOS, JACQUES. Traité de veterum scriptoribus ecclesiasticis. Conques (Amideum), 1668. 8°. Coloniae (Austri). 1878. 4°. ( Canonical and apocryphal N. T. and Ante-Necrosis works. "Not the chief points about which the student should aim.")

SCHULHARDT, CARL. (Gemälde.) Indicien patrum ac veterum scriptorium ecclesiasticorum ordine alphabeticum. Ratisb., 1772. 8°. ["Unterdruck."]

SHAKESPEARE,AS. (Proc.) Inscriptionis libri d. script. eccles. continuatio ab a 1500, in quo describitii h. a. 1600. Lond. 1655. 4°. (Continuation of Bellarmine, v.)

SCHMIDT, F. (Proc.) Historische Vorlesungen. 3 v. 12°. (Continuation of Bellarmine, v.)

SCHRAM, DOMINICUS. (Benedictin.) Analysis operum s. patrum et scriptorium ecclesiasticorum. Aug. Final.
II. VARIOUS WORKS.

Being a selected list of such works mentioned or used in this Synopsis as seem to require further description or explanation.

1. Bibliographies.

("Answers the question, What are the sources to consult on such and such a historical period?"") An invaluable and useful tool for all students and scholars, providing a comprehensive catalog of historical sources.

Biographical Synopsis

ENCYCLOPEDIA SYNOPSIS.

Note: For bibliographies of theological literature compare arter, Bibliotheca Bibliographica, 1800, 32, p. 197-220; (Patrologia, and Valere. Bibliographia Bibliographica, Paris, 1829, p. 77-78.

The general works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological

and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is

the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological

and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is

the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological

and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is

the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological

and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is

the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological

and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is

the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

Of works on several Bibliography, the subject itself the

AUTHOR, the English, and the American Catalogues, of

For English, and especially of the British, Theological

and of the periodical, the best work on the subject is

the two separate Catalogues, the British and American,

published by the British Library and the American

Library, respectively.

The works on the Bibliography of Theology and very little to the bibliography in the Patrologia, but that of

J. K. Wrigley, and H. M. Lecky, in the Britannica, (British Literature), Macmillan, and especially of Wits, and especially of Wits, and of ANDERSON, who are also of use for various purposes.

III. Collections.

BICKERSTAFF, EDWARD. (Prof. 1798-1803.) The Christian fathers of the first and second centuries, their principal remains as large, with selections from their other writings. Lond. 1836. 8°.

CAPPARI, C. P. Ungedruckte unverbrachte und wenig bekannte Quellen aus Geschichte der Taufemblemik und des Glaubenswegs, herausgegeben in Abhandlungen. Christiana. I. 1869; II. 1871; III. 1873-75. 3 v. 8°.

Cassinari, G. Opera scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinarum. Editus consilii et imperii academiae literarum cæsareae. Vindobonum. Wien, 1807-86. 9 v. 8°. [In progress.]

CASTIGLIONE, F. E. Epistolae romanorum Pontificum unice ad annum 460. Par. 1774. 4°. ed. Schloemann. Leipzig. 1795. 8°; continued to 1513 by A. Thiel. Brannock. 1808. 8°.

FABRICIUS, GEOR. Posthumo veterum ecclesiasticorum opera et operum reliquiae et quae fragmenta. Bazel. 1764. 8°.

FISCHER, PHIL. Novum patriam apostolicam. Edit. post Helvetianum quartam v. Bazel. 1758-81. 2 v. 8°. 1781. 2 v. in 1 v. 8°. [Good account of the literature.]

GERKING, O. W. HARNACK, AD. AND ZAZEN, TH. Patria apostolicarum operarum. Edit. post Dresdenianum alteram III. Leipzig. 1873-75. 8°; ed. 2. 1875-80. 8°; ed. minore 1875. 8°. [Central bibliographic monograph.]

GWACHOR, J. E. Bibliotheca patrum ecclesiasticorum latinarum selecta. 1795-1817. 13 v. 8°.

GERBI, J. E. Spicilegium sac. patrum. Oxon. 1698-9. 2 v. 8°; 1770. 2 v. 8°; 1744. 2 v. 8°; and (Lowden) 1744. 2 v. 8°.

HEINZ, H. O. O. Patrum selecta librorum ex antiquis. Würz. 1808-10. 2 v. 8°; 2 v. 8°; 1815. 2 v. 8°; 1820. 2 v. 8°.

LA ROUSSE, MARGARET. Bibliotheca sacra. Patrum selecta. 200 vols. Par. 1757-9. 9 v. 8°; 1759. 9 v. 8°; 1809-10. 10 v. 8°; 1824. 9 v. 8°; ed. Schott and others under the name Magister biblicus veterum patrum. Colon. 1618-22. 15 v. 8°; Par. 1854. 17 v. 8°.

LAVARD, A. P. Opera et fragmenta patrum et auctorum Latinae historiarum et doctrinarium, post mortem dedicata. Leipzig. 1858. 8°.

MAITSAIRE. Opera et fragmenta veterum patrum Latinae historiae, append. in locum. Lond. 1753. 2 v. 8°; with new title page. Lond. 1771.

Maxime bibliotheca veterum patrum et antiquorum scriptorum ecclesiasticorum. Lip. 1657. 2 v. 8°. [Addenda more than ten authors to the Magister biblicus veterum patrum. Latin only.]

"Editor is usually considered to have been Ph. Dusart (Dusart), but the credit belongs to John and Jacques Arnaud." [Zaring]. In epist. dedicata Ph. a S. Jacobo. Augst. Vind. 1719. 2 v. 8°.

[Müller's edition, like his Encyclopädie, are not to be sold, when there are better. The Abbe Honors' continuation will add one hundred or more volumes.]

Miropolytikon. Vetus quorumdam brevium Theologorum, ab Episcoporum oev. presbyterorum . . . eleuchae, Bazel. 1550. 8°.

NIES, JO. NIC. Thesaurus. Geoporoepolosouv tou de te ratia bibl. Lipp. 1701. 4 v. 8°.

ROUX, FRANK. Media Patrum constitutae, quae ad Papam und Constantinum scripta prodiunt. 1605. 8°.

SHEPTH, K. RELIGIONE SACRAE. Graec. 1824-38. 4 v. 8°; 2 ed. 1845-58. 4 v. 8°; 1 v. 8° supplementary to both editions. 1855. 8°.
Biographical Synopsis

COUNCILS

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS.

In 1537 a volume of corrections was ordered printed with the Additamentum de urbe et in urbe, and the books by Marsilius, which was suppressed, but reprinted by the Jesuits under the title "Additamentum," ed. Bollandist, etc. The "in urbe" was recommended on account of the "in urbe," and it was published in 1539.

COLANIUS, P. Sacramenta concilia ad regna editionem editionem, 1526. 2 v. (Reprint not worthy of notice.)

MANNI, J. D. (Dominicanus) Sacram. concilia nova et emendata collection. 1639-60. 31 v. P. (Extends to 1870.)

(Lives of Saints and Martyrs)

Acta Sanctorum quasi tota orbe Julius, vel a Catholicis scripsit, scriptores, quorum et Graecia, alumnorum gratiam alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum gratiam in alumnorum grat
Biographical Synopsis

CHURCH HISTORIES

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SYNOPSIS

MISCELLANEOUS

284

V. Miscellaneous.

Biographical Synopsis
Biographical Synopsis

Monatsh., i. Wiss. u. Lit. See Allgemeine Monatsh., etc.
Monograph, für gebildete Stunden. (Wilhelm Schenck), 1877-78. 53 v. 1880.
Neueste theolog. Nachrichten, Zürich, 1878-79. 4 v. 1880.
Nieuwe Rotterdamse Courant, etc.
Nova Rev. de Theol. See Rev. de Theol.
Oesterreichische Vierteljahrschrift für Katholische Theologie. Wien, 1872-76. 12 v. 1880.
Prebendarian Quarterly Review. (Preb. Q.) New York, 1873-77. 6 v.
Quad. Review. (Quad.) London, 1845-54. 10 v. 1880.
 Radical. (Radical.) Boston, 1866-72. 10 v.
Repositorium für bibl. u. morgenl. Literatur. Leipzig, 1877-80. 19 pts. 1880.
Renaissance. Beiträge zu den theol. Wissenschaften. See Beiträge, etc.
Revue Contemporaine. Paris, (= 1851) 2 ser. v. XXXI-XXXV.
Saturday Review. 1851-71.
Schöfferhoff. See Jahrbücher für Religions-, Kirchen- u. Schulwesen.
Scottish Church Review. — 1854-70.
Sintiens Studien d. ev. Geschichtlichen Würtembergs. See Studien, etc.
Stichs Mus. crit. See See Mus. crit.
Stenzen. See Stenzen. See Beiträge zu den theol. Wiss.
Studiis Biblias. Oxford. (1834.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Theological Studies. See Theol. Soc. See Theol. Lit. (1855.)
Biographical Synopsis

Universitäts-Quartalschr. (Univ. Q.) Ztschr. 1844—
86, 43 v.
Vierteljahrschr. etc.
Vierteljahrschrift für Theologie u. Kirche. (Lübeck u.
Wiesbad.) 1845—55, 8°.
[In 4 series. Series 4—Monat.
56, viii. 8°. Vierteljahr.
Wesensgründe Review. (Weston.) Lond. 1824—56, 126
v. 8°.
Wien’s u. k. Journal. See Neues k. j. Journal, etc.
Wochentliche Tischlehr. [1848] No. 24;
Zeitschrift des deutschn. orientalischen Gesellschaft.
Leipzig, —1837—41 v. 8°.
Zeitschrift für christl. wissenschaft u. christl. Leben.
1850—1881. 14 Jg. 8°.
Zeitschrift für die gesammten kathol. Theologie, (red. von J. Schenker u. J. M. Haasle.) Wien, 1846—6, 8 v. 8°.
Zeitschrift für Geschäftlichkeit des Erzbisth. Freiburg.
fürb. 1852—54. 7v. 8°. (7)
Zeitschrift für die gesammten liturgischen Theologie und Kirche, herausg. von A. G. Rubbelsh. und H. E. P.
Gürich, fortgeführt von E. Z. Delitsch und Geise.
Leipzig, 1856—78, 15 v. 8°.
Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie; herausgeg. v.
Ch. F. Illgen; (1848) von Ch. W. Nickel; (1867—)
von Kuhn. Eps. 1852—74. (57) 8°.
Zeitschrift für die österreichischen Gymnasien, Wien,
—1854, 35 Jg. 8°.
Zeitschrift für Katholische Theologie. Jenaerzde. 1877—
1887. 11 v. 8°.

Zeitschrift für Kirchengesch. in Verh. mit W. Gans,
H. Reuter u. A. Ritschl, herausg. von Th. Bring. (Leida, 1856—7, 8 v. 8°. (7) Bringt jährlich auch gedruckte Unter.
schriften über die neueste kirchengeschichts. Literatur.)
Zeitschrift für Kirchenrecht. Freiburg i. Br., —1837—88, 23 v. (N. F. 7 v.) 8°.
(Luthersche) Leipzig, 1860—87, 38 v. 8°.
Zeitschrift für Recht. Theologie. (Oehler.) Heilbronn,
1854—87, 20 v. 8°.
Zeitschrift für praktische Theologie. Frankfurt a. M.
1859—87, 9 Jg. 8°.
Zeitschrift für protestantische Geistliche. (Frankl.-u.
Niemeyer.) Halles, 1844—5, 3 v. 8°.
Zeitschrift für Protestantismus und Kirche. (Herzog.
von Hanover, seit 1847 in verb. mit G. Thomasius und Ad. von Schrull.) Erl. 1850—75, 8°.
Zeitschrift für Theologie. Tubingen, 1849—50, 3 prl. 8°;
1520—40, 11 v. und Index, 8°.
Zeitschrift für Wissenschaftliche Theologie, in Verbindung mit mehreren Gelehrten, herausg. von A. Hilgenfeld.
Jena, 1853—87, 30 Jg. 8°.
1856—88, 8°.
Zeitschrift f. wis. u. Leben. (1853.) See Der Kathol.
ik. (7)
Zeitschr. v. Lübeck u. Wiesbad. N. F. II. (1850.) See Vierteljahrschrift f. Theol.
Zeller’s Jahrbücher. See Theologische Jahrbücher.
Zeitschrift für vaterländische Geschichte und Alterthumskanstnde. Münster, —1855—43 v. 8°.
INDEX OF SUBJECTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Subject</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Abgar</td>
<td>105-106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts and Martyrdom of St. Matthew, the Apostle</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of Andrew and Matthias</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of Barnabas</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of Paul and Thecla</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of Peter and Andrew</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of Philip</td>
<td>101-102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of the Holy Apostle and Evangelist John, the Theologian</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul</td>
<td>104-105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of the Holy Apostle Thaddæus</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acts of the Holy Apostle Thomas</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Addaæus</td>
<td>106-107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Africanus, Julian</td>
<td>65-66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexander of Alexandria</td>
<td>7-7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexander of Cappadocia</td>
<td>69-70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexander of Lycopolis</td>
<td>72</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ambrose (of Alexandria?)</td>
<td>108-109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anaxilas</td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ancient Syriac Documents</td>
<td>105-109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andrew and Matthias, Acts of</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apollonius</td>
<td>114-115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apollinaris, Claudius</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apostolical Canons</td>
<td>38-39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apostolical Constitutions</td>
<td>30-32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendices, Vols.</td>
<td>117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barabæan, Acts of</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnabæ, Acts of</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bærenæus, Epistle</td>
<td>16-23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bartholomew, Martyrdom of</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bibliographies</td>
<td>123-124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Book of John concerning the falling asleep of Mary, the</td>
<td>104-105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caesæus</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canon, Apostolical</td>
<td>268-285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callæus</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Church Histories</td>
<td>126-128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Claudius Apollinaris, Bishop of Hierapolis and Apologist</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Alexandria</td>
<td>38-42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Alexandria, See Clementine Literature</td>
<td>99-95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clementine Homilies, See Clementine Literature</td>
<td>95-96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clementine Recognitions, See Clementine Literature</td>
<td>98-99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Rome, Epistles concerning virginity</td>
<td>1-4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Rome, Epistle to the Corinthians</td>
<td>1-5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Rome, Homily of</td>
<td>89-90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Rome, Recognitions and Homilies</td>
<td>92-93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement of Rome, Second Epistle of. See Homily of</td>
<td>123-126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Collections</td>
<td>123-126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Condemnation of Thomas the Apostle</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constitutions of the Holy Apostles</td>
<td>168-88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cyprian</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Death of Pilate</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epistles concerning virginity, The two</td>
<td>91-92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epistle to Diognetac</td>
<td>5-7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epistles to Diognets</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Falling asleep of Mary</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fornaliæ, Venerable</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Giving up of Pontius Pilate</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gospel of the Infancy, The</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gospel of pseudo-Matthew</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gospel of the nativity of Mary</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gospel of Nicodemus</td>
<td>98-99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gospel of Thomas</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gregory Thaumaturgus</td>
<td>86-86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guita</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Habib</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hagææus</td>
<td>111-112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Herman, Pastor of</td>
<td>98-103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hippolytus</td>
<td>25-28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>History of Joseph the Carpenter</td>
<td>97-98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Homilies of Clement, See Clementine Literature</td>
<td>95-96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Homily ascribed to Clement</td>
<td>89-90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ignatius, Epistles</td>
<td>10-15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Infancy, Gospel of</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ireneæus (Porphyrius). Letter of the Churches in</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jacob of Sarag</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James, Protevangelion of</td>
<td>98-107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John, Acts of</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John, Revelation of</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(35)
Index of Subjects
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>INDEX OF SUBJECTS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Joseph the Carpenter, History of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph, the Narrative of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Julius Africanus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Justin Martyr, Various Works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mary and the Virgin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lactantius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Letter of the Churches of Vienna and Lugdunum. See Irenaeus (Pseudo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Letter of Pontius Pilate concerning our Lord Jesus Christ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clemens, Eusebius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lives of Saints and Martyrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malchus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Martyrdom of the Holy and Glorious Apostle Bacteria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mary, Falling asleep of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mary, Gospel of the Nativity of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mary, Passion of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mathetes, Epistle to Diognetus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matthew, Acts and Martyrdom of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matthew (Theodotus), Gospel of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matthias, Andrew and, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maximus, Bishop of Jerusalem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Melito</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Memoirs of Edessa and Ancient Syriac Documents</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Melito</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minucius Felix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moses of Chorene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moses, Revelation of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Narrative of Joseph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nativity of Mary, Gospel of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Testament Apocrypha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicodemus, Gospel of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Origen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pamphilus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pamphilus, the Alexandrian Philosopher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Papias, Fragments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paping of Mary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pastor of Hermas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patrologiae</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul and Thecla, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul, Peter and, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul, Revelation of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Periodicals</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter and Andrew, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter and Paul, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter of Alexandria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philemon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippus, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippus in Hesperis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirrus of Alexandria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plautus, Passio, The Death of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Giving up of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Letter concerning Christ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Report of, concerning Christ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polycarp, Epistle to the Philippian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polycarpus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pseudo-Irenaeus (Letter of the Churches of Vienna and Lugdunum)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pseudo-Clementine Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pseudo-Matthew, Gospel of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quadratus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Recognitions of Clement. See Clementine Literature</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remains of the second and third centuries</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Report of Pilate, the Prosecution, concerning our Lord Jesus Christ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Report of Pontius Pilate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revelation of Enoch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revelation of John</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revelation of Moses</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revelation of Paul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rhodion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saints and Martyrs, Lives of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sergius, Bishop of Antioch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tatian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teaching of the Twelve Apostles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tertullian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thaddaeus. See Addaius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thaddaeus, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodotus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theognostus of Alexandria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theophilus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theophilus, bishop of Caesarea in Palestine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theophilus of Antioch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas, Acts of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas, Consolation of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas, Gospel of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twelve Patriarchs, Testaments of</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Various works</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yohannan Porphyrianus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victorinus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vienna and Lyons, Letter of the Churches of. See Irenaeus (Pseudo)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
COMPREHENSIVE GENERAL INDEX

to

by

REV. BERNHARD PICK, PH.D.,

Author of Index to "Lange's Commentary on the Old Testament."
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Aaron, i, 6, 81, 105, 119; ii, 103; name and nature of, viii, 243; the offering of, i, 461; ii, 103; killed by Cain, viii, 365 buried by angels, 570.

Abgar, reign of, viii, 703; trouble between Herod and, 702; builds Edessa, 702; promises to send deputies to Maximus, 703; hears from them of Jesus Christ, 703; suffering from a disease, writes a letter to Jesus, 558, 654, 704; copy of the letter sent by, 654, 704; reply of Jesus to, 654, 704; who sends an image of himself on a towel, which heals him, 558, 733; Thaddaeus visits and heals, 733, 654, 733, 704; Abgar is converted, and intends to destroy the Jews for crucifying Christ, 654, 660, writes to Tibersias, 676, 665, 703; answer from Tiberias to, 701; visits to Narses of Assyria concerning Addasus, 660, 705, and to Ardashir concerning Shemiram, 705; is made bishop of Edessa, 665.

Abidjan, the high priest, wishes to obtain Mary as wife for his son, viii, 371; procurator that a protector should be sought for Mary, 371; goes to Mary and Joseph "like water of drinking from the Lord" to drink, 373, 374.

Abdelladis, i, 60.

Abominations practiced by the Valentinians, i, 344.

Abraham, a heathen, iv, 192.

Abraham, i, 7, 9, 13, 81, 82, 142, 178; ii, 107; viii, 81, 180, elect. ii, 445; saw the day of Christ, i, 467, 469; waited for the promises of God, 561; had faith identical with ours, 492; both covenants prefigured in, 495, 496; vain attempts of Manon to exclude him from Christ's salvation, 470; meaning of the sacrifice of, vii, 325; the poverty of, viii, 180.

Abraham, i, 7; meaning of, ii, 445.

Abraham, Braithwaite's doctrine of, i, 395; iii, 660.

Abolition, form of, iii, 668.

Abstraction from material things necessary to the knowledge of divine truth, ii, 460.

Abundance, viii, 547.

Abusive language, punished by law, vii, 487.

Abysos, what is meant by, vii, 459.

Academics, viii, 13, 711; confused teaching of, vii, 21.

Actans, mother of the fourth Sun, vii, 480.

Acception of the Lord, i, 391.

Acts, Prayer of, viii, 519, 577.

Acts Navies and Tepheinias Priscus, viii, 57.

Accommodation, unknown to Christ and his apostles, i, 417.

Accused, the, on, viii, 537.

Accusation, also, to be punished, viii, 416, 418; qualification of, viii, 416; how to be treated, 587; disqualification of, 617.

Achaeus, birth of, vii, 491; a hermaphrodite, 491; self-mutilated by the craft of Bacchus, 491; love of Attis, 492; fatal consequences of this folly, 492.

Achilles, Christianity attested by miracles in, vi, 438.

Achelous, account of, i, 390; origin of the visible world from, 391.

Achilles, the hero, vi, 351.

Acts and Martyrdoms of Andrew, viii, 511 sec.

Acts and Martyrdom of St. Matthew, viii, 528 seq.

Acts and Liturgy of St. Andrew, viii, 536 sec.

Acts and Martyrdom of St. Matthew, viii, 528 seq.

Acrobats, burned at temple of Minerva at Larisa, vii, 568.

Acuta, Paul and Thecla, referred to, iii, 597.

Adam, the sinner, vii, 472; action better than speech, ii, 310.

Adam, involuntary and voluntary, i, 360, 362; wicked, to be avoided, viii, 336.

Adon, freed from taxes, vi, 488.

Adon, the genius of, Peter of Alexandria, vi, 261 seq.

Adon, the genius of, Peter of Alexandria, vi, 261 seq.

Adon, the genius of, Peter of Alexandria, vi, 261 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.

Andrew and Matthias, viii, 350, 379 seq.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

father, i. 61; the first made a partaker of salvation, 455; in Pau-dian, 531; the perfect man, v. 49; sought a second, v. 85; did not have the spirit? 241; was not ignorant, 241; temptation and fall,
v. 82; Adam dined on the sixth day of creation, i. 551; his repentance signified by his builds, 457; why driven out of paradise, 457; death of, 552;
analogy between the first and second, 454; type of Christ, vi. 316;
of the fathers, 402; in Hades:
Jesus, viii. 438, delivered ed to Hades, 437; brought into paradise, 437, 456; and Eve and the family of, 501; sickness of, 505; sends Seth and Eve for the sake of mercy? 568;
the death of, 502; the body of,
seen by Eve lying on the face, and angels praying, 561 raised to Paradise, 569; taken to Paradise, 569; burial of, performed by angels, 570.

Adam and Eve, the story of, according to the Ophians, i. 336.

Adas, Phineas, and Egeias, the story of, in the ascension of Eneas, viii. 438, 439, 442, 445, 447; report of Kadinius and Locius, 234.

Address of the Apostle, extracts from various books concerning Eneas, vi. 661, 662; with the Eneas, 661, 663; builds builds churches in the villages,
663; appoints bishop of Ephesus,
663; addresses the address, 661;
and chief men, 663; death of, 664;
incanted by Christians and Jews all alike, 664; is bound by Jesus, 664; who follows in the footsteps of, 664.

Address, horastacy of Justin, i. 378-389.

Address of Tertullian to magistrates,
ii. 17, 66, 117.

Adolphus of Thasvale, on baptism,
vi. 450.

Adoration served by Apollo, vi. 482.
Adoration loved by Presbyter, vi. 485.

Adoration, personal, vi. 302.

Adrian, Emperor, his epistle in behalf of the Christians, i. 186.

Adultery punished with death, vi.
483.

Adultery, i. 35, 105, 183; vii. 493;
lewd treatment of, 74; 751;
forbidden in the Decalogue, 757;
the extreme sinfulness of, 757;
its condemnation under the Gospel, 79; law of Moses no precedent for judging, 79; 80, or Christ's pardon of the adultrers, 81; apostolic judgment of, 53; St. Paul's severity towards,
80-93; has no abominations on earth, 94; testimony of St. John, 95; spirit of the Church on, 977;
against of, 97.

Adultery, spiritual, viii. 432;
evil of, 455; of the gods, 232;
advised by philosophers, 226.

Aedent Christ, vii. 215; foretold by Moses, 475; the prophet and righteous men, 474; precursors of,
458; benefits of the, 202;
Peter of Alexandria, on vi. 2801;
the second, vii. 54.

Aedent, the, of the true Prophet, viii. 88.

Aedent of Christ, 4; 210, 243, 253;
254; ill. 172, 226; viii. 90, 91.

Aegeus, son of Jupiter, first builder of temples, 507; loved by the Nerlitii, 485.

Aegistus, or Aegistus, pronoun, and the Aepicte, vii. 511; measures Andrew to Christen himself unless sacrificed to the gods,
511; threatened Andrew with crucifixion unless he sacrifice himself to the gods,
511; Andrew to himself and again threatens him, 513; tortures Andrew, and orders him to be crucified, 514; the people cry out against, 514; visits Andrew on the coast, and desires to release him, 515; the miserable down to, of, 516.

Aegina, vi. 297.

Aegina, epistle to, by Alexander of Alexandria, vi. 299.

Alexander held that the Novacensae were the Men, vi. 474.

Alexander, characterized by, 138; noninsignificants, vi. 410; son of Venus, 433; deified, 474.

Alexandria, meaning of the term, i. 316; the wealth, the lack of, not to be deduced from Scripture, 387;
nor typified by the women with the issue of blood, 389.

Alexandria, i. 46, 89, 91, 118; the thirty of Valentine, i. 516; ill. 506, 507; their names, i. 506; ill. 506, 507;
how they are said to be indicated in Scripture, iii. 317, 319; the production of, 373; 379; further inquiry into and refutation of the speculations respecting the, 380; 384; of the theory, further exposed, 382; 384; ill. 506; the twelve apostles not types of the three, 389; the thirty not typified by the baptism of Jesus in his thirtieth year, 390.

Alexandrians quoted, i. 428.

Alexandrians, on the unity of God, i. 290;
seven, 400; ii. 10, 139, 148, 445, 450, 471, 474, 477;
Chrysostom quoted, i. 378.

Alexandrians, on the unity of God, i. 290;
seven, 400; ii. 10, 139, 148, 445, 450, 471, 474, 477;
Chrysostom quoted, i. 378.

Alexandrians said to have been conversed, 51; alleged that Christians were to be found amongst them, vi. 447.

Alexanders, the so-called, i. 316;
how the passion is said to be indicated in Scripture, 359; of Prolemy, 333; revealed by Tetrad.
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

not to be boasted of, 430

Ah, love victorious, vi, 465.

Ahab, 187, 189.

Ahab, the, xi, 285, 324; 204, 213, 301; 315.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.

Ahab, the, viii, 515-516.
give in to God at sin-setting their repentance of the conduct of men, viii. 375; the two, ii. 24; attend to the nature of their death, viii, 376; fallen, evil, and unjust, viii. 377; discoveries made by, 273; taught idolatry, vii. 64; astrology, viii. 455; astronomy, divination, and other arts, vii. 68; the giant off-spring of the fallen, 274; the immortals of, 272; the names of, viii. 350; often of the human, birds, insects, ii. 325.

In the book of, vi. 325, define, vii. 244; necessary to punishment, vii. 336; of God, against sin, viii. 373; unlike man's, vii. 277; witness to by the holy, 276; and by the oracles of Apollo, 279; the mischiefs of, viii. 375; righteous, 153; 303; of God, a treatise by Lactantius, viii. 389; 390.

Ancient, i. 416, 506; ii. 630.

Animal men, the, of the Valentinians, iii. 244; looks into the intermediate habit, 326.

Animal men, creation of, vii. 46b, 251; assigns an age of, 199; figure of, 256; theories of Epicurus, 257; man closely allied to the other, vii. 460, 441, 445, 444; man not morally superior to the other, 520, 512; deified and worshipped, 470, 488; cloven-footed, i. 144, rambler, 145; forbidden or allowed of, food to Israel, spiritual significance of, 143; clean and unclean, a figure of the gift of the Holy Spirit, 553; a figure of the church, Jews and heathens, ii. 555; and plants, illustrating the providence of God, viii. 172.

Animality of the Jews, vii. 91.

Anna, type of the Gentiles, vi. 501.

Anna, the wife of Josiah, beheld her barrenness, vii. 361, 360; is visited by an angel, and promised a son, 362, 360; given birth to Mary—her song of praise, 360, 371; married to Cleophas after the death of Joachim, 362.

Ananias, the son of, killed by the child Jews, vii. 378, 355.

Annunciation of the Holy Ghost, viii. 256, 273, 505; 663; not to be invoked, iv. 444, 650, 652, 661; not worshipped by Jews, iv. 445; inferior given to Gentiles, ii. 504; bear away over nations, vii. 178; guardian, ii. 533; viii. 105.

Annus appointed bishop of Rome by Peter, vii. 677.

Answer to the Jews, a treatise by Tertullian, iii. 151 854; date of, 151 occasion of, writing, 151.

Ant. Jupiter's conversion into an, vi. 495.

Antitheses, viii. 396.

Antimonic theology, its freedom from errors, iv. 273; reliance on Holy Scripture, vi. 242, understanding of church teaching, 420, 384, 385.

Antonius, Epistle of, viii. 626 809.

Anthem, the, vii. 553.

Anthropologists, the, vi. 135.

Anthropomorphism of God, how explained, ii. 506, 611, 615, 644.

Anthem, meaning of the term, vii. 41.

Anthropos, i. 26, 380; vii. 215, 254, prophecy of, vi. 190, 204-206, 214, 216, 217, 242, 243; springs from the tribe of Dan, 207, his two advents, 217 coming of, iv. 211; at hand, vi. 346, 349; how prefigured, i. 555; his reign and death, 558; different names answering, 559; the fraud, pride, and tyranny of the kingdom of, 553; concentrates in himself the kingdom, 557; the ideal evil, iv. 501; the number of the name of, i. 558, 559; the man of sin, iii. 453, 456; seen by Enoch in Tattnosis, a description of, vii. 572, 573; seen and described by John, 585; time of the consummation of, 582.

Antichrist and the, a treatise by Hippolytus on, vi. 204, 205, 248.

Antiochus, quoted, i. 483.

Antiochus, epistle of Alexander of Cappadocia to the, vi. 244.

Antiochus, church at, i. 48, 85, 91, 96, 109, 126; epistle of Alexander of Cappadocia to, vi. 154; seat of early Christians, ii. 97; see of Theophilus, 88; excitement at, caused by Simon Magus, vii. 216.

Antiochians, genuine and supposed successors of Ignatius to them, wherein lies their bonds of the true doctrine concerning Christ against the views of early heretics, and exerts their might in certain duties, i. 110-112.

Antiochus, i. 334, 244.

Antiochus of Cyzicus, merit of, vi. 315.

Antiochus, matriarch, vii. 356.

Antiphanes, the, doctrine of, vii. 376; quoted, ii. 272.

Antiphons, ii. 248.

Antipodes, theory of, incredible, vii. 94.

Antiquity, the most fertile source of errors, vi. 249.

Antitheses, testifies to the unity of God, vii. 141 quoted, ii. 549, 570.

Antipatiius, epistle of Cyprian to, vi. 327.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Antiochus, the 5, 5.
Antiochus the Divine, epistle in behalf of the Christians, i, 180; is exalted, by Melito to acquaint himself with God, and to seek the way of truth, viii, 753 seq.
Antoninianus, see Justin, ii, 362.
Antonius, father of Simon Magus, viii, 98.
Antony and Cleopatra, history of, vi, 139.
Antony, dog-faced, vi, 517.
Anyua, b, 66.
Apostol, i, 322.
Apochles, history of, iii, 257, 526; vi, 157, 147.
origin of his heresy, 257; his credo consisting of Chrestoc, his body, 259, 529, 533; answer to, 157.
Apoklesia, a slandering one, v, 379.
Aphrodite, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
Apologet, the grammarian, b, 66.
Apologet, viii, 765; and Kronos, 605.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Archelaus, king, commits suicide, viii, 272.
Archilochus, vi, 176; date and character of his writings, 177.
Archimedes, life of, vi, 447.
Archimedes, the, vi, 450; his hydraulic organs, vi, 153.
Archimedes quoted by, vi, 447.
Archytas assigns all things to numbers, vi, 452.
Archelaus, son of Orestes, vii, 335.
Archeus, king of Persia, vii, 305; is maintained by Abgar, 793.
Arceus referred to, viii, 36.
Argus, their kings, vi, 59.
Argos, destruction by fire of temple of Juno at, vi, 516.
Arnagoras, the, of Justin’s apology, stated, ii, 170.
Argonauts in favor of attending shows, referred, iii, 79, 80.
Argus, slain by Mercury, vi, 450, 517.
Aristides, the, vii, 170.
Aristotle’s library, condemned, vi, 460; opinion on the, 291, 299.
Aristotle, the, vi, 172.
Aristotle, story of, vi, 476.
Aristides, epitaph of Julius Africanus to, vi, 193, 299.
Aristobulus, ii, 651; and Lais, vii, 84, 257.
Aristaenus, vii, 247, 249; extracts from his disputations on Jason and Pausanias, 243, 750.
Aristophanes quoted, vii, 483.
Aristotle, flatters Alexander, ii, 65; disavows him, iv, 275; and defends him, iv, 436; flight of iv, 425; theory of mind of, ii, 173; theory of substance and accidents, v, 19, of the soul; general sketch of his philosophy, 100; adds a fifth element to the primary causes, vi, 437; affirmed that Minerva was the moon, 472; on the unity of God, vi, 143: quoted iv, 319, 599.
Aristotelian philosophy in the early church, vii, 257.
Aristotianism, denies the mind, vii, 287.
Arithmetica, pretended to be by Archimedes, vi, 301; interpretation by Numbers, 31, 45.
Aristides, heretical, ordained, and deposed by Peter of Alexandria, vi, 262; 265; restored, 268; his final excommunication, 290; his heresies refuted, 261-267.
Ark of the covenant, i, 304; a type of Christ’s body, 570, 576; in the church, v, 658.
Art, Noah’s dimensions of, vi, 516.
Artaxerxes, becomes tributary to Rome, viii, 791; divided after Abgar’s death, 796.
Armeniases, believed one God was cause of all divine manifestations, vi, 480.
Arnobius, life, character, and writings of, vi, 406-411; editions of his works, 410; his own account of his conversion, 403.
Aratus, loved by Apollo, vi, 461.
Art, wisdom given by God, ii, 304; of men, no proof of participation in the Divine nature, vi, 441.
Artium, viii, 312.
Artaxerxes, heretic, vi, 661.
Artaxerxes not invented by the Grecians, ii, 63, but mostly by barbarians, 377; seems anticipated in the Old Testament, ii, 97.
Assessment of Moses referred to, iv, 298.
Ascension of Christ, vii, 122, 241; vi, 422, 432-445; to be communicated, vi, 448, 491; vii, 665.
Ascension to Christ, vii, 456.
Ases, vii, 165, 166.
Asclepius, speaks to his children concerning two faces, of vice and virtue, vii, 30, 31; authors than to walk in the way of truth and righteousness, 311; death of, 32.
Asmodeus affected with states and locuses because of the Christians, vi, 417; Christianity attested by miracles, vi, 418.
Asiatic, office of, ii, 41.
Ass of Balanus, a type of, 1, 372: sacrificed to Jupiter, viii, 287.
Assen’s head, charge of worshipping referred to, iii, 50.
Assessment referred to, vii, 513.
Assembling together, the duty of, vii, 513.
Assembly (synod) composed of clergy and laity, v, 310.
Assizes, sacrificed to Mars by the Scythians, vii, 454.
Asynchronous, pernicious; denounced, vii, 58.
Assumption, the, of Mary, vii, 599, 601; 599, 601.
Assyrian war of Bactrians with, vi, 415; the country of the, allotted to Aramaea, viii, 676; injury of, vii, 570.
Asurath, an Indian god, slain by Bartholomew, vii, 533.
Asylus Urbanus, date and character of, vi, 335.
Asynneus, brother of King Polymius, attacked against Bartholomew, persecutes and kills him, vii, 557.
Astronomies, vii, 183; prodigies of, vi, 28; book of the, vii, 791.
Astronomy, invented by fallen angels, i, 65; by demons, vii, 65; 354; alluded to by Plato, vi, 37; fully of, 43; Ptolemaic system derived from, 654; the existence of evil in the world according to, vi, 194; miracles of, 195; baffled by free-will, 195.
Astronomy, Ptolemaic, vi, 28; system of Pythagoras, vi, 311.
Astronomy, invented by the Babylonians, ii, 334; how concocted by demons, 335; mystery of, 391.
Astronomia philosophica, the, vi, 42.
Astianates, vii, 513.
Athanasius quoted, vi, 484.
Athanasian creed, vi, 377; in date and authority, vii, 466.
Athanasius referred to, vii, 55, 57.
Athens, charged upon the Christians, i, 191; vi, 190; charge retorted on heathen, ii, 131; absurdity of this charge, 134.
Atheists, philosophers proved to be such, ii, 135; mysteries of the, 177.
Atheism, an Athenian philosopher, i, 127; embraces Christianity, 125, 127; one of the earliest apologists, 125; is mentioned by Methodius and Philip of Side, 127; writes a plea for the Christians, 129-134; and on the resurrection of the dead, 149-162; introductory notice to the writings of, 125-127.
Atene, viii, 291.
Athenian, made their Hermas like Archilles, vii, 411.
Athenodorus, vii, 453, 454.
Athenaeus, fall of temple of Aesculapius at, vi, 516; Egypt buried in temple of Minerva at, 508.
Atlantis, the fallen island, vi, 445.
Atlas, prop of the skies, vi, 491; grandfather of Mercury, 469.
Ateneus, theory of Epicurus, stated, vii, 851; related by analogies, 52 by the constitution of the universe, 86; by the human constitution, 88.
Atom, theory of, vii, 87; doctrines of, vii, 170; the existence of, caused not the world, 170; more difficulties of the theory of, 170.
Atoms, ii, 65.
Attali, Pythagorean name of goats, 492.
Augusta, ii, 961; martyr, viii, 779, 781, 782.
Attila, sent from Flabéri to Rome a child, vii, 538.
Augustine, St., influence of, on the
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

318
ANTHE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

and meets Barjesus there, 395; visits Cæsarea, 405; entertained by Aristodemus, 495; opposed by Barjesus, 405; comes to Cæsarea, 495; from Cæsarea sails to Scythopolis, 495; the Jews, excited by Barjesus, burn his chariot and deposit him by Mark in a cave, 495.

Barnabas, epistle of, wherein he warns his readers against Judaism, and seeks to explain some Jewish customs, 133, 139; quoted, 6, 254, 255, 368, 368, 375, 450; in, 97, 344.

Bartholomew, viii, 686, 688; preaches the gospel to the Ethiopians, 686, 689; accused before Lycaonia for having converted Shadrach, 686, is brought before the judge, 686; is imprisoned, 686; brought again before the judge, 686; refuses to worship the gods, 687; martyrdom and torture of, 686, 687; in effect, 688.

Bartholomew, address of, viii, 93, 94; account of, viii, 94, 95; when a boy resided in the same, viii, 94; visited by the bishop of Thrace, 407; beaten and shut up in the temple of the vipers, 408; his hands are nailed to the gates of the temple, 408; delivered, Philippi's directions to, 408, 410; goes to Italy, where he is accused of attempting to kill the idol, 408; his presence, 553; the god Bechir acknowledges him to be a servant of the true God, 553; description of, 553; casts out a demon, 544; King Polyeuctus sends for him to lead his daughter to the shrine of the god, 544; he does, refusing reward, 544; preaches to the king, 544; compels a donation to confess Christ, 544, and to confound the malicious works of the devil, 553; by a word destroys the idol, 553; his prayer to God, 554; King Arstages, troubled against him, orders him to be cast into the sea, 553; martyrdom of, 557, 559, 563.

Baruch, book of, remarkable passages in, vii, 224; heretical book of, vii, 60, 73.

Basil, bishop, epistle of Dionysius of Alexandria to, vii, 64, seq.

Basilian, heretic, 1, 31; vii, 492, v, 100, viii, 453; doctrines of, 31, 348; vii, 355, 358, 371, 407, 437, 440, 445; followers of, vii, 353; viii, 103; abjuration of, 40, as to the death of Jesus, vii, 349; general description of his annunciation and theology, v, 104, 105; son of heretical opinion, vii, 144; refutation of, vi, 141, in, 142; teacher of Faulcon, vi, 233.

Basilides, i, 274.

Basilides, bishop, deny divine providence, vii, 452.

Basilius, i, 30.

Bath, behavior in, ii, 279; right use of, 382.

Bathing, promises, to be shunned, i, 382.

Baths, entertainer of Cassius at Eleusis, viii, 409.

Bears, opposed by Pythagoras, ii, 383, 403.

Beasts, mention of, i, 575, 578; ii, 18; number of, vii, 330; no certain interpretation, vi, 215; mark of, vi, 249.

Beatitude, true teaching of, ii, 413, 414; vii, 714; provisions for the poor, mode of, vi, 249.

Belshazzar referred to, vi, 380; vii, 107.

Beauty, true and false, ii, 271.

Beasts of the earth, interpreted, i, 578.

Becker, an Indian god, acknowledges the true God, and Bartholomew as his servant, viii, 553.

Bede referred to, ii, 346.

Bible, commentaries of, ii, 440, 456.

Bede, character of, ii, 480.

Behaves, incorruptible and corporeal, iv, 371, evil, turned to good account, vii, 240.

Behavior, definition of, ii, 580.

Being, incorruptible and corporeal, iv, 371, evil, turned to good account, vii, 240.

Behaves, a spiritual being, i, 477.

Bel and Belshazzar, vi, 477.

Belshazzar referred to, ii, 389, 399.

Belshazzar, i, viii, 44.

Belshazzar, ii, 38.

Belshazzar, vi, 420, 473.

Bells, right of, vi, 634; succession to the apostles in ruling and teaching, vi, 105, to give reproof, vi, 348; not to receive bribes nor spare offenders, 399, 415, but to be zealous for the purpose, 400, 404, 415; to govern, not to be governed, 401; patterns of right living, 410; to seek the same, with the same, and all, 415; with the same; not to be divided, 415; to be honored as fathers, before rulers and kings, 411; not to be resisters of persons, 412; judgements of canons, with the assistance of persons and demons, 418.

receives Clement, Aquila, and Nicolas, 252; reports the doings of Simon Magnus, 252.

Beza, and others, vii, 231; heretical, confounds the nature of Christ, 411-234.

Beza, ii, 89, 121.

Bernard, St., referred to, i, 103; in, 352, 561; vii, 37.

Beryllus, vii, 276, 376.

Berytus, school of Roman law, vi, 4, 26.

Bethlehem, Christ's birth in, foretold, iv, 418; Joseph goes to, with Mary, and Jesus is born in, vii, 385; the case of, in which Jesus was born, 386.

Bethlehem referred to, vii, 284.

Biblical, martyr of, viii, 276, 376.

Bidding prayer, vi, 486, 532; the free prayer of primitive Christians, 532, 538.

Binding of Mars and Venus, explained allegorically, vii, 363.

Bishops referred to, i, 423; vi, 430; ii, 33, 343.

Birds, allowed as food to Israel, i, 143; the two (Lev. xiv), 211.

Birth and death, law of, ii, 514.

Birth of Christ, apocryphal tales concerning, vii, 237; nature, prophecies, and types of, 386, 389; fate of, not to be kept, vii, 443, 495; birth, the old and new, viii, 184.

Birthdays of the gods, vi, 531.

Bishops, authority of, and of, vii, 350.

Bishops, how appointed, vi, 366; vii, 381, 418; character of, 396, 398; examination of, 397; duties of, i, 59, 85, 90, 94, 96, 99, 100; vii, 114, labors and reward of, vii, 221; to be consulted in all things, i, 59, 69, 79, 83, 85; honored, i, 94, 95, 195, 199; obeyed, i, 69; vii, 221, 299; subjection to, i, 157, 158, 69, 69; right of, vi, 644; succession to the apostles in ruling and teaching, vi, 109, to give reproof, vi, 349; to be treated with, vii, 408; with the same, 404; to be honored, not to be governed, 404; patterns of right living, 410; to seek the same, with the same, and all, 415; with the same; not to be divided, 415; to be honored as fathers, before rulers and kings, 411; not to be resisters of persons, 412; judgements of canons, with the assistance of persons and demons, 418;
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Blood, of Christ referred to, 1, 227, 238; of grapes, its significance, 222; symbol of the word, ii. 221; and water, from Christ's side, v. 230; Christians accused of eating, how the canalyummy originated, i. 370.

Boast, vain of the Jews, i. 229.

Boast, the first, made by Zebulon, vi. 24.

Boodha, spirit, nature of, vi. 280.

Body and blood, Kalama in the, vi. 354.

Body and soul, conflict between, vii. 791; separated but not destroyed by death, 308; the views of heretics concerning the future destiny of, related, i. 402; ii. 580.

Body of Christ, protused, i. 570; real in Christ as in man, iii. 459; 467; opinions concerning, v. 80.

Body, the, valuable before God, i. 297; ii. 549; illustrating divine providence, vi. 173; its symmetry of, i. 72; parts of, vi. 280-293; essential to the perfect man, vi. 260; does not cause the soul to sin, 298; essentially immortal, i. 377; will live, i. 298, 570; ii. 153; purity of, iii. 36; 246; functions of, i. 725; Christian, temple of God, i. 434, 571; ii. 384; not to be exchanged, ii. 372; from earth, i. 544; but preserved, 505; not destroyed by death, iv. 272, 346; vi. 349, but restored, iv. 272, 346, and real as well as spiritual in the resurrection, iv. 375; and spirit of the soul, the shadow of God's soul, iii. 590; exercises of, ii. 283; disunion and death of, ii. 584; its present functions not essential, iii. 590; not useless after this life, 392; to be renewed and purified, iv. 261; spiritual and spiritual, iv. 261; spiritual nature of, 346; change a gradual one, iv. 377; identity of, 377; final condition and habituation of, 342; the work of God, 329; law of change in, 532; how honored by Christians, 659.

Boechi referred to, i. 29.

Bohems, miracle of, anticipated, v. 92.

Bona Dom, story of, vi. 496; original name, 422.

Bonnis III. assumes the title of "Universal Bishop," vi. 602-642.

Book, the great seven-sealed, seen by John, v. 781; opened, 584.

Books, heretical, to be abashed, vi. 293; of Scripture to be studied, 393; Christian, to be impugned, by the initiated only, vi. 215.

Borssian doctrine of, i. 335.

Borrea, v. 179.

Bors of water, vi. 289.

Bosasset referred to, i. 38; iii. 178, 372, 446.

Brou in Brittany, v. 175.

Bower referred to, vi. 625.

Boyle referred to, i. 29.

Boys, questioning the, of Clement, v. 232.

Brahminism, Indian philosophers, v. 21.

Brahman, the, iii. 187; laws of the, 370.

Brahmans, v. 9.

Brahmas, ii. 39, 40, 41; explanation of, 41.

Breaco serpent, a type of Christ, i. 143.

Bread, spiritual and natural (in the Lord's prayer), v. 452; a symbol of the Word, ii. 221; and wine in the Eucharist, i. 328.

Breaking of the bread, see Fraction.

Breath of life, the, i. 371; and blood, illustrating God's providence, viii. 175.

Bodies, hair of, arranged with kosa calambris, vi. 460.

Bott, climate of, iv. 1621; legend of immortal caves, i. 487.

Botons, laws of the, vi. 731.

Bouam, name of, viii. 485.

Bracondi, the human, i. 528.

Brotherly love enjoined, vii. 623.

Brutta, Simon Magnus decoy himself from house-top at, vi. 635.

Bruci quoted, vii. 644.

Bull referred to, i. 5, 176; v. 203; ii. 6, 12, 1316, 240, 449, 599, 318, 375, 601, 622; iv. 581; v. 544.

Burgos referred to, i. 435; iii. 717.

Burial, the duty of, vii. 1771; rites of, vii. 1771.

Burus, god of lust, vi. 478.

Burcher of Ephesians, i. 26, 52, 92.

Burton (Lect.) referred to, i. 464, 1271; iii. 7, 8; iv. 371, 372, 505; v. 11.

Burton (Anat. Text) referred to, i. 437.

Burton (Anat.) referred to, i. 72, 1747.

Bush, the, a type of the cross, viii. 759.

Busin, ii. 66.

Butler referred to, i. 354.

Bythus, i. 310, 332; iii. 570; absurdity of, i. 302, 303; iii. 570.

Cadaver, derivation of the word, iii. 558, 594.

Caelius, bishop of Cyriaca, v. 268; epistle of Cyriaca to, 358; on baptism, 459.

Celsus, worship of the image of Serapis, iv. 173; brings reproof on Minias, 173; grieved, begs to argue with Octavius on the truth of his religion, 174; argues that the world is governed by no-
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

proportionate, hence it is better to abide by the received form of religion, 172, 175 seq., and repudiate the new religion, 179; it is answered by Minucius, 180; refuted by Cæsar, 181-197; it is answered by Cæsar, 198-

Callistus, bishop, used in arranging the index of bishops, 450.

Cæsar, earthly things to be rendered to, 486.

Cæsar referred to, i, 318; ii, 316.

Cæsar, Peter and, ii, v, 95, is challenged by Simon Magnus, 96.

Cæsar the deacon, viii, 478.

Cæsæri, vi, 432.

Cæsarius’ enumeration of the Feasts, vi, 474.

Cæsarius challenges the apostles, viii, 89; is answered, 93; charges Peter with presumption, 92; the daughter of, 408. (See Scrba.)

Clem, i, ii, 89, 112, 119, 487, 485; name and nature of, viii, 243; Clinton, vii, 403; family of, 403.

Celsius, doctrines of, i, 259, iii, 691.

Celsius, friend of Tertullian, i, 438.

Celsus, proconsul at Rome, vi, 53; history and works of, 599.

Celsus and Alexander, martyr, refuse communion with Montanus, viii, 337.

Calamities, common to all ages, not foretold by Christians, vi, 414.

Caldonius, epistle of, to Cyprian, vi, 297, 315; answer of the latter to, 317.

Calendar, Syracus, viii, 666.

Call, Inc. of the Gentiles, vii, 58, 145.

Celsius quoted, ii, 487.

Callimachus referred to, ii, 145, 179, 181, 499; iii, 487.

Callistus, act of, vi, 499.

Callistus, sect of, vi, 160.

Callistus, vi, 159.

Calistus, abbot of his bishop, vi, 155; his alleged martyrdom, 128; character and history, 188-189; how made bishop, 158, 159, 160; his rebuff; 148, 160; his epistles of, vii, 613 seqq., 618.

Calmar referred to, ii, 413.

Calvin referred to, ii, 157.

Camai, Peter causes a, to go through the eye of a needle, and does so a second time, vi, 427; causes a second to die, 427.

Cananæans, vi, 516.

Canary Islands, vi, 508.

Canterbury, type of those born under, vi, 33.

Candide, the golden symbol of the Holy Spirit, ii, 476, 477; and of the seven planets, 557.

Canus, participation of, compared to the battle of, vi, 592.

Candidus, inculcated by the philosophers, ii, 172.

Canulla, the first, vii, 273.

Cannina referred to, ii, 354.

Canova, use of the word according to Suicer, vii, 591; of the Old Testament, according to Melito, viii, 759; law, ii, 12, 18; Meditation, vi, 601; paunch, the, of Aristides, viii, 269.

Canonicum books, ii, 129; books of Holy Scripture, vi, 505.

Canus, ii, 330; of Hippolytus used by the Egyptian Christians, vi, 247; of Alexandria attributed to Hippolytus, 247; of Peter of Alexandria, vii, 269, 284; apostolical, and authority of, viii, 338, contents of, 500 seqq.

Cardinal, of Marc Jacob on Edessa, vii, 654.

Cardinal, book of comment on, vii, 175; interpreted by virginity, vii, 371-373.

Cerdo, Tibet, Volcanus buried in the, vii, 259; named from Olaus, 399; note; destroyed by fire, 519; struck by lightning, 534.

Carbone Jupiter, born along with the temple, vi, 516.

Carpophilus Hill, taken by Titus Tatius, vi, 476, 477.

Carpus, types of those born under, vi, 34.

Carpinus, name of Juno, vi, 472.

Carpus, Christian, renamed by the church of Carthage at great peril, vi, 352; and treatment of, vi, 29.

Carpo, i, ii, 105, 108. See Carpus.

Carpos, perhaps a Christian, iii, 105, 106; quoted by Mode, 108.

Case of God of human affairs, vii, 150.

Celestine, inventors of, ii, 65; sacrificed to Mars, vi, 496.

Cerebral and spiritual, i, 530, 537.

Carusian, affirmed moral ignorance of all things, vi, 471; disputes for and against justice, vii, 150; refuted, 157.

Carusian, Joseph, the trade of, and aided by Jesus, viii, 387, 397, 399, 403, 412.

Catechumen, doctrine of, i, 350; ii, 382, 404; iii, 617; i, 112; theory of the transmission of the soul refuted, iii, 216.

Carthaginian church, of a source of Latin theology, iii, i, iv, 165; Roman testimony to the, vii, 308; numbers of, 413; counsel of, 415.

Cary referred to, ii, 413.

Cassian referred to, i, 160; ii, 346, 441.

Cassius, i, 112, 114, 123.

Cassius, Julius, refutation of, ii, 258, 407.

Cassiodorus, note on, ii, 571.

Cassius, Dom, referred to, viii, 404.

Cassius ofMacrobius, on baptism, vii, 480.

Castor and Pollux, vii, 19, 51, 256; called Tyrrhenian brothers, vii, 480; Beast, 143; sons of Jupiter and Leda, 480, 483; sons of Tyndares, 422; buried in Larissa.

Catastrophe, 258 (note); three sets of gods named, 480.

Castrus, famed for his skill in managing horses, vii, 496.

Castrus of Sceia, on baptism, vi, 568.

Cautesius, carried off, ii, 348; a supbearer, vi, 485; object of Jupiter's lust, 498.

Catholica, a black, viii, 508.

Catholics, heroes of, classified, iii, 654.

Cathorchus, the, treated, quoted, iii, 76.

Catholica, the duties of, viii, 520.

Catharim, vi, 255; of, iv, 256; care for, in danger, vi, 293; equivalent to baptism, 485; 600th, to iv, 2182; Tertullian’s correction to, iii, 71, instruction of, vii, 475, 476; eucharistic prayer for, vi, 281; charity of, iii, 55.

Catholic, i, 39, 40, 29, 50.

Caulus, vi, 465; sale of, viii, 89.

Calyx, temples built to, vi, 430.

Candide Works, Romans sent under the yoke of, vii, 417.

Caulianus, i, 550; vi, 27, 114.

Causa, defined and classified, ii, 564-565.

Cautius, need of, viii, 97.

Cave, those in Belhadesmus, in which Jesus was born, 235, 246.

Cave (Lives of the Faith) referred to, i, 503; vi, vii, vili, 31 (Praen. Christ.); vii, 100; vi, 588.

Cerucors, buried in the temple of Minerva at Athens, vi, 508.

Ceres, martyrs, vii, 312.

Cerulius, epistle of, to Lucian, v, 298; reply to, 299; ordination of, 312.

Ceres, daughter of, buried in the temple at Eleusis, vi, 508.

Cerussus, inviolate of, iv, 29.

Ceren, son of, the, ii, 399; Origen’s opponent, an Epicurean, 397; Origen’s treatise against, iv, 399-609; analysis of the conclusions, 681-683.

Cemeteries ("dormitories"), Christian service of burial, vii, 681.

Cemeral, explanation of, i, 173.

Ceres in Judaea under Saturninus, iii, 398.

Cerundium, the of, the gospels, asserted by the Valentinians to be the Demiurgus, 1, 326.

Cephas, i, 58.

Cerberus, vi, 500.

Cerfo, doctrines of, i, 352; ii, 653; vi, 115; summary of, vi, 146.

Ceres, vii, 252; born in Sicily, vi, 422; deified because she discovered use of bread, 423; gives good crops, 459; worshipped after Jason, 457; mother of Jupiter, according to Physica, 497; violated by him, 497; veneration of, 499; her sacred site called Ceres, 497; identified with Diana and Luna, 473; said by Cæcina to be one of the Penates, 474; represented with protruding breasts, 324.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

age of, 346, 372, 407, 446; marriage of, 201, 236.

Chiromancy, ref. to, 375.

Childbirth, 175, 201, 242, 342.

Childhood, III, 160; wisdom to Moses, 30; system of, 25, 26, 27, 28; misunderstanding of, 11, 31; believed that one God appeared in all divine manifestations, 456.

Christian, or Christian, ref. to, 317, 318; communicated, 248, 366; coining of, 542; veil of, 345, 393.

Christian, described, 197.

Christian, or Christianism, ref. to, 216.

Christian, or Christians, ref. to, 122, 283.

Christian, the, a treatise of Tertullian,
II, 35, 36, object of, 196.

Christian and Jew, ref. to, 227.

Christianist, St. Paul's description of, III,
144; connection with, 714.

Christianism, a layman throughout,
207.

Christian, used to appose unknown powers, IV, 349.

Christian, the, 21, 292, 293, 295.

Christian, the, of the righteous and the wicked, VIII, 128.

Christian, the, to be corrected, VII, 487; their place in the Church, 343; exposed, 1, 172; of God, who they are, II, 212; what it does not imply, 215; applied to those under the word, 217, and are nourished by the milk of the Word, 218.

Christians, the Three of the Captivity, III, 594; V, 138; faith and con-christians of Barnabas referred to, VII, 381.

Christi, referred to, IV, 345.

Choral worship, founded by Simeon, and perpetuated by him, 456.

Choral, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Choral, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.

Child, in baptism, III, 573; VI, 376.
Moises, 328
Moses, Ἰ, 359; 274; not only be lied to be Christ, 357; but also acknowledged by the oracle of Apollo, 372. He is Lord and God whose words, 357; and when God, 328; he is called the Word, Ἰ, 114, 166, 170, 174, 178,
190, 193, 17; the Law and Word, vii,
20; the Son of God, Ἰ, 116, 166,
170, 178, 183, 190, 216, 219, 250,
257, 258, 261, 272; 314; iii, 24,
316; as distinguished from the Son of Man, Ἰ, 336; and con firmed as such as Scripture testimone v, 569; and by the Holy Spirit received by him, i, 243; who suffered as man only, v, 635; he calls himself Messias, Ἰ, 618; though heroes make him the Father, vi, 634.
According to his actual generation, i, 276, he is of the Father, Ἰ, 437, 644, one with the Father, Ἰ, 634; in subst ance, not in person, v, 675-676; though, his divine nature is not properly called "substance," in 609, havo all things the heir of the Father, Ἰ, 284, as expected Messiah, Ἰ, 618; as his names the Jesus Christ, Ἰ, 209; addressed as the Lord of Man, Ἰ, 112, 241; King of Israel, i, 207; is shown to be God from his appearance to the Patriarchs, Ἰ, 242-243; to Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
577; Ἰ, 621; of Moses, Ἰ, 173,
241; the Father, Ἰ, 219, 263, to
Abraham, Ἰ, 527, in Hagar and
Jacob, Ἰ, 29, from his interviews with
Moses, Ἰ, 226; from the
testimony of the Scriptures, v, 576,
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENES: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

315.

27; ii. 115; iii. 31; and love of ceremonies, ii. 182; 185; are lovers of truth, i. 116; live under God's eye, ii. 166; who protects them, iv. 497; look for the kingdom with God, i. 166; content; them, i. 192; hope in death, iv. 497; their true hope, vii. 243; 255; glory in persecution, vii. 125; hence under persecution, 148, 160; glory in martyrdom, iv. 196; triumph in martyrdom, iii. 54, 501; their patience, vi. 139; their fortitude, 145; surpassing the heathen in heroes, iii. 553; vindi
cicated by martyrdom, 13; their blood the seed of the church, 5, 60; they believe in a resurrection, ii. 67; iii. 545. Though they are the preservers of the world, i. 277; pray for the Emperor in martyrdom, iii. 22; more loyal than the heathen, 44; obey rulers, iv. 664; because exhorted to obedience, vi. 284; and not seduced, iv. 640; not a cause of calamity to the State, iii. 117, but a blessing. 40, 59, because their doctrine is opposed to dissensions and fitted for all, ii. 78; yet they are not accursed in the midst of the heathen, 111, 193; their heathen practices were impured to them, iii. 245; blamed for not adhering to the law, i. 199, 203; branded by the Valentinians as simple persons, iii. 564, though excelling in wisdom, iv. 482, in virtue, 484, in purity, i. 107, iv. 194, ix. 109; iv. 194, to which they attained, iv. 191, and not teaching philosophical theories of the soul, nor of good and evil, iv. 454, 455; are called the third race, iii. 117, 632; illustrated by the Jews, i. 203, 214, 246, 247, 256, for whom they pray, i. 266, because as the true spiritual Israel, 202, 218, 255, 261, 267, they are the heirs of the covenant, 445, have the true circumcision, 206, 208, 265, and possess the true righteousness, 309, as has been perceived, 225, 227, and the absolute truth, iii. 127. The Gentiles, too, illustrate the i. 159, 182, 188, 191, 253, 254; unjustly accused them, i. 18, 110, crimes were imputed to, 21, 33, 24, 115, though they were free from crime, iii. 105; iv. 199, and defamed by rumor only, iii. 147; calumnies were brought against the, i. 570; vii. 117; iv. 178, 190, 191, 255, 265, who were accused of public calamities, iii. 47, 59, accused by Gaius, vii. 325, accused only for the name of Christ, iii. 109, in the profession of whom they gloried, 169. Antiochans scorned them, ii. 89; yet they were protected by good rulers, iii. 22, 57, and Roman emperors testified in their behalf, i. 186, 187: Became unanimously hated, i. 76; vii. 144, 243, the Christians were defended, ii. 115, vii. 685, by Justin Martyr in his Apologies, i. 164-193, who demanded justice for the, 156-156; a plea was adduced in their behalf to Marcus Aurelius and Commodus, ii. 129, showing the injustice towards the, 129, who have a claim to legal protection, 130, on account of the false charges against the, 129; the philosophy of the, is older than that of Greece, 77, and theirs is superior, 132; they worship the Trinity, 135, the teachings of the, are full of morality, 134; enjoining duties, x. 503, humility, 283, perseverance, 354, prayer, 286, temperance, 287, confession of the christians against the, ii. 145, by showing the inconsistency of their accusers, 145, the elevated morality of the, 146, their conjugal chastity, 146, which is in contrast with the accusers of the, 145, when their lives compared with those of the heathen, iv. 506; so that the one, is more applicable to the heathen, i. 501; truth is condemned by the, i. 147, who abolished gladiator shows, 147, abhor fortable, 147, and refuse worship to the emperors, 148, 149, who are sons of God, 191; their increase in the Empire, iii. 58, 107, is a proof of Christiandty, vi. 429; they decline public office, iv. 668; cannot keep an, 647; are known by their character, iii. 112, number and union of, iv. 468; in spite of heretics among, 469; have not corrupted the Gospel, iv. 463; character of the teachers of the, 480, 487, by their power of the, 491, Christians have right and duty in this life, iv. 666; though pleasures of public shows, there, then, over-comers and apostates are forbidden to, iii. 79. yet they know how to conduct themselves among heathens, vi. 63, and how to receive each other, vii. 381, they had to live to Jesus, xvii, 57, and most expect suffering in this life, 472, for they are like passengers in a troubled sea, vi. 221, but are exhorted to suffering, vii. 222, in order to get the rewards of their faith, v. 973. Though legally tried and punished, i. 110, they know that their prayers are answered, 103; they submit to injuries, vi. 159, are subject to evil, 106, are poor and oppressed, 165, endured persecutions under Decius, 161; but God's vengeance comes on their persecutors, iii. 100; vi. 462, 465; vii. 161; it is therefore folly and nudity of persecuting the, vi. 147.

Christmas Day to be honored, vii. 248. Christophorus, i. 293; see also Ignatius.

Chronography of Julius Africanus, fragments of, vi. 140 seq.

Chronological table in the time of Tertullian, iii. 17.

Chromology, biblical, ii. 535-536, 540, from Adam to Saul, 184, from Saul to captivity, 110; Theophylactus founded of, 85, 106, 716; Romans, to the death of Aurelius, 119; leading epochs, 120; Jewish, i. 146.

Chronos, ii. 35.

Chrysippus, i. 146.

Chrysippus on Good and Evil, vi. 458.

Christianity of the Persians, 538; asserted that the world would be destroyed by fire, vi. 437; object of Jupiter's last, 487; on the unity of God, vii. 14.

Chrysostome, referred to, i. 137, ii. 69, 70.

Church, the Catholic, vii. 123, 124, 555.556; ante-Nicene theory of, vi. 394, and Apoca lis, 435; 436; prayer for, 533; 534, 505; in what sense equivalent to the Holy Spirit, iv. 99; existing, proof of the Divinity of Christ, 476; the body of Christ, 553; vii. 321; spiritual Temple of God, ii. 946; the herald of Christ, vi. 319; meaning of the word, 528; apostles to, 502; typified by the Sun, vi. 423; by Jacob's marriage, i. 266, by the Bride and Christ of God, vii. 435, by the Passover, 444; by the woman of the Apocalypse, vi. 338, 355; the minister of the Lord's power, viii. 45; of whom composed, viii. 391, not to be femalized, 413, 501, nor divided, v. 322, 403; 30; Christian apart from, 333; necessary of communion with, 318; order to the, 147, 151, 201, order of ministers in the, 165; bar officers appointed by the Apostles, viii. 608; their duties in the, 200, duties of members in the, 254; the regard Moses had for order in, i. 177, the regard the Apostles had for order in, 183; this order is disturbed by the wicked, 17-20; bar creed, 309; her, 409; has one baptism, v. 581; performs nothing by in cantations or curious arts, i. 409; is the depository of truth, 416; 419; the true exposer of the Scriptures, 496; earthly is the image of the heavenly, ii. 421; the union of the, 553; unity of in the episcopate, v. 318, 376, 421; how to go to, i. 290, 297;

A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

[Content of the page includes various entries related to theological and religious subjects, mentioned in the Ante-Nicene Fathers.]
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS

334 sent for by his father Constantius, escapes from Galicia, acknowledged as emperor, marries Fausta, plotted against by Maximian, plot of Daia against, his vision of the heavenly sign, defeated Maximian, his will, restores Christian churches, as enthroned, manner of, effects of the conversion of, donation of, of, on, by, and, to, etc.

Constantius, vii, 305, 311
Constitutions, vii, 299, origin of, ii, 69; and nomen, very indifferent, gods, ii, 144.

Constitutions, Apostolical, their date, character, and purpose, vii, 387, 388, 389; editions of, 392.

Conversion of Nathanael, vii, 492.

James, the bishop, vii, 466.

James, son of Lebbeus, vii, 493.

James, son of Zebedee, vii, 486 seq.

James, son of Alpheus, vii, 495.

John, vii, 401.

Matthew, vii, 493.

Matthias, vii, 494.

Paul, vii, 494.

Peter and Paul, vii, 497.

Philip, vii, 492.

Simon the Canaanite, vii, 497.

Thomas, vii, 492.

Consolation, origin of, ii, 82.

Consolation, of the, viii, 475.

Consummation of the, vii, 466.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.

Consort of the, viii, 475.

Consort, widow of, viii, 475.
ANTI-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Corinth, and company, why punished, vii, 410.

Corinth, master of, vi, 240, 241.

Corinth, Epistle of Clement to, wherein he demands them, i, 5; shows the effects of any innovating, i, 6, 18; exclaims them to repentance, 7; to humility, 9, 11, 15; to peace, 16; to good works, 18; to church order, 16-17; to brotherly love, 18, 19; referred to, 192.

Corinthian, the, his strategy to cause Simon Magus to flee from Antioch, vii, 207.

Corinthian, organized body of, Romans, vi, 319; 412; evidence of his ordination received and approved by Cyriacus, 320; restores certain schisms, repeating, 323; his character, 326; how made bishop, 328, 331; Epistle of Cyriacus to, 319, 321, 324, 325, 326, 330, 331; reply to, 322, 324, 325; Epistle of Dionysius of Alexandria to, vi, 102.

Corinthus Nepos on philosophers, vii, 84.

Crescens, De, a treatise by Tertullian, viii, 93, 94.

Correspondences in creation, viii, 174.

Correspondence, Oecumen. brought to Rome from, vii, 191.

Coruscants, maintains that Novatians preside over renovation, vii, 474.

Coruscant mother of Alcibiades, vi, 422.

Coruscants, note of the, vi, 477.

Coruscants, note of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, note of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of the, vi, 477.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.

Coruscants, notice of their fourth Minerva, vi, 490, 491.

Coruscants, notice of the, vii, 532.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

Ante-nicene Fathers: Index of Subjects
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS

Deipara or Theotokos, vii, 338.
Deiphilus referred to, li, 387; vi, 127; vi, 370.
Deism, ii, 69.
Delphi, a figure of anti-Christian, i, 538; the symbol of perversion, v, 638; comment on, iv, 190-198; cases of Greeks about, i, 316, contrasted with Scripture accuracy, 116; Varro’s computation of the date, 475; by the Romans, 419.
De Manzoni, referred to, i, 177, 211; ii, 137, 312; iv, 594; vi, 543; vii, 250; viii, 172, 643.
Demas and Eunomius, vii, 497; their civil council against Paul and Thecla, 488.
Demas and Geras, robbers, the history of, given by Joseph of Anti- matthus, vii, 468; atrocities perpetrated by, 468; their conduct towards Jesus on the cross, 469; Jesus sent Demas to paradise—transformation of, 470.
Demetrianus, vii, 281, 291; Cyprian’s address to, v, 437.
Demetrius of Alexandria, epitaph of Alexander of Cappadocia to, vi, 754.
Demetrius of Leptis Magna, on baptism, vi, 559.
Demishe, the, i, 315; vi, 242; the formation of, according to Valentinian, i, 253; ii, 523; the creator of all things outside of the Plenma, i, 327; iii, 514, 515; ignorants of, vi, 352; iii, 514; passes into the intermediate habitation, i, 375; ii, 501; the departure of, i, 360; ii, 517; is the collation of the Gospel, i, 350; views of the heretics misrepresenting, exposed and confuted, 383; declared by the heretics to be animal, i, 403; iii, 714.1; if animal, how could he make things spiritual? 405, 406; work of, perishable, v, 99.
Democracy forebomn, v, 299.
Demosthenes, vii, 111; on the idea of God, i, 435, 438; his theory of property, vii, 521.2; atomic theory of, vi, 437; cosmogony of, v, 16.
Demon worship, depravity of, ii, 73.
Demon, an unclean spirit, is held forth among the Jews, a woman five years, expelled by the Apostle Thomas, viii, 543, 546.
Demon, the, called Becher, acknowledged as the true God, and Bartholomew as the servant of God, viii, 554; describes Bartholomew, 553; is compelled to acknowledge Christ, and confesses the miraculous deeds of the devil, 553; exhibited by an angel in the temple built as an Ethiopian, 556.
Demoniac, a, healed, vii, 192.
Demoniac possession, instance of, v, 392, 393.
Demoniac healer, Jesus, viii, 150, 217, by Matthew, 219; by John, 256.
Demoniacs, misrepresent Christian doctrine, i, 557; imitate divine things, 182; giants of Noah’s day, iv, 203; recognized by healers as well as Christians, iv, 189; not honored by Christians, 642, 648, 652; nor feared, 498-501; number acknowledged by the Egyptians, 660; testimony of their worship, 663; tempted Solomon, vii, 49; how permitted by God, iv, 638, 651; mislead men, i, 525; raise up heretics, 182; turned into gods, ii, 688; teach the doctrine of fate, 68; economize, humanity, 68; to be punished, 71; vain display of, 72; false promises of, 72; deception of, 73, 143; ii, 107, 37; vii, 277; tempt to idleness, i, 443; vii, 303; power given to, ii, 351; cutting of fallen angels, 35; spiritual nature of, 50; confound their true character, ii, 38; how they enter men, vii, 274; how they get power over men, iv, 190; viii, 138, 276; why they wish to possess men, 139, 274; presumption of, in angelic genera, 223; origin of, 273; two kinds of, recognized by Plato and Socrates, meaning three, the same, inference, viii, 4; divinity of He who raises them, 660; as a cause of, 552; nature of, iv, 240; rationalism, 257; the existence of, vii, 273; God is not blameable for permitting the existence of, 322; permitted by God, iv, 390; tempted Christ, why, viii, 587; why he has equal power with God, 235; in his mere relations? 332; his power over man, iv, 204; why entrusted with power; vii, 355; his power illustrated from Isaiah Scripture, vi, 392; is a ruling lion, i, 250; knows the arts of the, 30, 55, 69, 83, 117, 179, 183; views of the, vi, 240; plots against Christians, i, 300; enunciates the truth, 225; tempted man, 554; not incapable of good, iv, 265; not the sole cause of, 252; his lie in regard to the government of the world, i, 557; author of impotence, iii, 709; an inspirer in all things, vi, 549; should not be feared, ii, 24, 25, 30, the sons of the, i, 545; views of the Corinthians concerning, 526; power of, Augustine, vii, 339; seen by Andrew, 523; transforms himself into the likeness of a soldier, 530; even here how she was tempted by, 566, 567.
Diagoras of Mileta discusses the gods, vii, 421, 486; viii, 44.
Dialectics, a means to true wisdom, i, 340.
Dialoque, burned mixed, vi, 427, 488.
Dialogue of Justin Martyr with Trypho, the Jew, i, 192-270.
Diana, daughter of Jupiter and Latona, vi, 460, 483; daughter of the first Minerva, 483; hunting, found refuge on floating islands, 442; mighty in hunting, 485; wars of, vii, 485; represented with thighs half covered, 517; an unknown loc wor- shipped by the Leuciars, 517; fall of temple at Ephesus, 516.
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Subject</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>B</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>E</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>G</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>H</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>K</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>P</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>R</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>T</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>W</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Y</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Z</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

344
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

160

ANTICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Epirus, canonical, of Gregory Thaumaturgus, the whole, where read, vii, 332.

Epistles of Cyprian, vi, 273, 404. Epistulae, i., ii., 130.

Ephesos, the leading chronological, ii., 120.

Episcopate, the, 476.

Eucholias, i., Atheniens, vii, 300.

Excommunication, burnt in shame of Murera, vii, 308.

Eros, vi, 258., 260., 265., table of, in Plato, vi, 446.

Errors, how often set off, i, 315; cannot stand with truth, vii, 107; and ignorance, 280. Errors, of the philosophers, ii, 65; use of, vii, 239.

Eusebius, i., 6.

Eusebius, Apostle of, viii, 355, 471 seq.; the prophet pray to be permitted to see the mysteries of God, 571; pleads with God for almost, 571; asks to see the day, vii, 14; mourning, 571; is shown, the Visitation sent to him, 287; the day of his agony, 571; is conducted to Thessalon to see the punishments of the wicked, 572; his soul is demanded of him, but the angel sent to demand it, his soul is unable to bring it forth, 572; 571; 574; God sends his soul and a host of angels for the soul of the soul, 574; he submits, and goes up to God, 574.

Exotic doctrine, use of, vi, 329, 313, 341, 343.

Essence, Jewish heretics, vii, 452.

Essent, there are, vi, 152; sects of, 150; those traditions derived from Jews through the Greeks, 157.

Esther, her example, i, 30.

Eternal punishment, vii, 190; not a mere threat, i, 311; of unbelievers, 356.

Eternity made known by the Resurrection, vii, 300.

Ethics of the Greeks drawn from the Mosaic law, vi, 245.

Ethiopian, Christian, canon of, vi, 275; sun, cast shining, by, vii, 528.

Ethiopians, visited by the gods, vii, 508.

Ethrusca, mother of superstition, vi, 365; arts of, i.e. charms and sorcery, vi, 496.

Ethnocenes, the, identified Petronius and Concordia, and Complexus, vi, 474.

Ethiopia, a schism in Africa, vii, 499.

Eubulus, i, 311.

Euhemerus, the, vi, 81, 82, 185, 166, 337, 528, vi, 2427, 379; peculiar customs of, ii, 200; received according to reason, 501; here where celebrates with water, 528; not to be celebrated with water only, 337; with other holy, 362; types of, in Holy Scripture, 339, 500; prefigured by the oblation of the flour, i, 213; types of Melchizedek, ii, 436; leaf of the symbols the unity of the Christians, vii, 362, 393; how received, vii, 554; white vestments at, 2371 daily, 252; not daily, vii, 557; a safeguard in persecution, vi, 3732; carried to the sick, 498, 561; an allusion to mortality, vii, 561; meaning celebration, memorial of the Resurrection, vii, 533; prayers after, viii, 580; given after imprisonment, iii, 904, 905; deceased's ministry at, vii, 432; kiss of peace, 442; prayers, sacrifice, communion, and blessing, 422; unbaptized not admitted at, 422; not to be offered by laitymen, 429; at the burial of the dead, 465; prayers and thanksgivings of, 472-475; 453-451; canon of, 480-491; instruction in, 486. See Communion and Liturgy.

Eucharistic sacrifice, see Sacrifice.

Excommunication of Thrasea, an impiant, v, 568; of Cyprian, vii, 390.

Exorcism, see Exorcism.

Exorcism of Adam, with sickness, vii, 349; represented on the stage, 547; table, vii, 21.

Faith, vii, 52.

Fathers appointed by John minister of Ephesus, vii, 502.

Faith, see barbers of inhabitants on its coast, vii, 271.

Fears referred to, vii, 8.

Eucharist, vi, 557.

Eusebius, i, 46.

Eusebius, bishop of Rome, iii, 416; schismatic, deposed and excommunicated, vi, 325.

Eve, i, 114; the story of, proceeding from the Ophites, 356; compared with Virgin Mary, 458, 547; why formed from Adam's rib, ii, 175; Eve's creation from Adam symbolized the church from Christ, vii, 224; a type of the church from Christ, vii, 220; Eve, compared with Pandora in Hesiod, 544; her dream, viii, 564 between Sth, 564; sympathy to a woman in Adam when sick, sent by him to paradise for the "oil of compassion," 565; sent with him to paradise, benefited Adam for the "oil of compassion"—the answer she received, 565; returns to Adam, and is reproached by him, 566; relates to her children the history of her temptation and fall, 566 seq.; her prayer, 569; her son a son of a charter of light, 569; 66; 565; 60; 565; 565; her son's body, and the angels praying for him, 569; her death and burial at the side of Adam, 570.

Evangel, hymns of, vi, 79.

Evil, lotus, turned to good account, v, 1101; angels, sinners, 1104; down shall be punished, 1174; and good set over the one against the other, 179.

Evil one, the, see Devil.

Evils speaking, ii, 171, to be avoided, ii, 201; deeds, i, 61; desires, 351; the, to be shunned, 35; to be avoided, vii, 623, 805; origin of, vii, 52; vii, 150, 180; not from God, ii, 104, 109; vii, 165, 344; not a Christian doctrine, vi, 494; 494; origin and growth of, iv, 256; necessary, vii, 147; why God permits, vii, 142, not sought for itself, ii, 319; seeks for good, 320; not justified by good effects, iv, 258; existence of, vii, 118, 119; denied by some, 119; in.

Phaenix, ii, 488.

Plutarch, ii, 100; iv, 440, 509, 511.

Pilate, i, 293.

Pitifully, vii, 471.

Protocols, ii, 485.

Teleclus, ii, 484.

Eusebius, i, 52.

Eutychian, appointed by John minister of Ephesus, vii, 502.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Fate, 280, and righteousness, effect of, ii. 302; its mysteries not to be divulged to all, ii. 312; taught by Scripture to Greek philosophers, 312; leads to repentance, hope, benevolence, 315; unbelief, ii. 317; necessary to justification, 343; obstacles to, ii. 397; historical views of, ii. 445; objects of, how perceived, 448; saving; manifestly by work, 456; first delivered by Christ, and spread by the Apostles, iii. 252; Scriptural confession of, by Gregory Thaumaturgus, vi. 400; his twelve topics on the 59 seq.; his declaration of, Melito's discourse on, i. 725.

Feast, the, eucharistic prayer for, vi. 448; the liturgy of (missa sollemnis), 543; prayers for, the, vi. 525; the, are called kign, vi. 581; counsel to, iii. 212.

Fall, of man, ii. 67; 101; cause of, vii. 272; of angels, 292.

Falling from grace not immediate, iv. 256.

False brethren to be avoided, vii. 438.

Falsehood, i. 58; ii. 11; 49.

Family, the, developed by Christians, 25.

Fan used by the devil in the eucharist, vi. 490.

Faustus (St. Paul) quoted, i. 123; ii. 87; 315; 341; iii. 333; v. 349; (H sprinkled); quoted, ii. 345; (Westem of Hsip.) quoted, ii. 345.

Fascination of, iv. 36.

Fast, not prohibited, how kept, vi. 94; 95.

Faith, general, appointed by bishops and observed by general councils, iv. 171.

Fasting, i. 34; meaning of the word, vi. 91; before baptism, vii. 379; viii. 154; before and after baptism, iv. 659; the acceptable, i. 123; 207; a type of Christ, iv. 411; of Christ, iii. 699; secret, 680; reward of, ii. 317, to obtain help for martyrs, iv. 437; success for, viii. 612; on the stationary days (Wednesday and Friday), viii. 379; iv. 445; 499; for penance, 403; on the Sabbath, 445; 496; through the Holy Week, 447; not on the Lord's Day or other feasts, 449; defence of Montanists, 101; primitive origin of, vi. 931; purpose of, 114; regulated by the law of Moses, 104; examples in Old and New Testament, 106; recognised by the heathen, 113; extreme views of Tertullian on, 115; spiritual discipline of, attested by modern writers, 113; a taste by Tertullian on, 112 seq.

Fat, doctrine of, i. 68; only God's decreer, iv. 195; not the cause of all things, nor controlling man, vi. 342; all things happen according to, 541; has not the power over everything, viii. 728; on, 728.

Father, the, world made by, through the word, i. 101; only known by the Son, 407; reveals the Son, 409; the law given to Christ by, ii. 35; the whole substance of the 501; addressed as God in prayer, 608; love to God as to one, vii. 389; no one knows, how to be understood, 377; an unusual, vii. 521; the punishment of, 532.

Fatherhood of God, eternal, therefore Christ eternal, iv. 92.

Fathers, exercised, i. 81 apostolical, quoted, ii. 345; 355; 357; 356; 369; 460; 465; 459; 493; 516.

Fatima, Fatima, the, horned Dea, wife of Fatima, vi. 44 (note); unlawful to bring in mystic tongs to the rites of, 469; account of her death and rites, 496.

Fatima, vi. 430.

Fate, son of Feax, and father of Latino, vi. 401; assured, and bound by Nun's craft, 489; made the Ararat his hand, 490; and Feania, vi. 38, 229.

Faustianus (Faustus), father of Clement, vi. 136; 214, 215, 217, 219.

Faulcon (St. Paul), first meeting of, with Peter, 305; 306; his discussions with, etc., 305; recognition of, by Clement and his brothers, 190; recognition of, by Matthias, 450; how formed by Simon Magnus into his own disciples, 400; 441; how this transformation was effected, 403; why it was effected, 454; personates Simon Magnus to defeat him, 205; 209; restored to his own form, 205; his baptism, 210.

Pawcianus, brother of Clement, vii. 178; 294.

Faustus (Faustianus), brother of Clement, vii. 178; 294.

Faustus of Tadmor, On baptism, v. 770.

Faw's skin, worn by the initiated, vi. 504.

Fear of God, i. 54; vi. 116; necessary, ii. 354; 355; restraining influence of, vii. 185; is mingled with goodness by God, vii. 44; and love, 455; of men, 186; produced (according to Valentinus) animal substances, i. 323.

Faustus, Christian, vi. 637; and Jesus, to be kept, vii. 409; heathen forbidden to Christians, iv. 665; idem, tempers to, i. 561; unlawful to Christians, 66-70; of emperors, involves idolatry, 70; private, laudably, 73.

Feculci, a name of Juno, vi. 472.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Felicius, martyrdom of, i., 507, 703, 704.
Felicius, his followers, excommunicated, v., 516; his crimes, 528; authors of schism, 415.
Felicitas, and his followers, excommunicated, v., 516; his crimes, 528; authors of schism, 415.
Felix, epistle of to Cyprian, v., 406.
Felix, bishop, epistle of to Polycar- pus, to, viii., 522.
Female prophets, the, viii., 232.
Festivals, held, in, 412.
Festivals, the forms of the, neglected, vi., 450.
Fever, a child cured by a bandage from the child Jesus, vii., 410.
Festivals, the effect of, to Cyprian, v., 353.
Fifth day of, of creation, i., 101.
Fifth day of, on the passages of Scripture and philosophy, ii., 426.
Figures of the Apostles, i., 245; of the Eucharist, 215.
Fillets, worn by suppliants, vi., 406.
Filthy speaking and acts, improved, vi., 250.
Fire, principle of life, vii., 355; a principal attribute, according to Simon Magus, v., 70; the origin of all things, vi., 437; the power of, vi., 496.
Fire, worship of, the origin of, viii., 276; of the Persians, 714.
Fire, burning of, to Cyprian, vi., 496.
Fires, how to be offered and used, vii., 406.
Fish, Israel, may not eat, spiritual significance of, i., 135.
Fishers referred to, i., 532.
Five, the number, the frequent use of in Scripture, i., 234; 395; in the gospels, the more potent, vii., 237.
Flees, I., burned by the body of the Lord, according to I., 1, 446; in the resurrection, our, capable of bearing the conditions of eternal life or eternal death, iii., 911; made capable of salvation, i., 577; 580; iii., 924; regarded, i., 582; saved by the Word taking flesh, 541; the saints having suffered, shall receive their rewards in, 561; 692; works of the, 535 579; in, 578; we shall be judged in, viii., 357; desires of the, to be substituted, viii., 444; persons, who first ate, the, 573; and blood, i., 534; 535; of Christ, as real, denoted by certain heretics, iii., 521; who therefore deny his true nature, 542; and attribute falsehood to him, 543; shown by the appearance of angels in human body, and of the dove, 533, 542; really suffered and rose again, 575-6; not sinnered and unlearned, 528; recognizes human relations, 527, 543; pure, yet natural and human, not angelic, 520, 533; distinct from soul, not spiritual, 533; 541; born by miracle, as Adam, 531; proved by gospel history of his birth, presentation, and prophecies, 539-41; a treatise by Tertullian on the flesh of Christ, 531; also on the resurrection of, 542 seq.
Flash of man, caused by Christ’s inc- Ignorance, and by his love of man, viii., 573.
Flavius referred to, v., 155.
Flints, people of Pontus worship a, vi., 516.
Flows, history of the, ii., 490; viii., 85; tradition of, viii., 599; brought as a punishment of evil-doers, vi., 273; the world after the, viii., 273.
Flora, watches over the blossoming of plants, vi., 457; a harlot, 470; shameful actions done openly at games of, 517.
Flowers, $.531.
Florinianus Epiphanus, epistle of Cyprian to, vii., 378.
Flowers, right use of, taught by nature, III., 325; Christian use of, vi., 169.
Flutes, the Hebrews, and the Apostles, vii., 378.
Flumina (on Flumina), a name of, viii., 427.
Folly, ii., 421; of arguments derived from numbers, letters, and syllables, i., 293; of idolatry, viii., 136.
Forehead of Jonah, vii., 477.
Food, all kinds to be received with thanksgiving, vii., 490.
Food, spiritual significance of Moses’ precepts respecting different kinds of, i., 133 seq.
Fochda, ii., 472.
Forsaken by the Lord, ii., 528.
Forgotten, addorsed, viii., 239.
Forgiveness, of sins, i., 200; of injuries, duty of, vii., 417.
Fors, Caesarea, overview of Romans at, vii., 427.
Form of sound words, the, viii., 175.
Fornication, i., 210; what constitutes, ii., 581; its effects, viii., 10, 11.
Fornication, how to be treated, viii., 640.
Fortitude, religious duty of, viii., 250.
Fortuna Virginius, mutilated garments offered to, vii., 406.
Fortunate, i., 217; asceticistic bishop, v., 349, 415; epistle of Cyprian to, 335; a treatise addressed to, 406; a poem on Easter by the, viii., 329.
Fortunatus of Tusculum, on baptism, v., 597.
Fortune, a deity, vi., 449; no god, vii., 97; one of the Панелак, according to Cassius, vii., 474; 475; represented as the guardian of the city of Rome, with fruit, 517; not man’s adversary, vii., 97.
Forty days before the passion of Christ should be a fast day, viii., 668.
Footnotes referred to, vi., 283.
Footnotes, ii., 117.
Four, number, mystical meaning of, vii., 341; quadran, why?, i., 481; condemned, 487.
Four Living creatures of the Apocalypse, symbols of the four Evangelists and of the life and work of our Lord, vii., 348.
Fourth day of the week, kept as a fast, “Stationary Day,” viii., 341; of creation, ii., 100.
Fraction of the bread, vii., 536, 536, 548, 548, 557, 566, into parts for the faithful, 559, 567.
Fragments, from Justin’s lost writings, 3, 300-1; of Clement Alexandria, vii., 571; 571; of the Apostles, viii., 161.
Fragments, pieces singular Illustrations, viii., 206-9; of the Decretals as demonstrated by Duprat, 609 seq.
Frayo, gift is given to the soul, viii., 46.
Frees schools of the Christians, ii., 78.
Freswell, ii., 531; possessed by the, vi., 240, 265, 267, 290; condition of all obedience, vi., 59, 592; in angels, i., 240, 270; in man, 270, 273, 518, 519, ii., 69, 103, 514, vi., 264, viii., 444, 183; God’s gift to man, vi., 584, 592, necessary to man’s nature, vi., 548; balances astrology, viii., 1955; the origin of sin, ii., 319, 322, 351; iv., 211, 292; necessary to faith and repentance, ii., 349-402; condition of judgment, 551, proofs of, 474, 479, 479, 500, 524; power of choosing salvation, 541, sources of obedience, 519, 527, 535; iv., 302, and of faith, 525, 547, 548; choice of virtue, 525; man’s likeness to God in, 301;error of Basilides, 444; illustrated by Plato, 475; controlled not by desire but by reason, iv., 303; Scripture proofs of, 305; instance of Thaot’s answer, 309; illustrated from nature, 310, and from the parable of the sower, 314; proof of God’s justice, 300; imparts man’s co-working with God, 321, 328; objections answered, 324; definition of, 341, 383; Methodius concerning, vi., 359 seq.
Freedoms and nature of, viii., 365.
Freedoms, of the will, viii., 365.
Freedoms, of man, vii., 129, of man, 256.
Fridays, evening service appointed by the Apostles, vii., 668.
Friends of the Son of God, the, viii., 183.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

356

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

...
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTECNE-FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

105

not, 281; of the worshippers, like the worshippers, 202; the, which have not made the heavens, 289; of the Egyptians, 382; how consecrated, instances of Ceres and Liber, vii, 31; their rites vain, 33, 294, and declining, 64; things sacred to, vii, 1995 kinds of sacrifice offered to them, vii, 321; demons, 62, 125, mainly worshipped by images, 67; religion of, 203; supers of the, vii, 205; gods of the, 236; usually presented in heathen mythology, vi, 210, 205, 406; 340, 185; proved false by its contradictory fables, 473-81; tetrarchy, belief in, abounds; 477-8, crime and violence attributed to, 236-239, 304; 390; deities not honored by temples and images, 506-10, not by sacrifice, 518, not by incense and wine, 528, nor by other heathen rites; 530; anthropomorphic ideas of, 531; what has become of them, i, 943; have no power over Christians, vi, 418; why not acknowledged by Christians, 454, 478; witness to Christianity, 16, 28.

Golden age sapped under Saturn, vii, 742, 230; exists in obedience to God, 143.

Golden rule, the, vii, 388, 389, 297.

Good and evil, vii, 240, 255.

Good one, the, vii, 279, the different origins of, vii, 341.

Good out of evil, vii, 252.

Good, the, vii, 258, 308.

Good, the, in to be done, ii, 12; the chief, opinions on, 374, 375; vii, 13-14, 35-13, vital as, 127; in immortality alone, 20, 233; not in bodily life, 74, 81; not without evil, 75.

Good works, necessity of, viii, 155.

Goodness, divine, not inconsistent with justice, ii, 253; none without liberty, viii, 121; and justice deemed, 344; essential to God, not my creating being, iv, 3501; instance of St. Peter, 265; identical (in God) with his justice, 276; goodness of rational beings destroyed through free will, 302.

Gospel, the, the success of, vii, 10; preached at Rome, 242, and at Alexandria, 225; gives power over demons, 123; more powerful than generals, 182; the objections to, apply yet more to heathen mythology, vi, 429; its language defended, 430; its effects shown in the lives of Christians, 435; read by the despons, vii, 320, 552; salvation of, 542; reading of the, should be heard standing, vii, 565; of Peter, Scrutiny on the, 775.

Gospels, apocryphal, list of, viii, 351-384.

Government, civil, of God, to be obeyed, i, 552, iii, 657.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Grene referred to, i, 164, 183, 188; vii, 3, 14.

Graces, i, 69, 92; the saving effect of, vii, 45.

Greek, Christian, i, 35.

Gratia, the, vii, 54.

Greek, rights of, vii, 462.

Grafting, illustrative of conversion, iii, 397.

Grain of mustard-seed, meaning of, i, 573.

Graces, a denomin. of, ii, 12.

Gratius, loved by Praxeides, and taken as a model of Cæsarian Venus; vi, 311.

Gratitude, offering of, as acceptable, vi, 23.

Graves, the, of many, opened at the crucifixion of Jesus, vii, 453; how honored by heathens and by Christians, iii, 177.

Gravitation, theory of, vii, 91.

Greater and less, application of the phrase, i, 473.

Greek, provinces of, iv, 111, 114; seven wise men of, vii, 101.

Greek, languages of Christianity, ii, 166; type of early Christianity, 372; poetry, 406; studies ridiculed, 276; writings, contrasted with Hebrew, 111; philosophy, origin of, vi, 183.

Greek words especially mentioned or explained, vii, 350.

Aphorisms, i, 350.

Arab., i, 350.

Arab., ii, 455.

Arab., iii, 316.

Arab., iv, 345.

Arab., v, 345.

Arab., vi, 345.

Ariosto, i, 386.

Ariosto, ii, 386.

Ariosto, iii, 386.

Ariosto, iv, 386.

Ariosto, v, 386.

Ariosto, vi, 386.

Ariosto, vii, 386.

Ariosto, viii, 386.

Ariosto, ix, 386.

Ariosto, x, 386.

Ariosto, xi, 386.

Ariosto, xii, 386.

Ariosto, xiii, 386.

Ariosto, xiv, 386.

Ariosto, xv, 386.

Ariosto, xvi, 386.

Ariosto, xvii, 386.

Ariosto, xviii, 386.

Ariosto, xix, 386.

Ariosto, xx, 386.

Ariosto, i, 386.

Ariosto, ii, 386.

Ariosto, iii, 386.

Ariosto, iv, 386.

Ariosto, v, 386.

Ariosto, vi, 386.

Ariosto, vii, 386.

Ariosto, viii, 386.

Ariosto, ix, 386.

Ariosto, x, 386.

Ariosto, xi, 386.

Ariosto, xii, 386.

Ariosto, xiii, 386.

Ariosto, xiv, 386.

Ariosto, xv, 386.

Ariosto, xvi, 386.

Ariosto, xvii, 386.

Ariosto, xviii, 386.

Ariosto, xix, 386.

Ariosto, xx, 386.

Ariosto, i, 386.

Ariosto, ii, 386.

Ariosto, iii, 386.

Ariosto, iv, 386.

Ariosto, v, 386.

Ariosto, vi, 386.

Ariosto, vii, 386.

Ariosto, viii, 386.

Ariosto, ix, 386.

Ariosto, x, 386.

Ariosto, xi, 386.

Ariosto, xii, 386.

Ariosto, xiii, 386.

Ariosto, xiv, 386.

Ariosto, xv, 386.

Ariosto, xvi, 386.

Ariosto, xvii, 386.

Ariosto, xviii, 386.

Ariosto, xix, 386.

Ariosto, xx, 386.

Ariosto, i, 386.

Ariosto, ii, 386.

Ariosto, iii, 386.

Ariosto, iv, 386.

Ariosto, v, 386.

Ariosto, vi, 386.

Ariosto, vii, 386.

Ariosto, viii, 386.

Ariosto, ix, 386.

Ariosto, x, 386.

Ariosto, xi, 386.

Ariosto, xii, 386.

Ariosto, xiii, 386.

Ariosto, xiv, 386.

Ariosto, xv, 386.

Ariosto, xvi, 386.

Ariosto, xvii, 386.

Ariosto, xviii, 386.

Ariosto, xix, 386.

Ariosto, xx, 386.

Ariosto, i, 386.

Ariosto, ii, 386.

Ariosto, iii, 386.

Ariosto, iv, 386.

Ariosto, v, 386.

Ariosto, vi, 386.

Ariosto, vii, 386.

Ariosto, viii, 386.

Ariosto, ix, 386.

Ariosto, x, 386.

Ariosto, xi, 386.

Ariosto, xii, 386.

Ariosto, xiii, 386.

Ariosto, xiv, 386.

Ariosto, xv, 386.

Ariosto, xvi, 386.

Ariosto, xvii, 386.

Ariosto, xviii, 386.

Ariosto, xix, 386.

Ariosto, xx, 386.

Ariosto, i, 386.

Ariosto, ii, 386.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

A comprehensive list of subjects covered in the Ante-Nicene Fathers, with references to the relevant volumes and pages. The index includes topics such as the lives of saints, biblical passages, theological discussions, and reflections on the early church fathers. The text is formatted in a clear, readable manner, ensuring easy navigation through the index.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>342</td>
<td>Prophecies fulfilled, 331; understood literally by the Jews, 318; literal interpretation of, 350–355; literal sense not excluded, 305; historical types of heavenly things, 371; written for all, not for the learned only, 573. See also Scripture.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>353</td>
<td>Hebrews, xi. 1, 15; 30, 30, 30, 30; II. 30, 30, 30, 30; III. 65. See also Scriptures.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>366</td>
<td>Hymnos, quoted, II. 483.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>374</td>
<td>Hippolytus, I. 374.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>385</td>
<td>Hippocrates, II. 385.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>483</td>
<td>Hisham and Almas, deliver not quite two thousand years before the conversion of, vi. 493.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>573</td>
<td>Holy Scripture, spiritual meaning of, I. 345, 345, 345, 345; consubstantial, as testified by Christ, 380.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>169</td>
<td>Holy things for holy persons, vii. 538, 538.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>171</td>
<td>Homeric, xi. 1, 172; 383, 383, 383, 383; II. 380, 380, 380, 380; III. 65. See also Scriptures.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>181</td>
<td>Holy place, the, for sacrifice, vii. 87.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>197</td>
<td>Holy Spirit, I. I. 1, 172; 383, 385, 383, 381, 383; II. 260, 260, 260, 260; III. 65. See also Scriptures.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>202</td>
<td>Holy things for holy persons, vii. 538, 538.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>205</td>
<td>Holy Spirit, I. I. 1, 172; 383, 385, 383, 381, 383; II. 260, 260, 260, 260; III. 65. See also Scriptures.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>206</td>
<td>Holy things for holy persons, vii. 538, 538.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Hind, XVI, 433, i. 273; ii. 130.
322, ii. 139.
672, ii. 124.
XVII, 43, i. 240.
570, ii. 119.
413, ii. 179.
483, ii. 285, ii.

XIX, 43, i. 320.
126, ii. 486.
234, ii. 273.
XX, 233, vi. 243.
60, ii. 274.
114, ii. 135.
216, ii. 106.
224, ii. 97.
220, ii. 194.
117, ii. 47.
106, i. 773.
237, ii. 74.
XXI, 66, i. 459.
71, ii. 110.
72, iii. 232.
315, ii. 247.
XXXIV, 445, ii. 450.
201, ii. 51.
397, ii. 320.

Odys. i. 7, vi. 346, 347.
ii. 261, iii. 433.
346, i. 263.
IV, 220, ii. 171.
221, ii. 125.
324, v. 55.
496, iv. 571.
685, iv. 539.
730, iv. 435.
790, ii. 435.
V, 185, 97, vi. 67.
VI, 130, i. 237.
185, ii. 444.
VII, 56, i. 104.
VIII, 265, ii. 185.
236, ii. 246.
308, ii. 139.
324, ii. 180.
378, i. 209.
234, ii. 314.
IX, 372, ii. 480.
410, ii. 471.
X, 37, i. 239.
75, ii. 309.
281, iv. 405.
304, v. 78.
625, ii. 438.
510, vi. 231.

XI, 45, ii. 239.
184, iv. 493.
446, ii. 493.
219, ii. 205.

Odys. XIII, 201, ii. 200.
XIV, 187, ii. 483.
228, ii. 481.
460, ii. 259.
XV, 436, ii. 435.
XVI, 294, ii. 9.
XVII, 43, ii. 435.
28, ii. 483.
286, ii. 481.
541, iv. 539.
545, v. 79.
XVIII, 139, 137, v. 183.
XIX, 163, i. 181.
162, ii. 224.
XX, 116, 115, vi. 199.
120, vi. 199.
341, ii. 184.
XXI, 26, i. 350.
28, vi. 144.
XXII, 347, ii. 293.
413, v. 486.
XXIV, i. 31, v. 51.
ii. 69, v. 51.
6, v. 51.
8, v. 51.
9, v. 51.

Homilies, fragments of, iV. 238; the of Clement, introductory notice there to, viii. 213; relation to the Recognitions, 70, 73, 213, editions of, 211; contents of, 223-216.

Hymn, or sermon, on Holy Communion, v. 352; on the fall of idols, vi. 581; on Habib, the chresti.
Honesty enjoined, viii. 220.
Hosannas of Thess., on baptism, v. 571.
Honor deified and worshiped, vii. 476.
Hooker referred to, iii. 70, 509; iv. 38.
Hope, i. 371, vain of, the Jews, 269.
Christian, witnessed to by philosophers, vii. 417; objects of, now perceived, 446.
Horace, vi. 451; referred to, I. 403:
ii. 77, 176, 177, 179; iv. 714; v. 361; vi. 45, 149, 153.
Horos, an astro., i. 217; different names of, 318; iii. 368; faculty of, 390.
Horus, the, as the, meaning of, vii. 350, 351.
Hortensius of Lampsacus, on baptism, vi. 565.
Hosannas, v. 544.
Hosanna, as prophesy of last days, v. 243.
Hospitality, vi. 293; true principle of, vi. 270; reward of, i. 81; a 275.
Host, the, not a primitive word, vi. 366.
Hosius, bishop of the Armenian Zoroaster, vi. 428.
Hours, canonical, ii. 12; of prayer, vi. 695, 696; origin of, iv. 108, 109.

Household life, habits of, 251.
Hymns, form, whence attributed to God, i. 278; flesh, not the proper food of man, ii. 271; life, the inequality of lot in, viii. 338; race, as dispensed, i. 127.
Hymnography, offered to Div and Saturn, vi. 460.
Humility, Christian doctrine of, ii.
Humiliation, iii. 9, 11, 13, 33; of Christ, iii. 9, 10, 20;
Christian, iv. 329.

Husbands, duty of, i. 95, 111.
Huss, i. 188; ii. 62.
Hymenaeus, vi. 485; viii. 199.
Hymen, bishop of Rome, i. 416, 569; i. 56.
Hymns, early Hebrew, vii. 531.
Hymns, primitive, in the New Testament, vi. 507; to Christ, ii. 293; to the Paedagogus, 465; evening of Greek Christians, 79, 298; Germani, vi. 570.
Hymnology, vi. 508.
Hypocrises, i. 508.
Hypocrisy, vi. 468.
Hypocrisy, vii. 468.
Hypocrates, ii. 50; regarded, vii. 221; compared to, ii. 476.
Hypocryps, or outlines, fragments from, of Theognostus of Alexandria, vi. 155, 200.
Hypocrites, loved by Apollo, vi. 485.
Hypocrite, vi. 485.
Hypothesis, i. 147.
Hypocrisies, i. 569.

I saw that I am, i. 439.
In the style of Antioch, i. 492; her blood turned into violets, 452.
Ictheus, mingled (or loved) by Ceres, vi. 490.
Idols, as a source, i. 271; different names of, 318; iii. 368; faculty of, 390.
Ileophone, the, v. 390.
Ilex, vi. 371.
Iliad, the, worship of an unknown god, vi. 510.

"Ilias," iii. 669.
Irad, Dryst, Greek name of Digit.
Samoschalk, vi. 475.
Iliad, prominence of, vii. 58.
Idol, meaning of the word, ii. 62.
Idolatry, absurdities of, ii. 92; folly of, vi. 136, 146, 284; in wider sense includes all sins, iii. 54; not confined to acts of worship, vi.
origin of the name, 62; origin of the word, 137; originated in Egypt, vii. 63; includes idol-
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

374

A jealous God, a. God in, viii, 266.
A jealous God, II. a. God in, viii, 266.
A jealous and envious God, a. a. 266.
A jealous and evil God, a. a. 496-495.
A Jewish, the only God, in, vii, 1009.
A Jewish view of, iii, 612.
A. justification of the Church on which the body of Mary is carried to burial, his punishment and forgiveness, vii, 324, 325.
A. Jeremiah, Hc, 60, 71, 81, 120; prophecy of, mentioned once, v, 177.
A. Jeremiah, Right of the Christian to, vi, 96.
A. Jerusalem, ii, 52, 58.
A. Jerusalem, the, the speech to, Com- munion and Heiligenkreuz, vii, 366.
A. Jerusalem, entrance of Christ into, predicted, i, 223; description of, iii, 158; derogates nothing from the majesty of God, i, 420; sacri- fice localized in, vi, 150; the glorious Son, 543; mother of all churches, 545; the holy city, 546; liturgy of, 546, 552, 553, 557.
A. Jesus, name of our Lord; Christ in adjunction, i, 490; power of the name of, i, 261; significance of the letters of the name of, 357, 395; how certain, and how to be indicated by the name of, 350; meaning of the letters of the name of, 357, 395; prophesies of his name in the Old Testament, iii, 161; typified in Jesse and Joseph, vi, 160; by the paschal lamb, vii, 190; birth of, 190, 199, 209, 411; name of fortune prophesies of Daniel, iii, 155; of Jesus, 164, of the Psalms, 165; the generation of, according to Markers, i, 359; birth of, foretold by Isaiah, 457; according to Valentinus, v, 89, and Marcion, v, 97; according to Basilides, was not crucified, but Simon of Cyrene in his stead, i, 344; descent of the Coven- ant upon, according to the Ophites, 357, and Valentinians, iii, 516; his baptism when thirty years old, not a type of the thirty soons, i, 390; passed through every stage of life to sanctify all, 391; the ministry extended ten years, 395; lived at least till near fifty years old, 392; existence of, according to Valentinus, v, 87; opinions concerning the body of, vi, 344; is called Alpha, why, 37; his teaching, i, 468; the baptism of, 443; the same with Christ, the one-begotten Son of God, perfect God, and perfect man, 440; Son of God, and Son of man, i, 182; as him nothing incomplete, i, 443;
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Andrew in prison, 544; appeals to Andrew and Peter as a child, 527; appears as a child to Mary on the Mount, 528; appears to Abgarus letter to, 538, 635, 622; reply of Jesus to, 622; sends his picture to Abgarus, 538; appears at the Mount, 528; raises Mary from the tomb, and brings her to paradise, 528.

Joseph quoted, III. 266, 297; IV. 170.

Jesus' message abolished, I, 371 institutions and laws older than Greek philosophy, II, 322-323; customs, VIII, 176, and Manichaeism, erroneous, III, 321; Christians, two classes of, III, 413; Jesus' history of, v, 106, allegorical, IV, 579, 581-2; their true origin, IV, v, 456; in favor with God, 555; examples of prayers to Christians, VIII, 243; prophets of, IV, 241; charged with removing passages from the Scriptures, IV, 244-245; system of the religion of, v, 138; animosity of, VIII, 91; observances of, v, 64, 91; superstitions of, 284; rites of, v, 115; piety and charity, v, 530-531; humility and patience, v, 306; trust in God, 535; fear of God, 539; forgiveness, 541; existing among, 545; accept Christ, I, 225; persecute him, v, 220, and reject him, v, 590; and the people, 584; by rejecting Christ reject God, I, 267; are punished, IV, 233, 306, and conquered, III, 393, and reproved by God, v, 503; v, 471; blame Christians for not observing the law, I, 199; 203; hate Christians, 212, 247, 557; sets up his cross in Hades, 437; I, 77; delivers Adam and his posterity, III, 377; Nicolas, as a child, 437, 491; sets up his cross in Hades, 475; the miracles of, reported by Flavius, III, 204, 294, 296; and at the manger of the name of the god fall in the senate-house in Rome, 484; Veronices's portrait of, 465; seamless tunic of, worn by Flavius in the presence of Tibers in his struggle, 466; the wonderful works wrought by, related by Nathanael Tito, 472, and by Velosyanus to Tibers, 475.

Jesus, whose Peter departing from Rome to avoid persecution, and telling him he is coming to be crucified for him, 495; appears to Philip at Ophraenis, and relieves his ravengeful spirit, 551, 595; Philip's prayer, 600, 515; appears to Andrew and sends him to the country of the man-eaters, 517; appears again to Andrew as a pilot, and conducts him by the sea to the place of his destination, 518; Andrew's narrative of the ministry and works of, 519, 707; appears to Andrew as a beautiful little child, 521; appears again to Andrew in prison, 544; appears to Andrew and Peter as a child, 527; appears as a child to Mary on the Mount, 528; Abgarus letter to, 538, 635, 622; reply of Jesus to, 622; sends his picture to Abgarus, 538; appears at the Mount, 528; raises Mary from the tomb, and brings her to paradise, 528.

Joseph quoted, III, 266, 297; IV. 170.

Jesus' message abolished, I, 371 institutions and laws older than Greek philosophy, II, 322-323; customs, VIII, 176, and Manichaeism, erroneous, III, 321; Christians, two classes of, III, 413; Jesus' history of, v, 106, allegorical, IV, 579, 581-2; their true origin, IV, v, 456; in favor with God, 555; examples of prayers to Christians, VIII, 243; prophets of, IV, 241; charged with removing passages from the Scriptures, IV, 244-245; system of the religion of, v, 138; animosity of, VIII, 91; observances of, v, 64, 91; superstitions of, 284; rites of, v, 115; piety and charity, v, 530-531; humility and patience, v, 306; trust in God, 535; fear of God, 539; forgiveness, 541; existing among, 545; accept Christ, I, 225; persecute him, v, 220, and reject him, v, 590; and the people, 584; by rejecting Christ reject God, I, 267; are punished, IV, 233, 306, and conquered, III, 393, and reproved by God, v, 503; v, 471; blame Christians for not observing the law, I, 199; 203; hate Christians, 212, 247, 557; sets up his cross in Hades, 437; I, 77; delivers Adam and his posterity, III, 377; Nicolas, as a child, 437, 491; sets up his cross in Hades, 475; the miracles of, reported by Flavius, III, 204, 294, 296; and at the manger of the name of the god fall in the senate-house in Rome, 484; Veronices's portrait of, 465; seamless tunic of, worn by Flavius in the presence of Tibers in his struggle, 466; the wonderful works wrought by, related by Nathanael Tito, 472, and by Velosyanus to Tibers, 475.

Jesus, whose Peter departing from Rome to avoid persecution, and telling him he is coming to be crucified for him, 495; appears to Philip at Ophraenis, and relieves his ravengeful spirit, 551, 595; Philip's prayer, 600, 515; appears to Andrew and sends him to the country of the man-eaters, 517; appears again to Andrew as a pilot, and conducts him by the sea to the place of his destination, 518; Andrew's narrative of the ministry and works of, 519, 707; appears to Andrew as a beautiful little child, 521; appears again to
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

John, the son of Zebedee, address of, viii, 92.
John, the apostle, i, 125, 130, epistle of Ignatius to, 124-125; canon of, vii, 491; meeting of, with Clement, i, 416; his prediction concerning the Roman empire, 514; tradition of, ii, 574; his first and second epistles interpreted, 574-577; origin of his Gospel, 580; story of the robber and, 637-34; symbol of, as evang.

John Acts of, viii, 337, 559, 562, Apostle of, 521, 558, 593; infuses Mary the sentence of death passed on Jesus, 492; at the cross, 430; visits St. John, and pleads for Philip and his companion, 501; Dominic sends soldiers to Ephesus to apprehend, 560; accompanies the soldiers to Rome, and inspires them with reverence for him, 560; his interview with Dominic, 561; takes deadly poison before Dominic without injury, 561; recalls all of the names of the martyrs who were tormented by a demon, 562; sent to Damascus, 563; in the reign of Vespasian, he goes to Ephesus, 562; his ministry in Ephesus, 562; builds a church there, 563; appoints Euphrasius minister, 568; strange disappearance of, 568; sees the unedited Goldeth, and another, 568; sees heaven opened, and a great seven-sealed book, 568; the likeness of Antichrist, referred to, and the time of his continuance, 568; the time of the end made known to, 568; the resurrection and the first of future recognition revealed to, 568; the judgment revealed to, 568; the burning up of the earth, and its purification from sin, revealed to, 568; the coming of the Lord and his church to the earth made known to, 568; is shown what shall become of the heavens, and the host thereof, 568; the depths of Hades, and the order in which spirits and nations shall be judged revealed to, 568; abodes of the bad and good shown to, 568; final happiness displayed to, 568; miraculously conveyed from Ephesus to Bethlehem to Mary, 567.

John Mark, vii, 493, contention between Paul and Barnabas respecting, 493; accompanies Barnabas, 494; comes with Barnabas, on whose martyrdom he deplores his sorrow, 495; takes refuge from his enemies, 495; comes to Alexandria, and laboring there, 496; relates the occasion of the change of his name, 496.

John’s Anthology, quoted, viii, 900.

John of Damascus, i, 501, 502, 570, 571.

John the “Father” calls himself “Domestic basilisk,” vii, 562.

John the Presbyter, i, 153, 154.

Joseph, i, 6, 7, 71; history of, interpreted, vi, 378; a poem, iv, 127, 160; a type of the resurrection, iii, 468, 519; a type of Christ’s resurrection, iii, 252; proof of our resurrection, 431.

Joseph referred to, i, 133; ii, 346, 541, 546; iv, 677; vii, 27, 29, 36, 642.

Joshua of Nicaea, referred to, vii, 479.

Justin referred to, i, 47.

John, i, 6, 8, his history the origin of the legend of Scipio, iii, 116; his conduct, vii, 163; narrates his early life, 32; his misfortunes in Egypt, 32-33; speaks of his marriage, 35; of his visions concerning the Lamb of God, 33-36; exalts his children to follow after sobriety and penury, and humility of heart, 33-34; 35; his death, 35; his description of, by Simmon, 14; 12; a type of Christ, iii, 166, 356; vii, 41; is met by Paul in Paphlagon, 580.

Josephus a rich man in Cappadocia, raised from the dead by the child Jesus, viii, 50.

Josephus of Arimathaea, i, 207; bares the body of Jesus, viii, 421, 431, 470; sealed and impressed by the Jews, but unsealingly liberates by Jesus, 427, 441; found by the Jews in Arimathaea, 427, 441; writes to and sent for by the Jewish rulers, 427, 433, 441; explains how he was delivered from poison, 427, 433, 440; effect of the narrative given by, on the Jews, 427, 433, 440; the "Narrative" of, 427-457; resists to the assumption of Mary, 594.

Joseph, the husband of Mary, the birth, character, and deeds of, viii, 388; Mary, the Virgin, committed to the care of, by divine inspiration—"the sign given," 383; distressed at finding Mary pregnant, 383; resolves to divorce Mary privately, but prevented by an angel, 384, 591; accused to the priests of deserting Mary, 384, 392; is tested by the "water of the orinal of the Lord," and proved innocent, 385, 374; his visit to Bethlehem, 384, 374; conducts Mary to a cave, and goes in search of a noble, 385, 374; as a carpenter, is assisted by Jesus in his trade, 384, 411; history of, narrated by Jesus to his disciples on the Mount of Olives, 388-389; his prayer before death, 390; his age, 391; his lamentation before death, 391; his address to Jesus, 391; manner and circumstances of his death, 391, approach of death, 391, with all his return, 392; words of Jesus to Joseph, 392; Gabriel receives the soul of Joseph, 392; the burial of Joseph; Jesus bewails the death of Joseph, 393; why he, being the father of Jesus, died, 393; history of Joseph, 392; narrative of Joseph, referred to, i, 8, 905, 573; ii, 143; iv, 403, 416, 591; vii, 27, 29, 36.

Joshua, son of Joschaphat, vi, 89.

Joshua, son of Nun, i, 8, 84, 85, 77; a figure of Christ, 250, 251, 571; in name and character, iii, 344; called a savior, viii, 48.

Joshua, i, 60, 121.

Jovialis, genius, one of the Penates, vi, 474-475.

Jowett referred to, i, 683.

Judah, epitaph of, Cyprian, vi, 279.

Julianus, book of, referred to, viii, 13, 17, 18, 35.

Judas, Lion of, vi, 533, 568.

Judas, the patriot, speaks of his fortitude, vii, 17, 185; of his marriage and the results of his fall, 173; warns his children against drunkenness, which tends to corruption and against the love of money, 19, 20; predicts the coming of the Messiah, who shall be the Saviour of all, 20; his death and burial, 21.

Judging teachers, i, 63, 71, 82.

Judah, i, 40, 477, 572; described by Tertullian and Theophylact, 173; crimes of, vi, 207; and an ambler of the twen, i, 485; out a disciple of Jesus, but craftily pretending to be, vii, 484; plots against Jesus, 493; meets with the Jews to deliver up Jesus to them, 492; delivers up Jesus, 492.

Judge, 58, his relationship to our Lord, vi, 573.

Judea, its dissolution foretold, i, 178.

Judged in the flesh, i, 85, 88.

Judges, council of, iv, 209.

Judging God, ridiculous, viii, 181; who qualifies for, 208.

Judgment, ii, 156; to come, viii, 152; future or last, vii, 211; viii, 220, 251.

Kate, referred to, i, 291; by Jesus Christ, 561; necessary to soul and body, ii, 158; poet of, i, 15, 160; the day of, Ephesians pray for, vii, 571; signs of the approach of, 372; foretold to John, 583; orders of procedure on, 585.

Judgment of quarrels and controversies to be held on the second day...
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

176

ANTICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

of the week, vi., 417; by the bishop, in the praise of professors and deacons, 417; sentence to be in proportion to sin, 418; instances from the story of Hannah, 419.

Judith, ii., 200; Anna’s household, vi., 493.

Julius referred to 1, 195.

Julius Cæsar, a Magistrate.

Julian, of Antioch, vi., 316.

Julianus, of Marcellinus, on baptism, 472.

Julianus, of Telepte, on baptism, vi., 570.

Julius, vi., 459, 463, 483; vii, 1077; daughter of Saturn and Ops, vi., 400; queen of the gods, 457; wounded his father, 463; named Lucina, and sided women in childbirth, 469; said to be the sun, 472; saves from the destruction of the temple and priestess of, 516, and in the capital, of the sister of, 510; named Caprotina, Christ, Pecrthe, Phoebus, 472.

Julius, the Roman, “Pompey, 475; the Caesar of, 477 (note); as Caesar, a branch worshipped, for 510; Samaritan worship a plaque instead of, 510 (note); one of the Pentates, 477.

Justin, vi., 169, 170, 172; the greatest and best, 421; is not God, 421, 422, but both human and immortal, ii., 147; his history, 149, 150, origin, life, name, and death, vi., 22; born, 23; his and his sons' sepultures, viii., 80; had father and mother, vii., 427; his birth, viii., 197; his father, vii., 23; the Saturnian king, vii., 487; son of Aether, 480; son of Cœstus, 480; son of Saturn, 480; of Saturn and Ops, 480, 481, 483; the Cœstus, vii., 23; born in Crete, vi., 490; named by the Cœstus, vi., 29, and his life saved by the Cœstus, vi., 494; concealed in Cœstus, 472; buried in Cœstus, 480, 481; his cries concealed, 473; tempted to, vi., 23; his actions, vi., 487, as related by Eubulus, vii., 24; his licentiousness, viii., 227, wicked deeds, vii., 749; overthrow his father, vii., 484, by going to war with him, vii., 486, 235; made a meal unwittingly on Lycaon’s son, vi., 484; condemned of, vi., 197, 253; married his sister, vi., 484; attempted to violate the mother of the gods, 491; adultery and vice transformations of, viii., 191, 193, 295; lusted after Alcestes, Daucus, Electra, Europa, and matrons and maidens without number, vi., 460, 461, 468; even after the gods, Cæcilius, viii., 480, 481; Fabius, 481; ravished his daughter Proserpine, 498; for lustful purposes became an ass, a golden shower, a satyr, 500, a worm, 493, 500, and a bull, 483, 484; known as a man, 482, 484; bad to be on the sun, 472, and by others to be the other, 472; three gods named, 480, 481; father of Apollo, Diana, Castor and Pollux, Hercules, Libera, Mercury, vi., 460, 483, of the Muses, 473, of the Sun, 480, of Hercules, 485, 488; Diomedes, 480, 481, 482; fall at Dodona of the temple of, 510; destruction of the statue of, 470; buried with Cæsarea, 470; turned Cæsarea, 427; the Thunderer, 410, the Olympian, 512, 513, the Supreme, 460, the Sybaris, i.e., Pluto, 460, Veroneus, 477 (note); of Dodona, 449, 458; built a temple to, 570; represented with a thunderbolt in his right hand, 570, and as a bright star, 472; gives power to the Nymphs to wield his thunder, 474; Fores, the steward, 474, 475; the Nymphs, 474, 475; one of the Pentates, 475; represented as an infant, 475; and as a young man, 475, 490; forced to leave heaven by Damned, 490; statues of, dishonored, 515; descent of rain signified by the embrace of, 475, 490; the feast of, 530; wolf credit celebrated in honor of 534; allegories of, vii., 201.

Just one, the, 1, 277.

Just man, character of, vii., 182.

Justin, vi., 575, 576, 577 (note).

Just and unjust, cannot be distinguished in this world, ii., 231; but will differ in the world to come, 338.

Justus, the Syro-Phoenician woman, vii., 232; becomes a prophetess, 233; adopts two boys whom she educates with Simon Magus, 252.

Justice, demanded for Christians, i., 163; of God, 455; and goodness unite to God, iii., 107, 296, 303; reveal him as father and master, 308; case of the Nereides, 315; of Adonis, of Cain, and of Sodom, 317; their union refutes Marcion’s doctrine, 249; suspended by Jupiter and restored by Christ, vii., 142; made known to all, but embraced by few, 341, argument of Celsus for and against, 338; nature of, 150, 154; source in play and equity, 145; answer to objections, 155; of the Christians, 153; visited by persecution, 145, 147; duties of, 151, 2451; man’s birthright, 245; the worship of God, and true wisdom, 245.

Justification, i., 123, 163, 441; ii., 12, 23; according to Clement, i., 348, 349.

Just and unjust, referred to, 1, 159, 160; studies philosophy, 155; is converted, 155; defends Christianity against Judas, 194—270; writes two apologies for the Christians, 195—260; on the allegory of Herodion, Tritho, the Jew, 196-270; discourse to the Greeks, 271, 272; heretical address to the Greeks, 271, 272; on the sole government of God, 290—293; on the resurrection, 294—295; fragments from his lost writings, 300—302; is examined and condemned by Justinus, 300, 306; by his countrymen, 300; on the resurrection of the body, vii., 374; order of the divine liturgy given by him, vii., 507; his account of Christian worship, 532; testimony to the divinity of Jesus, 737; conversion of Irenaeus with, 572; quoted by Athenagoras, i., 302; Antoninus, viii., 329; Irenaeus, 299, 400; John of Antioch, 300; John of Damascus, 311, 312; Ammonius, 311, 312, 351; Irenaeus, 351; Justinian, 351, 352; Irenaeus, 351; 101—102, 352; Richard, 351; Justinian, 351, 352, 353, 358; in summary of his teaching, 145.

Justinus, i., 171.

Justina, wife of Janus, vi., 471.

Judgment, referred to, i., 341, iii., 58, 59, 67, 70, 74, 90, 91, 100, 104, 106, 112, 113, 133, 135, 137, 139, 147.

Kabala, referred to i., 397; iii., 286.

Karanus and Leucas, sons of Simon, who were slain from the land when Jesus rose, their narrative of the descent of Christ into Hades, and the deliverance he wrought there, vii., 444—454.

Keys, classification of Tertullian’s works, 11, 12; referred to vii., 1.

(Thesaurus I.), 1., 323, 326, 329, 341, 343, 351, 352, 353, 354, 360, 365, 437, 73.

(Thesaurus II.), 1., 66, 67, 70, 74, 76, 80, 100, 104, 106, 109, 110, 172, 113, 133, 135, 137, 139, 147.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

382

viii. 4; instructor of Constantine, ii.
4: life of, 51 works of, 65.
Ciborion, 310; author of Divine Institutes, in written, 139, 224.
syntomos of the Divine Institutes,
224 seq.; a treatise on the Anger of God, 225 seq.; of the manner in which the persecutors died, 319 seq.; fragments of, 323; a poem in the Phoenix, 254, 460 seq.; on the Passover of the Lord, 327 seq.;
on the resurrection of Christ, 609, and also to be found, 475.

Laetare Gravidae, vi, 410.
Larisa, Arcadian buried in Minerva's
temple at vi, 508.

Last days, the, vii, 390, 211, 200, 353.

Latins, i, 47, 458, 488.

Kings, earthly, to be honored, not adored, ii, 232; speaking against considered treason, vi, 257.

Kissed, of charity, abuse of, ii, 247.

Kneeling, in worship, iii, 689; where alone in, vi, 513.

Kneeling, age of, 855.

Knowledge, i, 29, 69, 137, 1961;
pulls up, 397; perfect, not attainable in this life, 599; the true, 398, 574, defined, ii, 340, 350, 364; foundation in faith, 445; by the senses, 445; taught by apprehension and reason, 316; of
God, in Greek philosophy, 328;
degrees of, 506; love of, 508; true, in Christ only, 508; philosophy and heresy, vi, 539; stages in,
i, 73; advantage of, vi, 144.
the responsibility which it involves,
144; enhances responsibility,
136; duties born, 145; value of, 1911; universal, possessed by none, 106; the tree of,
i, 174; and righteousness, vi, 441
and salvation, vii, 233.

Kovacs, i, 60.

Kramer, viii, 254; his decease, 730; explained as chronic, in turn, ii, 472; son of Coeleus and progenitor of the six magi, 4723 and Rasca, vi, 263; and Aphrodite, 283.

Epirr Elion, viii, 551 and parallel.

Laborer's duty of, i, 112.

Lescaut, Osler and Pollax buried in,
vii, 484.

Lecanatus, styled the Christian Chiron,

vii, 44.

Lecanatus, the, vi, 138.

Lauri, commonly said to be gods of necromancers and witches, from the supposed divinity, vi, 471; guardians of houses, 475; identified sometimes with the Cyprus, sometimes with the Sige Samo-this, 475; identified with the Manna, 475; gods of the air, and also to be found, 475.

Lares Gravidae, vi, 410.
Larisa, Arcadian buried in Minerva's
temple at vi, 508.

Last day, the, vii, 390, 211, 200, 353.

Latins, i, 47, 458, 488.

Kings, earthly, to be honored, not adored, ii, 232; speaking against considered treason, vi, 257.

Kissed, of charity, abuse of, ii, 247.

Kneeling, in worship, iii, 689; where alone in, vi, 513.

Kneeling, age of, 855.

Knowledge, i, 29, 69, 137, 1961;
pulls up, 397; perfect, not attainable in this life, 599; the true, 398, 574, defined, ii, 340, 350, 364; foundation in faith, 445; by the senses, 445; taught by apprehension and reason, 316; of God, in Greek philosophy, 328;
degrees of, 506; love of, 508; true, in Christ only, 508; philosophy and heresy, vi, 539; stages in,
i, 73; advantage of, vi, 144.
the responsibility which it involves,
144; enhances responsibility,
136; duties born, 145; value of, 1911; universal, possessed by none, 106; the tree of,
i, 174; and righteousness, vi, 441
and salvation, vii, 233.

Kovacs, i, 60.

Kramer, viii, 254; his decease, 730; explained as chronic, in turn, ii, 472; son of Coeleus and progenitor of the six magi, 4723 and Rasca, vi, 263; and Aphrodite, 283.

Epirr Elion, viii, 551 and parallel.

Laborer's duty of, i, 112.

Lescaut, Osler and Pollax buried in,
vii, 484.

Lecanatus, styled the Christian Chiron,
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

INDEX OF SUBJECTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Index of Subjects</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>178</td>
<td>Christians, 355; how fulfilled by Christ, vii, 461; of Christ, i, 138; the new, ii, 20.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Law, teaching of their successor, vi, 195; interpretation of, 196.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Law, Roman, how unjust, ii, 21; vainly enacted against Christians, 22; not enforced against luxury, 22; in the Pandects of Justinian, 27.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lawless one, the, vi, 246, 248.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Laws, abuse of, vi, 276; of burning nations contrary to God’s law, iv, 557.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Laying on of bands, complement of baptism, vi, 268, given by bishops only, 669.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Layman to speak publicly only by the bishop’s leave, vi, 154.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Læmmer raised by Jesus, vii, 490, 462.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lear referred to, iv, 49.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Learners and carillers, vi, 233.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Learning necessary before teaching, vi, 723.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lechites referred to, vii, 4.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leibnus, canon of, vii, 493; address of, vii, 97.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lecher referred to, viii, 69.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leech referred to, vi, 485.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lecion, or lesson, vi, 559, 569, 561.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lectionarium of Cerei, vi, 531.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leila, induced by Jupiter, vi, 480, 481, another, vii, 483.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leona, represented on the stage, 531; son of, vi, 470.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Legal referred to, iv, 268, 668, 674.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Left and right, merely relative terms, vi, 427, 445, 477.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lebriz, to the Thunderer, i, 189; the Thunder-burial, vi, 722.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lehan referred to, vii, 70, 334.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leighton referred to, vi, 429, 446, 429.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Le Noury referred to, ii, 397.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lena, when to be kept, vi, 443.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leo Alii, vii, 533.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leo and Leno, ii, 55, 60.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lepers, of the blind, i, 324.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lepus, canon of, vii, 493, 494.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leprosy healed by Jesus, vii, 408, 441.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lexicon read in the Church, vii, 421.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Letter of Pontius Pilate, viii, 459.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Letters and epistles, the chief theories of Marcion respecting, i, 337, 341; absurdity of arguments derived from, 333; God not to be sought after, by means of, 366.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Letters commendatory, to be given and received, vi, 422, to be required, 501.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Letters of the church in Vienna and Lyons to the churches of Asia and Phrygia, vii, 748, 778, 747.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lexippus, first teacher of Epicurean philosophy, vii, 87; unreasoning, of, vi, 16.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lexiphrates, buried in Diana’s sanctuary, vii, 487, 486.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lexis, the patriarch, speaks of his voyage on Homer, vii, 15, 14; of his revelations, 13, of the seven heavens, 13, of the seven men in white rochet inventing him with the unison of the priesthood, 14; is instructed in the law of the priesthood and sacrifices, 14, 15; speaks of his marriage, 15; admonishes his children to fear the Lord, 15; foretells that they will act unjustly against the Saviour, 15, 16; that they will be led into captivity, 16, and finally be given over through the Lord, 16; his death and burial, 17.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lev, his testimony to Jesus before the Sanhedrin, vii, 444, 447.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Levies, course of, vi, 164.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Levite, office of, executed in the Christian church by the deacons, vi, 490, 410.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Levitical dispensation, the not approved by God for his own sake, i, 483.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lewis, Taylor referred to, i, 496.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libani, bishop of the gods, vi, 529; formula used in, 530.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libe, severely punished, vi, 487.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libra, zodiacal sign of, vii, 478.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libation, (7), vi, 420.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Liber, a deserted mortal, vi, 465, 474; dared because he taught men to use wine, 423; son of Jupiter and Semeliae, vii, 468, 457; in the campaign of 480; born in pieces by the Titans, 484, 495; called Liberius, vii, 526.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Little Labyrinth, vi, 4.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Liburan, ancient, four families of, vii, 531; theories of the origin and forms, 532.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libyans and Libyans, temple of Apollo, vi, 520.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libyov, son of Neoptolemus, vii, 497.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libys, a man of Athens, vii, 497.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libyus, daughter of Jupiter and Ceres, vi, 487.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Licensor, not to be taught by Christians, ii, 66.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lictor, or lieutenant, vii, 537.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Liconian, son of Zycostus, i, 507.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Licostus referred to, vii, 570.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ligare referred to, vii, 338, viii, 6, 778.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Linus referred to, ii, 77.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lina, goddess of thresholds, vi, 478.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Linnaeus, legend of, vi, 478.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Linda, or Linda, vii, 57.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lindus of Rhodos, honoris to Hercules at, vi, 36.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Linus, a, and cubes, taught by Jesus, vii, 581.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lions and panthers, worship and eschatology, viii, 583.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lippeus referred to, vii, 70.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Linas, the universal, vii, 541.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lips, formerly not to be taught by Christians, ii, 66.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Litterateurs, or literary, vii, 537.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Littorians, called, vii, 530.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Livy, as a human right, ii, 105.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lips, canon of, vii, 493, 494.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Library, imperial, care of, vi, 466.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Library, ungodliness of, i, 536.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Library, no godliness without, vii, 124; and necessity, 501; of concurrence a human right, ii, 105.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Library of Vaga, on baptism, vi, 356.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Liberais, of those born under, vi, 53.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lictor, commissioned by Tiberius to destroy the Jews who persecuted the death of Jesus, vi, 494.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lidius, Emperor, treaty with Dacia, vi, 315; attacked by him, 315; his dream, 319; defeats Dacia, 320; uses to death Varinius and others, 324.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lidius referred to, iv, 439, 459, 655.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
|      | Life, a, 472, 473, 456; that, a wanderer, ii, 31; life, ii, 31; and death, difference between, ii, 537; earthly, only consecration of Christ, iii, 643; the
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

386

Bilbey, 132.
Bilgici, 750.
Bischof, 159, 370, 571.
Busch, 200.
Buxtorf, 523.
Le Brun, 523.
Le Nourry, 524.
Le Bas, 524.
Le Allatius, 525.
Lithet, 526, 544, 549.
Malchion, 533.
Marret, 540.
Mement, 550.
Mauriat, 551.
Maison, 553.
Nestor, 550, 554, 555, 545, 546, 568, 570, 571.
Polier, 552, 561, 563.
Pufi, 556.
Pujet, 559.
Ratramnus, 560.
Battay, 564.
Benedetto, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575.
Benedetto, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579.
Scholator, 580, 581.
Siderius, 582.
Tullienus, 583.
Tironis, 584.
Trotter, 585, 586.
Ulass, 587.
Warmuję, 588,
Williams, 589.
Zaccaria, 590.

Literary science, of, in its infancy, vi, 559.

Literary, meaning of the word, vi, 559; the divine prayers in, vi, 280-281; canon of, vi, 489-491; Pauline norm of, in, 597; Clementine, 598, 599; date of, 353; probable use of, in Rome and Gaul, 598; primitive, no normal type, ascribed to, 599; Clementine, no. 123, no. 598; order of, by St. Justin Martyr, 598; Justin Martyr's account of, compared with Clementine, 599; the two parts of, 391; comparison of the Clementine and St. Irenaeus, 197; of St. James (Jerusalem), 592, 594; of St. Mark (Alexandria), 595, 596, 595; single of, in 197; of Rome and Gaul, 398, 591; of St. Irenaeus, 592; of St. Cyril, 444; of St. Gregory, 541; Ethiopia, or All Apostles, 394; of Nestorian, 395; of Theodore the interpreter, 396; of Malbarr, 570, 571.

Living creatures, the symbolic import of the four, 1, 243.
Livy referred to, vi, 138.
Locusts, destruction of crops by, said to be caused by Christians, vi, 444, 445, 447.
Log, worshipped by the Latins for Diana, vi, 510.
Logos, the, ii, 133, 445; derived from the Father, v, 159; not a mere attribute of God, iii, 501; not an empty word, implies creation, 503; creator of all, v, 551; God of God, 191; made man, 593; the word so called, 5, 316, 577; and Sign, 578; abominability of the Valentinian account of the generation of the Logos, 191, 401; power of the Logos, 57, 58, 59, 60; the internal and external, 243; instruction of the Logos, 191.
Logos, is one God, the Father, v, 563; the testimony of Moses to, 191.
Lords Day, 13, 43, 189; illustrated by Greek authors, ii, 489; day of Christ's resurrection, 1, 444, 445; Christian observance of, iii, 703; the service of, iii, 581, 421, 423, 471; to be kept as a feast, 490, 498, 499.
Long-suffering, effect of, viii, 48, 489; of God, 507.
Lords of Power, 1, 592; 593, 595; 596; common to Christians only, vi, 444-501; understood though not written in the Clementine Liturgy, 557 in baptism, vii, 591; an epistle of the Gospel, iii, 592; analysis of, 592-595; exposition of, in detail, 449-507; illustrations of, from Jewish liturgies, 593; use of among us, 507; our own may be added, iii, 594.
Losing of the body of Pilate sent forth to be buried, vii, 467.
Loth, his example, 1, 43; and his children, the typical import of the story of, 504, 555; the wife of, turned into a pillar of salt, 504; and his wife, a poem, iv, 189-193.
Lothair, Artus's named, because the wolf did not rend Romulus and Remus, vi, 476.
Lost, unnatural, attributed to the gods, vi, 481; the source of all evils, vii, 141; anger and grief, the cause of, vii, 327.
Luther referred to, vi, 102.
Luthearians, different kinds of, iii, 30; angel of, 39.
Luxury, abused, ii, 13, 27; in household, forbidden to Christians, vi, 447; in dress and person, 272; in sacrifices, 275; hindrance to charity, 279.
Lycaon, Jupiter's aide of the son of, vi, 484.
Lydia, vi, 492.
Lycophron, piercing gaze of, vi, 483.
Lye, legend of invention of, vi, 43, 46.
Lycaon referred to, vi, 483.
Lying for religion, a striking illustration of, vi, 247, 258; competition in, 258, 259.

Lucifere, 414.
Lucas, father of Mageolin, vi, 484.
Lucas, martyrs to, vi, 484.
Lucas, bishop of Alexandria, the Great, 415.
Lucius, bishop of, to Cyprian, v, 355; reply to, 356.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Marcellus, story of, vi. 179.
Marcion, vii. 1771, 182; heretic, iii, 7,
597, 599; heresy of, iv. 577, 667; vii. 360, 362; a paganism, iv. 422; — history of, iii. 257; asailed by Cerdo. 372; both following Eusebius, vi, 119-112; summary of, 116 —; doctrines of, i. 355; ii. 353, 384, 439; 439-445; subject of, 377, 392, Scripture, iii, 362; vain attempt of, to exclude Alexander, vii, 258; absence of, vi. 278; i. 470; Pisto more religious than, 459; meets Polycarp, 416; his God, to God, iii. 157; 358, its late origin, 281; but dividing God, vii. 471; as a deed to, 459; his title to existence of, ii, 279, 283; depreciates creation, which is a witness of God, 280, 283; vilifies the creator, 281; assumes the existence of two gods, 282; Jesus Christ would not be the same as the god of, 284; doctrine of, confuted out of St. Paul's teaching, 286; the goodness of the god of, is improperly manifested, 289; the justice of the god of, is hopelessly weak and unpunished, 291; dangerous effects to morality and religion from such weakness, 292; methods of correcting, ii, 437; correct and absurd, 4777; carved of, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304; answered, 315, 316, 317, 319, 320, 321, 322, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330; window of, not subject of, iii. 278; vt. 278; debates Luke's gospel as his authority, 348; which he calls, 347, 350, 353, 355; intempi, that he calls, 325, 327; intemperance of, iii. 278; 347; negates Luke's gospel as his authority, 348; which he calls, 347, 350, 353, 355; intempi, that he calls, 325, 327; intemperance of, iii. 278; 347; negates not expedient, iv. 541; second ventured, 459, second and third, how far allowed, 460, second detrimental to the faith, iv. 431; is a species of adultery, 555; causes distinction of the soul, 566; excess in futile, 309, 377; heretical perversions of Scripture regarding, i. 355, 357; forbidden by certain heretics, vi. 453, 454; errors of Caesarius refuted, 359; its purity brought in Holy Scripture, 400, 403; degradation of it, a reproach to the Creator, 400, 403; two heretical views of marriage to be abjured, 404, 407; true philosophy of, 407, 409; glory of true Christ's work, ii. 399; allowable, iv. 540, not a good in itself, 52; illustrated from St. Paul, 52; heathen example in, ii. 399; with heathen, 54; not lawful to Christian women, 44; Discuss of such marriage, 46, 47; forms observed in, vi. 508; three modes of contracting, 483; advocacy of prostratous, 432; suppos., the, vii. 274.

390

Marriage, Fornications versus same sex, vi. 459; among Jewish relations, vii. 378; among the Romans, vii. 361; among the preserved, 616; misbehaviour, 616; unfaithfulness for, 649; relations of, 650; Married people, were dead, vii. 251.

Married referred to, vii. 266, 297, iv. 83.

Maries, vii. 19, 256; born in Aetia (7), vi. 484; born in Thrace, 484; said to be Spartanus, 484; set over, 484, held for fourteen months, 484 (note); loved by Christ; 484; remarried by Valerius; 484; wounded by men, 484, a word worshipped by the Romans ans, 484; and then sacrificed to, 484; otherwise Maced. 511; shining without, 484; allegorical explanation of the binding of Venus and, 505; the Romans spoken of as the race of, 488.

Mars, sold charms against serpent bites, vi. 446.

Mataras, B. 55.

Mathews, story of, vii. 534.

Mauro, entreated by Neut's child, vi, 421.

Mary, story of, vii. 533; the so-called, must be persecuted, vii. 50.

Maryland, why to be desired, i. 441, 523; counsel to those who desire, ii. 215; not possible to desire of Christ, vi. 679; 674; God's remedy against idolatry, iii. 679; a complete victory, 679, 678; a triumph over demons, 41; a sacrament, 641; honored by Christ, vi. 321, 323, 324; Christ's glory of, iv. 195; baptism

390
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Text</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 185  | Selon, 279; heathen oracles (deity of, 279); compared with heathen heroes, II, 413; history of, 415; law-giver and general, 393–394; savior of the Egyptians, 563; Aaron and Miriam sin against, I, 573; his rod, v, 121; exposition of his history, v, 366–367; foreknowledge of, VIII, 247; allows the immediate to offer sacrifices, 577; his brother, according to mythology, IV, 510; how he delivered his writings, vii, 214; law not written by him, 497; given by him handed down by successive prophets, v, 764; in harmony with the Gospel, in, 6371; spiritually interpreted, 615–617; honored by Christ in, 474; parable between his miracles and Christ's, 535; a type of Christ, II, 3371, 2650; and Christ, VIII, 215, 271; burial of, II, 511; assumption of, 571; appears at the transfiguration, v, 550; apocryphal, 333, 505; ascension of, referred to, v, 268. Moses of Chorene, history of Armenia, vii, 792–793. Moses referred to, 4, 472; ii, 407; 492. Mother, the, of the Valentinian heresy, VI, 392. Mother of Clement. See Matthew. Mother of God, Mary, the, viii, 260, 535; history of her heavenly hierarchy by angels, 589. Mother of the gods, married to Satan, vii, 397; Nea, vi, 234; a pine brought into the sanctuary of, 496; great a spot worshipped by the people of Persia for, 530; represented as a golden, iv, 669. Mosaic, the sun, moon, and stars, vi, 177. Mountain, representing the twelve tribes, ii, 497; power and action of each, 297–298. Meaning (grammatical), limit for Christians, vi, 474. Messias, epistle of Cyprian to, vi, 295; 591; reply of, 592. Modesty referred to, vi, 433–434. Moloch, dressed as a woodman, vi, 317. Mule, a young man transformed into by magic; restored to his proper shape by Jesus, VIII, 406, 409. Munus of Gaba, on baptism, v, 579. Munus referred to, III, 8. Munus (sacrifice to the dead), holiness in origin and character, III, 8. Munus Canum, II, 3, 8, 361 v, 663. Murcia, guardian of the smithies, vi, 476. Musaeus quoted, 5, 481. Musaeus, daughter of Jupiter and Memory, vi, 460, 472; of Craga and Tilia, 472; three sons of, in number, 473, 1060; 274; number of, stated differently as three, four, seven, 472 (notes); and eight, 472; said by some to be virgin, by others mateless, 473; identified with the Nymphus, 474; represented with pipes and panoplies, 517; handmaid of Magdalene, 480. Music, sanctified in Lev. xi, 498; instrumental, and, 492; mystery of, 490. Musicians, gaily contrasted at the banquet by the silence of the, vi, 486. Musicians, i, 911. Mussotus, parable of, interpreted, ii, 578. Mutation, a law of nature, iv, 66 of it. Mutun, a deity, vi, 479. Mystagogus, II, 524. Mystagogues, three, referred to, II, 518; in the building of the mystical and triumphal church, i, 43; Christian, why celebrated by night, 434; Eleusinian, in the, of, 175–177; derivation of, 175; the pontifical, vi, 537; named zuerda, 490; of Venus, 496; Phrygian, 496, 497; of Ceres, 496, 501; Allunotous, 500–501. Mystery of circumcision, i, 142. Mythology, ii, 667; heathen, vi, 197; its origin, i, 167; ii, 159; 536; absurd and hopeless, 172–173; explanation of, vii, 203; follies of the Greek, i, 272; Roman, disgraceful features of the, 138; gods indeterminate in, 150. Myths, the heathen, not to be taken literally, viii, 202, 263; 264; the inventors of such vile, baseless, 205. Namelessness of God, i, 284. Names, of God, i, 290, 292, different, in the Hebrew Scriptures, 435 of Christ, 390, 466; 392; of God and Christ, power of, ii, 406, 427; not given to heathen gods, 497; power of other names, 305; chickens, in the early Church, vi, 83; the giving of, to animals, viii, 227; exceptions and objects (philosophical) classified, 4. Nana, daughter of king Sangarius, vi, 491; denounced by an apple, 491, 494; kept alive by the mother of the gods, 491; mother of Athos, 492, 494. Naphthali, the patriarch, speaks of his birth, vii, 37; of his youth, 297; of his dreams, 28; exhorts his children not to change the order of nature, 27, 28; his death and burial, 28. Nativity of Oba, on baptism, v, 572. Nativity, hearing account of, vi, 401. Nathanael, referred to, vii, 424; meets with Titus, and relates to him the wonderful words of Jesus, and baptizes him, 473. Nations, sons of the, vii, 376. Nativitas ad astra, a tendency of Tertullian, iii, 104 seqq. Nativitas, art of celebrating, vii, 376. Nativitas dei, feast of, is March 25, vii, 372; is both possible and becoming, iii, 529, 533. Natalis, the day of, vii, 417. Nature, use of the word by the букун, v, 377; nothing apart from God, 377; repair ofographed, 176; the folly of speaking of, as making, viii, 174; love of, ii, 4, 83; authority of, iii, 561; and freedom on, viii, 740; fragments from the, books on, by Dionysius of Alexandria, vi, 64. Naucrates, gospel of, referred to, vii, 57. Neale referred to, vi, 30, 266; vii, 535, 533, 523. Necrology, referred to, i, 472; i, 8; 3971 iv, 402, 480, 353, 501, 643; his classification of Tertullian's works, iii, 41. Nebridius, family of the, vi, 504. Nebuchadnezzar, son of Zoroaster, viii, 164, 275. Nebuchadnezzar, son of Babel, viii, 262. Necromancy, i, 169; viii, 100. Needle, Peter causes a needle to go through the eye of, and causes a second to fall so, viii, 527. Needly, ii, 16. Neighbor, who is our, ii, 599. Nehil, name of the second Minerva in Egypt, vi, 468. Nemesianus, bishop of Cyrrhus to, vi, 421; reply of, 424. Nemesianus, bishop of Thessalonica, on baptism, v, 466. Nemesianus, god of groves, vi, 498. Neptune, viii, 195, 201; dominion of, vi, 251; believed to be serviceable to men, vi, 459; king of the sea, 398
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

474. 848, 849, brother of Philo and Jupiter, 474; witnesses of, 309; get ill: illus. on walls, 474, served the Trojan Lais. 484; lord of the fish and shaker of the earth, 472; one kind of Finn. as said by the Eatasce to belong to, 474; the Atlantia of 415 (note); armed with the trident, 472, said to have been one of the Finns, 474. 475: means the outspread water, 472, 696.

Nestor, loved Acis. vi, 485.

Nero, last Roman persecutor, iii, 468, sleeplessness of, 223; death of, vii, 3021; applied to by the Jews to prevent Paul coming to Rome, his compliance, vii, 477; tells the Jews that Paul is dead, 477; Peter and Paul accusèd before; by Simon Magnus, 485; is referred by Peter to a letter of Pilate to Claudius, 480; discussion between Peter and Paul and Simon Magnus before, 480; orders Peter and Paul to be put to death, 486.

Newton, Library of vi, 576.

New covenant, the, iv, 414, creature in Christ, meaning of, iv, 591.

Newton, promised and given iv, 199.

Newman referred to, iv, 497; vii, 477 in, 693.

Newton, Sir Isaac, his ory, vii, 48.

Nietzsche, writes about ory, vii, 643.

Nicaragua, wife of priest of Hiptipant, 472; 511; said to have been one of the Finns, 474.

Nicene Creed, the, vii, 4244, ratification of, 3244, refers to, 3244; decree of the council of Ephes. on additions to, 524; to be studied in the doctors of the second and third centuries, vii, 51 harmonizes Anti-Nicene doctrine, 161; continues in universal force to our time, 161; testimony of Dr. Sheed, 161.

Nicea, on Simon Magnus, viii, 98, 234 seq.; leaves Simon Magnus, and becomes a Christian, 234; and Aquila, reposes such other as brothers, 396; are sent by Peter to Laodicea, 175, 2921 and with Clement to Tyre, 271, 272, etc. and Aquila, discovered to be Clement's brothers, 162, 162; discovers the story of his own and Aquila's shipwreck, and introduces to Simon Magnus, 162, 307; pleads for the baptism of his mother, 162, 307; discussion with the old woman, 166-174; recognizes the old woman as his father, 190-191; pleads for his father's reception to the Church, 195; 197; admission to the Church, 195; explanation of the heathen, comonomical and mythological, 504-505, 503.

Nicene, father of Herod, i, 40, 47; companions of St. Peter, vii, 453.

Nicholas I, the founder of papacy, viii, 561; passes the Decretals into the Roman canon, 561.

Nicholas II, 475; means the outspread water, 472, 696.

Nestor, loved Acis, vi, 485.

Nero, last Roman persecutor, iii, 468, sleeplessness of, 223; death of, vii, 3021; applied to by the Jews to prevent Paul coming to Rome, his compliance, vii, 477; tells the Jews that Paul is dead, 477; Peter and Paul accusèd before; by Simon Magnus, 485; is referred by Peter to a letter of Pilate to Claudius, 480; discussion between Peter and Paul and Simon Magnus before, 480; orders Peter and Paul to be put to death, 486.

Newton, Library of vi, 576.

New covenant, the, iv, 414, creature in Christ, meaning of, iv, 591.

Newton, promised and given iv, 199.

Newman referred to, iv, 497; vii, 477 in, 693.

Newton, Sir Isaac, his ory, vii, 48.

Nietzsche, writes about ory, vii, 643.

Nicaragua, wife of priest of Hiptipant, 472; 511; said to have been one of the Finns, 474.

Nicene Creed, the, vii, 4244, ratification of, 3244, refers to, 3244; decree of the council of Ephes. on additions to, 524; to be studied in the doctors of the second and third centuries, vii, 51 harmonizes Anti-Nicene doctrine, 161; continues in universal force to our time, 161; testimony of Dr. Sheed, 161.

Nicea, on Simon Magnus, viii, 98, 234 seq.; leaves Simon Magnus, and becomes a Christian, 234; and Aquila, reposes such other as brothers, 396; are sent by Peter to Laodicea, 175, 2921 and with Clement to Tyre, 271, 272, etc. and Aquila, discovered to be Clement's brothers, 162, 162; discovers the story of his own and Aquila's shipwreck, and introduces to Simon Magnus, 162, 307; pleads for the baptism of his mother, 162, 307; discussion with the old woman, 166-174; recognizes the old woman as his father, 190-191; pleads for his father's reception to the Church, 195; 197; admission to the Church, 195; explanation of the heathen, comonomical and mythological, 504-505, 503.

Nicene, father of Herod, i, 40, 47; companions of St. Peter, vii, 453.

Nicholas I, the founder of papacy, viii, 561; passes the Decretals into the Roman canon, 561.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANT E-NICE N FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Offense, to be avoided, ii, 429; must come, vii, 398.

Oaths, made under the gospel as well as the law, vii, 413; made by the people, but distributed by the bishop of Sebaste, 499; to be received with reverence, and not from the unworthy and evil elders, 431, 435; of the imperial, provoke God, 435; how those forced upon the Church are to be used, 435; for martyrs and confessors, 477; kinds and proportion of, 477; distribution of, to the priesthood and the poor respectively, 477; given at the Baptistery, 481; certain kinds of, forbidden, 5005 for the departed, vi, 397.

Offerings, the (or First Oblation), vii, 355, 394, 420, 430.

Office-bearers, of the church at Ephesus, i, 59; Magnesia, 59; Philippi, 81; of the bishop, 79.

Offices, public, how far lawful to Christians, iii, 91.

Offshoots, ii, 40, 41.

Oil, the lamp of, meaning of, vi, 139; use of, in baptism, vii, 431, 409; Thanksgiving for, 426; blessing of, 494; from the tree of life, in, with which Christ was anointed, vii, 397.

Ointment in baptism, thanksgiving for, vii, 429, 477.

Ointments, choice of, ii, 255.

Old age, in 17.

Old Testament, speaks throughout only of the one true God, 5, 418; everywhere mentions and presides the advent of Christ, 473; harmony of, with the New, 147; misconception of God in the, vii, 289; some parts of, written to, 329; list of the books of, according to Melito, 759.

Olive, Minerva the discoverer of the, vii, 429.

Olympian Jupiter, vi, 513.

On a teacher's death, 2; Peter, 22.

Onement derived from points of spires, vii, 495; from the external parts of victims, 490, 499; no longer observed in public business, 490.

Omphalos, i.e., Bethlehem, vi, 516.

Ophidian, bishop of Ephesus, i, 40, 49, 50, 101, 172, 114.

Ophians, bishop of Phila, vii, 487.

Oracle, a dialogue by Minucius Felix, date, sec., and editions, vi, 170, 171, 195; reproaches Minucius on account of Caeliculus, 155; his argument with Caeliculus, 155 seq.

Orchomenus quoted, i, 570.

Oschler quoted, i, 325.

Otellis, the Phoenician Harleian burned on mount Etna, vii, 458, 484.

Omissions, calumny of, reiterated on the heathen, ii, 133.

Ophiophaeus, the city of, Philip at, viii, 497; Philip and his companions tortured at, 498; shut up in the temple at, 499; Philip crucified at, viii, 499; the inhabitants of, swallowed up in the abyss, but delivered by the Savior, 502, 508 seq.

Ophites, the, vi, 74, 124; heresy of, iii, 699; doctrines of, i, 354, 362; Ascan and Eve, 362; their diagram of heaven, vi, 594, 599; of the Church, 356; their seven demons, 386.

Opting, vii, 25; spring from Colen and Hesiod, vi, 461; mother of Jupiter and his brothers, 422, 450, 460, 472, 482.

Oracles, omitted of, vii, 390.

Oracles of Apollo, acknowledges Christ, vii, 392.

Oracles, heathen, i, 160; viii, 139; testimony of Moses, 278; to Christian truths, vii, 281; why they sometimes come true, vii, 129; discredited by the heathen themselves, iv, 64.; the utterance of demons, 612, 616.

Oracles, guardian deity of revered parents, vii, 478.

Oresias, vii, 179; union of Frocereides with, vii, 392.

Orrick, vi, 16, 19, 59; in instruction, vii, 123; of nature, how illustrated, 27, 28; God's, 236.

Orders, ecclesiastical, vii, 413; greater and minor, vi, 473; origin of, vii, 417.

Ordinances, ii, 35; and laws made by the apostles, vii, 465.

Ordination, the term used of a bishop, viii, 475; by bishops only, viii, 482; whom conferred, 471, 477; prayers at, 481; rites of, 483; 496, 493; 300; of presbyters and deacons, how to be performed, vii, 611; age required for the former, 649; at Tripolis, 156; of Zacchaeus, 475.

Orelli referred to, i, 487, 485.

Organ, hydraulical, invented by Archimedes, viii, 552.

Origen, i, 48; ii, 5; 57.

Origin, a pupil of Clement of Alexandria, ii, 106; in, introduction, 223; confessor, 223; birth and early training, 224; teacher, catechist, and ascetic, 223; his teaching of logic, vi, 89, of natural science, 90, of morals, 311; his Zeuxis and other writings, 226, 230-231, 237; his exposition of holy Scripture, vii, 37, ordination, vi, 227; deposition, 227; school and pupils at Cæsarea, 225; teacher of Gregory Thaumaturgus, vii, 27; imprisonment and death, iv, 393; character and attainments, 359, 395; considerations on his faults, vi, 39; editions of his works, iv, 323-334, edition of De Principiis, 229 seq.; wrote a letter to Africanus, 596 seq.; to Gregory, 309, 394; against Celsus, 399 seq.; oration and paraphrase of Gregory, addressed to, vi, 37 seq.; style of Alexander of Caesarea to, 154; quotes Tafan, ii, 52, and the Recognitions of Clement, vii, 36, and is quoted by Methodius, vi, 399 seq., 373 seq., 397 seq.; referred to, i, 4, 14, 154, 304.

Original remuneration, ii, 242.

Origin of things, Christ commanded men not to inquire into, vii, 457.

Origin of things, Pallas said by, vi, 454.

Orphics, vi, 58; provision for, vii, 47.

Orphics, vi, 61; on the unity of God, i, 190, vi, 123; cosmogony of, vi, 390; divided into Mithraism and Orphism, 279; introduced the rites of Bacchus into Greece, vii, 35; the Thracian, vii, 36; and other, 499; quoted, i, 279, 286, 290, ii, 137, 178, 179, 183, 665, 666, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 480, 481, 483, 484, vi, 499.

Orphics, viii, 428.

Ortius, vi, 392; husband of Isis, torn limb from limb, vii, 442.

Oriolus, a deity giving foresight to the bones of children, vi, 478.

Osiogenes, a name given to Juno, vi, 473.

Osiris, marine bath of, iv, 173.

Outline of ephebopy, fragments from, of Theognostus of Alexandria, vi, 153.

Ovid, on the unity of God, vi, 140; in, Venus, 242; on Saturn, 25; on creation, i, 56, 58; referred to (Attica), vii, 11, 34, 47, 48, 55, 56, 141, 276, 278.

402
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

188

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Pascagoula, the, of Clement of Alexandria, and contents of, ii. 106; office of the, 109; his philanthropy, 240; men and women under his charge, 244; the person and instruction, 222, seq.; character of, 244.

Pampas, cow-calf of, vi. 495.

Pantocrator, i. 195; the Alexandrian philosopher, vi. 748, 770; master of the catechetical school at Alexandria, ii. 105, 106, 345; vi. 777; fragments from, 777.

Paraclete, a name inscribed on the statue of the God-like Jupiter, vi. 512.

Paradise, the, i. 156, 476.

Parysak quoted, ii. 487, 488.

Papa, Egyptian appellation for all men, vi. 54; a name common to all bishops, vi. 605; modern appellation to bishop of Rome, vi. 434.

Peppey, how inaugurated, vii. 605; not recognized by the churches of England and France, 442.

Pepian, vii. 495; Chrysus, King of, vi. 509.

Persists, fragments of, i. 153, 155, 214; introductory notice to, 153; quoted, 505.

Petrus and Jason referred to, in 521.

Pithakis teaching by, foretold in the Old Testament, iii. 376; his proper mode of interpreting, 396; of our Lord, mystery of, iii. 307, 323; interpreted by the Laborers, 415; Mustard Seed, 578; Paul, 578; Good Samaritan, 595; Prodigal Son, 581, 583; 82; of forbornness (St. Luke, xvi), 605; of the lost sheep and the prodigal son, not applicable to Christians, iv. 50.

Pictaale, the, iii. 598, 621; why the Holy Spirit is so called, iv. 280; receives from Christ what he reveals to man, iv. 625; his person and office, 629; important, especially to Paul, vi. 283; lately claimed by Mares, 205.

Pictaale, place of, vi. 163; distinct from heaven, vi. 370; for martyrs only, iii. 231, 370, 595; according to heretics, situated above the third heaven, i. 332; script and account of, ii. 102; its beauty, 103; man's expulsion from, 104; recognition of friends in, v. 479; Adam and all the rest introduced to, by Jesus, v. 431; the penitent robber subdued to, 438, 470; Paul conducted to, 438, 478; persons whose soul to there, 595; Tertullian's views on, iii. 59; allegorical representation of, by Simon Magus, v. 77.

Pictaale, views of, ii. 255.

Paradise, vii. 537.

Paradise, origin of its observance, of, vi. 17, 30.

Parman, the, three, vii. 59.

Parthes, duties of, i. 111, vi. 436; duty of, vi. 215; good to be loved more than, vi. 144.

Paris, referred to, viii. 6.

Paris, the judgment of, vii. 265.

Parrhesiastes, cosmonomy of, vi. 163; quoted, ii. 447, 515, 470, 475, 4851, v. 579.

Persians, laws of, vii. 731.

Christianity attained by mighty works among them, vi. 458.

Parton referred to, ii. 12; iii. 239.

Parviglia, tumult of, vi. 216.

Pauclid, solemnities, difference in the observance of, i. 565; canon of Anatolius of Alexandria, vii. 146 seq.

Passages, controverted i. 171; having been removed by the Jews, 254, 255; vii. 18; solved, how to be interpreted, i. 398, 483.

Passages extra-canonical quoted, i. 7, 10, 12, 130, 140, 141, 143, 144, 147, 153, 154, 176, 200, 210, 234, 235, 240, 246, 247, 250, 296, 291, 310, 485, 492, 514; vii. 110, viii. 236, 247, 249, 259.

Passion of the wealthy men, how not to be indicated in Scripture, i. 383; not to be proved from Scripture, i. 478; foretold by Moses, 475; of Christ voluntary, vi. 115, 118; chronology of, vi, 478; purpose of, 399, 403; events of, vii. 440, 445; week of, to be kept, iv. 647; of Christ in a poem on, 329, 338; an oration on, vi. 760 seq.

Passions, animal, produce, according to Valentinus, matter, substances, i. 523; the three, vii. 247, to be indulged, 281, and called, spirits, vi. 48.

Passover, lamb, a type of Christ, i. 214; when kept by the Jews, vi. 289; the law not eaten by Christ, v. 425; our Lord, i. 481, vii. 282; the Christian, vii. 112; controversy on, vii. 738, 772, 777.

Pastoral, iv. 218.

Pastoral, the, to which the apostle committed the churches, to be heard, iv. 547.

Patella, goddess of things to be brought to light, vi. 478.

Patellada, goddesses of things already brought to light, vi. 478.

Patris, the two, viii. 308, 309.

Patience, i. 35, 168; ii. 39; duty of, vii. 181; advantage of, vi. 484; more than becometh, ii. 231; honored by heathen, iii. 707; God, the author of, x. 707; Christian example of, vi. 514.

Patria, origin of its observance, of, vii. 59.

Paul, a myth, vi. 571; story of, from Hellen, vi. 539.

Penapius, a treatise of Gregory

404
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

instrument of, 127; not to be shunned as evil, 118; instance of Baucilus, 119; only Apostles commanded to keep, 229; to be brought, 128; instance of John, 122; duty of clergy in, 122; to be brought, 128; table of persecutions of Christians, 123; in Lyons and Vienna, description of, 127; number of, 125; 256 in 127; description of, 258; number of, the ten, iv, 125; persecution under, 126; the ten, iv, 125; persecutions of the church and their punishments, vi, 321 seq.

Persone, vii, 197.

Persion, son of Darius, ii, 170.

Persecution in faith better than attainment, vi, 284.

Persecution, inversion of, ii, 65; system of the, vi, 402; law of the, viii, 710; overcome because of the Christians, vii, 473; Christianity resisted by mighty works among, 498; worshipped rivers, 410; skilled in secret arts, 463; the fire-worship of, viii, 144, 276; inset practiced among the, 187.

Persecution, on the vanity of idolatry, vi, 451 quoted, vii, 49, 85, 163.

Person, applied to the Aphantan in the divine council, iii, 324; of, 954; 955, 631; of Jesus Christ, 622.

Pertinacia, a goddess penning over the sacred covenant, vii, 474.

Pestis, people of, worshipped a flint for the mountain, vii, 319; Great Mother brought from, 378; Miles, king of, 492.

Pestilence, sent to the city of the circumcised, vi, 534; abated when deacons were brought from abroad, 534; put to flight by Antiochus, 536.

Peta, presiding over prayers, vi, 478.

Peter, charged Tertullian with quasi-Arianism, iii, 630.

Peter, St., i, 6, 63, 64, 75, 81, 97, 123, 127, 133, tradition of his martyrdom, ii, 512; imprisoned and released by Herod, 579; why change of name of, iii, 395, 410; modern claims from, in, 395; receives the keys of the kingdom of heaven, 613; why given the power of the keys, in, 99; Christ's charge to, refers to the whole churches, 305; the church built on him answering for all, 318, 324, 327, 328, 329, 422; does not claim supremacy, 377; meaning of the Rock, 586; his office and work at Rome, vi, 471 and Paul, martyrdom of, i, 113; vii, 305; victory over Simon Magus, vi, 438; canon of, viii, 495.

Peter according to the Clementines: his personal reception of the Clement, viii, 80; 227; Instructions given by, to Clement, vii, 82, 83, 84, 271, 273, 275, 306; his satisfaction with Clement, 82, 224; requests Clement to be his attendant, ii, 234; names of the attendants of, 226; postposen-
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

410
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

192

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

the truth, 528; cannot give perfect knowledge of God, 515; but a preparation for such knowledge, 510; Greek, a recreation to the Ctenotic, 519; necessary to knowledge, 518; its objective truth, 531; excellence of Christian, vii, 521.

Philumenus, prophet of Apelles, vi.

Philius, referred to, ii, 435.

Philemon, vii, 527.

Philemon Heracleam, vi, 522.

Phocianus, a witness to Moses, ii, 530; inventions of, 65.

Phoenix, poem on the, vii, 324; legend of, iii, 558; an emblem of the resurrection, i, 15; vii, 447.

Phorbas, Attis found and brought up, vii, 381.

Phronsinos, the first builder of temples, vi, 507.

Phrygians; the school of, iii, 508.

Phrygians quoted, i, 360.

Phrygus, refers to Athens, vi, 517.

Phrygia, the road Aegae in, vi, 518; mysteries celebrated in, 497.

Phrygians, mother of the, i, 40; Lybeos, vii, 587.

Phrygians, ii, 325 vii, 55; inventions of, 522; supposed to be the first of the human race, iii, 116; overcome with fear at the sight of the Great Mother and Adonias, vi, 592; Christianity asserted by mighty works among, 435; call their gods senators, 432; the first Monophysits, iii, 536; relation to heathen of Naassaeus, vii, 561; their emperor, 523.

Phymas, native of Tarsus, used as model for the statues of Venus, vii, 512.

Phylactery, i, 218.

Phylae, her skill, their licentiousness, i, 189.

Phyleus, son of Saturn, and father of Euanus, vi, 481; dragged and made prisoner by Nancy, 489; named Marcus, 489.

Phily, altars and temples built to, vi, 478; success widows, orphans, and the sick, vii, 177.

Plato, the Jews accuse Jesus to, vii, 415-417; takes the part of Jesus, 418, 420-441; questions Jesus, 435; denies Jesus innocent, 441; releases the Jews, 418, 442; sends Jesus to Herod, 423; washes his hands, 429, 433; yields to the change of the Jews, 430, 433-443; resembles the chief priests in the temple to inquirers about Jesus, 452; writes an account of Jesus to the emperor Claudius, 545; the letter of, to Tiberius Caesar, 533, 545; report of, to Augustus Caesar re-specting Jesus Christ, 535, 546, 546, 546-548; sent for by Tiberius Caesar to be examined on account of putting Jesus to death, 535, 546, 546-548; ordered to be beheaded—his prayer to Jesus, 452; according to another account, cited before Tiberius, who is magically calmed by the name of Jesus born by, 450; sentenced to death, but commits suicide in prison, 535, 457; his account of the body, which was buried, 457; further particulars concerning, 457 seq.; Acts of, 416; i, 171.

Plato's wife, her message to Diason, viii, 437, 438, 440.

Plato, the, Brookman, vi, 483; quoted, i, 284; ii, 700, 736, 347, 454, 469, 468, 473, 477; also his Olymps, i, 599; viii, 74, 317; vith., viii, 144; iii, 154.

Plato, Attis self-upright under a, vi, 491; born to her cove, by the Great Mother, 453; carried into the sanctuary of the Great Mother on certain days, 496, 543, 542; wounded with arrows, 494, 549; bound with wool, 469.

Platon, i, 43.

Plato's Evans, a striking illustration of, viii, 296, 259.

Plato, a (Ibis), born by Asclepeus when he burnt in upon the Pythias, vi, 492.

Plato's type of these, born under, vi, 36.

Plato, composition of, vi, 462.

Plato, now measured with, vi, 325, 326.

Platon, bishop of Rome, i, 416, 459; ii, 321, 556.

Platon, cowed of, vii, 543.

Plato, afterwards, vii, 543.

Plato, extinguishes Gallicanism and proclaims the Pope "infallible," vii, 763.

Place, of the righteous, the, vii, 576, 577 seq.; of the wicked, 739.

Plagiarius, of the Greeks from the Hebrews, ii, 486, 486-488, 486-488; of Greek writers from each other, 486, 486-488; of philosophers, from Egypt and India, 486.

Plague, the ten, of Egypt, viii, 128.

Plato, a, worshipped by the Samaritans for Jesus, vi, 510.

Plants and animals as illustrating divine providence, vi, 172.

Plato, art, ii, 65.

Plato, bishop of Myra, viii, 399.

Plato, son of Cassander, 535.

Plato's table of his birth, vii, 413; disagreement between Aristotle and, vii, 217; described by Aristotle, iv, 417; head of the philosophers, vii, 416; the disciple of Socrates, 417; authority over, 1, 286; self-contradictory, 286; agrees with Homer, 289; his knowledge of God's eternity, 289; on the knowledge of God, vii, 628; idea of God, ii, 459; on the unity of God, vii, 114; of God and the soul, vi, 18; indebted to Moses, i, 182, 239; in which he integrates, ii, 328; to the prophets, ii, 285; to the Hebrews, ii, 129; his knowledge of Jesus Christ, i, 284; his doctrine of the cross, 183; of the form, 285; of the heavenly gifts, 286; at the beginning of time, 287; of the universe, 286; religion from the Magi, 549; maintains the possibility of resurrection, vi, 148; acknowledges the resurrection of the body, vi, 439; opinions of concerning the gods, vi, 140; on the chief good, 321; on free will, 475; on language of animals, 33; falsely quoted by heretics on communion of meats, and deprivation of the natural creation, 33; 43; consequences of his theory of a community of goods and wives, vii, 57; his idea of death and judgment, iii, 475; contradiction in his theory of future punishment, vi, 439; theory of original principles, vi, 18, 214; on creation, vii, 157; on the Light of man, iv, 574; his argument for the incorporeal nature of the soul related, iii, 99; in which he integratis, i, 187; his doctrine of transmigration, vi, 440; of good and evil, vi, 19; on future rewards, vi, 440, 446, 446; his idea of heaven borrowed from Scripture, iv, 448; city in heaven, vi, 447, 447; his theory of reminiscences intensified, vi, 448; on spiritual knowledge, ii, 448; in divine gift, 444; in philosophic teaching from Socratus, vii, 448; illustrating the Trinity, iv, 448; the Lord's Day, 46; the Messiah, 470; 470; philosophical sayings quoted and answered, iv, 557; 581; lifted from by Valentinus, vii, 297; or, iv, 548; also his Akhileides, ii, 448.

Amatores, ii, 443.

Apologia, iii, 574.

Otiades, ii, 203.

Crito, ii, 390; iv, 534.

Epic., iv, 577, 581.

Platon, ii, 531.

Gorgias, iii, 178.

Levi, ii, 1763, 357, 357, 466, 466, 347, 347, 347, 347; iii, 575, 575; vi, 395, 385, 141, vi, 28.

Menon, ii, 448.

Phaedo, ii, 188, 189, 207, 208, 236, 211; iv, 574, 621; v, 53; vi, 446.

Phaedri., ii, 141, 351, 351, 351, 447, 447, 446, 467; iii, 182, 184, 210; iv, 586, 641; v, 448, 447.

Politico., ii, 136, 311, 311.

Protogoras, ii, 427.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Subjects</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A. Antecedents</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>B. Apostles and Their Successors</td>
<td>193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C. Early Christian Authors</td>
<td>194</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D. Fathers of the Church</td>
<td>195</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>E. Martyrs and Monastics</td>
<td>196</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F. Other Early Christian Writers</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>G. Biblical Authors</td>
<td>198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>H. Other Classical Authors</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I. Other Antecedents</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Note: The page contains a comprehensive index to the Ante-Nicene Fathers, detailing subjects and references.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

serve in secular things, 367; to be publicly chosen and ordained, 370; their seats in church, vii, 437; one from another parish to be received, 423; ordination of, 432; vii, 111; not to ordain, viii, 432; prayer at the ordination of, 491, 492; to be ordained by bishops, 502, age required for, viii, 432; illiterate, not to celebrate mass, 541.

Presbyter, submission to, i, 30, 51, 67, 87; its functions, 67.

Presbyterate, the, against heretics, a treatise by Tertullian, iii, 243; character of, vii, 240; title viii, 243, 265.

Present, for, and the future, viii, 310.

President, i, 185.

Preterlacies, miracles, vestments of, viii, 530.

Pretensions of false gods, i, 322; of Simon Magnus, 347.

Priest, the true Prophet, e, vii, 90.

Priesthood, of Christians, ii, 521; to be honored, vii, 450, 457; in what sense belonging to the laity, iv, 43, 187. 197.

Priestly office, contention regarding, i, 26, 17, 18; not to be undertaken by laymen, iv, 499.

Priests, what they should be, and should not be, vii, 502; how to be honored, 523; sons of Levites became converted by the preaching of the Apostles, 670.

Primus, bishop of Corinth, viii, 254.

Prince of the Apostles, on baptism, vi, 456.

Princes, of the earth, why was he made, or was he not made? viii, 185.

Prince, the, of the left hand, and the, of the right hand, of God, vii, 268.

Prince, the son of a, cited of the leprosy by the water in which the child Jesus was washed, vii, 408.

Princes, in Daniel and Ezekiel, mean spiritual powers, iv, 352.

Princeton Review referred to, i, 3.

Prudentius, De a creatura by Origene, iv, 230 sqq.; praelection to, 235-241.

Priscilla, prophet's gift of, acknowledged by Victor of Rome, iii, 521.

Priscilla, put to death in Licinius, vii, 427.

Priscilla, a prophetess, vi, 123.

Priscians, of Safat, on baptism, vi, 258.

Priscians, first part of the liturgy, vii, 524.

Praxeus, the, of Valentinus, l, 233.

Probation, the necessity of, before admission to the church, vii, 192.

Procesion, term applied to the Son, iii, 508; of the Spirit from the Father through the Son, 590.

Prolas, Pilate's wife, her message to Pilate, vii, 417, 428, 460.

Proration, use of the word, vii, 262.

Proclus, dialogue of Cato and, vi, 601, 604.

Propers referred to, i, 541; in, 383.

Proposito, vi, 648.

Proposito, the, first order of, maintained by heretics, proved to be indefensible, ii, 373; and absurd, 116.

Prophecy, history of, i, 107; its inconsistencies, 111, 112.

Prophecy, use of the term, iii, 922; true doctrine of, 653.

Prophecy, divine, embodied in the Law of Moses, vii, 537.

Prophecy, iv, 296; made in baptism to be kept, vii, 687; fragments from the two books on, by Dionysius of Alexandria, vi, 81 sqq.

Prophecy, the, of Valentinus, i, 316, 317; of Prophecy, 333.

Prophecy quoted, vi, 50.

Prophecy, property, how to be managed, vii, 48; ecclesiastical, how and by whom to be managed, 619 sqq.

Prophecies, summary of, 1, 380 of the Sibyll, ii, 108; of the Old Testament, principle of their interpretation, iii, 324; fulfilled in Jesus Christ, of Daniel, 118; of Isaiah, 161 sqq.; of David, 162, of Ezekiel, of Christ, vii, 446, 448; viii, 241; foretold Christ's rejection, ii, 345; humiliation, 379, 325, majesty, 277; in type of the goals of the day of stoning, 277; of Christ's Incarnation in Isaiah, Zech., Ezekiel and the Psalms, 324; of the Passion, 387, 177 sqq.; and its results in the conversion of the world, 339; the calling of the Gentiles, 330; labors and sufferings of the apostles, 346; dispersion of the Jews, 341; millennium, 342; kingdom of glory, 343; their harmony with the Gospel, 346.

Prophecy, different modes, i, 175; certain fundamentals of, 180; two kinds of, vii, 247; the sure word of, 204; it is uttered indefinitely, 40.

Prophecy, the true, vii, 145, 149, 207; advent of, 88; rejection of, vii, 380; why called Christ, 89; a priest also, 90; alone it knows all things, 181, 183; to be sought for by those who wish to learn, 184; all may judge of, 230; the test of, 293; doctrines of, 295; has appeared in different ages, 245; teaching of, concerning the Scriptures, 247, concerning the Law, 248.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

Breyce.
Bull.
Burse.
Burgos.
Buxton.
Butler.
Carr.
Callixtus.
Callinicus.
Callinus.
Calvin.
Canning.
Cary.
Casabon.
Cassius.
Cave.
Chevalier.
Cham.
Chrysostom.
Churt.
Ciser.
Clemens.
Clément de Alexandrie.
Clementine Homilies.
Clementine Recognitions.
Clinton.
Conduit.
Corbyhore et Howson.
Cook.
Crake.
Cotterius.
Copper, H.
Copper, W.
Cox.
Cran.
Crisis.
Cust.
Cyr.
Cyril.
Daillor ou Dallacas.
Dare.
Davidson.
Delat.
De Mont.
Demosthenes.
Dion.
Diocletian.
Diogenes.
Diogenes, Epistle to.
Diocletianus.
Dionysius.
Dionysius.
Dionysius Thron.
Dion Thyr.
Diphilus.
Dodg.
Dodd.
Dolinger.
Dominick.
Dorner.
Dorset.
Durst.
Eden.
Edmund.
Edwards.
Empedocles.
Encyclopaedia Britannica.
Emery.
Epiphanius.
Fahmius.
Fadamas.
Eusebius.
Euphrasian.
Eupolemus.
Euripides.
Eusebius.
Evans.
Ezechiel, the poet.
Faber.
Farm.
Fenelon.
Fisher.
Fleury.
Foukes.
Fulcher.
Fust.
Galloway.
Gan.
Gallus.
Geuenius.
Gibbon.
Geiger.
Grae.
Grenbach.
Greene.
Groth.
Haag.
Hagenbach.
Harwick.
Harley of Winwick.
Harvey.
Hefele.
Heculides.
Heracleites.
Herm.
Hermippus.
Herodotus.
Hesiod.
Hessey.
Hilgenfeld.
Hippias.
Hippo.
Hippocrates.
Hoffmann.
Holman.
Homer.
Hooke.
Hornace.
Hoet.
Hypardes.
Lophon.
Irenaeus.
Ildone.
Isocrates.
Jacobson.
Janis.
Jervis.
Jason and Papus.
Jerome.
Jewell.
Jones.
Jones of Nayland.
Joras.
Josephus.
Jowett.
Julianus, Book of.
Julianus.
Justin Martyr.
Justinian.
Juvenc.
Kalin.
Kaye.
Kuyser.
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS

| A | B | C | D | E | F | G | H | I | J | K | L | M | N | O | P | Q | R | S | T | U | V | W | X | Y | Z |
| Antiochus | Apollinaris | Arius | Athanasius | Augustine | Basil | Boethius | Cyprian | Didymus | Eusebius | Firmicus | Gregor | Hieronymus | Irenaeus | John | Justin | Lactantius | Tertullian | Tertullian | Tertullian | Tertullian | Tertullian | Tertullian | Tertullian |

---

422

---

Rabbinical education, viii. 531.

Race, laws of the, viii. 731.

Race, an abominable, performed at Ephesos, viii. 495.

Race-course, the, why not to be visited by Christian, viii. 87; injuries in, not redressed by law, 858.

Races, guilt contracted if the music stopped at the, vii. 489; in the games of Jupiter, 534, 535; seven rounds of the course in, 534.

Rahab, her example, i. 8.

Rainbow, yellow, ii. 35; white, 36, 40.

Rainbow, the, viii. 176.

Ran, the, a type of Christ, viii. 759.

Rational creatures, capable of good and evil, iv. 257; term includes evil spirits, 257; final judgment of, 293; exists from the beginning, 342; fallen through free will, 342; of one nature, 342, 374; restored in the incarnation,
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTIME-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

of Christ, 343; why corporal, 380.
Ratray, Bishop, on the Restoration of St. James Leghair, v. 534.
Readings referred to in, 482.
Reader, in church, place and duty of, 512.
Reason and faith, v. 116; divine, not on the face of things, iii, 467; with God from the beginning, 600.
Reasonation, a treatise on, v, 667, seq.
Rebekah, i, 145.
Recapitulation, v, 140.
Recreation in a future state, vii, 483.
Re cognition, the, of Clement, character of, vii, 273; relation to the Epistles, 273; authority and date, 273; place of composition, 274; editions of, 274; remains of the title, 283, 284, 190, 191.
Red letter, type of Christ, i, 142.
Redemption, the view of, entertained by heretics, i, 345.
Refutation, the, of all heresies, a treatise by Hippolytus, discovery of, v, 5; controversy as to the authorship of, 3; date of composition, 6; contents, 5; value of, 7, 10; object of, 9, 153.
Regulus, crude death of, vi, 454; a martyr, killed by the army, 455.
Rejection of Christ by the Jews, vii, 600.
Relatives of Christ treated with contempt by Dominus, viii, 573.
Relics of Christians to be honored, vii, 493.
Religion in a common life, iii, 402; credibility of, not dependent on antiquity, vi, 461; opinion on consciences, of, in memory, 522; meaning of the term, vi, 131, 174; reason in, 131; cannot be separated from wisdom, vi, 11, 131, 100, 103; distinguished from superstition, 134; teaches mercy towards man, 134; lays the foundation for all of man's fathers to be abandoned if bad, vii, 150, 755; the true calls to sobriety and modesty, 151; and philosophy, difference between, 379.
Remains of the second and third centuries, introductory notices to, vii, 1489.
Remission, the Platonic theory of, untenable, vi, 337.
Remission, prayer for, vi, 456.
Remissio sines, only in the Church, v, 378; first by St. Peter, then by all the Apostles, 381; to all bishops as successors of the Apostles, 381; from God only 443; examples of denial to the impenitent in Holy Scripture, 443.
Roma referred to, i, 132; ii, 87.
Renovation, the Novenale psalm of, vii, 474.
Repetition, i, 7, 53, 147, 167, 265; ii, 20, 28, 39, 41, 50, 51, 54, 114; defined, iii, 657; delivers from the shackles of sin, ii, 175; truly, offensive if, vi, 382; the angel of, ii, 19, 37, 51; kinds of, iii, 79, 76, 77; first and second, iv, 380; what is true, 603; iii, 657; heathen, of good deeds, 657; a preparation for the Holy Spirit, 658; good because commanded by God, 659; duty of, vii, 175; viii, 204; value of, vii, 190, 551; necessity of, while on earth, 551; sin after, a despising of God, iii, 650; necessary before baptism, 653; for sin after baptism, 653; tokens of, vi, 305; outward manifestation of, 658; iii, 654; how attributed to God, 315; case of Saul and of Ninian, 315; examples of, in Holy Scripture, vii, 406; danger of delaying, examples of, 407; of St. Matthew and Zachaeus, 414; God calls to, 423; exhortation to, 423; a claim for the Church's peace, 333; Tertullian on, iii, 273, seq.
Resignation of a Bishop to Augustinus, vii, 390, seq.; to Tiberius, 452, seq.
Reprobate men, various classes of, i, 245.
Resignation, of man's impious dealings, 341; condemnation no impediment, i, 153; will of the Creator concerning, 154; iii, 533; arguments continued, i, 345; not for judgment, 156; through the future judgment is a sufficient proof for, iii, 533; children the aged, i, 156; argument from man's nature, 156; probability of, from changes in man's life, 258; if none, man lease favored than beasts, 139; the chief end of man, 162; its beauty and force, 162; how a birth, iii, 576; resurrection, body perfect, 500; a resurrection of the perfect man, vi, 355; and of creation, 356; not a transformation into the nature of angels, 359; its mystery parallelized by the generation of man, 355; a destruction of the body, 272; its renewal as an apostilized body, 272; shown by Moses and Elias at the Transfiguration, 375; by Enoch, 376; by the parable of Dives and Lazarus, 377; and by the history of Jonah, 378; God's goodness requires it, iii, 532 of the righteous, iv, 163; the first, 243; of men, vii, 278, 278; of the flesh, poems of, iv, 145; Justin the martyr's treatise on, 349; quoted on, vii, 374; Tertullian's treatise on, iii, 545; Mede, quoted on, iii, 545; Origen quoted on, vii, 369, seq., 372, seq.
Restoration, day of, i, 390; future, viii, 186.
Reuben, the patriarch, speaks of his
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

sin and sufferings, viii, 9; wars against women and formation, 10; his death and burial, 11; his passion and triumph, 18.

Reuben, a Jew, strikes against the breaker on which Mary is carried to burial, his punishment, vii, 393.

Revelation, nature of, vii, 322, 396; the work of, belongs to the Son, 326; inspiration of, i, 155; and consummation, vii, 297.

Revelation, one of Paul found under the foundations of his house in Tarsus, vi, 575.

Reverence, iii, 713; an attribute of the false god, not of the true God, viii, 675.

Reverend of Peter, vii, 114.

Revelations, martyrdom of, iii, 705.

Rewards and punishments, from the same God, i, 533; i, 158; future, vii, 30; 217; eternal, iv, 239; principles of, 299; spiritual nature of, 296; sensual ideas of, 297; rewards include a knowledge of divine things, 298; of the elect and penitent, iv, 39.

Rhadaamias, i, 165.

Rhena, the wife of Saturn, hides her son Jupiter, to preserve him from being devoured by his father, i, 579; i, 377; iv, 165.

Rhodes, the fourth Sun born at vi, 246.

Rhordes, viii, 248; 266; a pupil of Tutilian, 266; writes against heretics, 266.

Rich, the helped by the prayer of the poor, ii, 32; not to be flattered for his riches, 597; description of, 591; why salvation appears more difficult to, 591; duty of the poor towards, 591; Jesus, treatment of, 592-594; counsel to, iv, 509.

Rhabadus, true Christian, iii, 79; 506; not to be thrown away, 595; when problems, 553; want of, 597; how forsaken for Christ, 598; abuse of, v, 279.

Ridicule, poured upon the evangelists and nomarchudes of Valentinus, i, 329, 335.

Right and left, merely relative terms, vii, 477.

Righteousness, the sufferings of, i, 17, 18; we should cleave to them, 17; saved by Christ, 257; and the wicked, to be separated, 556; so-called, must be wronged, vii, 50; and the wicked, chastisements of, 576; and manner of death of, 576; 2092; affections of the, 264; place of the, 576; 577 863.

Righteousness, what it is, viii, 195; not placed in Jewish rites, i, 201; nor obtained by keeping the law, 275; 450; but by faith, 245, 246; and Christ, 205; Christians have this true, 205; which is desired by...
Ante-Nicene Fathers: Index of Subjects

Sabbath, i, 482.

Sabbath, the, why instituted, i, 204; 297; the true, 146; how to be kept, 633; kept by Christ, iii, 382; the law did not prohibit the hungry eating food ready to hand on the, i, 471; law of, forbid man's work, 405 (406 iii, 371); Jewish, right keeping of, ii, 392; error of the Pharisees concerning, iii, 421; Jewish, not observed by Christians, iii, 390; temporal only, 155; a figure of eternal rest, 155; abolished, vii, 537; symbol of the life and work of our Lord, vi, 2455; the notion of Monomachus, vi, 722; (Saturnian) not a fast except on Easter Eve, iv, 1122; the Great (Easter Eve) fast of, vii, 487.

Sabbath, meaning of the word, viii, 760.

Sabellian heresy on the origin of matter, vi, 91.

Sabellianism. Diffusion of Rome, against, vi, 305.

Sabellian, heresy of, vii, 356.

Sabine gods, the, Novatians, nine, vi, 474.

Sabinus, worshipped by the Scythians, vi, 210.

Sacrifices, administration of, i, 185.

Sacrifices, origin and meaning of, vi, 543-545; universal necessity of, vii, 330; divinely instituted, 530; legal sacrifices of, vii, 330; divinely instituted, 530; used in the Christian sacrifice, ix, 204; the sacrifice, vii, 330; guilt of, vi, 330; not acceptable without love, 454; spiritual and material, 454.

Sacrifices, Jewish, temporal, and figures of spiritual, i, 210; allowed for a time, vii, 581; abolished, i, 171; why instituted, vii, 581; not required by God for their own sake, 484-485; not acceptable without faith, iii, 314; God not pleased with, vii, 477; Christians offered no, vi, 509; why not, vi, 534; replaced by baptism, vii, 88; baptism, the chief means of, vii, 581; in heathen worship, vii, 581; human, to human deities, iii, 549; needless, ii, 538; of prayer and praise, 538; of the Law, 532; Varro's denial of any occasion for, vi, 518; cannot please God, 518; cannot give pleasure to the gods, 519; can neither prevent their anger, 519; nor satisfy their rage, 519; no reason can be found for, 519; purity and cleanliness required at, 543 (note).

Sacrificial orgies, vii, 576.

Sacrifice, prayer of, vii, 550, 560.

Saducees, their origin, iii, 491; rise of the, vii, 915; heresy of, vii, 485-491; sons of Essenes, vi, 137; attributing forms to God, vi, 467; Christ's answer to, vi, 367; i, 468; Christ's refutation of the, iii, 371; confuted, viii, 529.

Sadness, i, 30; ii, 23.

Safety, temples and altars erected to, vi, 476.

Sagittarius, type of those born under, v, 30.

Saint Pierre referred to, i, 32.

Saints, examples of, i, 7, 9, 10; reward of, 8, 14, 601, 563; before 498; coming of Christ, vii, 491; commemoration of, vii, 546, 549; 554, 556, 559.

Salt, the Egyptian, offspring of the Nile, vi, 480, 481; identified with the second Mineur, 480.

Salsus, on the creation of man, vii, 62.

Salome, i, 145; apocryphal sayings of Christ to, ii, 307.

Salome, called in as midwife for Mary—her unbelief punished, vii, 355, 375; her hand, which was tied up, restored by Jesus, vi, 217.

Salt-cellar, tables consecrated by placing, vi, 450.

Salvation, prayer of, vii, 534; of the gospel, 562.

Salutations to churches, etc., i, 5, 33, 60, 72, 73, 77, 84, 91, 96, 102, 109, 112, 134, 135, 137, 140.

Samaritans, i, 14, 28, 55, 59, 82, 139, 207, 216, 217; honored on the whole man, 531; before Christ, ii, 478; out to Jew and Gentile, 490; not depending on external things, 566; why conditioned, vi, 475; things necessary to, vii, 116, 118, 136, 137, 139.

Samaritans, the way of, 709; of the rich man, a treatise of Clement of Alexandria, viii, 592-593.

Salvians of Gaza, at baptism, vii, 571.

Salvation, good, signifies Christ, ii, 399.

Samaritans, relation of to Israel, iii, 408; doctrines of the, vii, 92; refuted, 92.

Samson, who, worshipped a plank for, vii, 510.

Samson and Delilah, vii, 510.

Samson Elias, married Hala Daci- yla, vi, 475; said to be the Laced, 475.

Sanum, fall of, an adoration, vii, 428; boy of, succeeded John the Baptist, i, 372; the javelin of, a type of the body of Christ, 575.

Saul, i, 60, 120, 121; his appearance a pretense, in, 233; interpreted, v, 169; inscriptions of, vii, 530, 531.

Sauromogos, wages war with Abu's children, vii, 701; the feet of, crushed by a mite, column, 767; sends Helen to Tharros, 767; rebukes Medea, 702; meaning of the name of, 707; death of, 707.

Savage, prayer for, vii, 547.

Saxons in the Holy Communion, vii, 458; see also For Saxons.

Scaevola, written by, vii, 772, 780, 781.

Scepsis, a king or river, father of Nasus, vi, 489; attempted to avenge his daughter's death, 491; exposed her child, 491.

Sappho quoted, ii, 257.

Sarah, daughter of the high priest Calaphas, stripped naked by Deman, vii, 493; above Jesus, 493.

Sardis, 590.

Sartorius, a slave, vii, 482.

Satans, Scriptural teaching regarding, vi, 550; origin of, vii, 92; he, not fortunate, the adversary of man, 99; loosed after the millennium, 99; his meekness, folly, inconsistency, ignobility, iii, 57, 102, 117, 138, 149, 502; blasphemy, iii, 57, 102, 103; foot of, 554; the soul of the world, 553; acknowledged as a demon, 90; 176, 180; author of idolatrous inscriptions of Christianity, 592; destroys truth and pretense of defending it, 107.

Satans and Hades, the altercation between, when Jesus was about to descend into Hades, vii, 459; 455; exhorts Hades to prepare to receive Jesus, 449, 456; rebuked by Hades, 541.

Satanical poems, punished by law, vi, 460.

Satan of Skilthata, on baptism, vi, 569.

Saturn, mysteries of, i, 158; tables of, iii, 144; if human race, 142; devours his children, vii, 197; the family of, 119; son of Ceres and Bea, vii, 404; happy state of things under his reign, vii, 140, 261; father of Jupiter, 23, 24, 26; overthrew his father, vii, 585; attempted to destroy his children, 452; was driven from power by Jupiter, 454, 458; hid himself in Latium, 454; was thrown into chaos for pav- side, 454; father of Ops of Jupiter, 460, 464, 472, 482, of the third Jupiter, 462; mother of the gods married to, 472; founder of the Saturnian state, 452; father of the third Minerva, 480; when aged, taken in adultery by his wife, 80; born and remains of, in Sicily, 454; identified with Kronos, and explained as chronos, 472; progenitor of the silen pigs, 472; planter of the vine, 472; bearer of the pruning-knife, 472, 511, 517; produces over sown crops, 472; before Hercules' visit to Italy, human sacrifices offered to, 460.

Saturnius, king, the, i, 487.

Saturnius, heretics, tenets of, vi, 159.

Saturninus, i, 352.

Saturninus, system of, vi, 109; heretics, vii, 433; called Saturninus, vi, 109.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

---

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Entry</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Church, viii, 668: authority of, in councils, vi, 245; canon of, in the second century, vi, 683; public reading of, 251; value of quotations from, 219; testimonies to, 273; studied by all, 250; a safeguard against Anti-christ, 250; duty of searching the, i, 228; vi, 161; vi, 47: how understood, i, 245: the true exposition of, only in the church, 495; appealed to: by heretics, 319, 369: perverted by the heretics, 386, 343: vi, 603: refutation of false interpretations of, 259: proper method of interpreting the obscure passages of, i, 398: chronology of, ii, 324-324: threefold interpretation of, 341: why veiled in parables, 320, 582: lest of the doctrinal truth, 550, 557: the prophetic connecting power of, 931: divine inspiration of, 1, 349: the rule of faith, vii, 95: false and unholy chapters appended to, 250: misinterpretations of God to, 277, 236: some things in, false, and some true, 238: Simon Magnus makes use of the alleged falsehood of, in argument with Peter, 439; use of the falsehoods, 239: uncertainty of, 240: contradictions of, 240, 245-247: how to discriminate the true from the false in, 247-248: Peter’s explanation of contradiction in, 314: the contradictions in, intended to try the readers of, 315; interpretation of, 203.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Scriptures, Hebrew, translated into Greek, i, 451: ii, 321 antiquity of, 231 interpreted, with fidelity by the LXX, translations, 451: prophecies fulfilled, ii, 34: forbid what they do not allow, 94. (See also Holy Scriptures.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seythian king and Circé, the fifth Sam, the son of a, vi, 490.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seythians, irruptions of, laid to the charge of the Christians, vi, 415; sacrificed actors to Mars, 454.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seythians, first teacher of dasium, i, 219.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Sea, the emblem of the world, ii, 100; its harbors, emblem of the churches, 100; its perils, objects of heretics, 100; testifies against the sons of men, viii, 575.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Sealing, vi, 489, 541.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seats and rivers, illustrating the providence of God, viii, 171.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Sews of the bishop, vii, 600, 620.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Secessia, vi, 497.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Sects of the Jews, vii, 71, 753.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Christian, 754.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Severians of Thunus, on baptism, v, 570.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seraphim, vi, 350.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seraphim, orders of, vi, 350.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Seraphim, orders of, vi, 350.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Sermont, on the Mount, its harmony with type and prophecy in the law, iii, 360, 308.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>201</td>
<td>Serpent, the, coiled, i, 456; ii, 103; speculations respecting, i, 570; 571: the brazen, why made, 430.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

Ante-Nicene Fathers: Index of Subjects

Shoes, ought not to be attended by Christians, iii. 73 seq.; public, Claudian, and Cyprian, vii. 185; as strengthening, 428; heathen, idolatrous origin of, iii. 81; Tertullian on, iii. 745; Cyprian on, v. 257 seq.
Sirens of Juno at Argos, vi. 216.
Sirian, the Christians built no, v. 677.
Sibyl, the, i. 169, 225; ii. 12, 18; vi. 431; instance of, ii. 345; testifies to the resurrection of the body, v. 377; referred to, i. 289; ii. 194, 199, 309, 325, 376, 377; v. 126, 180, 193, 254, 325, 326, 327, 470, 471; vi. 61, 16, 18, 23; v. 39, 64, 65, 66, 105, 113, 119, 125, 128, 141, 142, 152, 153, 214, 215, 216, 219, 220, 238, 278, 301, 315, 480, vii. 752, 755.
Sibyls, books of, vii. 15, 16; their value to Christianity, 260 (note).
Silph, number, and character, vi. 12; 16; testimony respecting God, xvi. 37, 61; the Frisiarch, 16, 18, 24; Proverbs carried off from, 499; heathen, Zephyrinus, epistle to, vii. 609.
Sic, are ever paying, viii. 44; how to be assisted, 59.
Sideral names, origin of, v. 27.
Sidon, Peter comes to, viii. 265; preaches to the people of, 266; Peter and Mark preached there by Simon, 269; Simon driven from, 269.
Silenus, epistle of, to Cyprian, v. 279.
Sige, i. 310; iii. 207; pretended revelation made by, to Marcus, i. 339; and Lucanus, mutually contradictory and repugnant, 372.
Silence, a sportive wind, iv. 267.
Silence, i. 62.
Simon, the patriarch, speaks of his hostility to Joseph, vii. 11; warns his children against envy, 11, 12; his death and burial, 12; and Levi, types of persecutors of Christ, i. 185.
Simon, and Jesus, i. 441; his song interpreted, vi. 387, 388; a type of ancient Israel, 391; apostrophes to, 393; and Aaron, an enigma concerning, vi. 283; iv. 71; his testimony to Jesus in Judaea, v. 448 seq.
Simon, the two sons of, raised by Jesus, vii. 448; relate the descent of Jesus into Hades and his dealings there, vii. 435, 448.
Similitudes, vi. 31-55, in instruction, use of, 281.
Simulacra of Rhodon referred to, ii. 555.
Simon of Cyrene, curious opinions of Basilians regarding, i. 249.
Simon, the Cypriote, canon of, vii. 493; address of, vi. 93.
Simon, the Samaritan, i. 173, 182, 187, 348.
Simon Caphas, founded the churches at Antioch, Beza, and Jerusalem, vi. 571; visited under Nero, 672, 673; teaching of, in Rome, 773 seq.; raises a dead man, 675; confined Simon Magnus, 673; appoints Anais bishop of Rome, 674.
Simon Magnus, i. 71, 82, 187, 193; iii. 2491; vii. 249; his pretensions, i. 347, and that of his disciples, to magic, iii. 249; supposed have presided in the council of Jerusalem, 775; his forced interpretation of the Scripture, vi. 75; and of Moses, 76; his plagiarisms, 75; his appeal to Scripture, 76; his interpretation of the Hesiodian, 75; of the Paradise, 771; follower of theory of transmigration, iii. 215; follows Eusebius, vi. 251; his system of a threefold emanation of pairs, 765; and doctrine of emanation, 791; in his mind, 792; and immor- talities of, iii. 60; heresy of, vii. 455, and iii. 861; the statue at Rome, vi. 49; and St. Peter, 86; his lying miracles, vi. 480; speaks against Paul, and excites Nero against him, vii. 305; in dispute with Paul and Peter before Nero, 480; the knowledge of, tested, by Peter and Paul, vii. 481; the trick practised by, to make Nero believe he had been betrayed, and had come to life again, 481, 482; asks Nero to build for him a lofty tower, from which he might be let down, and escape, 484; his fiery car, vii. 485; begins to fly, but is arrested by the priests of Peter and Paul, and falls down and is killed, vii. 484; punished and exiled, vi. 60; vii. 81; iv. 438; vii. 453; the pestles of, i. 438; and Helenus, 438; succeeded by Maranades, 438; dispersion of the sect of, vi. 476.
Simon Magnus, according to the Clementine, mistakes about, vii. 232; doctrines of, 232; history of, 98; once a disciple of the Epiphanes, 231; and Didymus, the contest between, for precedence, 231, 233; statement of Nicetas respecting, and counsel to, 234; proceedings of, 234 seq.; statement of Aquila respecting, 98, 233 seq.; how Peter was sent to meet, 96; how he challenges Peter, 98, 245; postponement of his discussion with Peter, 82, 83; the design and object of, exposed by, Peter, 239; a formidable opponent, 98;
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

203

A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

Simpllicity, v. 15, 16, 49, 53; of heart, recommended, vii. 28; the first condition of Christian truth, ill. 316. Sin, God not the author of, refutation of the Marcionites, i. 506; death, not to be fate, but to free-will; ii. 69; voluntary and involuntary, 361; power to repent of, 365; not to be eradicated of the divine nature, 361; despisers of God's calling, consist. ill. 365; irresistible, 355; in will, as great as in deed, ill. 650; works its own punishment, iv. 297; cause of suffering, vii. 139, 143; not the punishment of, ill. 569; the cause of evil, 357; the cause of death and pain, 351; death of Christian doctrine of, iv. 381; men conceived, in vii. 184; condition of; forgiveness, v. 451; forgiven on repentance, id. 969; after repentance, preferring Satan to God, 660; after baptism to be feared, 662; why possible, vi. 365; but may be pardoned, iii. 263; 1 law of, in man, vi. 372. Singing at burial, vii. 394. Simple and compound, preceding over the left, vi. 477. Simons, i. 140; the creatures often in the vengeance on, vii. 140. Sins, confessed, i. 19, 249; forgiven through the blood of Christ, 209, 210; of former times, recorded, in Scripture for a warning, 459; of the nations, iii. 315; of ignorance, iii. 337. Sin, number, i. 302. Sixth day, the, of Creation, ii. 107; the week of, Perseus, how observed, vii. 841; sense, the, vii. 111. Sixth Bishop of Rome, i. 416, 590. Sixtus, pope of Dionysius of Alexandria, vi, iv. 102. Sixtus II., pope of Dionysius of Alexandria to, vi. 203. Slanderers, how to be treated, ii. 280; Slaves, duty of, and how to be treated, i. 94, 95, 99; purchased to save souls, vii. 454; their conditionameliorated by the church, 443; to be given rest from labor on holy days, 453; may be civilized by consent of their masters, 503. Sleep, ii. 157; Christian use of, 257; what produces, vi. 456; a natural function, ii. 211; philosophical theories of, unfounded, 301; an image of death and resurrection, 253; on entailment of, vii. 97. Sloth, ii. 77. Sin, a thing anything but, vi. 456. Sinners and apostates, vi. 456; the Saint, ix. 554; Apostles, the, 659, 660; in the cross, 659, 667; supports the whole world, vi. 458; ministers and apostles of, 456; the seal of the, 49, 55; is the Saviour and Lord of all, 554; order of his government, 581; not author of evil, 556; friends of the, vii. 434.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

183: 2nd advent of the Son of Man, vi, 284.
Song, the, symbolizes the confession of the faith, vi, 320.
Songh, the, see also, xi, 317;
In, 307; her passion, ix, 371; iii, 598; her shapeless offspring, ix, 371; ix, 381; restored by Homer, i, 318; iii, 308; 209; another name of Achamoth, ii, 320; could have produced winged spirits from her consort, 472; exposure of the absurdity of the whole Valentinian theory respecting, 487 seq.

Sph R S, foolishness of, ii, 361, 368; pretentious show of, the, vi, 420.
Sophor, on unity of God, i, 200; on future judgment, 291 quoted, i, 280, 290, 291; ii, 110, 133, 157, 197, 244, 284, 319, 447, 459, 476, 472, 473; also his—Alex., ii, 360, 482.
Acheseus, ii, 382.
Antigone, ii, 382, 484.
Athiestly, ii, 382.
Hippocrates, ii, 482.
Ignaceus, ii, 482.
Ovid, ii, 482.
Ovide, ii, 471.
Penel, ii, 482.
Philocrates, i, 353.
Sophocles, ii, 482; Sophocles, his opinion and Peter's reply to, vii, 338, 339.
Sorcery, changed upon Christ, iv, 399.
Sorcerer, a, 49.
Sorcer, i, 393; bishop of Rome, 416, 459.
Soto, i, 59.
Soul, the, of itself cannot see God, i, 104; not immortal in its own nature, 197; these things unknown to Plato and other philosophers, 197; how apprehended, vi, 56, 57; existence and nature of, 55; immortal, 55; vi, 124; immortality of, taught by philosophers, vi, 205; proofs of, 206, 253; and from the success of the work in this life, vi, 224; and became partaking of the divine nature, iv, 381; Clement's perplexity about, vii, 223, 224; the belief of, necessary to correct views of God, 231; debated by Simon Magus, 234 accepted by Peter, 286; the conscious witness to God, iii, 176, 179; to Christian truth, 176, and against heathen living, 177; its nature and functions, 532; nature conveyed in Holy Scripture, 541; birth of, 153; corporeal, 184, 257, 270; not properly incorporeal, vi, 377; the shown by the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, 157; philosophical objections refuted, 157; revealed to a Montanist sister, 195; his free choice, vii, 45; not originated from matter, iii, 191; how revealed to the mind, 191; distinguished from the mind, vii, 258; its supremacy over mind, iii, 192; undivided, with various functions, 193; its office, vi, 182; its affection. 298; the seat of, as held by philosophers, 299; a better temple than any edifice, ii, 311; its vitality in the heart, iii, 194; rational in nature, irrational only in sin, iii, 194; the gift of God, vii, 295, the free gift, 431; the perception through the intellect and senses, iii, 196; implies knowledge connected as well as vitality, 198, illustrated, 200; one in nature, but subject to various development and changes, 201; defined, 207; heretical theories of its origin derived from Plato, 203; his theory of existence inconsistent, 204; existence of the soul before birth shown from physiology, 205, from Holy Scripture, 207; of one formation with the body, 208, 217; theories of transmigration refuted, 209-15; grows with growth of body, 218; corrupted by sin, 219, and the source of sin to the body, but not totally depraved, 220; regenerated by water and the Holy Spirit, 227; wholly separated from the body by death, 230, not unconscious in death, 231, the condition of the soul held by Lucian, 347; and body, views of hereticians relating to the future destruction of, refuted, i, 402; judgment of, and body, ii, 196, Tertullian on the soul, iii, 183, 184; on the testimony of the 775 seq.; Melito, on the soul, vi, 397.
Sorcery, the image of Christ, vi, 329; origin of, undetermined, iv, 240; formed without the body, 254; theories on the final condition of, 275-375 (Antioch) in all beings, 280; distinct from spirit, iii, 413, 474; iv, 257; separated from the spirit by sin, 395; God's care of, 313; philosophical speculations on, 313; not trine, 317; whether intermediate between flesh and spirit, 338; subject to temptations of the flesh, 340; not of different natures, 340; souls of angels, 287; soul of Christ, intermediate between God and flesh, 287; goal of God, anthropomorphic term, 287; the animal, does not: partake of the divine nature, vi, 442; philosophical theories of its immortality uncertain and contradictory, 451; made immortal only by God's gift, 447, 474, 457.

Soul, adequacy of the doctrine of the immortality of, 409; existence of, after death, 410; immortal, although they had a beginning, 411; 580; born anew, i, 572; ii, 580; said to pass into cattle, vii, 446; of the righteous and the wicked, how they go out of the body, vii, 576.
Sound mind, a, in a sound body, vii, 520.
Sowth they referred to, ii, 62.
Sower, parable of the, an illustration of free-will, x, 311.
Spain, vi, 417; Hercules buried in, 422; episode of Cypricus to the people of, x, 292, with vi, 741.
Spurious marks of clay by the child Jesus, vii, 376, 416.
Spurians, Mass identified with, vi, 484.
Speaking, filthy, on, ii, 250.
Spear, a, used by the Romans for Mars, vi, 510.
Spectacles, public, ii, 289; Tertullian on, iii, 79-81.
Speech, subordinate to action, ii, 310.
Spern, referred to, iv, 418.
Spermacip, i, 493.
Spurious quoted, i, 371.
Sphinx, a, in a heathen temple, recalled the unbodied men in relation to Jesus, vii, 520; the testimony of, to Jesus, vii, 520.
Spite, in the enemy's camp, vii, 236.
Speech, definition of, vi, 584; in the sense of breath (or life) identical with soul, iii, 190, but more probably the spirit of God or of Christ, iii, 190, the soul, not born with it, 191; the Holy, i, 164, 177, 245; 579 of, 533; necessity of, vii, 255; and the testimony prophetic, 25; of divinity how manifest, 257, not to be grained, 259; to be tried by his works, 297.
Spirit, i, 351; two kinds, 26, 27, 75; in man, vi, 9; of error, 91; in prison, preached to, ii, 490.
Spiritual, absurdity of, claiming to be, while they declare the Demiurge to be animal, i, 403; men, 556, 583; enter the Pleroma, 342, 343.
Spiritual, used of the Divine Nature of Christ, iii, 330.
Spoil, the Egyptians, the act examined and vindicated, i, 508.
Spurious epistles of Ignatius, li, 107-126; introductory note to, i, 105, 107, 109, 110, vi, 242.
Stadu, viii, 493; receives Philip to his house, appointed bishop of Ophryona, 303, 310.
Stag, gods brought on, vi, 486.
Stamps, the Romans, miraculously bow down to Jesus, vii, 460.
Stanley referred to, iv, 481; vi, 184; vii, 411; Simon, Simon Magus so-called, vii, 56, 59, 100, 232.
Star in the east, the, iv, 422; seen at the birth of Christ, vii, 376.
Stars, astronomical theories of influence on life, vi, 431.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SPEAKERS. 205

as gods, vii. 478, 477; ordered by the God, 4682, 4680; power of, vii. 577; what they are, 492.

St. John, quoted, ii. 484.

St. John referred to, vi. 490.

St. John, ii. 33.

Stall, vii. 485.

Status Quo, see proceedings, i. 459.

States of the dead, ii. 486.

Stenius and Horon, i. 318.

The influence, sedulous of, 318.

Stendhal, i. 660.

Stephanas, his death, vi. 485.

Stephano, the, end of, ii. 348.

Stephano, the, 169, 170, 174; probable view of, concerning the soul, iii. 164; the idea of soul and body, 20; the physical interpretation of mythology, vi. 23; as in the demoniacal gods, 249; 29; make all the world to be God, 196; take away human affections, 237; express respect for God and nature, 176; their further views of, 176.

Stone, the, cut out without hands, i. 453; the Alexandrian worshipped an unknown, vi. 501; said, vi. 501, 509, with the Pharaoh; Pharaoh, the great mother, 538.

Stones, ii. 44, 45, 50; after the deluge, men spring from, 491; anointed with oil, and worshiped, 492.

Stronger, the church’s care for, vi. 314; to be received in church with honor, vii. 422.

Straton, brother of Agostus, vii. 516.

Strife, its effects, i. 6, 17.

St. nimia, the, of Clement of Alexandria, object and character of, ii. 168, 364, 370, 460; meaning of the term, 428; why written, 429; objections to the many extracts, answered, 397.

Study, necessary for teachers, vii. 49; diligence in, recommended, 122, 123.

Syrian Jupiter, i.e., Pluto, vi. 460.

Syria, a river in the infernal regions, vi. 439, 900.

Syriac, a dialect, vi. 403; origin of, 492.

Syracuse, vi. 482; see of the, 483; answer of, 483.

Tabernacles, customs of the, vii. 182.

Tavern, the, vii. 462.

Titles used, vi. 31, 108.

Titus, vii. 482.

Tobias, vii. 490.

Tobit, vi. 149, 150.

Tobit, iii. 104; iv. 103; vi. 170; vii. 492.

Tobit referred to, vi. 496.

Tobit referred to, vi. 496.

To the, see of the, 496.

To the, vi. 496.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.

To the, vii. 496.

To the, viii. 500.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

206 ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Tanagri and the sit consequentia, vi, 450.

Targum, the, v, 197, 198; referred to, vii, 18, 25, 29, 31, 36.

Targumic rock, the, taken by Titus Tatian, vii, 477.

Tarsus, synagogal epistle of Ignatius to, wherein he speaks of his sufferings, the true doctrine concerning Christ as against prevailing errors, and exhortations to duties, i, 207-209.

Tartessus, Satan cast into, viii, 457.

Tartaric, the scriptural use of the word, v, 123, 161, 175; the darkness of, has no horror to the immortal, vi, 447; visited by Libani, 500; a description of the punishments endured by, given by a young woman who had been raised from the dead, vii, 547, 548; by Eusebius, 573; by Pauli, 578, 579.

Tatian, the Anabazian, ii, 61, 81; equivalent character of, in the overthrowing Christianity at Rome, 63; conversion of, 72; visits Rome, 79; in disgust with the multiplicity of the names, 79; his address to the Greeks, 68-81; introductory note to, viii, 63-65; other writings of, 61; fragments of, 82, 83; a disciple of Justin Martyr, his work, the Synclisi, ili, 654; iv, 221, 246; referred to, viii, 34; in his denial of the salvation of Adam, i, 359, 406-407; Archeolaus on, 23; is quoted by Clement of Alexandria, iii, 359, 406-407; Irenaeus on, 23; is quoted by Irenaeus of Lyons, iv, 170, 262; Jerome, 80, 63, Origen, 80; Eusebius Justin, 4, 500; is referred to, viii, 13.

Taurus, type of those born under, v, 91.

Tavila, i, 92.

Taylor, J., referred to, ii, 12, 345; iii, 521; iv, 166, 174, 322, 347.

Techeites, ii, 14, 49, 51; how to be received, vii, 390; ought always to be studied, 488; falsely, i, 11, 25, 53, 60, 111; rate of such, 290; posts until, 253; of St. Clement, iii, 301-302.

Teaching of the apostles, see Twelve Apostles.

Teaching, right motives in, vi, 500; of Christ, i, 155, 187, 188, vii, 247, opposed to the opinions of heretics, i, 403; advice about, vi, 51; preachers, a distinct class, vi, 301; of Addasus, vii, 637 seq.; of the apostles, 667 seq.; of Simon Cephas in Rome, 673.

Tellus, i, 559.

Telephorus, bishop of Rome, i, 416, 569.

Tellus, mother of the Muses, vi, 473

Tellusians, inventions of, iv, 65.

Templum, city in Asia Minor, vi, 508; the prophet buried under Apollo's altar, 505, 509.

Templum, the merciful angel, viii, 537.

Templum in living, li, 253; in conversation, 258.

Temple, Jewish view of the, i, 147; antiquity of the, i, 112; the true, i, 147; furniture, symbolised of, ii, 385 to be destroyed, vii, 53.

Temple, in what sense holy, i, 530; heathen, useless, vii, 41; tombs, ii, 183; in many cases, i, 508, 509; destroyed with their images, and plundered, 516; built to cats, boars and hellel, 450 (creeke); built that men might come near and invoke the gods, 508; not raised by the Christian, 507.

Templum, view of Christ, i, 540.

Ten, the number, ii, 511.

Ten Commandments, the, and the two plagues of Egypt, vii, 128.

Ten parts, the, viii, 130.

Tena of Mose, bishop of, xi, 476.

Tetra evangelists, on baptism, vi, 577.

Thessalonien, the, vii, 525, 544, 557, 599.

Thesalonica, preface to, vii, 544; in the Backstrom, 488.

Thrace, vii, 527.

Thessalonian, vii, 526, 544, 557, 599.

Theodore, bishop of, viii, 96.

Theodiscus, vii, 144.

Theocles, vii, 541.

Theokritos, viii, 196, 282.

Theocrity, vii, 36.

Theocrity, birth and education of, iii, 51 a Catholic theologian, 41; his subsequent heresy, 4, 8, 250; Jerome's account of him, 58; Kaye's remarks on, 5, 70, 829; his rhetoric, iv, 195; his writings, 6, 7, 181; arrangement of the writings of, 4, 5, 6, by Jemmott and Kaye, 118; lost works of, 12 seq.; avaricious works of, 14, 15; literature on, 8, 270; apologia, viii, 136, 140; wrote an apologia, iii, 17 seq.; chronological history in the time of, 57; treatise on idolatry by, 64 seq.; on shows, 79 seq.; on the chapel, 93 seq.; address to Scapula, 100 seq.; treatise entitled of Natures, 109 seq.; an answer to the Jews, 151 seq.; the Soul, 175 seq.; on the Soul, 181 seq.; the prescription against heretics, 243 seq.; against Marcion, 274 seq.; against Hermogenes, 477 seq.; against the Valentinians, 505 seq.; on the flesh of Christ, 541 seq.; on the Resurrection of the Flesh, 545 seq.; against Praxeas, 597 seq.; Scipio, or amicis for the coelitus of, 633 seq.; against all heresies, 659 seq.; on repentance, 657 seq.; on baptism, 669 seq.; on prayer, 681 seq.; on marriage, 683 seq.; of patience, 507 seq.; on the palms, iv, 3 seq.; on the appeal of women, 14 seq.; on the veil of the evening, 21 seq.; to his wife, 39 seq.; on exhortation to chastity, 50 seq.; on monogamy, 29 seq.; on modesty, 24 seq.; on fasting, 105 seq.; De fuga in persecutcione, 116 seq.; referred to, ii, 141; vii, 5, 56, 57.

Testaments, the, vii, 125.

Testaments, given to Moses and to, ii, 54, 146; the new, promised and given, 199; v, 199; the Old and New, vii, 125; God the author of both, v, 109.

Testaments, the, of the Twelve Patriarchs, introductory notice to, vii, 3-34; time of composition, 2, 51; character of, 4, 4 5; object of, 51; author of, 4, 3; his religious standpoint, 5, 6; language of, 51; quoted by Tatian, 3, and Origen, 51; manuscripts of, 6, 71; editions of, 71, versions, 7; literature on, 3; contents of, 9-37.

Testimony of the Lord, effect of, vii, 125.

Tetrad, the, first, i, 516; of Marcus Aurelius, 227.

Tetrakruxion, meaning of, ii, 585.

Theodore, St., apostle, called Addai in Syria, vii, 570; visits Abgar, his ministry in Edessa, vii, 528, 631, 653; lodges with Titus, 631; elsewhere, 631; goes to the city of Amn, and preaches Christ there, 535; his miracles, 559; proceeds to Bethsaida, where he dies, 559; Acts of, 357, 579 seq.

Thales, philosopher and astronomer, v, 11; his views as to God, i, 274; vii, 14, concerning the gods, ii, 140; attributed all things to water, 437; anecdote of, iii, 133.

Theather, her labor, typical, i, 496.

Thebais, provoked by the conduct of Theobals, his brethren, vii, 458, 488, brings Paul before the governor, 488.

Theolog, ever due to God, ii, 73.

Thanksgiving, the, vii, 536 (Exalet), 537, prayer of, 560 at, and after the Eucharist, at and at, 470, 471, 475; in baptism, 476, 477.

Thespaia, see Berrias.

Theodin, name of Gregory, vi, 5, 6.

Theodorus, ii, 417, 444, 442.

Theodorus, referred to, ii, 417, 474.

Theorist, their idolatry, iii, 54; iv, 576.

Theontos, the, 80; vi, 277.

Theophanes, 517; the gods, 576; not allowed to Christians, x, 316; cruelty, 577; folly, 576; corrupting, vi, 187; the gods exposed to insult and mockery in T.
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

The life, vi, 487, 488; and shows to be unsanctified, vi, 424, 468.

The basilica, displaced by not being made bishop of Rome, vii, 761, connects himself with the heretics, 764.

The bishop, hears Paul preaching, and is so entangled by him that he appears not to mother nor lover, vii, 487, 488; evil counsels of Demas and Ermenogenes against, 488; visits Paul in prison, 488; condemned to be burned, but is miraculously delivered, 489; goes with Paul to Antioch, 489; vile conduct of Alexander the Syrian towards, 490; condemned to be thrown to wild beasts, but she receives the sympathy of Tryphaena, 490; thrown to the wild beasts, but, as she has no power to hurt her, 490; bound between two fierce bulls, but remains unharmed, 490; is set at liberty, 491; goes to Myra seeking Paul, 492; visits her mother at Iconium, 491; takes up her abode in a cave, where she performs many cures, 491; plot laid for her by certain Jews, from which she is miraculously delivered, 492; period in which her life is divided, and the two parts in which the greater part of her works are written, 492, 493.

Theotis, name of an angel, ii, 18.

Theolos, 431, 432.

Theon, the uncle of vii, 497.

Theon, Montanist leader, viii, 337.

Theoritus quoted, ii, 195.

Theoritl quoted, ii, 485.

Theodoret referred to, viii, 37.

Theodotus of Cyrus, vi, 451, 485.

Theodotus, and Aquila, transposition of Isa. vi. 14, refuted, 451.

Theodorus, ii, 71; heretic, vi, 134; another of the same, 135.

Theodotus, the Byzantian, history of, viii, 652.

Theodotus, Excerpt of, or Selections from the Prophetic Scriptures, viii, 43-50; introductory notice to, 41 notice on verses from Psalm cxxvii, 50.

Theognes of Hippo Regius, on baptism, vi, 567.

Theognis quoted, ii, 475, 496, 482, 483, 496, 556.

Theopistes of Alexandria, catechist, vi, 135.

Theoigny, Greek, exposed, i, 271.

Theon of Alexandria, bishop,答复 to Landman, vi, 138.

Theophanes of the Old Dispensation, ii, 613; by the Son, not the Father, 616.

Theophany, at the baptism of Christ, vi, 255, 256; li, 68-71.

Theophilus, bishop of Caesarea, vii, 747, 774.

Theophilus, sixth bishop of Antioch, vii, 250, 251, 257, 258; writer of Biblical chronology, 87; writes to Autolycus, an idolator and scourer of Christians, 89-121; and gives an account of his own conversion, 93; is mentioned by Eusebius and Lactantius, 97.

Theopompos quoted, ii, 484, 485.

Theos, wrong derivation of the word, iii, 132.

Theodotus, to the Blessed Virgin, vi, 243, 259.

Theophania, origin of the, vi, 498.

Theophylact, Phryne a native of, vii, 511.

Theophylact, the, worshipped a bunch of Jesse, vi, 510.

Theodicy, some of the Myrmidons, vi, 485.

Thesius quoted, ii, 97.

Theodoric, fifty daughters and Hercules, 485.

Theodora, vii, 157; loved Pelagia, 489; and Pelagia, Pompeloma, Achilles, and Polyxena, vi, 285.

Threats, the Egyptian, founder of astrology, vi, 460.

Thracian, epistle of Cyprian to, vi, 347.

Threatened, lover of the goddess of, vi, 497.

Things, unknown to Plato and others, i, 769; external; contempt of, ii, 412; corruptible and temporary made by the incorruptible and eternal, vii, 132.

Thirly referred to, i, 165, 175, 178, 181, 184.

Thomas, i, 87, 153; canon of, vii, 497; address of, vii, 935; acts of, viii, 353 seq.; composition of, 550 seq.; India falls to the lot of, 551; refuses to go, and is sold by his master as a carpenter for Gangesphorus, an Indian king, 551; submits to his master's will, 553; reaches Antiparos, and is obliged to attend a royal marriage feast, 553; struck by a wine-pot, 555; the song of, 556; taken by the king to the bridal chamber to pray for the married couple, 557; the Lord converses with the bride and bridegroom in the form of, 557; the king is enraged with, 558; undertakes to build a palace for King Gangesphorus, 559; expends the money entrusted to him for the palace on the poor and afflicted, 559; the king, finding no palace built, sends him into prison, resolving to slay and burn him, 559; curious story of his release from prison, 560; tapers King Gangesphorus, 561; continues preaching, 547; the Lord appears to, 547; story of, in relation to the young man and the dragon, 547 seq.; a young woman tormented by an unclean demon delivered by, 544 seq.; story of, in relation to the young man who killed the maiden, 560 seq.; raises the maiden to life, who relates what she saw in the unseen world, 567 seq.; his preaching, miracles, and success, 581; ruler and guide of the church in India, 581; converted to the power of King Mithras, 590 seq.; a bone of, held a demoniac son of Mithra, 591; witnesses the assumption of Mary, and receives her graces, 594.

Thoth, vi, 15.

Thorax, no rose without its, viii, 174.

Thought, generation of, by man, analogous with the Logos in Deity, iii, 601.

Thusius, impure, i, 111, 149; silent, 141; silly and proud, iv, 9.

Thrasoe, Mars born in, vi, 484.

Thrasymuchus, the, lord, i.e., Orpheus, vi, 497; called by some Golgotha, 497.

Thrasea, nephew, Roman defeat at, vii, 477.

Thrasymachus quoted, ii, 484.

These, the, minutely by Joseph, ratified by the child Jesus, viii, 413.

Thrace referred to, i, 468; ii, 485; iv, 647.

Thunder, evil portended by, i, 343.

Thunderer, the, i.e., Jupiter, vi, 516.

Thundering legions, i, 157, viii, 772.

Thyrsus, li, 472.

Tiberian, remotest, vi, 508.

Tiberius, viii, 196.

Tiberius, in the, vii, 73, 77; Pilate's letter to, vii, 491; report of Pilate to, respecting Jesus, 460, 464; summons Pilate to Rome, and commands him for putting Jesus to death, 464; commands to seize and punish the Jews, who procured the death of Jesus, 464, 465; letter to Agrippa, 661; Pilate to be chosen, 464; sends, according to another account, Volusianus to Jerusalem, to bring Jesus to heal him, 466; having found that Pilate had put him to death, he orders Pilate to come to Rome, 466; Pilate to be put to death, 467; another of the account of the mission of Volusianus, 474 seq.

Thesius quoted, vi, 523.

Tithonus referred to, vii, 8.

Time of making the world, viii, 174.

Times, signs of the last, vi, 243-244.

Timothy quoted, ii, 170, 450.

Timon quoted, ii, 344, 447.

Timoteus of Alexandria, vi, 497.

Thouly, i, 52, 56, 60, 81; epistle to, rejected by some parties, ii, 359, 360.

Tingidus, the, afflicted with drought because of the Christians, vii, 417.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

208

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

Tschandoff referred to, vii, 7.

Titus, vii, 477; number of the beast, v, 215.

Titans, the, worshipped by the Moors, vii, 421. Legends born in portions by, 424, 497.

Titans, duty of, vii, 471; and first planting of priests under the Law, ii, 366.

Titanomania, known to Amaury, vi, 485.

Titus, placed by Pilate over the cross of Jesus, vii, 420.

Titus, i, 81.

Titus, the emperor, i, 165; son of Vespasian, afflicted with a grievous disease, vii, 472; told by Nathan of the power of Jesus to heal diseases, and how Plute had exclaimed, "He is a god", in Jerusalem, and is immediately brain-damaged, and receives baptism, 473; sends armies to punish the Jews for putting Jesus to death, 473; suffers punishment on the Jews and their rulers, 473.

Titus and Demas, robbers, their interview with Jesus and his parents when going into Egypt, vii, 459.

Titus Tatius, the Cephalinius taken by, viii, 476.

Tobia, example of, v, 481, 903.

Tobit, look of, not acknowledged by Jews, but used by the Church, i, 431.

Toler Valentianus, captis, named from, viii, 476.

Torratus, the, of the wicked, vii, 567, 578, 869.

Tow assailed by dragon, vii, 185.

Tower, i. 14, 15, 44, 45, 46, 48, 59; of Babyl, vii, 141, 414.

Trees ministering to idolatry, iii, 67.

Traditional opinions, i, 163.

Traddition, i, 35; of doctrine from the apostles, ii, 201, 343; nature of, 344; unwritten, 464; of the church prior to that of heretics, 554; of worship, 94-5; 103; from our fathers, are they to be followed? vii, 253.

Trajan, i, 129; condemns Ignatius, 170, 175.

Traillians, epistle of Ignatius to, i, 66-72; wherein he commends them, and exhorts them to subject to their spiritual rulers, 67; warns them against heretics, 68-71; shows the reality of the history given as of Christ, 70, 71.

Transfiguration of Christ, proof of his Sonship to the Creator, iii, 353, 358.

Transformation, a strange, wrought by Simon Magon, vii, 206, 344.

Translations of the scriptures, vii, 249.

Translation of Enoch and Elijah, i, 290.

Transmigration of souls, the, vi, 440; the absurdity of the doctrine of, i, 409; taught by Pythagoras, vi, 38, 426; an argument for the resurrection of the body, ii, 53.

Transubstantiation, repudiated by Tertullian, iii, 572, 555.

Treaud, to speak evil of kings, vi, 487.

Treasure hid in the field, i, 496.

Trebizion, Novatianus worshipped at, vi, 475.

Trebion, gods, i.e., the Novatians, vii, 476.

Trent, cruelly put to death, vi, 424.

Tree, of knowledge, i, 144; of life and death, vii, 909; oil from the, vii, 891; crowded with flowers in memory of Adam, vii, 492.

Trees, the similitude of, i, 30, 144; in summer, i, 231; in winter, 231; parallel of, interpreted, vii, 345.

Triglades referred to, iii, 415.

Trident Council of, vii, 146; frames the Roman Catholic Church, making the Pope the "Universal Bishop", vii, 643; creed of, 643; etiology of quoted, iii, 76.

Transcendental, the of the heretics, i, 371.

Tragedy, the, vi, 599, 567.

Tragedy, represented by mountains, ii, 49.

Tragedy, patience in, i, 35.

Trachycenteron, i, 453.

Trick, the, of Clement upon Apion, viii, 257.

Trinity, the, of Triad, iii, 101; iii, 598; vii, 447, 543; included in the Holy Spirit, vii, 491; the doctrine of, v, 228; vi, 42; the difference between Judas and Christ, iii, 627; in unity, the co-equal, i, 255; proofs from Holy Scripture, vi, 43; 461; mystery of, iii, 48, Ante-Nicene Fathers, vii, 49; at the creation, iii, 606, 607; illustrated from nature, i, 474; by Plato, i, 468; the first use of the word, i, 201; worshipped by Christians, i, 196, 196; orthodoxy of Pellaian's, view of, iii, 605; Catholic doctrine of, against the Sabellians, iii, 383; Novatian on, vi, 611, 567.

Trigolion, the disciples at, vi, 156; departure from, 157; instruction at, 157; Peter at, 270.

Trinitarian defined because he inverted the plough, vi, 443; native of Athens, first to yoke oxen, 499.

Trion, the, vi, 538, 544, 555, 559, 559; prayer of, 557.

Trismegistus, the, vi, 426, 506.

Triumphal hymn, the, vi, 535; prayer of, 535.

Troyan, the, vi, 165, 166, 170, 171, 172, 173, 175, 176, 181, 186; vi, 534, 535.

Trophonius, the second Mercury, vi, 449.

Trumpet, invented by the Tyrrhenians, ii, 65.

Truth, the, i, 165, to be appealed to, and not custom, vi, 277; known from the prophets, i, 198, 289; misrepresented, 184; power of the, iii, 241; to be found in the Catholic Church, i, 416; heretics derive from, 347; known not only to Paul, but also to Luke, 437; hated in the Christians, ii, 111; divine, contrasted with heathen philosophy, 171; spiritual nature of, 404; attained through faith, as the gift of God, 349; given to all, 350; object of true philosophy, 538; the object of search, iii, 247, to be kept unchanged, 324; not sought by heretics, 324; not impressed by human inventions, 603; doctrine of, iii, 150-52; reward of, 153; Hippolytus' definition of, 153; preservation of, 161; knowledge of, vii, 97; compared with eloquence, 69, 70; steps to, 230; the being conformed to, vii, 205; error cannot stand with, 107; not the property of all, 121; self-evidence of, 123; veiled with love, 159; cannot be found by man left to himself, 230; vain search of philosophers for, 230; taught by the prophets, 230; test of, 247; and custom, 257.

Tryphaxus, how he besieged Thebes, viii, 499 seq.

Tryphon, the Holy, his dialogue with Iulian, i, 194-270; changes the Christians with having accepted a groundless report, 199; with non-observance of the law, 199; is refuted by Justin, 199-270; his oblation accepted of Christ, 233, 235.

Tuditanus, folly of, vii, 93.

Tullius (M. Cicero), vii, 336, the most eloquent of the Romans, 405.

Tullius (Servius), king, half-true scribes offered under, vi, 400.

Tunuli, raised against the apostles, viii, 91; is killed by Garamillus, 94; raised again by Saul, 95.

Tunio, the seamless, worn by Pilate when cited before Tiberius — its marvelous influence on Tiberius, viii, 400 seq.

Turrilla, lieutenant of Mark Antony, viii, 52.

Tuscus, plastic art taught by the, ii, 65.

Tutulius, demon, the Laves, vi, 475.

Tutunus, vi, 428, 479.

Twelve, number, symbolism of, vii, 341.

Twelve Apostles, teaching of, discovery and publication of, vii, 372; context and relation to other works, and authenticity, 372; date and place, 374; introductory notice to, 377.

Two ways of life and death, vii, 377-379, 466.

Tyrander, father of Caspar and Pollux, vii, 422.
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

446

Urbana, see Athens.
Urbanus, Bishop of Carthage. v, 356.

Urbicus, a Roman senator, to Cyprian, v, 336; reply to, 336.

Urbicus, conscript the Christian to death, l, 288.

Useless things, why made, vii, 176.

Uses referred to, i, 43, 47, 163; ii, 87, 116.

Utro so concepieres, a quae nasci bus de, vii, 293.

Utter endurance, the, of Valentinus, i, 333.

Utmost, l, 60.

Vacation, the absurdity of, of the Eucharist, i, 332.

Valens, the president, i, 35.

Valentianus, i, 212; iii, 705; vii, 133.

their immoral opinions and practices, 234; how they pervert Scripture in their own favor, 376; putations of their false interpretation of Scripture, 379; quote Homer to support their views, 330; their inconsistent and contradictory opinions, 333; their views of Jesus related from the apostolic writings, 490; their system blameworthy, 493; disagree as to the prophecies of the New Testament, 413; used to denote last, 506; allegorical explanation of the binding of, 505; named because love comes to all, 472; two goddesses named, 488; 488; wounded by a mortal, 484; represented on the stage by beautiful graces, 488; in statues and paintings made, 511, 517.

Vendemia, i, 60.

Venetia, see Tarsus.

Venerable, the, of the Church, a contrast to philosophy, i, 419.

Verse, the, not worshiped by Christians, ii, 17, 31; the Pompastic system of, 136; the product of mind, vii, 297.

Veritable, the, of the Church, a contrast to philosophy, i, 419.

Verist, the, of the Church, a contrast to philosophy, i, 419.

Veronica, bears witness to Jesus before Pilate, vii, 485, 492; how she obtained a picture of Jesus, 486; found by Valentinus to have a portrait of Jesus, 486, 474; taken by Valentine with the picture of Jesus, and brought to Rome — the Desperatore Thebais, heated by the picture, 474 seq.

Verres, plunders the Silvanus gods, vii, 47.

Vexillius, presides over the election of the synod of campi, vi, 478.

Vexillius, philosopher, i, 163.

Versallius, the images of the gods venerated with, vi, 580.

Vespasian, destroys Jerusalem, vii, 506; is succeeded by Domitian, 506.

Vesuvius, costly, on, ii, 246.

Vexum, the earth said to be, vi, 472; ever-burning fire of, 460; charity of, vi, 24.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers
Whiston referred to, l. 478.
Whiston, examination of, vi. 478.
Whiston, explanation of the words of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the words of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the words of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
Whiston, on the word of, vi. 478.
A Comprehensive General Index to The Ante-Nicene Fathers

212 ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

i. 541; ii. his humiliation, iii. 319; the image of God, iv. 544; the creation, 546; pre-existent, ii. 773 inferred from the law and the prophets, vii. 224, 225; predestined, iv. 546; ruler of the soul, 210; symbolized by milk, 219; by baptism, 222; the Eternal Judge, iii. 318; meant by wisdom, 487.

Workworth referred to, viii. 1.

Church Hist., i. 30, 37; iii. 79.

Ramp. Lect., vii. 728.

Eusebius, ii. 544; iv. 533.

Greece, iv. 13.

Hippolyt., ii. 35; iv. 413; iv. 169, 201; v. 3, 47, 167.

Workman, the odd discussions with, vii. 165 seq.; turns out to be Clement's father, 161.

Workmanship of God, on the, a treatise by Lactantius, viii. 261 seq.

Works, good, ii. 259, 595. necessity of, viii. 155; reward of, i. 144; vi. 1, 149; iii. 15, 34, 253; of the flesh, i. 537; of God, ii. 551; their beauty, v. 578; of mercy, Christian, even of, in the early church, 528, 533; and alms, Cyrilian on, vi. 476 seq.

World, origin of the, ii. 96; vii. 214; its state before Christ's coming, i. 28; relations of Christians to, i. 189, 223;Creator and ruler of, vii. 518; this, to stand only 5,000 years according to Barachusien, viii. 79; Creator and Saviour of, vii. 518; the Saviour was preserved for the sake of Christians, i. 169; not made by angels, but by God through the word, 362; ii. 60; not formed by any other beings within the territory contained by the Father, i. 364; cause of diversity in, iv. 2625; God the soul of, 269; theory of identical worlds before and after the present, resolving, 273; ages of, a relative term, 272; meanings of the term (Kairos), 272; theory of planetary and heavenly spheres, 275; variety of visions in, 290; created in time, 290; worlds preceding and following, 541; made by God, vii. 532; the parts of, 58, 559, 560; compounded of four elements, vii. 168; distinguished from God, vii. 40; made out of nothing by a Creator, vii. 169; the Creator of, one, 369; ruled by the providence of God, 459; vii. 161; made for man, vii. 198, 203, 204, 260; time of the creation, why not made long before, vii. 174, why containing evil things, vii. 199; arrangement of, to secure the exercise of virtue, vii. 181; a prison to martyrs, iii. 663; compared to a sea, vi. 887; universal and everlasting, vi. 455; created, but everlasting, 455; created and perishable, 455; theories of, 421, 437, 455; Eriugena's view of its production, vii. 197; age of, 211; changes of empire in, 212; the beginning of, iv. 271, 340; shall not be annihilated, i. 766; fortunes of, at the last day, vii. 213; the end of, iv. 260, 341; destruction of, 199; destruction by fire of, vi. 437; the coming is the summer, is 331; after the flood, vii. 86; Vestines, on the creation of the, vii. 341 seq.; in the church, v. 435; material, decay of, 455, 475, 500; God's judgments on, 450.

Worship, laws forbidden to the clergy, vii. 540, 565.

Wormwood, ii. 23.

Worship of God, ii. 35, 52, 81; must be free, vii. 244; Christian, description of, ii. 40; weekly, i. 185; public, by night in times of persecution, iv. 125; who is worthy of, i. 232; due to God only, vii. 449; beatus, i. 171; true nature of, 532; true, in the heart, vi. 486; abuse of, iv. 218; 517; preserved, vii. 517.

Worshippers of God, who are, vii. 151 of the gods, like the gods, 210, 220.

Wotton quoted, i. 13.

Xanthicus, name of a month, i. 43.

Xanthus referred to, ii. 187.

Xenocrates, on the idea of God, ii. 465, 472.

Xenophanes, his philosophy and cosmogony, v. 177; theophrastian, vii. 245; quoted, iv. 470; vi. 141.

Xenophanes referred to, ii. 191; iv. 479; 584; iii. 345.

Xenophanes, iv. 139, 147, 115.

Xenus, the bridge and canal made by ix. 419.

Ximenes, bishop of Rome, murder of, vi. 688.

Year, the divisions of the, do not really suit the Valentinian theory of ages, i. 395; of the Lord, the acceptable, 391.

Young man, the, killed by a dragon, and restored to life by Jesus, the story of, vii. 547 seq.; who killed a maiden, the story of, 549 seq.

Yovel, birth-pity, i. 66.

Zachaeus, publican, companion of St. Peter, vii. 452.

Zachaeus, writes to James, viii. 96; welcomes Peter at Caesarea, 96; appointed by Peter bishop of Caesarea, 151, 250; rescued Aquila and Priscilla from Simon Magus, 164, 275.

Zacharias, or Zachurus, a doctor of the law, James placed under, viii. 379; 396, 399.

Zacharias, 5, 79; father of John the Baptist, viii. 109.

Zeal, the, patience, speaks of his relation to Joseph, vii. 23; of his building the first boat, 24; of the five years he spent as a fisher, supplying every one with fish, 24; teaches his children to show mercy and compassion towards all, 24; warns them against divisions, 24; points to the coming of the God-Man, 25; his death and burial, 25.

Zechariah, vision of, interpreted, vi. 359.

Zonaras, and Sabine called in as witnesses to Mary, vii. 374.

Zeno, a boy, falls from a horse and is killed, but is restored to life by Jesus, the story of, 117; calls pupils a vice, 93; of Myndus, vi. 508.

Zosimus referred to, iv. 465.

Zephaniah, (apocalyptic) vision of heaven, ii. 482.

Zephyrius, bishop of Rome, favorer of heretics, v. 125; 126; epistles of, viii. 609 seq., 612.

Zerubbabel, prediction of, viii. 506.

Zeno, Pasiphae, and Melis, viii. 264.

Zosimus, loved by Apollo, vi. 485.

Zodiac, ii. 69; signs of, i. 97, 35, 59.

Zosimus, 5, 216, 217.

Zosimus, commentary on, on Peter of Alexandria's canons, vi. 260-278.

Zoravser, or Ormanus, a son of Zizan, regarded as the author of the magic art, viii. 140, 275; adored, 141; 276; Etruscans led against the Assyrians by, iv. 415; assigned by tradition to different countries and ages, 428.

Zosimus, 5, 216.

Zosimus of Thessalonica, on baptism, v. 570.

Zosimus, bishop of Comana, vii. 356.
THE ANTE-NICENE FATHERS.

INDEX OF TEXTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>300, 304, 349,</td>
<td>305, 356,</td>
<td>479, 490, 700</td>
<td>732, 743, 757</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1, 44, 140, 349,</td>
<td>488, 499,</td>
<td>700, 700, 700</td>
<td>700, 700, 700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>209, 243, 526, 724</td>
<td>725, 726, 727</td>
<td>728, 729, 730</td>
<td>731, 732, 733</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
<td>740, 741, 742</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1, 2, 21, 1, 16, 110, 140, 509, 711</td>
<td>743, 744, 745, 746</td>
<td>747, 748, 749, 750</td>
<td>751, 752, 753, 754</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
<td>740, 741, 742</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

THE ANTE-NICENE FATHERS.

INDEX OF TEXTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>300, 304, 349,</td>
<td>488, 499,</td>
<td>700, 700, 700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1, 44, 140, 349,</td>
<td>725, 726, 727</td>
<td>728, 729, 730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>209, 243, 526, 724</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>743, 744, 745, 746</td>
<td>747, 748, 749, 750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

THE ANTE-NICENE FATHERS.

INDEX OF TEXTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>300, 304, 349,</td>
<td>488, 499,</td>
<td>700, 700, 700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1, 44, 140, 349,</td>
<td>725, 726, 727</td>
<td>728, 729, 730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>209, 243, 526, 724</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>743, 744, 745, 746</td>
<td>747, 748, 749, 750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

THE ANTE-NICENE FATHERS.

INDEX OF TEXTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>300, 304, 349,</td>
<td>488, 499,</td>
<td>700, 700, 700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1, 44, 140, 349,</td>
<td>725, 726, 727</td>
<td>728, 729, 730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>209, 243, 526, 724</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>743, 744, 745, 746</td>
<td>747, 748, 749, 750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L, 20, 27, 547,</td>
<td>734, 735, 736</td>
<td>737, 738, 739</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX OF TEXTS

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.
Index of Texts

460


<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Column 1</th>
<th>Column 2</th>
<th>Column 3</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>217</td>
<td>ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Rhod. XXXII, 32, 218</th>
<th>218</th>
<th>32</th>
<th>218</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>XXXII, 34, 244</td>
<td>244</td>
<td>34</td>
<td>244</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 1, 459</td>
<td>459</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>459</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 2, 781</td>
<td>781</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>781</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 3, 185</td>
<td>185</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 11, 175</td>
<td>175</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 17, 499</td>
<td>499</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 13, 31</td>
<td>31</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 14, 343</td>
<td>343</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 15, 465</td>
<td>465</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 16, 338</td>
<td>338</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>338</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 17, 461</td>
<td>461</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>461</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 20, 321</td>
<td>321</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 27, 242</td>
<td>242</td>
<td>27</td>
<td>242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 30, 440</td>
<td>440</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>440</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 31, 622</td>
<td>622</td>
<td>31</td>
<td>622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 32, 638</td>
<td>638</td>
<td>32</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIII, 33, 639</td>
<td>639</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>639</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 1, 75</td>
<td>75</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 3, 200</td>
<td>200</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 4, 270</td>
<td>270</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>270</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 5, 383</td>
<td>383</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>383</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 6, 373</td>
<td>373</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 7, 75</td>
<td>75</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 12, 123</td>
<td>123</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 14, 235</td>
<td>235</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 16, 426</td>
<td>426</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>426</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 17, 305</td>
<td>305</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>305</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 18, 348</td>
<td>348</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 19, 297</td>
<td>297</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXXIV, 21, 74</td>
<td>74</td>
<td>21</td>
<td>74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index of Texts</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index of Texts
Index of Texts

466


ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

Index of Texts

A

470

132

497

XXXII, 176; 177

121

132

222; 224; 228

124

231

19; 22; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23

18; 19; 23
Index of Texts

472


Index of Texts
Index of Texts

478


Index of Texts

480


Index of Texts

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

227

Prov. XI. 26...l. 267...v. 559...vii. 472.
XI. 30...v. 173.
XII. 1...v. 463.
XII. 4...ii. 287...vii. 398.
XII. 4 (LXX.)...vii. 395.
XII. 11...v. 625.
XII. 13...v. 400.
XII. 16...v. 535.
XII. 17...v. 555.
XII. 28 (LXX.)...vii. 410, 496.
XIII. 2...v. 59.
XIII. 4...v. 291...vii. 406.
XIII. 4...v. 419...vii. 277.
XIII. 7...v. 423.
XIII. 11...v. 401.
XIII. 13 (LXX.)...vii. 467.
XIII. 20...v. 482, 465.
XIII. 21...v. 291...vii. 5531, v. 4, 436, 461.
XIII. 25...v. 600.
XIV. 1...v. 395.
XIV. 3...v. 575.
XIV. 6...v. 310.
XIV. 8...v. 396.
XIV. 9...v. 457.
XIV. 10...v. 641.
XIV. 16...v. 326.
XIV. 24...v. 370.
XIV. 25...v. 553.
XIV. 26...v. 395.
XIV. 27...v. 375.
XIV. 29 (LXX.)...vii. 29.
XIV. 31...v. 466.
XIV. 32...v. 441.
XV. 1...v. 217...vii. 397.
XV. 1 (LXX.)...vii. 397.
XV. 3...v. 488, 547.
XV. 8...v. 369.
XV. 10...v. 538.
XV. 14...v. 514.
XV. 17...v. 241.
XV. 19 (LXX.)...vii. 393.
XV. 21...v. 303.
XV. 27...v. 347.
XV. 32...v. 355.
XV. 34...v. 365, 374.
XV. 6...v. 259.
XV. 12...v. 379.
XV. 27...v. 743.
XVII. 3...v. 498.
XVIII. 3...v. 298...vii. 395.

Prov. XVIII. 6...v. 59.
XVIII. 9...v. 60.
XVIII. 11...v. 64.
XVIII. 17...v. 64.
XVIII. 19...v. 73, 331...vii. 638.
XVIII. 22...v. 456.
XVIII. 3...v. 456.
XIX. 9...v. 587.
XIX. 11...v. 307.
XIX. 12...v. 463.
XIX. 14...v. 456.
XIX. 17...v. 426; ii. 2478, 2799, 3071.
XIX. 18...v. 355; vii. 436, 468.
XIX. 23...v. 356.
XIX. 24...v. 397.
XIX. 29...v. 261.
XIX. 7...v. 481, 537.
XIX. 9...v. 4761; vi. 14, vi. 403.
XIX. 10...v. 555.
XIX. 22...v. 493; vii. 392.
XIX. 23...v. 698.
XIX. 28...v. 307...vii. 632.
XIX. 29...v. 559; ii. 6831, v. 5531, v. 561.
XIX. 31...v. 295.
XIX. 10...v. 9.
XIX. 11...v. 523.
XIX. 13...v. 531; vii. 427, 468.
XIX. 20...v. 373.
XIX. 22...v. 375.
XIX. 26...v. 370.
XIX. 27...v. 400.
XIX. 28...v. 370; ii. 397.
XIX. 31...v. 9.
XIX. 34...v. 339.
XIX. 40...v. 399.
XIX. 30...v. 241...vii. 391, v. 310.
XIX. 28...v. 197.
XIX. 22...v. 52.
XXII. 6...v. 498.
XXII. 7...v. 238.
XXII. 3...v. 493.
XXII. 5...v. 593.
XXII. 9...v. 355; vii. 540.
XXII. 11...v. 471.
XXII. 13...v. 423.
XXII. 14...v. 320.
XXIII. 20...v. 444.
XXIII. 21...v. 244.
XXIII. 24...v. 81.
XXIII. 26...v. 82.
XXIII. 31 (LXX.)...vii. 397.

Prov. XXIV. 9...v. 9.
Eccles. I. 16, 17...v. 313.
I. 2...v. 8...vii. 391.
I. 25 (LXX.)...vii. 422.
I. 34...v. 460, 553.
I. 16...v. 305.
I. 4...v. 322.
I. 37...v. 544.
I. 4...v. 476, 493.
I. 5...v. 58.
I. 4...v. 51, 51.
I. 17...v. 547.
I. 18...v. 114.
I. 20...v. 342.
I. 21...v. 547.
I. 6...v. 377, 475.
I. 7...v. 453.
I. 8...v. 47.
I. 14...v. 315.
I. 11...v. 315.
I. 2...v. 315.
I. 10...v. 337.
I. 12...v. 58.
I. 17...v. 539.
I. 18...v. 7, 105.
I. 19...v. 114.
I. 13...v. 313.
I. 16...v. 45.
I. 17...v. 4.
I. 23...v. 66.
I. 24...v. 375.
I. 26...v. 395.
I. 27...v. 64.
X. 1...v. 493.
X. 4...v. 539, 537.
X. 13...v. 399.
X. 14...v. 34.
X. 15...v. 222.
X. 16...v. 583.
X. 17...v. 621.
X. 20...v. 574.
X. 22...v. 509.
X. 23...v. 514.
X. 24...v. 440.
Cant. I. 1...v. 504.
I. 12...v. 412.
I. 3...v. 3, v. 56.
I. 4...v. 488.
I. 11...v. 393.
I. 12...v. 371.
I. 17...v. 75, v. 388.
I. 15...v. 347.
I. 18...v. 361.
I. 14...v. 536.
I. 16...v. 568.
I. 17...v. 638.
I. 20, 21...v. 492.
I. 23...v. 119.
I. 24...v. 479.
I. 25...v. 356.
Isa. I. 1...v. 592.
I. 2...v. 533; ii. 229.
I. 3...v. 30.
I. 4...v. 493, 497.
I. 6...v. 821, v. 509.
I. 7...v. 110.
I. 10...v. 142.
I. 11...v. 594, 591.
I. 12...v. 246.
I. 15...v. 535.
I. 16...v. 175, 230.
I. 17...v. 391.
I. 18...v. 125.
I. 19...v. 154.
I. 20...v. 452.
Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ante-Nicene Fathers</td>
<td>338</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Ante-Nicene Fathers: Index of Texts
Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Is. XXV, 11 . . . . 7, 324</th>
<th>LXX, 2 . . . 4, 306</th>
<th>LXXI, 2 . . . 1, 565</th>
<th>LXXII, 2 . . . 6, 452</th>
<th>LXXIII, 2 . . . 7, 597</th>
<th>LXXIV, 2 . . . 8, 356</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>XXVI, 2 . . . 9, 517</td>
<td>LXXV, 2 . . . 10, 507</td>
<td>LXXVI, 2 . . . 11, 590</td>
<td>LXXVII, 2 . . . 12, 543</td>
<td>LXXVIII, 2 . . . 13, 567</td>
<td>LXXIX, 2 . . . 14, 251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XXVII, 5 . . . 15, 272</td>
<td>LXXX, 5 . . . 16, 372</td>
<td>LXXXI, 5 . . . 17, 432</td>
<td>LXXXII, 5 . . . 18, 456</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 5 . . . 19, 486</td>
<td>LXXXIV, 5 . . . 20, 512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXV, 5 . . . 21, 582</td>
<td>LXXXV, 5 . . . 22, 587</td>
<td>LXXXVI, 5 . . . 23, 507</td>
<td>LXXXVII, 5 . . . 24, 503</td>
<td>LXXXVIII, 5 . . . 25, 506</td>
<td>LXXXIX, 5 . . . 26, 508</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXX, 5 . . . 27, 381</td>
<td>C, 5 . . . 28, 529</td>
<td>CXXX, 5 . . . 29, 572</td>
<td>CXXXI, 5 . . . 30, 525</td>
<td>CXXXII, 5 . . . 31, 526</td>
<td>CXXXIII, 5 . . . 32, 527</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CXXXIV, 5 . . . 33, 528</td>
<td>CXXXV, 5 . . . 34, 529</td>
<td>CXXXVI, 5 . . . 35, 530</td>
<td>CXXXVII, 5 . . . 36, 531</td>
<td>CXXXVIII, 5 . . . 37, 532</td>
<td>CXXXIX, 5 . . . 38, 533</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CXL, 5 . . . 39, 534</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 40, 535</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 41, 536</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 42, 537</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 43, 538</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 44, 539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 45, 540</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 46, 541</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 47, 542</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 48, 543</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 49, 544</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 50, 545</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 51, 546</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 52, 547</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 53, 548</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 54, 549</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 55, 550</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 56, 551</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 57, 552</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 58, 553</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 59, 554</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 60, 555</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 61, 556</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 62, 557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 63, 558</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 64, 559</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 65, 560</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 66, 561</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 67, 562</td>
<td>CXLI, 5 . . . 68, 563</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

486
Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.</td>
<td>230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LI, 4, ii. i. 346</td>
<td>337</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LI, 6, i. 365 vi. 365</td>
<td>388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LI, 7, i. 375 vi. 375</td>
<td>389</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LI, 9, iii. iii. 346</td>
<td>390</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LI, 10, vii. 394</td>
<td>395</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 5, i. 35 vi. 230 iii. 389</td>
<td>396</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 6, iv. 27</td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 7, i. 395 iii. 360</td>
<td>401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 8, i. 416</td>
<td>402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 9, ii. 416</td>
<td>403</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 10, iii. 416</td>
<td>404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 11, iv. 27</td>
<td>405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 12, ii. ii. 386</td>
<td>406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 13, ii. 386</td>
<td>407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 14, i. 395</td>
<td>408</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 15, iii. 416</td>
<td>409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 16, ii. 416</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 17, ii. 416</td>
<td>411</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 18, ii. 416</td>
<td>412</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 19, i. iv. 27</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 20, ii. 416</td>
<td>414</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 21, iii. 416</td>
<td>415</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 22, iv. 27</td>
<td>416</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 23, v. 38</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 24, vi. 27</td>
<td>418</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 25, vii. 27</td>
<td>419</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 26, viii. 27</td>
<td>420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 27, ix. 27</td>
<td>421</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 28, x. 27</td>
<td>422</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 29, xi. 27</td>
<td>423</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 30, xii. 27</td>
<td>424</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 31, xiii. 1</td>
<td>425</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 32, xiv. 1</td>
<td>426</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 33, xv. 1</td>
<td>427</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 34, xvi. 1</td>
<td>428</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 35, xvii. 1</td>
<td>429</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 36, xviii. 1</td>
<td>430</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 37, xix. 1</td>
<td>431</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 38, xx. 1</td>
<td>432</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 39, xxi. 1</td>
<td>433</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 40, xxii. 1</td>
<td>434</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LII, 41, xxiii. 1</td>
<td>435</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Index continues on the next page.
Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ante-Nicene Fathers</th>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Iss. LXXXI. 12. III. vii. 450</td>
<td>Iss. LXXXI. 12. III. vii. 451</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXII. 10. IV. viii. 452</td>
<td>LXXII. 10. IV. viii. 452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIII. 15. V. viii. 453</td>
<td>LXXIII. 15. V. viii. 453</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIII. 16. VI. viii. 454</td>
<td>LXXIII. 17. VII. viii. 455</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIII. 18. VIII. viii. 456</td>
<td>LXXIII. 19. IX. viii. 457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIII. 20. X. viii. 458</td>
<td>LXXIII. 21. XI. viii. 459</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 1. XII. viii. 460</td>
<td>LXXIV. 1. XII. viii. 460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 2. XIII. viii. 461</td>
<td>LXXIV. 2. XIII. viii. 461</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 3. XIV. viii. 462</td>
<td>LXXIV. 3. XIV. viii. 462</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 4. XV. viii. 463</td>
<td>LXXIV. 4. XV. viii. 463</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 5. XVI. viii. 464</td>
<td>LXXIV. 5. XVI. viii. 464</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 6. XVII. viii. 465</td>
<td>LXXIV. 6. XVIII. viii. 466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 7. XVIII. viii. 467</td>
<td>LXXIV. 7. XIX. viii. 468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 8. XIX. viii. 469</td>
<td>LXXIV. 9. XX. viii. 470</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 10. XX. viii. 471</td>
<td>LXXIV. 11. XXI. viii. 472</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 12. XXI. viii. 473</td>
<td>LXXIV. 13. XXII. viii. 474</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 14. XXII. viii. 475</td>
<td>LXXIV. 15. XXIII. viii. 476</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 16. XXIII. viii. 477</td>
<td>LXXIV. 17. XXIV. viii. 478</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 17. XXIV. viii. 478</td>
<td>LXXIV. 18. XXV. viii. 479</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 19. XXV. viii. 480</td>
<td>LXXIV. 20. XXVI. viii. 481</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 21. XXVI. viii. 482</td>
<td>LXXIV. 22. XXVII. viii. 483</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 23. XXVII. viii. 484</td>
<td>LXXIV. 24. XXVIII. viii. 485</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 25. XXVIII. viii. 485</td>
<td>LXXIV. 26. XXIX. viii. 486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 27. XXIX. viii. 486</td>
<td>LXXIV. 28. XXX. viii. 487</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 29. XXX. viii. 487</td>
<td>LXXIV. 30. XXXI. viii. 488</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 31. XXXI. viii. 488</td>
<td>LXXIV. 32. XXXII. viii. 489</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 33. XXXII. viii. 489</td>
<td>LXXIV. 34. XXXIII. viii. 490</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 35. XXXIII. viii. 490</td>
<td>LXXIV. 36. XXXIV. viii. 491</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 37. XXXIV. viii. 491</td>
<td>LXXIV. 38. XXXV. viii. 492</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 39. XXXV. viii. 492</td>
<td>LXXIV. 40. XXXVI. viii. 493</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 41. XXXVI. viii. 493</td>
<td>LXXIV. 42. XXXVII. viii. 494</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 43. XXXVII. viii. 494</td>
<td>LXXIV. 44. XXXVIII. viii. 495</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 45. XXXVIII. viii. 495</td>
<td>LXXIV. 46. XXXIX. viii. 496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 47. XXXIX. viii. 496</td>
<td>LXXIV. 48. XL. viii. 497</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 49. XL. viii. 497</td>
<td>LXXIV. 50. XLI. viii. 498</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV. 51. XLI. viii. 498</td>
<td>LXXIV. 52. XLII. viii. 499</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

490
Index of Texts

492


Index of Texts

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

Dan. IV. 27. 9. 477. vii.

Dan. II. 94. vii.

Dan. IV. 33. iii. 310.

Dan. IV. 34. iii. 516. vii.

Dan. IV. 35. vi. 235. viii.

Dan. IV. 37. lv. 463.

Dan. V. 7. 2. 100. vii.

Dan. V. 29. 4. 410. ii.

Dan. VII. 17. 9. 476.

Dan. VII. 18. 9. 517.

Dan. VII. 24. 20. 477.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 22. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 23. 22. 477.

Dan. VIII. 26. 5. 518.

Dan. VIII. 27. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 28. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 29. 9. 517.

Dan. VIII. 30. 9. 517.
Index of Texts
Index of Texts

498


ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Matt.</th>
<th>V. 4</th>
<th>4-17</th>
<th>ii, 347</th>
<th>388</th>
<th>509</th>
<th>592</th>
<th>679</th>
<th>792</th>
<th>820</th>
<th>viii, 725</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>V. 1</td>
<td>1-2,</td>
<td>i,</td>
<td>116,</td>
<td>119</td>
<td>252</td>
<td>325</td>
<td>vii, 285</td>
<td>vi, 225</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 2</td>
<td>1, 22</td>
<td>220</td>
<td>viii,</td>
<td>903</td>
<td></td>
<td>165</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 3</td>
<td>1-3,</td>
<td>450,</td>
<td>549</td>
<td>iii,</td>
<td>587</td>
<td>iv,</td>
<td>107</td>
<td>vi, 355</td>
<td>vi, 265</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 4</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>684</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 5</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td>vii, 265</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 6</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 7</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 8</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 9</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 10</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 11</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 12</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 13</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 14</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 15</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 16</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 17</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 18</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 19</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 20</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 21</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 22</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 23</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 24</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 25</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 26</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 27</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 28</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 29</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 30</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 31</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 32</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 33</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 34</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 35</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 36</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 37</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 38</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 39</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 40</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 41</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 42</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 43</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 44</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 45</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 46</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 47</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 48</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 49</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
<td></td>
<td>461</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 50</td>
<td>1-5,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td>ii,</td>
<td>385</td>
<td></td>
<td>661</td>
<td></td>
<td>526</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

502
Index of Texts
Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Matt. VI.</th>
<th>Matt. VII.</th>
<th>Matt. VIII.</th>
<th>Matt. X.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>7, 12...</td>
<td>1, 176, 385</td>
<td>6, 374, 376</td>
<td>7, 1,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19-21...</td>
<td>2, 213...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19-20...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19-21...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20, 21...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20, 21...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20, 21...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20, 21...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6, 7,...</td>
<td>1, 176...</td>
<td>1, 374, 376</td>
<td>10,...</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS

504
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
<th>ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.</th>
<th>239</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Matt. X. 30...</td>
<td>i. 371; ii. 356</td>
<td>234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 32...</td>
<td>i. 425; v. 326</td>
<td>234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 31...</td>
<td>v. 425</td>
<td>326</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 32...</td>
<td>i. 356</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 33...</td>
<td>ii. 358</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 34...</td>
<td>ii. 320; iii. 329</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 35...</td>
<td>iii. 326</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 36...</td>
<td>ii. 368</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 37...</td>
<td>ii. 368</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 38...</td>
<td>i. 428; v. 300</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 39...</td>
<td>i. 415; v. 280; n. 300; vi. 604</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 40...</td>
<td>i. 415; ii. 415; 600</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 41...</td>
<td>i. 415; ii. 415; 600</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 42...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 43...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 44...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 45...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 46...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 47...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 48...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 49...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 50...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 51...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 52...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 53...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 54...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 55...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 56...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 57...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 58...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 59...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 60...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 61...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 62...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 63...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 64...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 65...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 66...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 67...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 68...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 69...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 70...</td>
<td>ii. 375; v. 400</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index of Texts
Index of Texts
ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>510</td>
<td>241</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>241</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>514</td>
<td>458</td>
<td>458</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index of Texts

516


<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS

- Lake, VII. 37, 38, 39
  - v. 377
  - v. 378
  - v. 379
  - v. 380
  - v. 381
  - v. 382
  - v. 383
  - v. 384
  - v. 385

- Lake, IX. 46, v. 493, 494
  - v. 495
  - v. 496
  - v. 497
  - v. 498
  - v. 499
  - v. 500
  - v. 501
  - v. 502

- Lake, XI. 48, iii. 65, iv
  - v. 75
  - v. 76
  - v. 77
  - v. 78
  - v. 79
  - v. 80

---

Lake, VII. 37, 38, 39

- v. 377
- v. 378
- v. 379
- v. 380
- v. 381
- v. 382
- v. 383
- v. 384
- v. 385

---

Lake, IX. 46, v. 493, 494

- v. 495
- v. 496
- v. 497
- v. 498
- v. 499
- v. 500
- v. 501
- v. 502

---

Lake, XI. 48, iii. 65, iv

- v. 75
- v. 76
- v. 77
- v. 78
- v. 79
- v. 80
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XII, 45, 46, ii, 477; vi, 435.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 45, 46, ii, 477; vi, 435.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 45, 46, ii, 477; vi, 435.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 45, 46, ii, 477; vi, 435.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 45, 46, ii, 477; vi, 435.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XIX, 10... ii, 412.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXI, 8... ii, 414.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXII, 15-20... iii.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIII, 35... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIII, 34... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIV, 36... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXV, 37... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXVI, 38... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXVII, 39... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXVIII, 40... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIX, 41... iv, 420</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ANTE-NICE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XIX, 10... ii, 412.</td>
<td>522</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXI, 8... ii, 414.</td>
<td>415</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXII, 15-20... iii.</td>
<td>415</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIII, 35... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIII, 34... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIV, 36... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXV, 37... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXVI, 38... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXVII, 39... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXVIII, 40... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake, XXXIX, 41... iv, 420</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index of Texts
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John XIII, 14, 15... 9, 285, 254.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John XIV, 27... 48, vi, 254.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John XVI, 25... 535.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John XVIII, 31... viii, 428.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XCVIII, 38... vii, 605.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XCVII, 38... vii, 348.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XCVI, 19... vii, 520.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XCV, 9... vii, 102.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXVIII, 11... viii, 106.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXV, 9... viii, 125.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIV, 10... viii, 184.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIII, 12... viii, 233.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXII, 11... viii, 286.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXI, 11... viii, 238.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXX, 10... viii, 291.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXIX, 10... viii, 233.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXVII, 10... viii, 280.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LXXVIII, 11... viii, 230.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

528
Ante-Nicene Fathers: Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>John XX.</th>
<th>Acts II.</th>
<th>Acts V.</th>
<th>Acts VIII.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>22, 23</td>
<td>14, 15</td>
<td>20–25</td>
<td>20–21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>576; 4v</td>
<td>3, 11</td>
<td>3, 4</td>
<td>3, 5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>354; 2v</td>
<td>576; 3v</td>
<td>3, 7</td>
<td>3, 8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>632; 1v</td>
<td>699; 5v</td>
<td>3, 9</td>
<td>3, 10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>784; 5v</td>
<td>3, 11</td>
<td>3, 12</td>
<td>3, 13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4, 9; 9v</td>
<td>19, 20</td>
<td>3, 14</td>
<td>3, 15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>576; 7v</td>
<td>3, 16</td>
<td>3, 17</td>
<td>3, 18</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Acts II.

- 14, 15
- 3, 11
- 3, 12
- 3, 13
- 3, 14
- 3, 15
- 3, 16
- 3, 17
- 3, 18

Acts V.

- 20–25
- 3, 4
- 3, 7
- 3, 9
- 3, 10
- 3, 12
- 3, 14
- 3, 15

Acts VIII.

- 20–21
- 3, 5
- 3, 8
- 3, 10
- 3, 13
- 3, 15
- 3, 17
- 3, 19

---

Acts V.

- 20–25
- 3, 4
- 3, 7
- 3, 9
- 3, 10
- 3, 12
- 3, 14
- 3, 15

---

Acts VIII.

- 20–21
- 3, 5
- 3, 8
- 3, 10
- 3, 13
- 3, 15
- 3, 17
- 3, 19
Index of Texts

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>III, 13</td>
<td>III, 19</td>
<td>LXI, 237</td>
<td>LXXXII, 432</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 432</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 16</td>
<td>III, 237</td>
<td>LIV, 920</td>
<td>LXXIX, 920</td>
<td>LXXXI, 920</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IX, 10</td>
<td>IX, 11</td>
<td>LXXIX, 151</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 151</td>
<td>LXXXIV, 151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 4</td>
<td>III, 10</td>
<td>LIII, 124</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 124</td>
<td>LXXXIV, 124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 5</td>
<td>III, 11</td>
<td>LXXIX, 124</td>
<td>LXXXII, 124</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 93</td>
<td>XII, 94</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 95</td>
<td>XII, 96</td>
<td>LXXXII, 192</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII, 97</td>
<td>XII, 98</td>
<td>LXXXII, 192</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
<td>LXXXIII, 192</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Notes

- The page contains a table listing different chapters and verses of texts, along with their corresponding page numbers.
- The table is organized in a way that allows for easy reference to various parts of the text.
- The page is part of a larger document, possibly a collection of religious or scholarly materials.

---

532
Index of Texts

534


Index of Texts

538


Index of Texts

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XIII, 1, 1-2, a. 188</th>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XIII, 13, 1-2, a. 399</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>447 h, 419. 602</td>
<td></td>
<td>447 b, 419. 602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>154</td>
<td></td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227</td>
<td></td>
<td>227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>129</td>
<td></td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397</td>
<td></td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>129</td>
<td></td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>505</td>
<td></td>
<td>505</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227</td>
<td></td>
<td>227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>602</td>
<td></td>
<td>602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397</td>
<td></td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XV, 1, 1-2, a. 557</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>557 h, 516. 539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>539 h, 714. 728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227 h, 227. 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>602 h, 602. 602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XV, 1, 1-2, a. 557</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>557 h, 516. 539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>539 h, 714. 728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227 h, 227. 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>602 h, 602. 602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XV, 1, 1-2, a. 557</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>557 h, 516. 539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>539 h, 714. 728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227 h, 227. 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>602 h, 602. 602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XV, 1, 1-2, a. 557</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>557 h, 516. 539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>539 h, 714. 728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227 h, 227. 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>602 h, 602. 602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Cor.</th>
<th>XV, 1, 1-2, a. 557</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>557 h, 516. 539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>539 h, 714. 728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>227 h, 227. 227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>602 h, 602. 602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>397 h, 397. 397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index of Texts</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eph. I. 17, 18, 536</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II. 17-20, 537</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III. 19, 537</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV. 40, 538</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V. 3, 539</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI. 21, 540</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VII. 3, 541</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII. 3, 542</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IX. 21-24, 543</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X. 22-24, 544</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XI. 22-24, 545</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII. 22-24, 546</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XIII. 22-24, 547</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XIV. 22-24, 548</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

| Eph. IV. 22, 578, 582 |
| IV. 22, 578, 582 |
| V. 22, 578, 582 |
| VI. 22, 578, 582 |
| VII. 22, 578, 582 |
| VIII. 22, 578, 582 |
| IX. 22, 578, 582 |
| X. 22, 578, 582 |
| XI. 22, 578, 582 |
| XII. 22, 578, 582 |
| XIII. 22, 578, 582 |
| XIV. 22, 578, 582 |

| Phil. I. 6, 10, 531 |
| II. 10, 531 |
| III. 10, 531 |
| IV. 10, 531 |
| V. 10, 531 |
| VI. 10, 531 |
| VII. 10, 531 |
| VIII. 10, 531 |
| IX. 10, 531 |
| X. 10, 531 |
| XI. 10, 531 |
| XII. 10, 531 |
| XIII. 10, 531 |
| XIV. 10, 531 |

| 548 |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Phil. III, 4-6, vii, 472</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 6, i-ii, vii, 472</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 8, vii, 472</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II, 1-3, viii, 473</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 11, viii, 474</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 11, 12, viii, 475</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 13-14, viii, 476</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 13-14, viii, 476</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 14, viii, 476</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 15, viii, 477</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 16-17, viii, 478</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 18, vii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 19, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 20, vii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 21, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 22-23, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 24-25, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 26-27, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 28-29, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 30-31, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 32-33, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 34-35, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 36-37, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 38-39, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III, 40-41, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 2, vii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 3, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 4, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 5, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 6, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 7, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 8, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 9, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 10-11, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 12, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 13, viii, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 14, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 15, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 16, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 17, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 18, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 19, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 20, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 21, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 22, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 23, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 24, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 25, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 26, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 27, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 28, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 29, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 30, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 31, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 32, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 33, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 34, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 35, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 36, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 37, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 38, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 39, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 40, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 41, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 42, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 43, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 44, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 45, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 46, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 47, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV, 48, ix, 479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index of Texts

ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Text</th>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Text</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>264</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>264</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hebr. XIII, 4-18, 4:17; viii, 56. 563</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>Hebr. XIII, 4-18, 4:17; viii, 56. 563</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jas. V. 17, 18, 3:505; viii, 350. 350</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>Jas. V. 17, 18, 3:505; viii, 350. 350</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 Pet. IV. 21-25, v. 456; viii, 456</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>1 Pet. IV. 21-25, v. 456; viii, 456</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 John. I. 1, 11, 179, 650; viii, 179</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>1 John. I. 1, 11, 179, 650; viii, 179</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

556
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index of Texts</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index of Texts
| Rev. XV. 1-4. | 20. | 553 |
| Rev. XVII. 2. | 20. | 553 |
| Rev. XVIII. 2. | 20. | 553 |
| Rev. XIX. 11. | 20. | 553 |
| Rev. XX. 12. | 20. | 553 |
| Rev. XXI. 10. | 20. | 553 |

Index of Texts

266 ANTE-NICENE FATHERS: INDEX OF TEXTS.
Index of Pages of the Print Edition

i ii iii iv v vi vii viii ix xi xii xiii xiv 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21
22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52
53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 71 72 73 74 75 76 77 78 79 80 81 82 83
84 85 86 87 88 89 90 91 92 93 94 95 96 97 98 99 100 101 102 103 104 105 106 107 108 109 110
111 112 113 114 115 116 117 118 119 120 121 122 123 124 125 126 127 128 129 130 131 132 133
134 135 136 137 138 139 140 141 142 143 144 145 146 147 148 149 150 151 152 153 154 155 156
157 158 159 160 161 162 163 164 165 166 167 168 169 170 171 172 173 174 175 176 177 178 179
180 181 182 183 184 185 186 187 188 189 190 191 192 193 194 195 196 197 198 199 200 201 202
203 204 205 206 207 208 209 210 211 212 213 214 215 216 217 218 219 220 221 222 223 224 225
226 227 228 229 230 231 232 233 234 235 236 237 238 239 240 241 242 243 244 245 246 247 248
249 250 251 252 253 254 255 256 257 258 259 260 261 262 263 264 265 266

562
NPNF2-02. Socrates and Sozomenus Ecclesiastical Histories

Author(s): Socrates Scholasticus
Schaff, Philip (1819-1893) (Editor)

Publisher: Grand Rapids, MI: Christian Classics Ethereal Library

Description: With over twenty volumes, the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers is a momentous achievement. Originally gathered by Philip Schaff, the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers is a collection of writings by classical and medieval Christian theologians. The purpose of such a collection is to make their writings readily available. The entire work is divided into two series, each with fourteen volumes. The second series focuses on a variety of important Church Fathers, ranging from the fourth century to the eighth century. This volume contains the work of Sozomenus and Socrates--two fifth century Christian historians. They attempted to continue the work of Eusebius, namely, providing a history of the Christian church. The Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers are comprehensive in scope, and provide keen translations of instructive and illuminating texts from some of the great theologians of the Christian church. These spiritually enlightening texts have aided Christians for over a thousand years, and remain instructive and fruitful even today!

Tim Perrine
CCEL Staff Writer

Subjects: Christianity
Early Christian Literature. Fathers of the Church, etc.
Contents

Title Page. 1
The Ecclesiastical History of Socrates Scholasticus. 2
Title Page. 2
Prefatory Note. 3
Introduction. 4
Sources and Literature. 4
Life of Socrates. 6
Socrates’ Ecclesiastical History. 13
History of Socrates’ Work. 20
Book I 23
Introduction to the Work. 23
By what Means the Emperor Constantine became a Christian. 24
While Constantine favors the Christians, Licinius, his Colleague, persecutes them. 26
War arises between Constantine and Licinius on Account of the Christians. 27
The Dispute of Arius with Alexander, his Bishop. 28
Division begins in the Church from this Controversy; and Alexander Bishop of Alexandria excommunicates Arius and his Adherents. 29
The Emperor Constantine being grieved at the Disturbance of the Churches, sends Hosius the Spaniard to Alexandria, exhorting the Bishop and Arius to Reconciliation and Unity. 35
Of the Synod which was held at Nicæa in Bithynia, and the Creed there put forth. 39
The Letter of the Synod, relative to its Decisions: and the Condemnation of Arius and those who agreed with him. 48
The Emperor also summons to the Synod Acesius, Bishop of the Novatians. 57
Of the Bishop Paphnutius. 58
Of Spyridon, Bishop of the Cypriots.

Of Eutychian the Monk.

Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, and Theognis Bishop of Nicæa, who had been banished for agreeing in Opinion with Arius, having published their Recantation, and assented to the Creed, are reinstated in their Sees.

After the Synod, on the Death of Alexander, Athanasius is constituted Bishop of Alexandria.

The Emperor Constantine having enlarged the Ancient Byzantium, calls it Constantinople.

The Emperor’s Mother Helena having come to Jerusalem, searches for and finds the Cross of Christ, and builds a Church.

The Emperor Constantine abolishes Paganism and erects many Churches in Different Places.

In what Manner the Nations in the Interior of India were Christianized in the Times of Constantine.

In what Manner the Iberians were converted to Christianity.

Of Anthony the Monk.

Manes, the Founder of the Manichæan Heresy, and on his Origin.

Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, and Theognis Bishop of Nicæa, having recovered Confidence, endeavor to subvert the Nicene Creed, by plotting against Athanasius.

Of the Synod held at Antioch, which deposed Eustathius, Bishop of Antioch, on whose account a Sedition broke out and almost ruined the City.

Of the Presbyter who exerted himself for the Recall of Arius.

Arius, on being recalled, presents a Recantation to the Emperor, and pretends to accept the Nicene Creed.

Arius having returned to Alexandria with the Emperor’s Consent, and not being received by Athanasius, the Partisans of Eusebius bring Many Charges against Athanasius before the Emperor.

On Account of the Charges against Athanasius, the Emperor convokes a Synod of Bishops at Tyre.

Of Arsenius, and his Hand which was said to have been cut off.

Athanasius is found Innocent of what he was accused; his Accusers take to Flight.
When the Bishops will not listen to Athanasius' Defense on the Second Charge, he betakes himself to the Emperor.

On the Departure of Athanasius, those who composed the Synod vote his Deposition.

The Members of the Synod proceed from Tyre to Jerusalem, and having celebrated the Dedication of the 'New Jerusalem,' receive Arius and his Followers into Communion.

The Emperor summons the Synod to himself by Letter, in order that the Charges against Athanasius might be carefully examined before him.

The Synod not having come to the Emperor, the Partisans of Eusebius accuse Athanasius of having threatened to divert the Corn supplied to Constantinople from Alexandria: the Emperor being exasperated at this banishes Athanasius into Gaul.

Of Marcellus Bishop of Ancyra, and Asterius the Sophist.

After the Banishment of Athanasius, Arius having been sent for by the Emperor, raises a Disturbance against Alexander Bishop of Constantinople.

The Death of Arius.

The Emperor falls sick and dies.

The Funeral of the Emperor Constantine.

Book II

Introduction containing the Reason for the Author's Revision of his First and Second Books.

Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, and his Party, by again endeavoring to introduce the Arian Heresy, create Disturbances in the Churches.

Athanasius, encouraged by the Letter of Constantine the Younger, returns to Alexandria.

On the Death of Eusebius Pamphilus, Acacius succeeds to the Bishopric of Cæsarea.

The Death of Constantine the Younger.

Alexander, Bishop of Constantinople, when at the Point of Death proposes the Election either of Paul or of Macedonius as his Successor.

The Emperor Constantius ejects Paul after his Election to the Bishopric, and sending for Eusebius of Nicomedia, invests him with the Bishopric of Constantinople.

Eusebius having convened Another Synod at Antioch in Syria, causes a New Creed to be promulgated.
Of Eusebius of Emisa.
The Bishops assembled at Antioch, on the Refusal of Eusebius of Emisa to accept the Bishopric of Alexandria, ordain Gregory, and change the Language of the Nicene Creed.

On the Arrival of Gregory at Alexandria, tended by a Military Escort, Athanasius flees.
The People of Constantinople restore Paul to his See after the Death of Eusebius, while the Arians elect Macedonius.

Paul is again ejected from the Church by Constantius, in consequence of the Slaughter of Hermogenes, his General.
The Arians remove Gregory from the See of Alexandria, and appoint George in his Place.

Athanasius and Paul going to Rome, and having obtained Letters from Bishop Julius, recover their respective Dioceses.
The Emperor Constantius, through an Order to Philip the Prætorian Prefect, secures the Exile of Paul, and the Installation of Macedonius in his See.

Athanasius, intimidated by the Emperor's Threats, returns to Rome again.
The Emperor of the West requests his Brother to send him Three Persons who could give an Account of the Deposition of Athanasius and Paul. Those who are sent publish Another Form of the Creed.

Of the Creed sent by the Eastern Bishops to those in Italy, called the Lengthy Creed.

Of the Council at Sardica.

Defense of Eusebius Pamphilus.
The Council of Sardica restores Paul and Athanasius to their Sees; and on the Eastern Emperor's Refusal to admit them, the Emperor of the West threatens him with War.

Constantius, being Afraid of his Brother's Threats, recalls Athanasius by Letter, and sends him to Alexandria.

Athanasius, passing through Jerusalem on his Return to Alexandria, is received into Communion by Maximus: and a Synod of Bishops, convened in that City, confirms the Nicene Creed.

Of the Usurpers Magnentius and Vetranio.
After the Death of Constans, the Western Emperor, Paul and Athanasius are again ejected from their Sees: the Former on his Way into Exile is slain; but the Latter escapes by Flight.
Macedonius having possessed himself of the See of Constantinople inflicts much injury on those who differ from him.

Athanasius’ Account of the Deeds of Violence committed at Alexandria by George the Arian.

Of the Heresiarch Photinus.

Creeds published at Sirmium in Presence of the Emperor Constantius.

Of Hosius, Bishop of Cordova.

Overthrow of the Usurper Magnentius.

Of the Jews inhabiting Dio-Cæsarea in Palestine.

Of Gallus Cæsar.

Of Aëtius the Syrian, Teacher of Eunomius.

Of the Synod at Milan.

Of the Synod at Ariminum, and the Creed there published.

Cruelty of Macedonius, and Tumults raised by him.

Of the Synod at Seleucia, in Isauria.

Acacius, Bishop of Cæsarea, dictates a new Form of Creed in the Synod at Seleucia.

On the Emperor’s Return from the West, the Acacians assemble at Constantinople, and confirm the Creed of Ariminum, after making Some Additions to it.

On the Deposition of Macedonius, Eudoxius obtains the Bishopric of Constantinople.

Of Eustathius Bishop of Sebastia.

Of Meletius Bishop of Antioch.

The Heresy of Macedonius.

Of the Apollinarians, and their Heresy.

Successes of Julian; Death of the Emperor Constantius.

Book III

Of Julian; his Lineage and Education; his Elevation to the Throne; his Apostasy to Paganism.

Of the Sedition excited at Alexandria, and how George was slain.

The Emperor Indignant at the Murder of George, rebukes the Alexandrians by Letter.
On the Death of George, Athanasius returns to Alexandria, and takes Possession of his See.

Of Lucifer and Eusebius.

Lucifer goes to Antioch and consecrates Paulinus.

By the Co-operation of Eusebius and Athanasius a Synod is held at Alexandria, wherein the Trinity is declared to be Consubstantial.

Quotations from Athanasius’ ‘Defense of his Flight.’

After the Synod of Alexandria, Eusebius proceeding to Antioch finds the Catholics at Variance on Account of Paulinus’ Consecration; and having exerted himself in vain to reconcile them, he departs; Indignation of Lucifer and Origin of a Sect called after him.

Of Hilary Bishop of Poictiers.

The Emperor Julian extracts Money from the Christians.

Of Maris Bishop of Chalcedon; Julian forbids Christians from entering Literary Pursuits.

Of the Outrages committed by the Pagans against the Christians.

Flight of Athanasius.

Martyrs at Merum in Phrygia, under Julian.

Of the Literary Labors of the Two Apollinares and the Emperor’s Prohibition of Christians being instructed in Greek Literature.

The Emperor preparing an Expedition against the Persians, arrives at Antioch, and being ridiculed by the Inhabitants, he retorts on them by a Satirical Publication entitled ‘Misopogon, or the Beard-Hater.’

The Emperor consulting an Oracle, the Demon gives no Response, being awed by the Nearness of Babylas the Martyr.

Wrath of the Emperor, and Firmness of Theodore the Confessor.

The Jews instigated by the Emperor attempt to rebuild their Temple, and are frustrated in their Attempt by Miraculous Interposition.

The Emperor’s Invasion of Persia, and Death.

Jovian is proclaimed Emperor.

Refutation of what Libanius the Sophist said concerning Julian.

The Bishops flock around Jovian, each attempting to draw him to his own Creed.

The Macedonians and Acacians meet at Antioch, and proclaim their Assent to the Nicene Creed.
Death of the Emperor Jovian.

Book IV

After Jovian's Death, Valentinian is proclaimed Emperor, and takes his Brother Valens as Colleague in the Empire; Valentinian holds the Orthodox Faith, but Valens is an Arian.

Valentinian goes into the West; Valens remains at Constantinople, and grants the Request of the Macedonians to hold a Synod, but persecutes the Adherents of the 'Homoousion.'

While Valens persecutes the Orthodox Christians in the East, a Usurper arises at Constantinople named Procopius: and at the Same Time an Earthquake and Inundation take Place and injure Several Cities.

The Macedonians hold a Synod at Lampsacus, during a Period of Both Secular and Ecclesiastical Agitation; and after confirming the Antiochian Creed, and anathematizing that promulgated at Ariminum, they again ratify the Deposition of Acacius and Eudoxius.

Engagement between Valens and Procopius near Nacolia in Phrygia; after which the Usurper is betrayed by his Chief Officers, and with them put to Death.

After the Death of Procopius Valens constrains those who composed the Synod, and All Christians, to profess Arianism.

Eunomius supersedes Eleusius the Macedonian in the See of Cyzicus, His Origin and Imitation of Aëtius, whose Amanuensis he had been.

Of the Oracle found inscribed an a Stone, when the Walls of Chalcedon were demolished by Order of the Emperor Valens.

Valens persecutes the Novatians, because they accepted the Orthodox Faith.

Birth of Valentinian the Younger.

Hail of Extraordinary Size; and Earthquakes in Bithynia and the Hellespont.

The Macedonians, pressed by the Emperor's Violence toward them, send a Deputation to Liberius Bishop of Rome, and subscribe the Nicene Creed.

Eunomius separates from Eudoxius; a Disturbance is raised at Alexandria by Eudoxius, and Athanasius flees into Voluntary Exile again, but in Consequence of the Clamors of the People the Emperor recalls and re-establishes him in his See.

The Arians ordain Demophilus after the Death of Eudoxius at Constantinople; but the Orthodox Party constitute Evagrius his Successor.

The Emperor banishes Evagrius and Eustathius. The Arians persecute the Orthodox.
Certain Presbyters burnt in a Ship by Order of Valens. Famine in Phrygia.

The Emperor Valens, while at Antioch, again persecutes the Adherents of the 'Homoousion.'

Slaughter of Many Persons by Valens an Account of their Names, in Consequence of a Heathen Prediction.

Death of Athanasius, and Elevation of Peter to His See.

The Arians are allowed by the Emperor to imprison Peter and to set Lucius over the See of Alexandria.

Silence of Sabinus on the Misdeeds of the Arians; Flight of Peter to Rome; Massacre of the Solitaries at the Instigation of the Arians.

The Deeds of Some Holy Persons who devoted themselves to a Solitary Life.

Assault upon the Monks, and Banishment of their Superiors, who exhibit Miraculous Power.

Of Didymus the Blind Man.

Of Basil of Cæsarea, and Gregory of Nazianzus.

Of Gregory Thaumaturgus (the Wonder-Worker).

Of Novatus and his Followers. The Novatians of Phrygia alter the Time of keeping Easter, following Jewish Usage.

Dissension about a Successor to Auxentius, Bishop of Milan. Ambrose, Governor of the Province, going to appease the Tumult, is by General Consent and with the Approval of the Emperor Valentinian elected to the Bishopric of that Church.

Death of Valentinian.

The Emperor Valens, appeased by the Oration of Themistius the Philosopher, abates his Persecution of the Christians.

The Goths, under the Reign of Valens, embrace Christianity.

Admission of the Fugitive Goths into the Roman Territories, which caused the Emperor's Overthrow, and eventually the Ruin of the Roman Empire.

Abatement of Persecution against the Christians because of the War with the Goths.

The Saracens, under Mavia their Queen, embrace Christianity; and Moses, a Pious Monk, is consecrated their Bishop.
After the Departure of Valens from Antioch, the Alexandrians expel Lucius, and restore Peter, who had come with Letters from Damasus Bishop of Rome.

The Emperor Valens is ridiculed by the People on Account of the Goths; undertakes an Expedition against them and is slain in an Engagement near Adrianople.

Book V

Introduction.

After the Death of Valens the Goths again attack Constantinople, and are repulsed by the Citizens, aided by Some Saracen Auxiliaries.

The Emperor Gratian recalls the Orthodox Bishops, and expels the Heretics from the Churches. He takes Theodosius as his Colleague in the Empire.

The Principal Bishops who flourished at that Time.

The Macedonians, who had subscribed the 'Homoousian' Doctrine, return to their Former Error.

Events at Antioch in Connection with Paulinus and Meletius.

Gregory of Nazianzus is transferred to the See of Constantinople. The Emperor Theodosius falling Sick at Thessalonica, after his Victory over the Barbarians, is there baptized by Ascholius the Bishop.

Gregory, finding Some Dissatisfaction about his Appointment, abdicates the Episcopate of Constantinople. The Emperor orders Demophilus the Arian Bishop either to assent to the 'Homoousion,' or leave the City. He chooses the Latter.

A Synod consisting of One Hundred and Fifty Bishops meets at Constantinople. The Decrees passed. Ordination of Nectarius.

The Body of Paul, Bishop of Constantinople, is honorably transferred from his Place of Exile. Death of Meletius.

The Emperor orders a Convention composed of All the Various Sects. Arcadius is proclaimed Augustus. The Novatians permitted to hold their Assemblies in the City of Constantinople: Other Heretics driven out.

The Emperor Gratian is slain by the Treachery of the Usurper Maximus. From Fear of him Justina ceases persecuting Ambrose.

While the Emperor Theodosius is engaged in Military Preparations against Maximus, his Son Honorius is born. He then proceeds to Milan in Order to encounter the Usurper.

The Arians excite a Tumult at Constantinople.

Overthrow and Death of the Usurper Maximus.
Of Flavian Bishop of Antioch. 315
Demolition of the Idolatrous Temples at Alexandria, and the Consequent Conflict between the Pagans and Christians. 316
Of the Hieroglyphics found in the Temple of Serapis. 318
Reformation of Abuses at Rome by the Emperor Theodosius. 320
Of the Office of Penitentiary Presbyters and its Abolition. 322
Divisions among the Arians and Other Heretics. 324
Peculiar Schism among the Novatians. 325
The Author's Views respecting the Celebration of Easter, Baptism, Fasting, Marriage, the Eucharist, and Other Ecclesiastical Rites. 327
Further Dissensions among the Arians at Constantinople. The Psathyrians. 335
The Eunomians divide into Several Factions. 337
The Usurper Eugenius compasses the Death of Valentinian the Younger. Theodosius obtains a Victory over him. 339
Illness and Death of Theodosius the Elder. 341
Book VI 342
Introduction. 342
On the Death of Theodosius his Two Sons divide the Empire. Rufinus is slain at the Feet of ArcADIUS. 344
Death of Nectarius and Ordination of John. 345
Birth and Education of John Bishop of Constantinople. 347
Of Serapion the Deacon on whose Account John becomes Odious to his Clergy. 349
John draws down upon Himself the Displeasure of Many Persons of Rank and Power. Of the Eunuch Eutropius. 350
Gaïnas the Goth attempts to usurp the Sovereign Power; after filling Constantinople with Disorder, he is slain. 352
The Arians and the Supporters of the 'Homoousion' hold Nocturnal Assemblies and sing Antiphonal Hymns, a Species of Composition ascribed to Ignatius, surnamed Theophorus. Conflict between the Two Parties. 358
Dispute between Theophilus and Peter leading to an Attempt on the Part of the Former to depose John Bishop of Constantinople. 360
Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus convenes a Synod to condemn the Books of Origen. 362
Of Severian and Antiochus: their Disagreement from John. 364
Epiphanius, in order to gratify Theophilus, performs Ordinations at Constantinople without John’s Permission. 367
The Author’s Defence of Origen. 368
Epiphanius is asked to meet John; on refusing he is admonished concerning his Anticanonical Proceedings; alarmed at this he leaves Constantinople. 369
John is expelled from his Church by a Synod held at Chalcedon on account of his Dispraise of Women. 370
Sedition on Account of John Chrysostom’s Banishment. He is recalled. 372
Conflict between the Constantinopolitans and Alexandrians on Account of Heraclides; Flight of Theophilus and the Bishops of his Party. 373
Of Eudoxia’s Silver Statue. On account of it John is exiled a Second Time. 374
Ordination of Arsacius as John’s Successor. Indisposition of Cyrinus Bishop of Chalcedon. 376
Death of Arsacius, and Ordination of Atticus. 377
John dies in Exile. 378
Of Sisinius Bishop of the Novatians. His Readiness at Repartee. 379
Death of the Emperor Arcadius. 381
Book VII 382
Anthemius the Prätorian Prefect administers the Government of the East in Behalf of Young Theodosius. 382
Character and Conduct of Atticus Bishop of Constantinople. 383
Of Theodosius and Agapetus Bishops of Synada. 384
A Paralytic Jew healed by Atticus in Baptism. 385
The Presbyter Sabbatius, formerly a Jew, separates from the Novatians. 386
The Leaders of Arianism at this Time. 387
Cyril succeeds Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria. 388
Propagation of Christianity among the Persians by Maruthas Bishop of Mesopotamia. 389
The Bishops of Antioch and Rome. 391
Rome taken and sacked by Alaric. 392
The Bishops of Rome. 393
Of Chrysanthus Bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople. 394
Conflict between the Christians and Jews at Alexandria: and breach between the Bishop Cyril and the Prefect Orestes.

The Monks of Nitria come down and raise a Sedition against the Prefect of Alexandria.

Of Hypatia the Female Philosopher.

The Jews commit Another Outrage upon the Christians and are punished.

Miracle performed by Paul Bishop of the Novatians at the Baptism of a Jewish Impostor.

Renewal of Hostilities between the Romans and Persians after the Death of Isdigerdes King of the Persians.

Of Palladius the Courier.

A Second Overthrow of the Persians by the Romans.

Kind Treatment of the Persian Captives by Acacius Bishop of Amida.

Virtues of the Emperor Theodosius the Younger.

After the Death of the Emperor Honorius John usurps the Sovereignty at Rome. He is destroyed through the Prayers of Theodosius the Younger.

Valentinian a Son of Constantius and Placidia, Aunt of Theodosius, is proclaimed Emperor.

Christian Benevolence of Atticus Bishop of Constantinople. He registers John's Name in the Diptychs. His Fore-knowledge of his Own Death.

Sisinnius is chosen to succeed Atticus.

Voluminous Productions of Philip, a Presbyter of Side.

Proclus ordained Bishop of Cyzicus by Sisinnius, but rejected by the People.

Nestorius of Antioch promoted to the See of Constantinople. His Persecution of the Heretics.

The Burgundians embrace Christianity under Theodosius the Younger.

Nestorius harasses the Macedonians.

Of the Presbyter Anastasius, by whom the Faith of Nestorius was perverted.

Desecration of the Altar of the Great Church by Runaway Slaves.

Synod at Ephesus against Nestorius. His Deposition.

Maximian elected to the Episcopate of Constantinople, though Some wished Proclus to take that Place.

The Author's Opinion of the Validity of Translations from One See to Another.

Miracle performed by Silvanus Bishop of Troas formerly of Philippopolis.
Many of the Jews in Crete embrace the Christian Faith.

Preservation of the Church of the Novatians from Fire.

Proclus succeeds Maximian Bishop of Constantinople.

Excellent Qualities of Proclus.

Panegyric of the Emperor Theodosius Younger.

Calamities of the Barbarians who had been the Usurper John's Allies.

Marriage of the Emperor Valentinian with Eudoxia the Daughter of Theodosius.

The Body of John Chrysostom transferred to Constantinople, and placed in the Church of the Apostles by the Emperor at the Instigation of Proclus.

Death of Paul Bishop of the Novatians, and Election of Marcian as his Successor.

The Empress Eudocia goes to Jerusalem; sent there by the Emperor Theodosius.

Thalassius is ordained Bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia.

The Ecclesiastical History of Sozomen.

Title Page.

Introduction.

The Life.

Sozomen as Author.

Bibliography.

Conclusion.

Prefatory Remarks, by Valesius.

Memoir of Sozomen.

Address to the Emperor Theodosius by Salaminius Hermias Sozomen, and Proposal for an Ecclesiastical History.

Book I

The Preface of the Book, in which he investigates the History of the Jewish Nation; Mention of those who began such a Work; how and from what Sources he collected his History; how he was intent upon the Truth, and what other Details the History will contain.

Of the Bishops of the Large Towns in the Reign of Constantine; and how, from fear of Licinius, Christianity was professed cautiously in the East as far as Libya, while in the West, through the Favor of Constantine, it was professed with Freedom.

By the Vision of the Cross, and by the Appearance of Christ, Constantine is led to embrace Christianity. -- He receives Religious Instruction from our Brethren.
Constantine commands the Sign of the Cross to be carried before him in Battle; 526 an Extraordinary Narrative about the Bearers of the Sign of the Cross.

Refutation of the Assertion that Constantine became a Christian in consequence 527 of the Murder of his son Crispus.

The Father of Constantine allows the Name of Christ to be Extended; 528
Constantine the Great prepared it to Penetrate Everywhere.

Concerning the Dispute between Constantine and Licinius his Brother-In-Law 530 about the Christians, and how Licinius was conquered by Force and put to Death.

List of the Benefits which Constantine conferred in the Freedom of the Christians 531 and Building of Churches; and other Deeds for the Public Welfare.

Constantine enacts a Law in favor of Celibates and of the Clergy. 534
Concerning the Great Confessors who survived. 536
Account of St. Spyridon: His Modesty and Steadfastness. 537
On the Organization of the Monks: its Origin and Founders. 540
About Antony the Great and St. Paul the Simple. 542
Account of St. Ammon and Eutychius of Olympus. 545
The Arian Heresy, its Origin, its Progress, and the Contention which it 547 occasioned among the Bishops.

Constantine, having heard of the Strife of the Bishops, and the Difference of 550
Opinion concerning the Passover, is greatly troubled and sends Hosius, a Spaniard, Bishop of Cordova, to Alexandria, to abolish the Dissension among the Bishops, and to settle the Dispute about the Passover.

Of the Council convened at Nicæa on Account of Arius. 551
Two Philosophers are converted to the Faith by the Simplicity of Two Old Men 553 with whom they hold a Disputation.

When the Council was assembled, the Emperor delivered a Public Address. 555
After having given Audience to both Parties, the Emperor condemned the Followers of Arius and banished them.

What the Council determined about Arius; the Condemnation of his Followers; 557 his Writings are to be burnt; certain of the High Priests differ from the Council; the Settlement of the Passover.

Acesius, Bishop of the Novatians, is summoned by the Emperor to be present 559 at the First Council.
Canons appointed by the Council; Paphnutius, a certain Confessor, restrains the Council from forming a Canon enjoining Celibacy to all who were about to be honored with the Priesthood.

Concerning Melitius; the Excellent Directions made by the Holy Council in his Complications.

The Emperor prepared a Public Table for the Synod, after inviting its Members to Constantinople, and honoring them with Gifts, he exhorted all to be of One Mind, and forwarded to Alexandria and every other place the Decrees of the Holy Synod.

Book II

The Discovery of the Life-Bringing Cross and of the Holy Nails.

Concerning Helena, the Mother of the Emperor; she visited Jerusalem, built Temples in that City, and performed other Godly Works: Her Death.

Temples Built by Constantine the Great; the City called by his Name; its Founding; the Buildings within it; the Temple of Michael the Archsoldier, in the Sosthenium, and the Miracles which have occurred there.

What Constantine the Great effected about the Oak in Mamre; he also built a Temple.

Constantine destroyed the Places dedicated to the Idols, and persuaded the People to prefer Christianity.

The Reason why under Constantine, the Name of Christ was spread throughout the Whole World.

How the Iberians received the Faith of Christ.

How the Armenians and Persians embraced Christianity.

Sapor King of Persia is excited against the Christians. Symeon, Bishop of Persia, and Usthazanes, a Eunuch, suffer the Agony of Martyrdom.

Christians slain by Sapor in Persia.

Pusices, Superintendent of the Artisans of Sapor.

Tarbula, the Sister of Symeon, and her Martyrdom.

Martyrdom of St. Aicepsimas and of his Companions.

The Martyrdom of Bishop Milles and his Conduct. Sixteen Thousand Distinguished Men in Persia suffer Martyrdom under Sapor, besides Obscure Individuals.

Constantine writes to Sapor to stay the Persecution of the Christians.
Eusebius and Theognis who at the Council of Nice had assented to the Writings of Arius restored to their own Sees.

On the Death of Alexander, Bishop of Alexandria, at his Suggestion, Athanasius receives the Throne; and an Account of his Youth; how he was a Self-Taught Priest, and beloved by Antony the Great.

The Arians and Melitians confer Celebrity on Athanasius; concerning Eusebius, and his Request of Athanasius to admit Arius to Communion; concerning the Term “Consubstantial” Eusebius Pamphilus and Eustathius, Bishop of Antioch, create Tumults above all the rest.

Synod of Antioch; Unjust Deposition of Eustathius; Euphronius receives the Throne; Constantine the Great writes to the Synod and to Eusebius Pamphilus, who refuses the Bishopric of Antioch.

Concerning Maximus, who succeeded Macarius in the See of Jerusalem.

The Melitians and the Arians agree in Sentiment; Eusebius and Theognis endeavor to inflame anew the Disease of Arius.

The Vain Machinations of the Arians and Melitians against St. Athanasius.

Calumny respecting St. Athanasius and the Hand of Arsenius.

Some Indian Nations received Christianity at that Time through the Instrumentality of Two Captives, Frumentius and Edesius.

Council of Tyre; Illegal Deposition of St. Athanasius.

Erection of a Temple by Constantine the Great at Golgotha, in Jerusalem; its Dedication.

Concerning the Presbyter by whom Constantine was persuaded to recall Arius and Euzoïus from Exile; the Tractate concerning his Possibly Pious Faith, and how Arius was again received by the Synod assembled at Jerusalem.

Letter from the Emperor Constantine to the Synod of Tyre, and Exile of St. Athanasius through the Machination of the Arian Faction.

Alexander, Bishop of Constantinople; his Refusal to receive Arius into Communion; Arius is burst asunder while seeking Natural Relief.

Account given by the Great Athanasius of the Death of Arius.

Events which occurred in Alexandria after the Death of Arius. Letter of Constantine the Great to the Church there.

Constantine enacts a Law against all Heresies, and prohibits the People from holding Church in any place but the Catholic Church, and thus the Greater Number of Heresies disappear. The Arians who sided with Eusebius of Nicomedia, artfully attempted to obliterate the Term “Consubstantial.”
Marcellus Bishop of Ancyra; his Heresy and Deposition.

Death of Constantine the Great; he died after Baptism and was buried in the Temple of the Holy Apostles.

Book III

After the Death of Constantine the Great, the Adherents of Eusebius and Theognis attack the Nicene Faith.

Return of Athanasius the Great from Rome; Letter of Constantine Cæsar, Son of Constantine the Great; Renewed Machinations of the Arians against Athanasius; Acacius of Berrœa; War between Constans and Constantine.

Paul, Bishop of Constantinople, and Macedonius, the Pneumatomachian.

A Sedition was excited on the Ordination of Paul.

The Partial Council of Antioch; it deposed Athanasius; it substituted Gregory; its Two Statements of the Faith; those who agreed with them.

Eusebius surnamed Emesenus; Gregory accepted Alexandria; Athanasius seeks Refuge in Rome.

High Priests of Rome and of Constantinople; Restoration of Paul after Eusebius; the Slaughter of Hermogenes, a General of the Army; Constantius came from Antioch and removed Paul, and was wrathfully disposed toward the City; he allowed Macedonius to be in Doubt, and returned to Antioch.

Arrival of the Eastern High Priests at Rome; Letter of Julius, Bishop of Rome, concerning them; by means of the Letters of Julius, Paul and Athanasius receive their own Sees; Contents of the Letter from the Archpriests of the East to Julius.

Ejection of Paul and Athanasius; Macedonius is invested with the Government of the Church of Constantinople.

The Bishop of Rome writes to the Bishops of the East in Favor of Athanasius, and they send an Embassy to Rome who, with the Bishop of Rome, are to investigate the Charges against the Eastern Bishops; this Deputation is dismissed by Constans, the Cæsar.

The Long Formulary and the Enactments issued by the Synod of Sardica. Julius, Bishop of Rome, and Hosius, the Spanish Bishop, deposed by the Bishops of the East, because they held Communion with Athanasius and the Rest.

The Bishops of the Party of Julius and Hosius held another Session and deposed the Eastern High Priests, and also made a Formulary of Faith.

After the Synod, the East and the West are separated; the West nobly adheres to the Faith of the Nicene Council, while the East is disturbed by Contention here and there over this Dogma.
Of the Holy Men who flourished about this time in Egypt, namely, Antony, the Two Macariuses, Heraclius, Cronius, Paphnutius, Putubastus, Arsisius, Serapion, Piturion, Pachomius, Apollonius, Anuph, Hilarion, and a Register of many other Saints.

Didymus the Blind, and Aëtius the Heretic.

Concerning St. Ephraim.

Transactions of that Period, and Progress of Christian Doctrine through the Joint Efforts of Emperors and Arch-Priests.

Concerning the Doctrines held by the Sons of Constantine. Distinction between the Terms “Homoousios” and “Homoiousios.” Whence it came that Constantius quickly abandoned the Correct Faith.

Further Particulars concerning the Term “Consubstantial.” Council of Ariminum, the Manner, Source, and Reason of its Convention.

Athanasius again reinstated by the Letter of Constantius, and receives his See. The Arch-Priests of Antioch. Question put by Constantius to Athanasius. The Praise of God in Hymns.

Letter of Constantius to the Egyptians in behalf of Athanasius. Synod of Jerusalem.

Epistle written by the Synod of Jerusalem in Favor of Athanasius.

Valens and Ursacius, who belonged to the Arian Faction, confess to the Bishop of Rome that they had made False Charges against Athanasius.

Letter of Conciliation from Valens and Ursacius to the Great Athanasius.

Restoration of the Other Eastern Bishops to their own Sees. Ejection of Macedonius again; and Accession of Paul to the See.

Book IV

Death of Constans Cæsar. Occurrences which took place in Rome.

Martyrdom of the Holy Notaries.

Campaign of Constantius in Sirmium, and Details concerning Vetranio and Magnentius. Gallus receives the Title of Cæsar, and is sent to the East.

Cyril directs the Sacerdotal Office after Maximus, and the Largest Form of the Cross, surpassing the Sun in Splendor, again appears in the Heavens, and is visible during several Days.
Photinus, Bishop of Sirmium. His Heresy, and the Council convened at Sirmium in Opposition thereto. The Three Formularies of Faith. This Agitator of Empty Ideas was refuted by Basil of Ancyra. After his Deposition Photinus, although solicited, declined Reconciliation.

Death of the Tyrants Magnentius and Silvanus the Apostate. Sedition of the Jews in Palestine. Gallus Cæsar is slain, on Suspicion of Revolution.

Arrival of Constantius at Rome. A Council held in Italy. Account of what happened to Athanasius the Great through the Machinations of the Arians.

Council of Milan. Flight of Athanasius.

Divers Machinations of the Arians against Athanasius, and his Escape from Various Dangers through Divine Interposition. Evil Deeds perpetrated by George in Egypt after the Expulsion of Athanasius.

Liberius, Bishop of Rome, and the cause of his being exiled by Constantius. Felix his Successor.

Aëtius, the Syrian, and Eudoxius, the Successor of Leontius in Antioch. Concerning the Term “Consubstantial.”

Innovations of Eudoxius censured in a Letter written by George, Bishop of Laodicea. Deputation from the Council of Ancyra to Constantius.

Letter of the Emperor Constantius against Eudoxius and his Partisans.

The Emperor Constantius repairs to Sirmium, recalls Liberius, and restores him to the Church of Rome; he also commands Felix to assist Liberius in the Sacerdotal Office.

The Emperor purposed, on account of the Heresy of Aëtius and the Innovations in Antioch, to convene a Council at Nicomedia; but as an Earthquake took place in that City, and many other Affairs intervened, the Council was first convened at Nicæa, and afterwards at Ariminum and Seleucia. Account of Arsacius, the Confessor.

Letter from the Council at Ariminum to the Emperor Constantius.

Concerning the Deputies of the Council and the Emperor’s Letter; Agreement of the Adherents of Ursacius and Valens afterwards with the Letter put forth; Exile of the Archbishops. Concerning the Synod at Nicæa, and the Reason why the Synod was held in Ariminum.

Events which took place in the Eastern Churches: Marathonius, Eleusius of Cyzicus, and Macedonius expel those who maintain the Term “Consubstantial.” Concerning the Churches of the Novatians; how one Church was Transported; the Novatians enter into Communion with the Orthodox.
Proceedings of Macedonius in Mantinium. His Removal from his See when he attempted to remove the Coffin of Constantine the Great. Julian was pronounced Cæsar.

Council of Seleucia.

Acacius and Aëtius; and how the Deputies of the Two Councils of Ariminum and of Seleucia were led by the Emperor to accept the Same Doctrines.

Causes of the Deposition of Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem. Mutual Dissensions among the Bishops. Melitius is ordained by the Arians, and supplants Eustathius in the Bishopric of Sebaste.

Death of Macedonius, Bishop of Constantinople. What Eudoxius said in his Teaching. Eudoxius and Acacius strenuously sought the Abolition of the Formularies of Faith set forth at Nicaea and at Ariminum; Troubles which thence arose in the Churches.

Macedonius, after his Rejection from his See, blasphemes against the Holy Spirit; Propagation of his Heresy through the Instrumentality of Marathonius and Others.

The Arians, under the Impression that the divine Meletius upheld their Sentiments, translate him from Sebaste to Antioch. On his Bold Confession of the Orthodox Doctrines, they were confounded, and after they had deposed him they placed Euzoïus in the See. Meletius formed his own Church: but those who held to Consubstantiality turned away from him because he had been ordained by Arians.

The Partisans of Acacius again do not remain Quiet, but strive to abolish the Term “Consubstantial,” and to confirm the Heresy of Arius.

George, Bishop of Antioch, and the Chief-Priests of Jerusalem. Three Chief-Priests successively succeed Cyril; Restoration of Cyril to the See of Jerusalem.

Book V

Apostasy of Julian, the Traitor. Death of the Emperor Constantius.

The Life, Education, and Training of Julian, and his Accession to the Empire.

Julian, on his Settlement in the Empire, began quietly to stir up Opposition to Christianity, and to introduce Paganism artfully.

Julian inflicted Evils upon the Inhabitants of Cæsarea. Bold Fidelity of Maris, Bishop of Chalcedon.
Julian restores Liberty to the Christians, in order to execute Further Troubles in the Church. The Evil Treatment of Christians he devised.

Athanasius, after having been Seven Years concealed in the House of a Wise and Beautiful Virgin, reappears at that time in Public, and enters the Church of Alexandria.

Concerning Theodore, the Keeper of the Sacred Vessels of Antioch. How Julian, the Uncle of the Traitor, on Account of these Vessels, falls a Prey to Worms.

Martyrdom of the Saints Eusebius, Nestabus, and Zeno in the City of Gaza.

Concerning St. Hilarion and the Virgins in Heliopolis who were destroyed by Swine. Strange Martyrdom of Mark, Bishop of Arethusa.

Concerning Macedonius, Theodulus, Gratian, Busiris, Basil, and Eupsychius, who suffered Martyrdom in those Times.

Concerning Lucifer and Eusebius, Bishops of the West. Eusebius with Athanasius the Great and Other Bishops collect a Council at Alexandria, and confirm the Nicene Faith by defining the Consubstantiality of the Spirit with the Father and the Son. Their Decree concerning Substance and Hypostasis.

Concerning Paulinus and Meletius, Chief-Priests of Antioch; how Eusebius and Lucifer antagonized One Another; Eusebius and Hilarius defend the Nicene Faith.

The Partisans of Macedonius disputed with the Arians concerning Acacius.

Athanasius is again Banished; concerning Eleusius, Bishop of Cyzicus, and Titus, Bishop of Bostra; Mention of the Ancestors of the Author.

Efforts of Julian to establish Paganism and to abolish our Usages. The Epistle which he sent to the Pagan High-Priests.

In Order that he might not be thought Tyrannical, Julian proceeds artfully against the Christians. Abolition of the Sign of the Cross. He makes the Soldiery sacrifice, although they were Unwilling.

He prohibited the Christians from the Markets and from the Judicial Seats and from Sharing in Greek Education. Resistance of Basil the Great, Gregory the Theologian, and Apolinaris to this Decree. They rapidly translate the Scripture into Greek Modes of Expression. Apolinaris and Gregory Nazianzen do this more than Basil, the one in a Rhetorical Vein, the other in Epic Style and in Imitation of every Poet.
Work written by Julian entitled “Aversion to Beards.” Daphne in Antioch, a Full Description of it. Translation of the Remains of Babylas, the Holy Martyr. 750

In Consequence of the Translation, Many of the Christians are Ill-Treated. Theodore the Confessor. Temple of Apollo at Daphne destroyed by Fire falling from Heaven. 753

Of the Statue of Christ in Paneas which Julian overthrew and made Valueless; he erected his own Statue; this was overthrown by a Thunder-Bolt and destroyed. Fountain of Emmaus in which Christ washed his Feet. Concerning the Tree Persis, which worshiped Christ in Egypt, and the Wonders wrought through it. 755

From Aversion to the Christians, Julian granted Permission to the Jews to rebuild the Temple at Jerusalem; in every Endeavor to put their Hands to the Work, Fire sprang upward and killed Many. About the Sign of the Cross which appeared on the Clothing of those who had exerted themselves in this Work. 757

Book VI 759

 Expedition of Julian into Persia; he was worsted and broke off his Life Miserably. Letter written by Libanius, describing his Death. 759

 He perished under Divine Wrath. Visions of the Emperor’s Death seen by Various Individuals. Reply of the Carpenter’s Son; Julian tossed his Blood aloft to Christ. Calamities which Julian entailed upon the Romans. 762

 The Reign of Jovian; he introduced Many Laws which he carried out in his Government. 765

 Troubles again arise in the Churches; Synod of Antioch, in which the Nicene Faith is confirmed; the Points which this Important Synod wrote about to Jovian. 766

 Athanasius the Great is Very Highly Esteemed by the Emperor, and rules over the Churches of Egypt. Vision of Antony the Great. 768

 Death of Jovian; The Life of Valentinian, and his Confidence in God; how he was advanced to the Throne and selected his Brother Valens to reign with him; the Differences of Both. 770

 Troubles again arise in the Churches, and the Synod of Lampsacus is held. The Arians who supported Eudoxius prevail and eject the Orthodox from the Churches. Among the Ejected is Meletius of Antioch. 772

 Revolt and Extraordinary Death of Procopius. Eleusius, Bishop of Cyzicus, and Eunomius, the Heretic. Eunomius succeeds Eleusius. 774

 Sufferings of those who maintained the Nicene Faith. Agelius, the Ruler of the Novatians. 775

 xxiii
Concerning Valentinian the Younger and Gratian. Persecution under Valens. The Homousians, being oppressed by the Arians and Macedonians, send an Embassy to Rome.

The Confession of Eustathius, Silvanus, and Theophilus, the Deputies of the Macedonians, to Liberius, Bishop of Rome.

Councils of Sicily and of Tyana. The Synod which was expected to be held in Cilicia is dissolved by Valens. The Persecution at that Time. Athanasius the Great flees again, and is in Concealment; by the Letter of Valens he reappears, and governs the Churches in Egypt.

Demophilus, an Arian, became Bishop of Constantinople after Eudoxius. The Pious elect Evagrius. Account of the Persecution which ensued.

Account of the Eighty Pious Delegates in Nicomedia, whom Valens burned with the Vessel in Mid-Sea.

Disputes between Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea, and Basil the Great. Hence the Arians took courage and came to Caesarea, and were repulsed.

Basil becomes Bishop of Caesarea after Eusebius; his Boldness towards the Emperor and the Prefect.

Friendship of Basil and of Gregory, the Theologian; being Peers in Wisdom, they defend the Nicene Doctrines.

The Persecution which occurred at Antioch, on the Orontes. The Place of Prayer in Edessa, called after the Apostle Thomas; the Assembly there, and Confession of the Inhabitants of Edessa.

Death of the Great Athanasius; the Elevation of Lucius, who was Arian-Minded, to the See; the Numerous Calamities he brought upon the Churches in Egypt; Peter, who served after Athanasius, passed over to Rome.

Persecution of the Egyptian Monks, and of the Disciples of St. Antony. They were enclosed in a Certain Island on Account of their Orthodoxy; the Miracles which they Wrought.

List of the Places in which the Nicene Doctrines were Represented; Faith manifested by the Scythians; Vetranio, the Leader of this Race.

At that Time, the Doctrine of the Holy Ghost was agitated, and it was decided that he is to be considered Consubstantial with the Father and the Son.

Death of Liberius, Bishop of Rome. He is succeeded by Damasus and Syriacus. Orthodox Doctrines prevail Everywhere throughout the West, except at Milan, where Auxentius is the High-Priest. Synod held at Rome, by which Auxentius is deposed; the Definition which it sent by Letter.
Concerning St. Ambrose and his Elevation to the High Priesthood; how he persuaded the People to practice Piety. The Novatians of Phrygia and the Passover.

Concerning Apolinarius: Father and Son of that Name. Vitalianus, the Presbyter. On being dislodged from One Kind of Heresy, they incline to Others.

Eunomius and his Teacher Aëtius, their Affairs and Doctrines. They were the first who broached One Immersion for the Baptism.

Account Given, by Gregory the Theologian, of Apolinarius and Eunomius, in a Letter to Nectarius. Their Heresy was distinguished by the Philosophy of the Monks who were then Living, for the Heresy of these two held Nearly the Entire East.

Of the Holy Men who flourished at this Period in Egypt. John, or Amon, Benus, Theonas, Copres, Helles, Elias, Apelles, Isidore, Serapion, Dioscorus, and Eulogius.

Concerning the Monks of Thebaïs: Apollos, Dorotheus; concerning Piammon, John, Mark, Macarius, Apollodorus, Moses, Paul, who was in Ferma, Pacho, Stephen, and Pior.

Monks of Scetis: Origen, Didymus, Cronion, Orsisius, Putubatus, Arsion, Serapion, Ammon, Eusebius, and Dioscorus, the Brethren who are called Long, and Evagrius the Philosopher.

Concerning the Monks of Nitria, and the Monasteries called Cells; about the One in Rhinocorura; about Melas, Dionysius, and Solon.

Monks of Palestine: Hesycas, Epiphanius, who was afterwards in Cyprus, Ammonius, and Silvanus.

Monks of Edessa: Julianus, Ephraim Syrus, Barus, and Eulogius; Further, the Monks of Cœle-Syria: Valentinus, Theodore, Merosas, Bassus, Bassonius; and the Holy Men of Galatia and Cappadocia, and Elsewhere; why those Saints until recently were Long-Lived.

The Wooden Tripod and the Succession of the Emperor, through a Knowledge of its Letters. Destruction of the Philosophers; Astronomy.

Expedition against the Sarmatians; Death of Valentinian in Rome; Valentinian the Younger proclaimed; Persecution of the Priests; Oration of the Philosopher Themistius, on account of which Valens was disposed to treat those who differed from him more Humanely.
Concerning the Barbarians beyond the Danube, who were driven out by the Huns, and advanced to the Romans, and their Conversion to Christianity; Ulphilas and Athanarichus; Occurrences between them; whence the Goths received Arianism.

Concerning Mania, the Phylarch of the Saracens. When the Treaty with the Romans was dissolved, Moses, their Bishop, who had been ordained by the Christians, renewed it. Narrative concerning the Ishmaelites and the Saracens, and their Goods; and how they began to be Christianized through Zocomus, Their Phylarch.

Peter, having returned from Rome, regains the Churches of Egypt, after Lucius had given way; Expedition of Valens into the West against the Scythians.

Saint Isaac, the Monk, predicts the Death of Valens. Valens in his Flight enters a Chaff-House, is consumed, and so yields up his Life.

Book VII

When the Romans are pressed by the Barbarians, Mavia sends Assistance, and some of the Populace effect a Victory. Gratian commands each to believe as he wishes.

Gratian elects Theodosius of Spain to reign with him, Arianism prevails throughout the Eastern Churches except that of Jerusalem. Council of Antioch. The Settlement of the Presidency of the Churches.

Concerning St. Meletius and Paulinus, Bishop of Antioch. Their Oath respecting the Episcopal See.

Reign of Theodosius the Great; he was initiated into Divine Baptism by Ascholius, Bishop of Thessalonica. The Letters he addressed to those who did not hold the Definition of the Council of Nice.

Gregory, the Theologian, receives from Theodosius the Government of the Churches. Expulsion of Demophilus, and of all who deny that the Son is “Consubstantial” with the Father.

Concerning the Arians; and Further, the Success of Eunomius. Boldness of St. Amphilochaius toward the Emperor.

Concerning the Second Holy General Council, and the Place and Cause of its Convention. Abdication of Gregory the Theologian.

Election of Nectarius to the See of Constantinople; his Birthplace and Education.

Decrees of the Second General Council. Maximus, the Cynical Philosopher.

Ordination of Flavian as Bishop of Antioch, and Subsequent Occurrences on Account of the Oath.

Project of Theodosius to unify all the Heresies. The Propositions made by Agelius and Sisinius, the Novatians. At another Synod, the Emperor received those only who represent Consubstantiality; those who held a different View he ejected from the Churches.

Maximus the Tyrant. Concerning the Occurrences between the Empress Justina and St. Ambrose. The Emperor Gratian was killed by Guile. Valentinian and his Mother fled to Theodosius in Thessalonica.

Birth of Honorius. Theodosius leaves Arcadius at Constantinople, and proceeds to Italy. Succession of the Novatian and other Patriarchs. Audacity of the Arians. Theodosius, after destroying the Tyrant, celebrates a Magnificent Triumph in Rome.

Flavian and Evagrius, Bishops of Antioch. The Events at Alexandria upon the Destruction of the Temple of Dionysus. The Serapeum and the other Idolatrous Temples which were destroyed.

In What Manner, and from What Cause, the Functions of the Presbyter, Appointed to Preside over the Imposition of Penance, were abolished. Dissertation on the Mode of Imposing Penance.

Banishment of Eunomius by Theodosius the Great. Theophronius, his Successor; of Eutychus, and of Dorotheus, and their Heresies; of those called Psathyrians; Division of the Arians into Different Parties; those in Constantinople were more Limited.

Another Heresy, that of the Sabbatians, is originated by the Novatians. Their Synod in Sangarus. Account in Greater Detail of the Easter Festival.

A List Worthy of Study, Given by the Historian, of Customs among Different Nations and Churches.

Extension of our Doctrines, and Complete Demolition of Idolatrous Temples. Inundation of the Nile.

Discovery of the Honored Head of the Forerunner of our Lord, and the Events about it.

Death of Valentinian the Younger, Emperor in Rome, through Strangling. The Tyrant Eugenius. Prophecy of John, the Monk of Thebaïs.

Exaction of Tribute in Antioch, and Demolition of the Statues of the Emperor. Embassy headed by Flavian the Chief Priest.

Victory of Theodosius the Emperor over Eugenius.
Intrepid Bearing of St. Ambrose in the Presence of the Emperor Theodosius. Massacre at Thessalonica. Narrative of the other Righteous Deeds of this Saint.

St. Donatus, Bishop of Euroea, and Theotimus, High-Priest of Scythia.

St. Epiphanius, Bishop of Cyprus, and a Particular Account of his Acts.

Acacius, Bishop of Berea, Zeno, and Ajax, Men Distinguished and Renowned for Virtue.

Discovery of the Remains of the Prophets Habakkuk and Micah. Death of the Emperor Theodosius the Great.

Book VIII

Successors of Theodosius the Great. Rufinus, the Prætorian Prefect, is Slain. The Chief Priests of the Principal Cities. Differences among the Heretics. Account of Sisinius, Bishop of the Novatians.

Education, Training, Conduct, and Wisdom of the Great John Chrysostom; his Promotion to the See; Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, becomes his Confirmed Opponent.

Rapid Promotion of John to the Bishopric, and more Vehement Grappling with its Affairs. He re-establishes Discipline in the Churches everywhere. By sending an Embassy to Rome, he abolished the Hostility to Flavian.

Enterprise of Gaïnas, the Gothic Barbarian. Evils which he perpetrated.

John swayed the People by his Teachings. Concerning the Woman, a Follower of Macedonius, on account of whom the Bread was turned into a Stone.

Concerning Eutropius, Chief of the Eunuchs, and the Law enacted by him. On being turned from the Church, he was put to Death. Murmurs against John.

Antiphonal Hymns against the Arians introduced by John. The Interests of the Orthodox are much augmented by the Teachings of John, while the Wealthy are More and More Enraged.

Serapion, the Archdeacon, and St. Olympias. Some of the Celebrated Men insolently bear down upon John, traducing him as Impracticable and Passionate.

Severian, Bishop of Gabales, and Antiochus, Bishop of Ptolemaïs. Dispute between Serapion and Severian. Reconciliation between them effected by the Empress.

Question agitated in Egypt, as to whether God has a Corporeal Form. Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, and the Books of Origen.
About the Four Brothers, called “The Long,” who were Ascetics, and of whom Theophilus was an Enemy; about Isidore and the Events which came about through these Four.

These Four repair to John on account of his Interest; for this Reason, Theophilus was enraged, and prepares himself to fight against John.

Perversity of Theophilus. St. Epiphanius: his Residence at Constantinople and Preparation to excite the People against John.

The Son of the Empress and St. Epiphanius. Conference between the “Long Brothers” and Epiphanius, and his Re-Embarkation for Cyprus. Epiphanius and John.

The Dispute between the Empress and John. Arrival of Theophilus from Egypt. Cyrinus, Bishop of Chalcedon.

Council held by Theophilus and the Accusers of John in Rufinianæ. John is summoned to attend, and not being present, was deposed by Them.

Sedition of the People against Theophilus; and they traduced their Rulers. John was recalled, and again came to the See.

The Statue of the Empress; what happened there; the Teaching of John; Convocation of another Synod against John; his Deposition.

Calamities suffered by the People after the Expulsion of John. The Plots against him of Assassination.

Unlawful Expulsion of John from his Bishopric. The Trouble which followed. Conflagration of the Church by Fire from Heaven. Exile of John to Cucusus.

Eutropius the Reader, and the Blessed Olympian, and the Presbyter Tigrius, are persecuted on account of their Attachment to John. The Patriarchs.

Since these Ills existed in the Church, Secular Affairs also fell into Disorder. The Affairs of Stilicho, the General of Honorius.

Two Epistles from Innocent, the Pope of Rome, of which one was addressed to John Chrysostom, and the other to the Clergy of Constantinople concerning John.

The Terrible Events which resulted from the Treatment of John. Death of the Empress Eudoxia. Death of Arsacius. And further concerning Atticus, the Patriarch, his Birthplace, and Character.
Effort of Innocent, Bishop of Rome, to recall John through a Council. Concerning those who were sent by him to make Trial of the Matter. The Death of John Chrysostom.

Book IX

Death of Arcadius, and Government of Theodosius the Younger. His Sisters. Piety, Virtue, and Virginity, of the Princess Pulcheria; her Divinely Loved Works; she educated the Emperor Befittingly.

Discovery of the Relics of Forty Holy Martyrs.

The Virtues of Pulcheria; Her Sisters.

The Different Nations took up Arms against the Romans, of whom some were, through the Providence of God defeated, and others brought to Terms of Amity.

Alaric the Goth. He assaulted Rome, and straitened it by War.

Innocent the Bishop of the Presbytery of Rome. He sent an Embassy to Alaric. Jovius, Prefect of Italy. Embassy dispatched to the Emperor. Events concerning Alaric.

Rebellion of Attalus and his General Heraclean; and how he eventually craved Forgiveness at the Feet of Honorius.

The Disturbance which the Greeks and Christians had about Attalus. The Courageous Saros; Alaric, by a Stratagem, obtains Possession of Rome, and protected the Sacred Asylum of the Apostle Peter.

A Roman Lady who manifested a Deed of Modesty.

The Tyrants who in the West at that Time rebelled against Honorius. They are wholly destroyed on account of the Emperor's Love of God.

Concerning Gerontius, Maximus, and the Troops of Honorius. Capture of Gerontius and his Wife; their Death.

Constantine throws aside the Emblems of Imperial Power, and is ordained as Presbyter; his Subsequent Death. Death of the other Tyrants who had conspired against Honorius.

Honorius the Ruler, a Lover of God. Death of Honorius. His Successors, Valentinian, and Honoria his Daughter; the Peace which was then Worldwide.
| Discovery of the Relics of Zechariah the Prophet, and of Stephen the Proto-Martyr. | 952 |
| General Indexes | 953 |
| General Index to Socrates’ Ecclesiastical History | 954 |
| General Index to Sozomen’s Ecclesiastical History | 991 |
| Indexes | 1021 |
| Index of Scripture References | 1022 |
| Greek Words and Phrases | 1025 |
| German Words and Phrases | 1033 |
| French Words and Phrases | 1036 |
| Index of Pages of the Print Edition | 1037 |
This PDF file is from the Christian Classics Ethereal Library, www.ccel.org. The mission of the CCEL is to make classic Christian books available to the world.

- Discuss this book online at http://www.ccel.org/node/2832.

The CCEL makes CDs of classic Christian literature available around the world through the Web and through CDs. We have distributed thousands of such CDs free in developing countries. If you are in a developing country and would like to receive a free CD, please send a request by email to cd-request@ccel.org.

The Christian Classics Ethereal Library is a self supporting non-profit organization at Calvin College. If you wish to give of your time or money to support the CCEL, please visit http://www.ccel.org/give.

This PDF file is copyrighted by the Christian Classics Ethereal Library. It may be freely copied for non-commercial purposes as long as it is not modified. All other rights are reserved. Written permission is required for commercial use.
A SELECT LIBRARY OF THE NICENE AND POST-NICENE FATHERS
OF
THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.
SECOND SERIES
TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH WITH PROLEGOMENA AND EXPLANATORY
NOTES.
VOLUMES I–VII.
UNDER THE EDITORIAL SUPERVISION OF PHILIP SCHAFF, D.D., LL.D.,
PROFESSOR OF CHURCH HISTORY IN THE UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK.
AND
HENRY WACE, D.D.,
PRINCIPAL OF KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.
VOLUME II
SOCRATES & SOZOMENUS
ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORIES
T&T CLARK
EDINBURGH

WM. B. EERDMANS PUBLISHING COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN
THE ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY
OF
SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.
Revised, with Notes, by
The rev. A. C. Zenos, D.d.
Professor of New Testament Exegesis in the Theological Seminary at Hartford, Conn.
Prefatory Note.

The basis of the present edition of Socrates’ Ecclesiastical History is the translation in Bagster’s series mentioned in the Introduction, Part IV. The changes introduced, however, are numerous. The translation was found unnecessarily free; so far as the needs of the English idiom require freedom no fault could, of course, have been found with the translation; but the divergences from the original in multitudes of cases were not warranted by any such need; they were more probably induced by the prevailing style of rhetoric common in the days when the translation was made. The change which has gradually come about in this respect called for modifications in the present edition. Many more might have been introduced without damage to the work. But it was felt that the scope and purpose of the edition only called for the most necessary of these changes.

In the preparation of the notes the editions of Hussey and Reading, containing Valesius’ and Reading’s annotations, were freely used. Whenever a note was taken bodily from these, it has been quoted and duly credited. It was thought best, however, usually to condense and reduce the number and bulk of these notes and introduce sparingly such new notes as were suggested by more recent study in ecclesiastical history.

The Introduction is almost altogether dependent on the literature quoted in Part I. The writer claims no original discovery respecting Socrates or his work. The facts had been diligently collected by his predecessors; he has simply rearranged them and put them into expression such as, to his mind, suits the requirements of the plan of the series.

A.C. Zenos.
Introduction.

I. Sources and Literature.¹

U. Chevalier in his Repertoire des sources historiques du Moyen Age gives the following list of authorities on Socrates Scholasticus.

Bellarmin Labbé: S. E. [1728] 164.
Cave:* S. E. [1741] I. 427.
Darling:* Cyclopædia Bibliographica; Authors.
Graesse:* Trésor [1865] VI. 1, 429.
Holzhausen: Commentatio de fontibus quibus Socrates, Sozomenus ac Theodoretus usi sunt, &c. Götting. 1825.

Jöcher.
Sigebert: Gembl. S. E. 10.
Trithemius: Scr. Eccl. 137.
Walford:⁴ in Bohn’s Eccl. Libr. VI. 1853.

¹ All works marked with a star in Chevalier’s list were used in the present edition, and all but two or three of those added to the list of Chevalier.
² Nolte’s article is on the textual emendations needed in the edition of Socrates. The text of our historian has not been as thoroughly and completely examined and corrected as other writings. Valesius’ edition (Hussey) gives an account of a few mss. examined by himself; nothing further has been done of any importance. It is to be hoped that Gebhardt and Harnack may find it convenient to incorporate a new collation and revision in their Texte und Untersuchungen.
³ All works marked with a star in Chevalier’s list were used in the present edition, and all but two or three of those added to the list of Chevalier.
⁴ E. Walford, A.M., appears as the translator of Sozomen, not of Socrates. See IV. of Introduction, note 6.
To these there should be added important notices of Socrates or his Ecclesiastical History as follows:

- J. G. Dowling: An Introduction to the Critical Study of Ecclesiastical History.
- Rössler: Bibliothek der Kirchenväter.
- Sarrazin: De Theodoro Lectore, Theophanis Fonte præcipuo, 1881.

Also articles on Socrates in Smith’s Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology (by John Calrow Means) and Smith & Wace: Dictionary of Christian Biography (William Milligan), as well as passing notices in standard ecclesiastical histories such as Neander, Hase, Killen, Schaff, &c., and Introductory notices of Valesius (Hussey), Parker, Bright, &c.
II. Life of Socrates.

We cannot but regret the fact that the age in which Socrates lived cared little, if at all, about recording the lives of its literary men. The only sources of information in this respect are the writings themselves of these literary men and the public records, in case they held the double character of literary men and political or ecclesiastical officials. As Socrates did not participate in the public affairs of his day, our information respecting him is confined to the scanty and incidental items we may gather from his history. As he was not very fond of speaking of himself, these data are few and often of doubtful significance. In fact, the reconstruction of his biography from these scattered items is a matter of difficult critical investigation.

All that these inadequate materials yield of his biography may be summed up as follows:

He was born in Constantinople. He nowhere mentions his parents or ancestry, and no information has reached us on this point from any other source. The year of his birth is inferred from what he says of his education at the hands of the grammarians Helladius and Ammonias. These grammarians were originally Egyptian priests living in Alexandria—the former of Jupiter, and the latter of Pithecus (Simius); they fled from their native city in consequence of the disturbances which followed the cleansing of the Mithreum and destruction of the Serapeum by the bishop Theophilus. It appears that at that time an open conflict took place between the pagans and Christians, and many of the pagans having taken part in the tumult, laid themselves open to criminal prosecution, and to avoid this, took refuge in other cities,—a large number of them naturally in Constantinople. The Chronicon of Marcellinus puts this event in the consulship of Timasius and Promotus, i.e. 389 a.d. Now, as Socrates was very young when he came to these grammarians, and it was the custom to send children to the schools at the age of ten, Valesius has reasoned that Socrates must have been born in 379; others have named 380 as a more probable date for this event. Other data for ascertaining the exact date of Socrates’ birth are of very doubtful significance. He speaks, for instance, of Auxanon, a Novatian presbyter, from whom he had received certain 5 So he says in V. 24.

6 V. 16. On the destruction of the Serapeum, see Sozom. VII. 15; Theodeoret, H. E. V. 22; Nicephor. XII. 25; Eunap. Amis. par. 77; Suidas, Σάραπις. Helladius, according to Suidas, wrote a Dictionary, besides other works. Cf. s. v. Κυλλάδιος.
7 κομιδῆ νέος ὤν.
8 Valesius’ reasoning is based on the assumption that Socrates was sent to the grammarians as soon as they arrived at Constantinople. If, however, an interval of several years elapsed before his going to them, the date of his birth must be put correspondingly later. The only certainty reached through this datum is that he was born nor earlier than 379.
9 I. 13 and II. 38.
information; but as Auxanon lived till after the accession of Theodosius the Younger in 408 a.d., it is impossible to draw any conclusion from this fact. So again Socrates mentions the patriarchate of Chrysostom in Constantinople (398–403) as if he had received his information at second hand, and thus implies that he was perhaps too young to be an interested eyewitness of the events of that period. But how young he was we cannot infer from this fact; and so cannot take the patriarchate of Chrysostom as a starting-point for our chronology of Socrates’ life. Still another item that might have served as a datum in the case, had it been definitely associated with a known event in Socrates’ career, is his mention of a dispute between the Eunomians and Macedonians which took place in Constantinople in 394. If he were an eye-witness of this quarrel, he must have been old enough to take an interest in it, hence about fourteen or fifteen years of age. But this conclusion, even though it coincides exactly with the date found previously (379), is not at all certain, as he does not state that he was an eye-witness; and if the reasoning is correct, then he was not too young to be interested in the events of Chrysostom’s patriarchate which occurred a little later. Thus, on the whole, while it is extremely probable that Valesius is right in setting the date of Socrates’ birth in 379, this event may have taken place several years later.

Nothing further is known of Socrates’ early life and education except that he studied under Ammonius and Helladius, as already noted. Valesius has conjectured from the mention of Troilus, the famous rhetorician, that Socrates must have received instruction from this teacher also, but with no sufficient foundation.

Socrates always remained a resident of Constantinople, and was evidently proud of his native city, and fond of alluding to its history as well as its actual condition. He relates how the Emperor Constantine enlarged it and gave it its present name in place of the former heathen name it bore (Byzantium). He speaks of its populousness, and at the same time of its ability to support its many inhabitants from its abundant resources. He looks on its public structures very much as the ancient Israelite did on the ‘towers and battlements’ of Jerusalem. He mentions especially the walls built by Theodosius the Younger, the Forums

---

10 VI. 3, and ὥςφασι.
11 V. 24.
12 VII. 1 and 2. See note on VII. 1. Socrates speaks of Troilus as a native of Side in Pamphilia, and mentions Eusebius and Silvanus and Alabius (both the latter bishops) as distinguished pupils of Troilus, and finally adds that Anthemius, who during the minority of Theodosius acted as regent, was dependent on the influence of Troilus; in which connection he further adds that Troilus was not inferior to Anthemius in political sagacity.
13 Professor Milligan, in Smith & Wace’s Dictionary of Biography, even says that Socrates assisted Troilus, but adduces no proof for the statement.
14 I. 16.
15 IV. 16, end; VII. 37.
of Constantine and Theodosius, the Amphitheatre, the Hippodrome with its Delphic tripods, the baths, especially that called Zeuxippus, the churches of which he names at different times as many as five; viz.: the church of the Apostles, erected by Constantine especially for the burying of the emperors and priests; the church of St. Sophia, which he calls ‘the great church’; the church of St. Irene, located in the same enclosure as that of St. Sophia; the church of St. Acacius, together with its appendages, and the chapel of St. John, built seven miles outside the city. Besides these he also mentions circumstantially the porch and shambles and porphyry column near which Arius was attacked with his sudden and fatal illness, the region called Syca, and the tomb of Alexander the Paphlagonian, who was tortured and died in prison during the temporary supremacy of the Arians. Although there is no distinct mention of his ever having left the great city, it is improbable that, like his great Athenian namesake, he was averse to traveling. In fact, his frequent mention of the customs of Paphlagonians, Thessalians, Cyprians, and others with minuteness of detail, rather gives the impression that he had visited these places.

According to the preponderance of evidence Socrates was trained as a pleader or advocate, and practiced this profession for a time. Hence his cognomen of Scholasticus. At the instance of a certain Theodorus he undertook to write a continuation of the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius, bringing it down to the seventeenth consulate of the Emperor Theodosius the Younger (439 a.d.).

---

16 II. 16.
17 I. 40.
18 II. 16; I. 37.
19 II. 38 and VI. 23.
20 VI. 6.
21 I. 38.
22 II. 38.
23 V. 8.
24 The various meanings of this word may be found in Du Cange’s Glossarium Medie et Infimæ Græcitatis and in Sophocles’ Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods. From its primary meaning of ‘student’ it came to be applied to any one who had passed through study to the professions, of which the advocate’s was one. From the absence of the cognomen in Photius’ account of Socrates, Bibltheca Cod. 28, as well as in that of Nicephorus Callisti, H. E. I. 1, Hamburger, as quoted by Fabricius, Bibl. Græc. VII. p. 423, note g, and Ceillier, Auteurs Sacrés, XIII. p. 669, doubt whether the title was rightly applied to him. Valesius argues from internal grounds that Socrates was a layman and a lawyer. Harnack, on the other hand, denies that there is any evidence of juristic knowledge in Socrates’ History, even in such passages as I. 30, 31, and V. 18.
25 VII. 48
This year is the last definitely mentioned in his work. He must have lived, however, until some time after that date, as he speaks of a revision of the first two books of the History. How much later it is impossible to tell: it was not certainly till after the end of Theodosius’ reign; for then he would have brought down his history to that event, and thus completed his seventh book according to the plan, which is evident in his whole work, of assigning one complete book to each one of the emperors comprised in his period.

Of the character of Socrates as a man we know as little as of the events of his life. Evidently he was a lover of peace, as he constantly speaks with abhorrence of the atrocities of war, and deprecates even differences in theological standpoint on account of the strife and ill-feeling which they engender.

Socrates’ knowledge of Latin has been inferred from his use of Rufinus, but Dodwell conjectures that Socrates read Rufinus in a Greek translation, and that such translation had been made by Gelasius.

Inasmuch as he lived in, and wrote of, an age of controversies, and his testimony must be weighed according to his theological standpoint, this standpoint has been made the subject of careful study. There is no doubt left by his explicit declarations about his agreement in the main with the position of the orthodox or catholic church of his age, as far as these are distinguished from those of Arians, Macedonians, Eunomians, and other heretics. But as to his attitude towards Novatianism there has been considerable difference of opinion. That he was a member of the Novatian sect has been held after Nicephorus Callisti by Baronius, Labbæus, and others, and argued from various considerations drawn from his work. Some of these are: that he gives the succession of the Novatian bishops of Constantinople; that he knows and mentions Novatian bishops of other places, e.g. of Rome, of Scythia, of Nicæa; that he mentions Novatian churches as existing in Phrygia and

---

26 II. 1.
27 I. 12, 19; III. 19; IV. 24, 26.
30 Cf. V. 21; VII. 6, 12, 17.
31 V. 14; VII. 9, 11.
32 VII. 46.
33 VII. 25.
Paphlagonia,\textsuperscript{34} in Lydia,\textsuperscript{35} in Cyzicum,\textsuperscript{36} in Nicæa,\textsuperscript{37} in Nicomedia and Cotyæum,\textsuperscript{38} and in Alexandria;\textsuperscript{39} that he knows and describes their church edifices;\textsuperscript{40} that he knows their internal troubles and trials,\textsuperscript{41} especially their position on the Paschal controversy,\textsuperscript{42} that he gives vent to expressions of a sympathetic nature with the rigor practiced by the Novatian church;\textsuperscript{43} that he records the criticisms of Novatians on Chrysostom and the opinion that his deposition was a just retribution for his persecution of the Novatians;\textsuperscript{44} that he attributes miracles to Paul, Novatian bishop of Constantinople,\textsuperscript{45} takes the testimony of Novatian witnesses,\textsuperscript{46} rejects current charges against them,\textsuperscript{47} and finally speaks of the death of Novatian as a martyrdom.\textsuperscript{48}

On the other hand, Valesius, followed by most of the more recent writers on Socrates, claims that all these facts are due to the extreme impartiality of the historian, his sense of the justice due to a sect whose good he appreciated, together with his lack of interest in the differences between their standpoint and that of the Catholics. Socrates treats other heretical sects with the same generous consideration, e.g. the Arian Goths, whose death he records as a martyrdom;\textsuperscript{49} and yet he has never been suspected of inclining towards Arianism. At the same time he mentions the Novatians as distinct from the Catholic Church,\textsuperscript{50} and everywhere implies that the Church for him is the latter.

To account for the apparently different conclusions to which these two series of considerations point, some have assumed that Socrates had been a Novatian, but before the writing of his history had either gradually drifted into the Catholic Church, or for reasons of prudence

\textsuperscript{34} IV. 28.
\textsuperscript{35} VI. 19.
\textsuperscript{36} II. 38; III. 11.
\textsuperscript{37} VII. 12.
\textsuperscript{38} IV. 28.
\textsuperscript{39} VII. 7.
\textsuperscript{40} II. 38; VII. 39.
\textsuperscript{41} V. 21.
\textsuperscript{42} V. 22.
\textsuperscript{43} IV. 28; V. 19; VI. 21, 22; VII. 25.
\textsuperscript{44} VI. 19 and 21.
\textsuperscript{45} VII. 17, 39.
\textsuperscript{46} I. 10, 13; II. 38; IV. 28.
\textsuperscript{47} V. 10.
\textsuperscript{48} IV. 28.
\textsuperscript{49} IV. 33.
\textsuperscript{50} VI. 20, 23; IV. 28; V. 19; VII. 3.
had severed his connection with the lesser body and entered the state church, retaining, however, throughout his whole course a strong sympathy for the communion of his earlier days. Others attribute his favorable attitude towards Novatianism to his general indifference for theological refinements, others to mere intellectual sympathy for their tenets. In the absence of any definite utterance of his own on the subject, a combination of the last two motives comes nearest to sufficiently explaining the position of Socrates, although his rather unappreciative estimate of Chrysostom and his severe censure of Cyril of Alexandria are both more easily accounted for on the ground of a more intimate relation between the historian and the Novatians, as both of the above-named eminent men were declared enemies of Novatianism.

In other respects it cannot be doubted that the creed of Socrates was very simple and primitive. The one essential article in it was the doctrine of the Trinity; all others were subordinate. Even as to the Trinity, he would have accepted a much less rigid definition than the one propounded at Nicea. As, however, the latter had been generally adopted by the church, he finds himself defending it against Arianism as well as against all sorts of compromise. He believed in the inspiration of the great synods as well as in that of the Scriptures, and was satisfied to receive without questioning the decisions of the former as he did the teachings of the latter. He was not, however, particular about the logical consequences of his theological positions, but ready to break off upon sufficient extra-theological reasons. His warm defense of Origen and arraignment of Methodius, Eustathius, Apollinaris, and Theophilus, for attempting to belittle the great Alexandrian, shows how his admiration of a genius came into and modified his estimates. He considered all disputes on dogmatic statements as unnecessary and injurious, due to misunderstanding; and this chiefly because the parties in the dispute did not take pains to understand one another, and perhaps did not desire to do so because of personal jealousies or previous and private hatreds. He is willing to refer such lawful questions on doctrinal points as may come before him to the clergy for decision, and is never backward about confessing his ignorance and incompetency to deal with theological refinements.

He makes a cogent defense of the use of pagan writings by Christians, alleging that some of the pagan writers were not far from the knowledge of the true God; that Paul himself had read and used their works; that the neglect or refusal to use them could only lead to ig-

51 So Harnack in Herzog-Plitt, Real-Encykl. and Encyclop. Britan.
52 VI. 3, 4, 5, 15, 18, 19, 21.
53 VII. 15.
54 VI. 13, 17; VII. 45.
55 I. 23; cf. also II. 40, end: ἀλλ᾽ ὅπως μὴν ταῦτα ἔχει, &c.
56 III. 16.
norance and inability to meet pagans in debate; that St. Paul’s ‘prove all things, hold fast that which is good,’ and Jesus Christ’s ‘be ye approved bankers’ gave distinct support to the study of the whole field of knowledge; and that whatever is worth studying in non-Christian literature is capable of being separated from the rest and known as the truth. Socrates himself was acquainted more or less extensively with the works of Sophocles, Euripides, Plato, Xenophon, from among the classic writers, besides those of Porphyry, Libanius, Julian, and Themistius of a later period, and perhaps with those of many others.

One more characteristic of Socrates must be mentioned; viz., his respect for the church and its institutions. He had a high regard for clergymen in virtue of their ordination. And although, as already shown, he took occasion to express himself critically of the highest dignitaries, such as Chrysostom and Cyril of Alexandria, yet the person of a bishop or presbyter is in a certain sense surrounded by sacredness to him. Monks are models of piety. In his eulogy of Theodosius the Younger, he compares the emperor’s devoutness to that of the monks, making the latter, of course, the high-water mark in that respect. But even as respects the ordinances of the church, his regard for them was not slavish or superstitious. He advocates extremely broad views in regard to the observance of Easter, considering a very precise determination of it too formalistic to be consistent with the liberty of the New Dispensation. So, likewise, in regard to many other of the ceremonies of the church, he takes pains to show by a description of the various ways in which they were performed in different quarters that they were not essential, but of subordinate importance.

57 1 Thess. v. 21, with which he combines Col. ii. 8. The latter passage can only be acted upon, according to Socrates, as the ground of a knowledge of that philosophy which is to be guarded against as vain.
58 Γίνεσθε δόκιμοι τραπεζῖται. This saying is sometimes attributed to Paul, but more usually to Jesus. It occurs in Clem. Hom. II. 51; III. 50; XVIII. 20; Ap. Const. 36, 37; Epiph. Haer. 44. 2; Orig. (in Joan.) IV. 283; Clem. Alex. Strom. I. 28; Eus. H. E. VII. 7, 3.
59 VII. 22.
60 V. 22.
III. Socrates' Ecclesiastical History.

Until the beginning of the fourth century historiography remained a pagan science. With the exception of the Acts of the Apostles and its apocryphal imitations, no sort of attempt had been made to record even the annals of the Christian Church. At the opening of the fourth century Eusebius conceived the idea of writing a history which should include a complete account of the Church’s life to his own days. Hence he has correctly been called the Father of Church History. His work was done so satisfactorily to his contemporaries and immediate successors that none of them undertook to go over the same field again. They estimated the thoroughness and accuracy of his work much higher than later ages have done. But this respect, which enhanced the magnitude of his work in their eyes, at the same time inspired many of them with a desire to imitate him.

Thus a school of church historians arose, and a number of continuations of Eusebius’ History were undertaken. Of these, six are known to have seen the light: three of these again are either in part or wholly lost; viz., those of Philippus Sidetes, of Philastorgius, and of Hesychius. The first because of internal characteristics which made it difficult to use; the second because its author was a heretic (an Arian), and with the wane of the sect to which he belonged, his work lost favor and was gradually ostracized by the orthodox, and thus was lost, with the exception of an abstract preserved by Photius; and the third, for reasons unknown and undiscoverable, met with the same fate, not leaving even as much as an abstract behind. The remaining three are the histories of Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret. That of Theodoret begins with the rise of Arianism, and ends with Theodore of Mopsuestia (429 a.d.). That of Sozomen was begun with the purpose of including the history of the years between 323 (date of the overthrow of Licinius by Constantine) and 439 (the seventeenth consulship of Theodosius the Younger), but for some reason was closed with the death of the Emperor Honorius (423), and so covers just one hundred years. The work of Socrates, being evidently older than either of the other two, is more directly a continuation of the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius. The motives which actuated him to continue the narratives of Eusebius may be gathered from the work to be his love for history, especially that of his own times, his respect for Eusebius, and the exhortation of Theodorus, to whom the 61 That this was not due to a general conviction that one history of a period rendered another of the same period unnecessary is evident from the fact that the period immediately succeeding is treated of by three successive historians, and that the second of these, at least, knows and uses the work of his predecessor.

---

62 Harnack, however, successfully proves that Socrates’ ideal of history, in spite of his love for it, was far from being the scientific idea which existed among pagan writers even of the age preceding his own. Cf. Herzog-Plitt, Real-Encyk. Vol. 14, p. 413 sq.

63 VI. 1.
The author opens with a statement of his purpose to take up the account where Eusebius had left it off, and to review such matters as, according to his judgment, had not been adequately treated by his predecessor. Accordingly he begins with the accession of Constantine (306 a.d.), when the persecution begun by Diocletian came to an end, and stops with the year 439. He mentions the number of years included in his work as 140. As a matter of fact, only 133 years are recorded; but the number given by the author is doubtless not meant to be rather a round than a precise number. The close of his history is the seventeenth consulship of Theodosius the Younger—the same as the proposed end of Sozomen’s work. Why Socrates did not continue his history later is not known, except perhaps because, as he alleges, peace and prosperity seemed to be assured to the church, and history is made not in time of peace, but in the tumults and disturbances of war and debate. The period covered by the work is very eventful. It is during this period that three of the most important councils of the church were held: those of Nicæa (325), of Constantinople (381), and the first council of Ephesus (431), besides the second of Ephesus, called the “Robbers’ Council” (λῃστρική), and that of Chalcedon, which were held not much later. It is this period which saw the church coming to the ascendant. Instead of its being persecuted, or even merely tolerated, it then becomes dominant. With its day of peace from without comes the day of its internal strife, and so various sects and heresies spring up and claim attention in church history. Socrates appreciated the importance which these contentions gave to his work.

Geographically Socrates’ work is limited to the East. The western branch of the church is mentioned in it only as it enters into relations with the eastern. The division of the history into seven books is made on the basis of the succession in the eastern branch of the Roman Empire. The seven books cover the reigns of eight eastern emperors. Two of these reigns—that of Julian (361–363) and that of Jovian (363–364)—were so brief that they are combined and put into one book, but otherwise the books are each devoted to the reign of one emperor. The first book treats of the church under Constantine the Great (306–337); the second, of the period under Constantius II. (337–360); the third, of that under Julian and Jovian taken together (360–364); the fourth, of the church under Valens (364–378); the fifth, of Theodosius the Great (379–395); the sixth, of Arcadius (395–408); and the seventh, to those years of Theodosius the Younger (408–439) which came within the period of Socrates’ work.

64 Cf. II. 1; VI. Int.; VII. 47. This Theodorus is simply addressed as ἱερὲ τοῦ θεοῦ ἄνθρωπε, from which it has been rightly inferred that he was an ordained presbyter. The view that Theodore of Mopsuestia is the person addressed has been proved to be erroneous from the date of his death, 429 a.d. The Ecclesiastical History was no doubt completed after that event, and could not have contained an address to the eminent Theodore.

65 VII. 47.
As the title of the work (᾽Εκκλησιαστικὴ Ἰστορία) indicates, the subject is chiefly the vicissitudes and experiences of the Christian Church; but the author finds various reasons for interweaving with the account of ecclesiastical affairs some record also of the affairs of the state. His statement of these reasons puts first among them the relief his readers would experience by passing from the accounts of the perpetual wranglings of bishops to something of a different character; second, the information which all ought to have on secular as well as ecclesiastical matters; and third, the interlacing of these two lines, on account of which the understanding of the one cannot be full without some knowledge of the other. ‘By a sort of sympathy,’ says he, ‘the church takes part in the disturbances of the state,’ and ‘since the emperors became Christians, the affairs of the church have become dependent on them, and the greatest synods have been held and are held at their bidding.’ It cannot be said, however, that Socrates either thoroughly realized or attempted any systematic treatment of his subject from the point of view of the true relations of church and state; he simply had the consciousness that the two spheres were not as much dissociated as one might assume.

On the general character of Socrates’ History it may be said that, compared with those produced by his contemporaries, it is a work of real merit, surpassing in some respects even that of his great predecessor, Eusebius. The latter has confused his account by adopting, under the influence of his latest informant, differing versions of facts already narrated, without erasing the previous versions or attempting to harmonize or unify them. Compare with this feature Socrates’ careful and complete revision of his first two books on obtaining new and more trustworthy information.67

In the collection of his facts Socrates everywhere tried to reach primary sources. A great portion of his work is drawn from oral tradition, the accounts given by friends and countrymen, the common, but not wild, rumors of the capital, and the transient literature of the day. Whenever he depends on such information, Socrates attempts to reach as far as possible the accounts of eye-witnesses, and appends any doubts he may have as to the truth of the statements they make. Of written works he has used for the period where his work and that of Eusebius overlap the latter’s Ecclesiastical History and Life of Constantine, for other events he follows Rufinus, abandoning him, however, in his second edition, whenever he conflicts with more trustworthy authorities. He has also made use of Archelaus’ Acts of 66 V. Int.

67 II. 1. The new information here referred to is drawn from the works of Athanasius, which had come into the hands of the author. Cf. II. 17.
68 I. Int.; V. 19; VI. Int.
69 I. 8.
70 I. 12, 19; II. 1; III. 19; IV. 24, 26.
71 I. 22.
Sabinus’ Collection of the Acts of the Synods, which he criticises for unfairness,\textsuperscript{72} Epiphanius’ Ancoratus,\textsuperscript{73} George of Laodicea,\textsuperscript{74} Athanasius’ Apologetics,\textsuperscript{75} de Syn.,\textsuperscript{76} and de Decr. Nic.;\textsuperscript{77} Evagrius,\textsuperscript{78} Palladius,\textsuperscript{79} Nestorius,\textsuperscript{80} and Origen.\textsuperscript{81} Christian writers before Origen are known to him and mentioned by him, such as Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, Apollinaris the Elder, Serapion, and others; but he does not seem to have used their works as sources, probably because they threw no light on the subject at hand, his period being entirely different from that in which they flourished. Besides these writers, Socrates has also used public documents, pastoral and episcopal letters, decrees, acts, and other documents not previously incorporated in written works. Some of these the author has used, but does not quote \textit{in extenso}, on account of their length.\textsuperscript{82} Of the sources that he might have used, but has not, may be mentioned Dexippus, Eunapius (χρονικὴ ἱστορία), Olympiodorus (λόγοι ἱστορικοί), and especially Zosimus, his contemporary (ἱστορία νέα). Whether these were unknown to him, or whether he deemed it unnecessary to make use of the information given by them, or considered them untrustworthy, it cannot be ascertained. It is sufficient to say that for the period he covers, and the geographical limitation he has put on his work, his array of facts is sufficiently large and to the purpose. The use he makes of these facts also shows sufficiently the historian as thorough as he could be considering the time and environment in which he flourished. There is an evident attempt throughout his work at precision. He marks the succession of bishops, the years in which each event took place by the consulships and Olympiads of Roman and Greek history. He has made painstaking investigations on various topics, such as the different usages in various localities, respecting the observance of Easter, the performance of the rites of baptism and marriage, the manner of fasting, of church assemblies, and other ecclesiastical usages.\textsuperscript{83} His accuracy has been questioned from \textsuperscript{72} I. 8; II. 15, 17, 20; III. 10, 25; IV. 12, 22.

\textsuperscript{73} V. 24.
\textsuperscript{74} I. 24.
\textsuperscript{75} II. 28; III. 8.
\textsuperscript{76} II. 37.
\textsuperscript{77} VI. 13.
\textsuperscript{78} III. 7.
\textsuperscript{79} IV. 23.
\textsuperscript{80} VII. 19–24.
\textsuperscript{81} III. 7.
\textsuperscript{82} II. 17.
\textsuperscript{83} V. 22.
the time of Photius to our own days. It cannot be denied that there are a number of errors in the History. He confused Maximian and Maximin. He ascribes three ‘Creeds’ to the first Council of Sirmium, whereas these belonged to other councils. In general he is confused on the individuals to whom he ascribes the authorship of the Sirmian creeds. Similar confusion and lack of trustworthiness is noticed in his version of the sufferings of Paul of Constantinople and the vicissitudes of the life of Athanasius. He has wrongly given the number of those who dissented from the decision of the Council of Nicæa as five. The letter of the Council only mentions two,—Theonas and Secundus. The exile of Eusebius and Theognis is ascribed to a later period and a different cause by Jerome and Philostorgius, and it is generally conceded that Socrates’ information was erroneous on this subject also. He is incorrect on several particulars in the lives of Basil and Gregory of Nazianzus, as also in assigning the attack at night on the church of St. Theonas to the usurpation of Gregory, the Arian bishop of Alexandria.

The chronology of Socrates is generally accurate to about the beginning of the sixth book, or the year 398. A number of errors are found in it after that. But even before the date named, the dates of the Council of Sardica (347) and of the death of Athanasius (373, for which Socrates gives 371) are given wrong. St. Polycarp’s martyrdom is also put out of its proper place by about one hundred years. Valens’ stay at Antioch and persecution of the orthodox is put too early. The Olympiads are given wrong.

Socrates is generally ignorant of the affairs of the Western Church. He gives a cursory account of Ambrose, but says nothing of the great Augustine, or even of the Donatist controversy, in spite of all its significance and also of the extreme probability that he knew of it; as Pelagius and Celestius, who traveled in the East about this time, could not but have made the Eastern Church acquainted with its details. In speaking of the Arian council of Antioch in 341, he seems to think that the Roman bishop had a sort of veto-power over the decisions of Occidental councils. The only legitimate inference, however, from the language of the bishop’s claim is that he thought he had a right to be invited to attend in common

---

84 Phot. Biblioth. Cod. 28. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τοῖς δόγμασι οὐ λίαν ἀκριβής. Whether in this phrase he meant to accuse Socrates with inaccuracy in the narration of facts or indifference to theological dogma is not very clear. Probably the former.
85 I. 2.
86 II. 30.
87 II. 11.
88 V. 22.
89 IV. 17.
90 On the chronology of Socrates, see Harnack and Jeep.
with the other bishops of Italy.\textsuperscript{91} So, again, on the duration of the fast preceding Easter among the western churches, he makes the mistaken statement that it was three weeks, and that Saturdays and Sundays were excepted.

Finally, the credence which Socrates gives to stories of miracles and portents must be noted as a blemish in his history. On the other hand, he was certainly not more credulous than his contemporaries in this respect; many of them, if we are to judge from Sozomen as an illustration, were much more so. The age was not accustomed to sifting accounts critically with a view to the elimination of the untrue. Socrates shows in this respect the historical instinct in the matter of distinguishing between various degrees of probability and credibility, but does not seem to exercise this instinct in dealing with accounts of the prodigious.

To offset these faults we must take account, on the other hand, of the persistent and successful attempt of our historian at impartiality. Of all the Christian writers of his day he is the fairest towards those who differed from the creed of his church. No one else has done justice to Julian,\textsuperscript{92} or to the various heretical sects of the day, as Socrates has. To avoid even the appearance of partiality, he makes a rule for himself not to speak in terms of praise of any living person;\textsuperscript{93} and it must be said that he faithfully observes this rule, making but one exception in favor of the emperor Theodosius the Younger.\textsuperscript{94} Of this prince he gives a eulogistic picture, altogether different from the representations universally found in the other historians of the age.\textsuperscript{95} His independence of judgment is more signally manifested in his estimates of ecclesiastics, especially the more prominent ones,\textsuperscript{96} bordering at times on unjust severity. ‘In short,’ says Harnack, summing up his estimate of Socrates, ‘the rule to be applied to Socrates is that his learning and knowledge can be trusted only a little, but his good will and straightforwardness a great deal. Considering the circumstances under which he wrote and the miseries of the times, it can only be matter for congratulation that such a man should have been our informant and that his work has been preserved to us.’\textsuperscript{97}

Socrates’ style is characterized by simplicity and perspicuity. From the very start he informs us that he is about to make a new departure in this respect.\textsuperscript{98} Eusebius’ language was

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{91} II. 8 and 17.
\item \textsuperscript{92} III. 1, 12, 14, 21, 23.
\item \textsuperscript{93} VI. Int.
\item \textsuperscript{94} VII. 22.
\item \textsuperscript{95} Cf. Sozomen, IX. 1, and Gibbon, IV. 163.
\item \textsuperscript{96} Cf. attitude towards Chrysostom and Cyril of Alexandria, above alluded to; also his censure of pride and contention among members of the clergy. See V. Int. 15, 23; VI. 6; VII. 11, 29.
\item \textsuperscript{97} In Encycl. Britan.
\item \textsuperscript{98} I. 1, οὐ φράσεως ὄγκου φροντίζοντες; so in III. 1, μηδεὶς ἐπιζητείτω κόμπον φράσεως; and VI. Int., ἵσθι δὲ ἡμᾶς μὴ ἐσπουδακέναι περὶ τὴν φράσον, where he adds that if he had attempted a different style, he might have failed of his purpose of writing a popular history.
\end{itemize}
not entirely satisfactory to him, nor that of older writers.\textsuperscript{99} Hence his own attempt everywhere at plain, unadorned expression. The criticism of Photius,\textsuperscript{100} that Socrates’ style ‘had nothing remarkable about it,’ although made in the spirit of censure, is true, and according to Socrates’ standard (which is also that of modern times) amounts to a commendation. Socrates, however, was not lacking in good humor and satire,\textsuperscript{101} as well as in appreciation of short and pithy utterances; he often quotes proverbs and epigrammatic sayings,\textsuperscript{102} and knows the influence of the anecdote and reminiscence in interesting the reader.

The value of Socrates’ \textit{History} cannot be overestimated. It will always remain a source of primary importance. Though, as already noted, its ideal as a history is below that set up by Thucydides, Tacitus, and others of an earlier age,—below even that of Eusebius,—yet as a collection of facts and documents in regard to some of the most important events of the church’s life it is invaluable. Its account of the great Arian controversy, its details of the Councils of Nicæa, Chalcedon, Constantinople, and Ephesus, besides those of the lesser, local conventions, its biographical items relative to the lives of the emperors, the bishops, and monks—some of whom are of pivotal importance in the movements of the times, its sketches of Ulphilas and Hypatia, its record of the manner and time of the conversion of the Saracens, the Goths, the Burgundians, the Iberians, and the Persians, as well as of the persecution of the Jews, the paschal controversy, not to mention a vast number of other details of minor importance, will always be read and used with the deepest interest by lovers of ecclesiastical history.

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{99} VI. 22; VII. 27.
  \item \textsuperscript{100} \textit{Biblioth. Cod.} 28.
  \item \textsuperscript{101} III. 16; IV. 22; VI. 13; VII. 21, 34.
  \item \textsuperscript{102} II. 8; III. 21; V. 15; VII. 29, 31.
\end{itemize}
IV. History of Socrates’ Work.

A. Uses made before the First Printed Edition of the Greek Text.

Socrates’ Ecclesiastical History was used, according to the best authorities, by Sozomen in the composition of his parallel history.\(^{103}\) It was certainly used by Liberatus, the Carthaginian deacon, in his Breviarium caussæ Nestorianorum et Eutychianorum, and by Theodorus Anagnostes (Lector) in his Ecclesiastical History.\(^{104}\) It was also quoted in the second Council of Nicæa, under the name of Rufinus, and also under its author’s name.\(^{105}\)

Epiphanius, surnamed Scholasticus, translated the history of Socrates, together with those of Sozomen and Theodoret, under the auspices of Cassiodorus, about the beginning of the sixth century. This translation, under the name of Historiae Ecclesiasticæ Tripartitae, consists of twelve books, and was printed at Paris, without date, by Regnault in 8vo; afterwards also at Bâle in 1523, 1528, 1533, 1539, and 1568. It was revised by Beatus Rhenanus, and published in Frankfort on the Main in 1588, together with the history of Eusebius, which was translated and continued by Rufinus. It is also found in the new edition of Cassiodorus printed at Rouen by Jo. Garetius in 1679 and in Venice, 1729. It served as a basis for a French translation by Aëdigiæ Gourlinæ (Gille Gourlin), published in Paris in 1538 (cited by Cyanæus), and of a German translation by Caspar Hedio at Strasburg, 1545.

B. Editions.

There are two independent editions of Socrates’ Ecclesiastical History, each of which has served as a basis for reprints, secondary editions, and translations. These are:

a. Upon this edition is based a Latin translation by Wolfgang Musculus, Bâle 1544, 1549, 1557, 1594, and one by J. J. Christophorson, bishop of Chichester, Paris 1571, Cologne 1581, Bâle 1570; with notes by Grynaeus and by Henricus Petri 1611; incorporated into the Bibliotheca Patrum, ed. Cologne 1618 as Vol. V. and ed. Lyons 1677 as Vol. VII.

b. The Greek text of Stephens and the Latin translation of Christophorson were published together in Geneva, 1612.

c. An English translation of Socrates’ Ecclesiastical History was made by Meredith Hanmer,\(^{106}\) and is contained in his Ancient Ecclesiastical Histories of the first six hundred

---

\(^{103}\) So Harnack and Jeep. Cf. also Hartranft in the present vol., p. 00.

\(^{104}\) Theodorus’ works were two: (1) An epitome of the histories written previous to his time, and (2) an original history continuing the narrative to the days of Justinian I.

\(^{105}\) Cf. Mansi, Concil. XII. Coll. 1035 and 1042.

years after Christ, written in the Greek tongue by three learned Historiographers, Eusebius, Socrates and Evagrius. London 1577. [This work also contains Dorotheus’ Lives of the Prophets, Apostles, and Seventy Disciples reprinted in 1585 and 1650.]

2. The second independent edition of Socrates is that which has been received as standard and served as a basis for all subsequent uses, viz.:

_Historia Ecclesiastica Socratis, Scholastici, Hermæ, Sozomeni, &c., ed. Henricus Valesius._

Paris 1668. Valesius ostensibly revised the text of Stephens, but as a matter of fact he made a new collation of the ms. used by Stephens, and compared this with mss. in the Vatican, so that his edition amounts to an entirely new work. He also made a new Latin translation and appended numerous notes. This edition was reprinted in Mayence in 1677. Its Latin portion was reprinted in Paris also in 1677. The reprint of Mayence was reproduced under a new title, as if in Amsterdam in 1675.

a. Gul. Reading appended additional notes, and together with the Latin translation of Valesius, published the work in Cambridge in three vols. 1720. Reading’s edition was reprinted at Turin in 1746. Valesius’ original edition was again reprinted in Oxford by Parker in 1844 and _Cura_ Buckley in London, also in 1844. It was revised and published in Oxford in 3 vols. by R. Hussey in 1853, and again in 1860 and in 1879. Again it was incorporated into Migne’s _Patrologia Graeca_ as Vol. LXVII. (Petit Montrouge) in 1859, and finally the Greek text alone was revised and published in a single volume by William Bright in Oxford 1878.

b. The translations based on Valesius’ edition exclusive of those in Latin mentioned above are as follows:

In _English_ by Shorting:107 _The History of the Church as written in Greek by Eusebius, Socrates, and Evagrius_ [contains also the four books of the Life of Constantine, Constantine’s Oration to the Convention of the Saints, and Eusebius’ speech in praise of Constantine], translated from the edition of Valesius, with a translation also of Valesius’ notes and his account of the lives and writings of those historians. Cambridge 1683, 1692, 1709.

And Anonymously [E. Walford]108 _The Greek Ecclesiastical Historians of the first six centuries of the Christian Era_ in 6 vols. [Socrates Scholasticus’ History forms Vol. III. of this 107 So Crusè.

---

108 The volume containing Sozomen in this series bears the name of Walford. The translation of Socrates is anonymous, but generally ascribed to Walford also. This cannot be a matter of inference from the appearance of the two historians in the same series, as Eusebius, also in the same series, is translated by Crusè. Those who attribute the translation to Walford give no reason for doing so.
series]. London, Samuel Bagster and Sons, 1843–46. This translation was reprinted in Bohn’s Ecclesiastical Library, 4 vols., 1851 and 1888, and by Bagster in 1868.
The ECCLESIASTICAL History,
BY
SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

———

Book I.

Chapter I.—Introduction to the Work.

Eusebius, surnamed Pamphilus, writing the History of the Church in ten books, closed it with that period of the emperor Constantine, when the persecution which Diocletian had begun against the Christians came to an end. Also in writing the life of Constantine, this same author has but slightly treated of matters regarding Arius, being more intent on the rhetorical finish of his composition and the praises of the emperor, than on an accurate statement of facts. Now, as we propose to write the details of what has taken place in the churches since his time to our own day, we begin with the narration of the particulars which he has left out, and we shall not be solicitous to display a parade of words, but to lay before the reader what we have been able to collect from documents, and what we have heard from those who were familiar with the facts as they told them. And since it has an important bearing on the matter in hand, it will be proper to enter into a brief account of Constantine’s conversion to Christianity, making a beginning with this event.

109 Eusebius seems to have adopted this name as a token of friendship and respect for Pamphilus, bishop of Cæsarea. See McGiffert, Prolegomena in Vol. I., Second Series of Post-Nicene Fathers.

110 Eusebius’ Ecclesiastical History ends with the death of Licinius in 323. His Life of Constantine is in a sense a continuation of the History, and yet as it is very well characterized by Socrates, it is a eulogy and therefore its style and selection of facts are affected by its purpose, rendering it too inadequate as a continuation of the Ecclesiastical History; hence Socrates’ constraint to review some of the events which naturally fall in Eusebius’ period.
Chapter II.—By what Means the Emperor Constantine became a Christian.

When Diocletian and Maximian, surnamed Herculius, had by mutual consent laid aside the imperial dignity, and retired into private life, Maximian, surnamed Galerius, who had been a sharer with them in the government, came into Italy and appointed two Caesars, Maximin in the eastern division of the empire, and Severus in the Italian. In Britain, however, Constantine was proclaimed emperor, instead of his father Constantius, who died in the first year of the two hundred and seventy-first Olympiad, on the 25th of July. And at Rome Maxentius, the son of Maximian Herculius, was raised by the praetorian soldiers to be a tyrant rather than an emperor. In this state of things Herculius, impelled by a desire to regain the sovereignty, attempted to destroy his son Maxentius; but this he was prevented by the soldiery from effecting, and he soon afterwards died at Tarsus in Cilicia. At the same time Severus Caesar being sent to Rome by Galerius Maximian, in order to seize Maxentius, was slain, his own soldiers having betrayed him. At length Galerius Maximian, who had exercised the chief authority, also died, having previously appointed as his successor, his old friend and companion in arms, Licinius, a Dacian by birth. Meanwhile, Maxentius sorely oppressed the Roman people, treating them as a tyrant rather than as a king, shamelessly violating the wives of the nobles, putting many innocent persons to death, and perpetrating other similar atrocities. The emperor Constantine being informed of this, exerted himself to free the Romans from the slavery under him (i.e. Maxentius), and began immediately to consider by what means he might overthrow the tyrant. Now while his mind was occupied with this great subject, he debated as to what divinity’s aid he should invoke in the conduct of the war. He began to realize that Diocletian’s party had not profited at all by the pagan deities, whom they had sought to propitiate; but that his own father Constantius, who had renounced the various religions of the Greeks, had passed through life far more prosperously. In this state of uncertainty, as he was marching at the head of his troops, a preternatural vision, which transcends all description, appeared to him. In fact, about that part of the day when the sun after posing the meridian begins to decline towards the west, he saw a pillar of light in the heavens, in the form of a cross, on which were inscribed these words, By This Conquer. The appearance of this sign struck the emperor with amazement and scarcely 111 ‘Socrates is here in error; for Maximianus Herculius, who was otherwise called Maximian the Elder, was, by Constantine’s command, slain in Gallia in 310 a.d. But Maximius Caesar, two years after, being conquered by Licinius, died at Tarsus.’ (Valesius.) On the confusion of Maximian and Maximin, see Introd. III.

112 305 or 306 a.d.
113 πάντα περιέπων, not to be taken literally, inasmuch as there were two other Augusti—Constantine and Maxentius; and hence though senior Augustus, he was not sole ruler. On the appointment of the Augusti under Diocletian, and meaning of the title, see Gibbon, Decline and Fall, chap. xiii.
114 Ἐν τούτῳ νίκᾳ. For an extensive and satisfactory treatment of this famous passage in the life of Constantine, see Richardson, Prolegomena to the Life of Const., Vol. I., Second Series, Post-Nicene Fathers.
believing his own eyes, he asked those around him if they beheld the same spectacle; and as they unanimously declared that they did, the emperor’s mind was strengthened by this divine and marvelous apparition. On the following night in his slumbers he saw Christ who directed him to prepare a standard according to the pattern of that which had been seen; and to use it against his enemies as an assured trophy of victory. In obedience to this divine oracle, he caused a standard in the form of a cross to be prepared, which is preserved in the palace even to the present time: and proceeding in his measures with greater earnestness, he attacked the enemy and vanquished him before the gates of Rome, near the Mulvian bridge, Maxentius himself being drowned in the river. This victory was achieved in the seventh year of the conqueror’s reign.\(^\text{115}\) After this, while Licinius, who shared the government with him, and was his brother-in-law, having married his sister Constantia, was residing in the East, the emperor Constantine, in view of the great blessing he had received, offered grateful thanksgivings to God as his benefactor; these consisted in his relieving the Christians from persecution, recalling those who were in exile, liberating such as were imprisoned, and causing the confiscated property of the prescribed to be restored to them; he moreover rebuilt the churches, and performed all these things with the greatest ardor. About this time Diocletian, who had abdicated the imperial authority, died at Salona in Dalmatia.\(^\text{116}\)

\(^{115}\) 312 a.d.

Chapter III.—While Constantine favors the Christians, Licinius, his Colleague, persecutes them.

Now Constantine, the emperor, having thus embraced Christianity, conducted himself as a Christian of his profession, rebuilding the churches, and enriching them with splendid offerings: he also either closed or destroyed the temples of the pagans, and exposed the images which were in them to popular contempt. But his colleague Licinius, holding his pagan tenets, hated Christians; and although from fear of the emperor Constantine he avoided exciting open persecution, yet he managed to plot against them covertly, and at length proceeded to harass them without disguise. This persecution, however, was local, extending only to those districts where Licinius himself was: but as these and other public outrages did not long remain concealed from Constantine, finding out that the latter was indignant at his conduct, Licinius had recourse to an apology. Having thus propitiated him, he entered into a feigned league of friendship, pledging himself by many oaths not to act again tyrannically. But no sooner did he pledge himself than he committed perjury; for he neither changed his tyrannical mood nor ceased persecuting Christians. Indeed, he even prohibited the bishops by law from visiting the unconverted pagans, lest it should be made a pretext for proselyting them to the Christian faith. And the persecution was thus at the same time well known and secret. It was conceded in name but manifest in fact; for those who were exposed to his persecution suffered most severely both in their persons and property.

117 Ἑλλήνων: the word is used without the sense of nationality. So also in the New Testament often: Mark vii. 26; Gal. ii. 3 and iii. 28, where the Syriac (Peschitto) version renders, more according to sense than according to the letter, ‘an Aramaean.’
Chapter IV.—War arises between Constantine and Licinius on Account of the Christians.

By this course he drew upon himself the emperor Constantine's heaviest displeasure; and they became enemies, the pretended treaty of friendship between them having been violated. Not long afterwards they took up arms against each other as declared enemies. And after several engagements both by sea and land, Licinius was at last utterly defeated near Chrysopolis in Bithynia, a port of the Chalcedonians, and surrendered himself to Constantine. Accordingly he having taken him alive, treated him with the utmost humanity, and would by no means put him to death, but ordered him to take up his abode and live in tranquillity at Thessalonica. He having, however, remained quiet a short time, managed afterwards to collect some barbarian mercenaries and made an effort to repair his late disaster by a fresh appeal to arms. The emperor being made acquainted with his proceedings, directed that he should be slain, which was carried into effect. Constantine thus became possessed of the sole dominion, and was accordingly proclaimed sovereign Autocrat, and again sought to promote the welfare of Christians. This he did in a variety of ways, and Christianity enjoyed unbroken peace by reason of his efforts. But an internal dissension soon succeeded this state of repose, the nature and origin of which I shall now endeavor to describe.

118 After a victory the soldiers greeted their prince with acclamations of 'Emperor!' ‘Augustus!' So also did the citizens on his triumphal entry into the city. So it appears Constantine was formally greeted on assuming the sole control of affairs.
Chapter V.—The Dispute of Arius with Alexander, his Bishop.

After Peter, bishop of Alexandria, had suffered martyrdom under Diocletian, Achillas was installed in the episcopal office, whom Alexander succeeded, during the period of peace above referred to. He, in the fearless exercise of his functions for the instruction and government of the Church, attempted one day in the presence of the presbytery and the rest of his clergy, to explain, with perhaps too philosophical minuteness, that great theological mystery—the Unity of the Holy Trinity. A certain one of the presbyters under his jurisdiction, whose name was Arius, possessed of no inconsiderable logical acumen, imagining that the bishop was subtly teaching the same view of this subject as Sabellius the Libyan, from love of controversy took the opposite opinion to that of the Libyan, and as he thought vigorously responded to what was said by the bishop. 'If,' said he, 'the Father begat the Son, he that was begotten had a beginning of existence: and from this it is evident, that there was a time when the Son was not. It therefore necessarily follows, that he had his substance from nothing.'

119 Though Sabellius was the originator of one of the earliest and most plausible attempts at explanation of the mystery of the Trinity (for which see life of Sabellius in Smith and Wace, Dict. of Christian Biog., and Hodge, System. Theol. Vol. I. p. 452, 459), nothing is known of him, not even why he is called a Libyan here (also by other ancient writers, e.g. Philastrius, de Haeres. 26, and Asterius, quoted by Phot. Biblioth. Cod. 27). Some say that he was a native and resident of Libya, others that he was an ecclesiastic appointed to some position there; nor is it known whether the Libya meant is the Libyan Pentapolis or the Pentopolitan Ptolemais.

120 ὑπόστασιν. Through the Arian controversy this word is used in its metaphysical sense of ‘real nature of a thing as underlying and supporting its outward form and properties’; hence it is equivalent to the Latin substantia, Eng. essence and Greek οὐσία. Cf. below III. 7. Later it was applied to the ‘special or characteristic nature of a thing,’ and so became the very opposite of οὐσία (the general nature); hence equivalent to person.
Chapter VI.—Division begins in the Church from this Controversy; and Alexander Bishop of Alexandria excommunicates Arius and his Adherents.

Having drawn this inference from his novel train of reasoning, he excited many to a consideration of the question; and thus from a little spark a large fire was kindled: for the evil which began in the Church at Alexandria, ran throughout all Egypt, Libya, and the upper Thebes, and at length diffused itself over the rest of the provinces and cities. Many others also adopted the opinion of Arius; but Eusebius in particular was a zealous defender of it: not he of Cæsarea, but the one who had before been bishop of the church at Berytus, and was then somehow in possession of the bishopric of Nicomedia in Bithynia. When Alexander became conscious of these things, both from his own observation and from report, being exasperated to the highest degree, he convened a council of many prelates; and excommunicated Arius and the abettors of his heresy; at the same time he wrote as follows to the bishops constituted in the several cities:—

The Epistle of Alexander Bishop of Alexandria.

To our beloved and most honored fellow-Ministers of the Catholic Church everywhere, Alexander sends greeting in the Lord.

Inasmuch as the Catholic Church is one body, and we are commanded in the holy Scriptures to maintain 'the bond of unity and peace,' \(\text{121}\) it becomes us to write, and mutually acquaint one another with the condition of things among each of us, in order that 'if one member suffers or rejoices, we may either sympathize with each other, or rejoice together.' \(\text{122}\)

Know therefore that there have recently arisen in our diocese lawless and anti-christian men, teaching apostasy such as one may justly consider and denominate the forerunner of Antichrist. I wished indeed to consign this disorder to silence, that if possible the evil might be confined to the apostates alone, and not go forth into other districts and contaminate the ears of some of the simple. But since Eusebius, now in Nicomedia, thinks that the affairs of the Church are under his control because, forsooth, he deserted his charge at Berytus and assumed authority over the Church at Nicomedia with impunity, and has put himself at the head of these apostates, daring even to send commendatory letters in all directions concerning them, if by any means he might inveigle some of the ignorant into this most impious and anti-christian heresy, I felt imperatively called on to be silent no longer, knowing what is written in the law, but to inform you of all of these things, that ye might understand both who the apostates are, and also the contemptible character of their heresy, and pay no attention to anything that Eusebius should write to you. For now wishing to renew his former malevolence, which seemed to have been buried in oblivion by time, he affects to write in their behalf; while the fact itself plainly shows that he does this for the promotion of his own

\[\text{121} \quad \text{Eph. iv. 3.}\]
\[\text{122} \quad \text{1 Cor. xii. 26.}\]
purposes. These then are those who have become apostates: Arius, Achillas, Aithales, and Carpones, another Arius, Sarmates, Euzoïus, Lucius, Julian, Menas, Helladis, and Gaius; with these also must be reckoned Secundus and Theonas, who once were called bishops. The dogmas they have invented and assert, contrary to the Scriptures, are these: That God was not always the Father, but that there was a period when he was not the Father; that the Word of God was not from eternity, but was made out of nothing; \(^{123}\) for that the ever-existing God (‘the I AM’—the eternal One) made him who did not previously exist, out of nothing; wherefore there was a time when he did not exist, inasmuch as the Son is a creature and a work. That he is neither like the Father as it regards his essence, nor is by nature either the Father’s true Word, or true Wisdom, but indeed one of his works and creatures, being erroneously called Word and Wisdom, since he was himself made of God’s own Word and the Wisdom which is in God, whereby God both made all things and him also. Wherefore he is as to his nature mutable and susceptible of change, as all other rational creatures are: hence the Word is alien to and other than the essence of God; and the Father is inexplicable by the Son, and invisible to him, for neither does the Word perfectly and accurately know the Father, neither can he distinctly see him. The Son knows not the nature of his own essence: for he was made on our account, in order that God might create us by him, as by an instrument; nor would he ever have existed, unless God had wished to create us.

Some one accordingly asked them whether the Word of God could be changed, as the devil has been? and they feared not to say, ‘Yes, he could; for being begotten, he is susceptible of change.’ We then, with the bishops of Egypt and Libya, being assembled together to the number of nearly a hundred, have anathematized Arius for his shameless avowal of these heresies, together with all such as have countenanced them. Yet the partisans of Eusebius have received them; endeavoring to blend falsehood with truth, and that which is impious with what is sacred. But they shall not prevail, for the truth must triumph; and ‘light has no fellowship with darkness, nor has Christ any concord with Belial.’ \(^{124}\) Who ever heard such blasphemies? or what man of any piety is there now hearing them that is not horror-struck, and stops his ears, lest the filth of these expressions should pollute his sense of hearing? Who that hears John saying, ‘In the beginning was the Word,’ \(^{125}\) does not condemn those that say, ‘There was a period when the Word was not?’ or who, hearing in the Gospel of ‘the only-begotten Son,’ and that ‘all things were made by him,’ will not abhor those that pronounce the Son to be one of the things made? How can he be one of the things which were made by himself? Or how can he be the only-begotten, if he is reckoned among created things? And how could he have had his existence from nonentities, since the Father has \(^{123}\) ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων γέγονεν, lit. ‘came into existence from nothing.’

\(^{124}\) 2 Cor. vi. 14.

\(^{125}\) John i. 1–3, 18.
said, 'My heart has indited a good matter'; and 'I begat thee out of my bosom before the dawn'? Or how is he unlike the Father’s essence, who is 'his perfect image,' and 'the brightness of his glory' and says: 'He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father'? Again how if the Son is the Word and Wisdom of God, was there a period when he did not exist? For that is equivalent to their saying that God was once destitute both of Word and Wisdom. How can he be mutable and susceptible of change, who says of himself, 'I am in the Father, and the Father in me'; and 'I and the Father are one'; and again by the Prophet, ‘Behold me because I am, and have not changed'? But if any one may also apply the expression to the Father himself, yet would it now be even more fitly said of the Word; because he was not changed by having become man, but as the Apostle says, 'Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.’ But what could persuade them to say that he was made on our account, when Paul has expressly declared that 'all things are for him, and by him'? One need not wonder indeed at their blasphemous assertion that the Son does not perfectly know the Father; for having once determined to fight against Christ, they reject even the words of the Lord himself, when he says, ‘As the Father knows me, even so know I the Father.’ If therefore the Father but partially knows the Son, it is manifest that the Son also knows the Father but in part. But if it would be improper to affirm this, and it be admitted that the Father perfectly knows the Son, it is evident that as the Father knows his own Word, so also does the Word know his own Father, whose Word he is. And we, by stating these things, and unfolding the divine Scriptures, have often confuted them: but again as chameleons they were changed, striving to apply to themselves that which is written, ‘When the ungodly has reached the depths of iniquity, he becomes contemptuous.’ Many heresies have arisen before these, which exceeding all bounds in daring, have lapsed into complete infatuation: but these persons, by attempting in all their discourses to subvert the Divinity of The Word, as having made a nearer approach to Antichrist, have comparatively lessened the odium of former ones. Wherefore they have been publicly repudiated by the Church, 126 Ps. xlv. 1, according to the LXX.

127 Ἑωσφόρον, the morning-star; taken from Ps. cix. 3. Cf. the LXX, quoted from Ps. lxxii.
128 Col. i. 15.
129 Heb. i. 3.
130 John xiv. 10.
131 John x. 30.
132 Mal. iii. 6.
133 Heb. xiii. 8.
134 Heb. ii. 10.
135 John x. 15.
136 Prov. xviii. 3, according to the LXX.
and anathematized. We are indeed grieved on account of the perdition of these persons, and especially so because, after having been previously instructed in the doctrines of the Church, they have now apostatized from them. Nevertheless we are not greatly surprised at this, for Hymenæus and Philetus fell in like manner; and before them Judas, who had been a follower of the Saviour, but afterwards deserted him and became his betrayer. Nor were we without forewarning respecting these very persons: for the Lord himself said: ‘Take heed that no man deceive you: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ: and shall many deceive many,’ and ‘the time is at hand; Go ye not therefore after them.’ And Paul, having learned these things from the Saviour, wrote, ‘That in the latter times some should apostatize from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits, and doctrines of devils,’ who pervert the truth. Seeing then that our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ has himself enjoined this, and has also by the apostle given us intimation respecting such men, we having ourselves heard their impiety have in consequence anathematized them, as we before said, and declared them to be alienated from the Catholic Church and faith. Moreover we have intimated this to your piety, beloved and most honored fellow-ministers, in order that ye might neither receive any of them, if they should presume to come to you, nor be induced to put confidence in Eusebius, or any other who may write to you about them. For it is incumbent on us who are Christians, to turn away from all those who speak or entertain a thought against Christ, as from those who are resisting God, and are destroyers of the souls of men: neither does it become us even ‘to salute such men,’ as the blessed John has prohibited, ‘lest we should at any time be made partakers of their sins.’ Greet the brethren which are with you; those who are with me salute you.

Upon Alexander’s thus addressing the bishops in every city, the evil only became worse, inasmuch as those to whom he made this communication were thereby excited to contention. And some indeed fully concurred in and subscribed to the sentiments expressed in this letter, while others did the reverse. But Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia, was beyond all others moved to controversy, inasmuch as Alexander in his letter had made a personal and censorious allusion to him. Now at this juncture Eusebius possessed great influence, because the emperor resided at Nicomedia. For in fact Diocletian had a short time previously built a palace there. On this account therefore many of the bishops paid their court to Eusebius. And he repeatedly wrote both to Alexander, that he might set aside the discussion which had been excited, and again receive Arius and his adherents into communion; and also to 137 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18.

138 Matt. xxiv. 4.
140 1 Tim. iv. 1; Tit. i. 14.
141 2 John 10, 11.
the bishops in each city, that they might not concur in the proceedings of Alexander. By these means confusion everywhere prevailed: for one saw not only the prelates of the churches engaged in disputing, but the people also divided, some siding with one party, and some with the other. To so disgraceful an extent was this affair carried, that Christianity became a subject of popular ridicule, even in the very theatres. Those who were at Alexandria sharply disputed about the highest points of doctrine, and sent deputations to the bishops of the several dioceses; while those who were of the opposite faction created a similar disturbance.

With the Arians the Melitians mingled themselves, who a little while before had been separated from the Church: but who these [Melitians] are must now be stated.

By Peter, bishop of Alexandria, who in the reign of Diocletian suffered martyrdom, a certain Melitius, bishop of one of the cities in Egypt, in consequence of many other charges, and more especially because during the persecution he had denied the faith and sacrificed, was deposed. This person, being stripped of his dignity, and having nevertheless many followers, became the leader of the heresy of those who are to this day called from him Melitians throughout Egypt. And as he had no rational excuse for his separation from the Church, he pretended that he had simply been wronged and loaded Peter with calumnious reproaches. Now Peter died the death of a martyr during the persecution, and so Melitius transferred his abuse first to Achillas, who succeeded Peter in the bishopric, and afterwards again to Alexander, the successor of Achillas. In this state of things among them, the discussion in relation to Arius arose; and Melitius with his adherents took part with Arius, entering into a conspiracy with him against the bishop. But as many as regarded the opinion of Arius as untenable, justified Alexander's decision against him, and thought that those who favored his views were justly condemned. Meanwhile Eusebius of Nicomedia and his partisans, with such as favored the sentiments of Arius, demanded by letter that the sentence of excommunication which had been pronounced against him should be rescinded; and that those who had been excluded should be readmitted into the Church, as they held no unsound doctrine. Thus letters from the opposite parties were sent to the bishop of Alexandria; and Arius made a collection of those which were favorable to himself while Alexander did the same with those which were adverse. This therefore afforded a plausible opportunity of defense to the sects, which are now prevalent, of the Arians, Eunomians, and such as receive their name from Macedonius; for these severally make use of these epistles in vindication of their heresies.

142 Valesius makes the assertion that Socrates is mistaken here, that the Melitians joined themselves to the Arians after the council of Nicæa, and were induced by Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia, to cast slanderous aspersion upon Athanasius, as he himself testifies in his second apology against the Arians. It appears unlikely that the Fathers of the Nicene Council would have treated the Melitians as leniently as they did had they sided with Arius before the council.
Division begins in the Church from this Controversy; and Alexander Bishop…
Chapter VII.—The Emperor Constantine being grieved at the Disturbance of the Churches, sends Hosius the Spaniard to Alexandria, exhorting the Bishop and Arius to Reconciliation and Unity.

When the emperor was made acquainted with these disorders, he was very deeply grieved; and regarding the matter as a personal misfortune, immediately exerted himself to extinguish the conflagration which had been kindled, and sent a letter to Alexander and Arius by a trustworthy person named Hosius, who was bishop of Cordova, in Spain. The emperor greatly loved this man and held him in the highest estimation. It will not be out of place to introduce here a portion of this letter, the whole of which is given in the life of Constantine by Eusebius.\(^{143}\)

Victor Constantine Maximum Augustus to Alexander and Arius.

I am informed that your present controversy originated thus. When you, Alexander, inquired of your presbyters what each thought on a certain inexplicable passage of the written Word, rather on a subject improper for discussion; and you, Arius, rashly gave expression to a view of the matter such as ought either never to have been conceived, or when suggested to your mind, it became you to bury it in silence. This dispute having thus been excited among you, communion\(^{144}\) has been denied; and the most holy people being rent into two factions, have departed from the harmony of the common body. Wherefore let each one of you, showing consideration for the other, listen to the impartial exhortation of your fellow-servant. And what counsel does he offer? It was neither prudent at first to agitate such a question, nor to reply to such a question when proposed: for the claim of no law demands the investigation of such subjects, but the idle useless talk of leisure occasions them. And even if they should exist for the sake of exercising our natural faculties, yet we ought to confine them to our own consideration, and not incautiously bring them forth in public assemblies, nor thoughtlessly confide them to the ears of everybody. Indeed how few are capable either of adequately expounding, or even accurately understanding the import of matters so vast and profound!

And even if any one should be considered able to satisfactorily accomplish this, how large a portion of the people would he succeed in convincing? Or who can grapple with the subtilties of such investigations without danger of lapsing into error? It becomes us therefore on such topics to check loquacity, lest either on account of the weakness of our nature we should be incompetent to explain the subject proposed; or the dull understanding of the audience should make them unable to apprehend clearly what is attempted to be taught: and in the case of one or the other of these failures, the people must be necessarily involved either in blasphemy or schism. Wherefore let an unguarded question, and an inconsiderate \(^{143}\) Euseb. Life of Const. II. 64–72.

\(^{144}\) σύνοδος; lit., ‘coming together.’
answer, on the part of each of you, procure equal forgiveness from one another. No cause of difference has been started by you bearing on any important precept contained in the Law; nor has any new heresy been introduced by you in connection with the worship of God; but ye both hold one and the same judgment on these points, which is the Creed. Moreover, while you thus pertinaciously contend with one another about matters of small or scarcely the least importance, it is unsuitable for you to have charge of so many people of God, because you are divided in opinion: and not only is it unbecoming, but it is also believed to be altogether unlawful.

In order to remind you of your duty by an example of an inferior kind, I may say: you are well aware that even the philosophers themselves are united under one sect. Yet they often differ from each other on some parts of their theories: but although they may differ on the very highest branches of science, in order to maintain the unity of their body, they still agree to coalesce. Now, if this is done amongst them, how much more equitable will it be for you, who have been constituted ministers of the Most High God, to become unanimous with one another in such a religious profession. But let us examine with closer consideration, and deeper attention, what has been already stated. Is it right on account of insignificant and vain contentions between you about words, that brethren should be set in opposition against brethren; and that the honorable communion should be distracted by unhallowed dissension, through our striving with one another respecting things so unimportant, and by no means essential? These quarrels are vulgar and rather consistent with puerile thoughtlessness, than suitable to the intelligence of priests and prudent men. We should spontaneously turn aside from the temptations of the devil. The great God and Saviour of us all has extended to all the common light. Under his providence, allow me, his servant, to bring this effort of mine to a successful issue; that by my exhortation, ministry, and earnest admonition, I may lead you, his people, back to unity of communion.

For since, as I have said, there is but one faith among you, and one sentiment respecting religion, let not this diversity of opinion, which has excited dissension among you, by any means cause discord and schism, inasmuch as it does not affect the force of the law as a whole. Now, I say these things, not as compelling you all to see exactly alike on this very insignificant subject of 146 For the textual variation at this place, see Valesius, note.

---

147 συνόδου κοινωνίαν.
148 αἵρεσις: lit. 'understanding of heresy.' On the various uses of the word αἵρεσις, see Sophocles, Greek Lex. of the Rom. and Byz. Periods. Here it evidently means the common creed of the whole Church looked at as a sect.
149 νόμος, used in analogy to the law of the Old Testament. The law here is the ethical system of Christianity.
controversy, whatever it may be; since the dignity\footnote{τίμιον, ‘honor.’} of the communion may be preserved unaffected, and the same fellowship with all be retained, even though there should exist among you some dissimilarity of sentiment on unimportant matters. For, of course, we do not all desire the same thing in every respect; nor is there one unvarying nature, or standard of judgment in us. Therefore, in regard to divine providence, let there be one faith, one sentiment, and one covenant of the Godhead;\footnote{τοῦ κρείττονος: for this use of the word, see Eus. Life of Const. II. 24 et al.; Greg. Naz. III. 1101 B; Jul. 398 A; Clem. Hom. V. 5.} but those minute investigations which ye enter into among yourselves with so much nicety, even if ye should not concur in one judgment in regard to them, should remain within the sphere of your own reflection, kept in the secret recesses of the mind. Let then an ineffable and select bond of general friendship, with faith in the truth, reverence for God, and a devout observance of his law, remain unshaken among you. Resume mutual friendship and grace; restore to the whole people their accustomed familiar embraces; and do ye yourselves, on the strength of having purified your own souls, again recognize one another. For friendship often becomes sweeter after the removal of animosity. Thus restore to me tranquil days, and nights free from care; that to me also some pleasure in the pure light may be preserved, and a cheerful serenity during the rest of my life: otherwise, I must necessarily groan, and be wholly suffused with tears; neither will the remaining period of my earthly existence be peacefully sustained. For while the people of God (I speak of my fellow-servants) are severed from one another by so unworthy and injurious a contest, how is it possible for me to maintain my usual equanimity? But in order that you may have some idea of my excessive grief on account of this unhappy difference, listen to what I am about to state. On my recent arrival at the city of Nicomedia, it was my intention immediately after to proceed into the East: but while I was hastening toward you, and had advanced a considerable distance on my way, intelligence of this affair altogether reversed my purpose, lest I should be obliged to see with my own eyes a condition of things such as I could scarcely bear the report of. Open to me therefore by your reconciliation henceforth, the way into the East, which ye have obstructed by your contentions against one another: and permit me speedily to behold both you and all the rest of the people rejoicing together; and to express my due thanks to the Divine Being, because of the general harmony and liberty of all parties, accompanied by the cordial utterance of your praise.\footnote{Socrates’ lack of theological training can be inferred from his admiration for this rather superficial letter of Constantine’s; so also the rudimentary character of Constantine’s views of Gospel truth and his want of appreciation for the vital nature of the question in the Arian controversy. It may be noted, however, that the statesmanship shown in the tone and recommendations of the letter is just as farsighted as the theology of it is superficial. Constantine had sought to unite the empire through the church, and now that very church threatened...}
The Emperor Constantine being grieved at the Disturbance of the Churches, to disrupt the empire; and this, at the very time, when by his final victory over Licinius and the foundation of his new capital, he seemed to have realized the ideal of a reunited empire.

Chapter VIII.—Of the Synod which was held at Nicaea in Bithynia, and the Creed there put forth.

Such admirable and wise counsel did the emperor’s letter contain. But the evil had become too strong both for the exhortations of the emperor, and the authority of him who was the bearer of his letter: for neither was Alexander nor Arius softened by this appeal; and moreover there was incessant strife and tumult among the people. Moreover another local source of disquietude had pre-existed there, which served to trouble the churches,—the dispute namely in regard to the Passover, which was carried on in the regions of the East only. This arose from some desiring to keep the Feast more in accordance with the custom of the Jews; while others preferred its mode of celebration by Christians in general throughout the world. This difference, however, did not interfere with their communion, although their mutual joy was necessarily hindered. When, therefore, the emperor beheld the Church agitated on account of both of these causes, he convoked a General Council, summoning all the bishops by letter to meet him at Nicaea in Bithynia. Accordingly the bishops assembled out of the various provinces and cities; respecting whom Eusebius Pamphilus thus writes, word for word, in his third book of the life of Constantine:

‘Wherefore the most eminent of the ministers of God in all the churches which have filled Europe, Africa, and Asia, were convened. And one sacred edifice, dilated as it were by God, contained within it on the same occasion both Syrians and Cilicians, Phœnicians, Arabs and Palestinians, and in addition to these, Egyptians, Thebans, Libyans, and those who came from Mesopotamia. At this synod a Persian bishop was also present, neither was the Scythian absent from this assemblage. Pontus also and Galatia, Pamphylia, Cappadocia, Asia and Phrygia, supplied those who were most distinguished among them. Besides, there met there Thracians and Macedonians, Achaians and Epirots, and even those who dwelt still further away than these, and the most celebrated of the Spaniards himself took his seat among the rest. The prelate of the imperial city was absent on account of age; but some of his presbyters were present and filled his place. Such a crown, composed as a bond of peace, the emperor Constantine alone has ever dedicated to Christ his Saviour, as a thank-offering worthy of God for victory over his enemies, having appointed this convocation among us in imitation of the Apostolic Assembly. For among them it is said were convened “devout men of every nation under heaven; Parthians, Medes and Elamites, and those who dwelt in Mesopotamia, Judea and Cappadocia, Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, Egypt and the part of Libya which is toward Cyrene, strangers from Rome also, both Jews and proselytes with Cretans and Arabs.” That congregation, however, was inferior in this respect, that all present were not ministers of God: whereas in this assembly the number of bishops exceeded three hundred; while the number of the presbyters, deacons, and acolyths and others who attended them was almost incalculable. Some of these ministers of God were eminent for their wisdom, some for the strictness of their life, and patient endurance [of persecution], and others united in themselves all these distinguished characteristics: some were venerable from their advanced age, others were conspicuous for their youth and vigor of mind, and others had but recently entered on their ministerial career. For all these the emperor appointed an abundant supply of daily food to be provided.’

Such is Eusebius’ account of those who met on this occasion. The emperor having completed the festal solemnization of this triumph over Licinius, came also in person to Nice.

There were among the bishops two of extraordinary celebrity, Paphnutius, bishop of Upper Thebes, and Spyridon, bishop of Cyprus: why I have so particular referred to these two individuals, I shall state hereafter. Many of the laity were also present, who were practiced in the art of reasoning, and each eager to advocate the cause of his own party. Eusebius, when he wrote, the imperial city was actually Constantinople, it is very probable that it is the bishop of that city he means to name here, and not the bishop of Rome.

Acts ii. 5–11.

The exact number is variously given as 250 by Eusebius (Life of Const. III. 8); 270 by Eustathius; 318 by Evagrius (H. E. III. 31); Athanasius (Ep. to the African bishops); Hilarius (Contra Constantium); Jerome (Chronicon), and Rufinus.

Young priests; lit. ’followers,’ from ἀκόλουθος.

τῷ μέσῳ τρόπῳ: besides the meaning given to these words here they may be taken (1) as describing the temperate and genial character of the men so characterized, on the assumption that μέσος = μέτριος as often elsewhere, or (2) as applicable to those who occupied the middle ground in the controversy; of these, (2) is not admissible, as nothing has been said in the immediate context about the controversy, and as age is the main basis of classification in the passage; (1) also is less probable than the rendering given above.

Dialectics.
bishop of Nicomedia, as was before said, supported the opinion of Arius, together with Theognis and Maris; of these the former was bishop of Nicaea, and Maris of Chalcedon in Bithynia. These were powerfully opposed by Athanasius, a deacon of the Alexandrian church, who was highly esteemed by Alexander his bishop, and on that account was much envied, as will be seen hereafter. Now a short time previous to the general assembling of the bishops, the disputants engaged in preparatory logical contests before the multitudes; and when many were attracted by the interest of their discourse, one of the laity, a confessor 164, who was a man of unsophisticated understanding, reproved these reasoners, telling them that Christ and his apostles did not teach us dialectics, art, nor vain subtilties, but simple-mindedness, which is preserved by faith and good works. As he said this, all present admired the speaker and assented to the justice of his remarks; and the disputants themselves, after hearing his plain statement of the truth, exercised a greater degree of moderation: thus then was the disturbance caused by these logical debates suppressed at this time.

On the following day all the bishops were assembled together in one place; the emperor arrived soon after and on his entrance stood in their midst, and would not take his place, until the bishops by bowing intimated their desire that he should be seated: such was the respect and reverence which the emperor entertained for these men. When a silence suitable to the occasion had been observed, the emperor from his seat began to address them words of exhortation to harmony and unity, and entreated each to lay aside all private pique. For several of them had brought accusations against one another and many had even presented petitions to the emperor the day before. But he, directing their attention to the matter before them, and on account of which they were assembled, ordered these petitions to be burnt; merely observing that ‘Christ enjoins him who is anxious to obtain forgiveness, to forgive his brother.’ When therefore he had strongly insisted on the maintenance of harmony and peace, he sanctioned again their purpose of more closely investigating the questions at issue. But it may be well to hear what Eusebius says on this subject, in his third book of the Life of Constantine. 165 His words are these:

‘A variety of topics having been introduced by each party and much controversy being excited from the very commencement, the emperor listened to all with patient attention, deliberately and impartially considering whatever was advanced. He in part supported the statements which were made on either side, and gradually softened the asperity of those who contentiously opposed each other, conciliating each by his mildness and affability. And as he addressed them in the Greek language, for he was not unacquainted with it, he was at once interesting and persuasive, and wrought conviction on the minds of some, and prevailed on others by entreaty, those who spoke well he applauded. And inciting all to unanimity at length he succeeded in bringing them into similarity of judgment, and conformity of opinion on all the controverted points: so that there was not only unity in the confession of faith, but also a general agreement as to the time for the celebration of the feast of Salvation. Moreover the doctrines which had thus the common consent, were confirmed by the signature of each individual.’

164 εἷς τῶν ὁμολογητῶν: the term ὁμολογητής was applied to those who during the persecutions had refused to sacrifice to idols, persisting in his profession of Christianity in spite of suffering. Cf. Clem. Strom. IV. 12; Petr. Alex. Epist. Can. 14.

Such in his own words is the testimony respecting these things which Eusebius has left us in writing; and we not unfitly have used it, but treating what he has said as an authority, have introduced it here for the fidelity of this history. With this end also in view, that if any one should condemn as erroneous the faith professed at this council of Nicæa, we might be unaffected by it, and put no confidence in Sabinus the Macedonian, who calls all those who were convened there ignoramuses and simpletons. For this Sabinus, who was bishop of the Macedonians at Heraclea in Thrace, having made a collection of the decrees published by various Synods of bishops, has treated those who composed the Nicene Council in particular with contempt and derision; not perceiving that he thereby charges Eusebius himself with ignorance, who made a like confession after the closest scrutiny. And in fact some things he has willfully passed over, others he has perverted, and on all he has put a construction favorable to his own views. Yet he commends Eusebius Pamphilus as a trustworthy witness, and praises the emperor as capable in stating Christian doctrines: but he still brands the faith which was declared at Nicæa, as having been set forth by ignorant persons, and such as had no intelligence in the matter. And thus he voluntarily contemns the words of a man whom he himself pronounces a wise and true witness: for Eusebius declares, that of the ministers of God who were present at the Nicene Synod, some were eminent for the word of wisdom, others for the strictness of their life; and that the emperor himself being present, leading all into unanimity, established unity of judgment, and agreement of opinion among them. Of Sabinus, however, we shall make further mention as occasion may require. But the agreement of faith, assented to with loud acclamation at the great council of Nicæa is this:

166 The Passover, or Easter.

167 Macedonian = follower of Macedonius, not a native resident of Macedonia. Sabinus was the author of a collection of the acts of the Synod used by Socrates quite freely (cf. I. 9; II. 15, 17 et al.). Socrates, however, criticises him for prejudice against the orthodox. Sabinus was bishop of the church of the Macedonians in Heraclea, a city in Thrace.
‘We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of all things visible and invisible:—and in one\textsuperscript{168} Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the only-begotten of the Father, that is of the substance of the Father; God of God and Light of light; true God of true God; begotten, not made, consubstantial\textsuperscript{169} with the Father: by whom all things were made, both which are in heaven and on earth: who for the sake of us men, and on account of our salvation, descended, became incarnate, and was made man; suffered, arose again the third day, and ascended into the heavens, and will come again to judge the living and the dead. [We] also [believe] in the Holy Spirit. But the holy Catholic and Apostolic church anathematizes those who say “There was a time when he was not,” and “He was not before he was begotten” and “He was made from that which did not exist,” and those who assert that he is of other substance or essence than the Father, or that he was created, or is susceptible of change.’\textsuperscript{170}

This creed was recognized and acquiesced in by three hundred and eighteen [bishops]; and being, as Eusebius says, unanimous is expression and sentiment, they subscribed it. Five only would not receive it, objecting to the term \textit{homoousios}, ‘of the same essence,’ or \textit{consubstantial}: these were Eusebius bishop of Nicomedia, Theognis of Nice, Maris of Chalcedon, Theonas of Marmarica, and Secundus of Ptolemais. ‘For,’ said they ‘since that is \textit{consubstantial} which is from another either by partition, derivation or germination; by germination, as a shoot from the roots; by derivation, as children from their parents; by division, as two or three vessels of gold from a mass, and the Son is from the Father by none of these modes: therefore they declared themselves unable to assent to this creed.’ Thus having scoffed at the word \textit{consubstantial}, they would not subscribe to the deposition of Arius. Upon this the Synod anathematized Arius, and all who adhered to his opinions, prohibiting him at the same time from entering into Alexandria. At the same time an edict of the emperor sent Arius himself into exile, together with Eusebius and Theognis and their followers; Eusebius and Theognis, however, a short time after their banishment, tendered a written declaration of their change of sentiment, and concurrence in the faith of the \textit{consubstantiality} of the Son with the Father, as we shall show as we proceed.

\textsuperscript{168} This is according to the reading of Valesius, Hussey, and Bright. The reading, ‘our Lord,’ &c., of the English translations in Bagster and Bohn’s series is probably a typographical error, though strangely perpetuated down to the reprint of 1888.

\textsuperscript{169} \textit{ομοουσιον}, ‘of the same essence’; the word has become a historic landmark in theological debate, and one of the stock words of theological terminology.

At this time during the session of the Synod, Eusebius, surnamed Pamphilus, bishop of Caesarea in Palestine, who had held aloof for a short time, after mature consideration whether he ought to receive this definition of the faith, at length acquiesced in it, and subscribed it with all the rest: he also sent to the people under his charge a copy of the Creed, with an explanation of the word homoousios, that no one might impugn his motives on account of his previous hesitation. Now what was written by Eusebius was as follows in his own words:

'You have probably had some intimation, beloved, of the transactions of the great council convened at Nicæa, in relation to the faith of the Church, inasmuch as rumor generally outruns true account of that which has really taken place. But lest from such report alone you might form an incorrect estimate of the matter, we have deemed it necessary to submit to you, in the first place, an exposition of the faith proposed by us in written form; and then a second which has been promulgated, consisting of ours with certain additions to its expression. The declaration of faith set forth by us, which when read in the presence of our most pious emperor, seemed to meet with universal approbation, was thus expressed:

"According as we received from the bishops who preceded us, both in our instruction [in the knowledge of the truth], and when we were baptized; as also we have ourselves learned from the sacred Scriptures: and in accordance with what we have both believed and taught while discharging the duties of presbyter and the episcopal office itself, so now we believe and present to you the distinct avowal of our faith. It is this:

"We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of all things visible and invisible:—and in one Lord, Jesus Christ, the Word of God, God of God, Light of light, Life of life, the only-begotten Son, born before all creation, begotten of God the Father, before all ages, by whom also all things were made; who on account of our salvation became incarnate, and lived among men; and who suffered and rose again on the third day, and ascended to the Father, and shall come again in glory to judge the living and the dead. We believe also in one Holy Spirit. We believe in the existence and subsistence of each of these [persons]: that the Father is truly Father, the Son truly Son, and the Holy Spirit truly Holy Spirit; even as our Lord also, when he sent forth his disciples to preach the Gospel, said, ‘Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.’ Concerning these doctrines we steadfastly maintain their truth, and avow our full confidence in them; such also have been our sentiments hitherto, and such we shall continue..."
to hold until death and in an unshaken adherence to this faith, we anathematize every impious heresy. In the presence of God Almighty, and of our Lord Jesus Christ we testify, that thus we have believed and thought from our heart and soul, since we have possessed a right estimate of ourselves; and that we now think and speak what is perfectly in accordance with the truth. We are moreover prepared to prove to you by undeniable evidences, and to convince you that in time past we have thus believed, and so preached.”

“When these articles of faith were proposed, there seemed to be no ground of opposition: nay, our most pious emperor himself was the first to admit that they were perfectly correct, and that he himself had entertained the sentiments contained in them; exhorting all present to give them their assent, and subscribe to these very articles, thus agreeing in a unanimous profession of them, with the insertion, however, of that single word “homoousios” (consubstantial), an expression which the emperor himself explained, as not indicating corporeal affections or properties; and consequently that the Son did not subsist from the Father either by division or abscession: for said he, a nature which is immaterial and incorporeal cannot possibly be subject to any corporeal affection; hence our conception of such things can only be in divine and mysterious terms. Such was the philosophical view of the subject taken by our most wise and pious sovereign; and the bishops on account of the word homoousious, drew up this formula of faith.

The Creed.174

“We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of all things visible and invisible:—and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the only-begotten of the Father, that is of the substance of the Father; God of God, Light of light, true God of true God; begotten not made, consubstantial with the Father; by whom all things were made both which are in heaven and on earth; who for the sake of us men, and on account of our salvation, descended, became incarnate, was made man, suffered and rose again on the third day; he ascended into the heavens, and will come to judge the living and the dead. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit. But those who say ‘There was a time when he was not,’ or ‘He did not exist before he was begotten,’ or ‘He was made of nothing’ or assert that ‘He is of other substance or essence than the Father,’ or that the Son of God is created, or mutable, or susceptible of change, the Catholic and apostolic Church of God anathematizes.”

‘Now this declaration of faith being propounded by them, we did not neglect to investigate the distinct sense of the expressions “of the substance of the Father, and consubstantial with the Father.” Whereupon questions were put forth and answers, and the meaning of these terms was clearly defined; when it was generally admitted that ousias (of the essence or substance) simply implied that the Son is of the Father indeed, but does not subsist as a

174 τὸ μάθημα: lit. ‘lesson.’
175 Through.
part of the Father. To this interpretation of the sacred doctrine which declares that the Son is of the Father, but is not a part of his substance, it seemed right to us to assent. We ourselves therefore concurred in this exposition; nor do we cavil at the word “homoousios” having regard to peace, and fearing to lose a right understanding of the matter. On the same grounds we admitted also the expression “begotten, not made”: “for made,” said they, “is a term applicable in common to all the creatures which were made by the Son, to whom the Son has no resemblance. Consequently he is no creature like those which were made by him, but is of a substance far excelling any creature; which substance the Divine Oracles teach was begotten of the Father by such a mode of generation as cannot be explained nor even conceived by any creature.” Thus also the declaration that “the Son is consubstantial with the Father” having been discussed, it was agreed that this must not be understood in a corporeal sense, or in any way analogous to mortal creatures; inasmuch as it is neither by division of substance, nor by abscission nor by any change of the Father’s substance and power, since the underived nature of the Father is inconsistent with all these things. That he is consubstantial with the Father then simply implies, that the Son of God has no resemblance to created things, but is in every respect like the Father only who begat him; and that he is of no other substance or essence but of the Father. To which doctrine, explained in this way, it appeared right to assent, especially since we knew that some eminent bishops and learned writers among the ancients have used the term “homoousios” in their theological discourses concerning the nature of the Father and the Son. Such is what I have to state to you in reference to the articles of faith which have been promulgated; and in which we have all concurred, not without due examination, but according to the senses assigned, which were investigated in the presence of our most highly favored emperor, and for the reasons mentioned approved. We have also considered the anathema pronounced by them after the declaration of faith inoffensive; because it prohibits the use of illegitimate\textsuperscript{176} terms, from which almost all the distraction and commotion of the churches have arisen. Accordingly, since no divinely inspired Scripture contains the expressions, “of things which do not exist,” and “there was a time when he was not,” and such other phrases as are therein subjoined, it seemed unwarrantable to utter and teach them: and moreover this decision received our sanction the rather from the consideration that we have never heretofore been accustomed to employ these terms. We deemed it incumbent on us, beloved, to acquaint you with the caution which has characterized both our examination of and concurrence in these things: and that on justifiable grounds we resisted to the last moment the introduction of certain objectionable expressions as long as these were not acceptable; and received them without dispute, when on mature deliberation as we examined the sense of the words, they appeared to agree with what we had originally proposed as a sound confession of faith.’

\textsuperscript{176} ἄγράφους; lit. ‘unwritten,’ but defined by Hesychius as above.
Such was the letter addressed by Eusebius Pamphilus to the Christians at Cæsarea in Palestine. At the same time the Synod itself also, with one accord, wrote the following epistle to the church of the Alexandrians, and to believers in Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis.
Chapter IX.—The Letter of the Synod, relative to its Decisions: and the Condemnation of Arius and those who agreed with him.

To the holy, by the grace of God, and great church of the Alexandrians, and to our beloved brethren throughout Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, the bishops assembled at Nicæa, constituting the great and holy Synod, send greeting in the Lord.

Since, by the grace of God, a great and holy Synod has been convened at Nicæa, our most pious sovereign Constantine having summoned us out of various cities and provinces for that purpose, it appeared to us indispensably necessary that a letter should be written to you on the part of the sacred Synod; in order that ye may know what subjects were brought under consideration and examined, and what was eventually determined on and decreed.

In the first place, then, the impiety and guilt of Arius and his adherents were examined into, in the presence of our most religious emperor Constantine: and it was unanimously decided that his impious opinion should be anathematized, with all the blasphemous expressions he has uttered, in affirming that 'the Son of God sprang from nothing,' and that 'there was a time when he was not'; saying moreover that 'the Son of God, because possessed of free will, was capable either of vice or virtue; and calling him a creature and a work. All these sentiments the holy Synod has anathematized, having scarcely patience to endure the hearing of such an impious opinion, or, rather, madness, and such blasphemous words. But the conclusion of our proceedings against him you must either have been informed of already or will soon learn; for we would not seem to trample on a man who has received the chastisement which his crime deserved. Yet so contagious has his pestilential error proved, as to drag into perdition Theonas, bishop of Marmarica, and Secundus of Ptolemaïs; for they have suffered the same condemnation as himself. But when the grace of God delivered us from those execrable dogmas, with all their impiety and blasphemy, and from those persons, who had dared to cause discord and division among a people previously at peace, there still remained the contumacy of Melitius [to be dealt with] and those who had been ordained by him; and we now state to you, beloved brethren, what resolution the Synod came to on this point. It was decreed, the Synod being moved to great clemency towards Melitius, although strictly speaking he was wholly undeserving of favor, that he remain in his own city but exercise no authority either to ordain or nominate for ordination; and that he appear in no other district or city on this pretense, but simply retain a nominal dignity. That those who had received appointments from him, after having been confirmed by a more legitimate ordination, should be admitted to communion on these conditions: that they should continue to hold their rank and ministry, but regard themselves as inferior in every respect to all those who have been ordained and established in each place and church by our most-honored fellow-minister, Alexander, so that they shall have no authority to propose or nominate whom they please, or to do anything at all without the concurrence of some bishop of the Catholic Church who is one of Alexander’s suffragans. On the other hand, such as by the grace of God and your prayers have been found in no schism, but have continued in the Catholic Church blameless, shall have authority to nominate and ordain those who are worthy of the sacred office, and to act in all things according to ecclesiastical law and usage. When it may happen that any of those holding preferments in the church die, then let these who have been thus recently admitted be advanced to the dignity of the deceased, provided that they should appear worthy, and that the people should elect them, the bishop of Alexandria also ratifying their choice. This privilege is conceded to all the others indeed, but to Melitius personally we by no means grant the same license, on account of his former disorderly conduct, and because of the rashness and levity of his character, in order that no authority or jurisdiction should be given him as a man liable again to create similar disturbances. These are the things which specially affect Egypt, and the most holy church of the Alexandrians: and if any other canon or ordinance has been established, our Lord and most-honored fellow-minister and brother Alexander being present with us, will on his return to you enter into more minute details, inasmuch as he has been a participator in whatever is transacted, and has had the principal direction of it. We have also gratifying intelligence to communicate to you relative to unity of judgment on the subject of the most holy feast of Easter: for this point also has been happily settled through your prayers; so that all the brethren in the East who have heretofore kept this festival when the Jews did, will henceforth conform to the Romans and to us, and to all who from the earliest time have observed our period of celebrating Easter. Rejoicing therefore in these conclusions and in the general unanimity and peace, as well as in the extirpation of all heresy, receive with the greater honor and more abundant love our fellow-minister and your bishop Alexander, who has greatly delighted us by his presence, and even at his advanced age has undergone extraordinary exertions in order that peace might be re-established among you. Pray on behalf of us all, that the things decided as just may be inviolably maintained through Almighty God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, together with the Holy Spirit; to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

This epistle of the Synod makes it plain that they not only anathematized Arius and his adherents, but the very expressions of his tenets; and that having agreed among themselves respecting the celebration of Easter, they readmitted the heresiarch Melitius into communion, suffering him to retain his episcopal rank, but divesting him of all authority to act as a bishop. It is for this reason I suppose that even at the present time the Melitians in Egypt are separated from the church, because the Synod deprived Melitius of all power. It should be observed moreover that Arius had written a treatise on his own opinion which he entitled Thalia; but the character of the book is loose and dissolute, similar in its style and metres to the songs of Sotades. This production also the Synod condemned at the same time.

178 Sotades, a Maronite, characterized as obscene. On the doctrines of the Maronites, cf. Gibbon's Decline and Fall, Ch. XLVII. sect. 3.
Nor was it the Synod alone that took the trouble to write letters to the churches announcing the restoration of peace, but the emperor Constantine himself also wrote personally and sent the following address to the church of the Alexandrians.

The Emperor’s Letter.

Constantine Augustus, to the Catholic church of the Alexandrians. Beloved brethren, hail! We have received from Divine Providence the inestimable blessing of being relieved from all error, and united in the acknowledgment of one and the same faith. The devil will no longer have any power against us, since all that which he had malignantly devised for our destruction has been entirely overthrown from the foundations. The splendor of truth has dissipated at the command of God those dissensions, schisms, tumults, and so to speak, deadly poisons of discord. Wherefore we all worship one true God, and believe that he is. But in order that this might be done, by divine admonition I assembled at the city of Nicæa most of the bishops; with whom I myself also, who am but one of you, and who rejoice exceedingly in being your fellow-servant, undertook the investigation of the truth. Accordingly, all points which seemed in consequence of ambiguity to furnish any pretext for dissension, have been discussed and accurately examined. And may the Divine Majesty pardon the fearful enormity of the blasphemies which some were shamelessly uttering concerning the mighty Saviour, our life and hope; declaring and confessing that they believe things contrary to the divinely inspired Scriptures. While more than three hundred bishops remarkable for their moderation and intellectual keenness, were unanimous in their confirmation of one and the same faith, which according to the truth and legitimate construction of the law of God can only be the faith; Arius alone beguiled by the subtlety of the devil, was discovered to be the sole disseminator of this mischief, first among you, and afterwards with unhallowed purposes among others also. Let us therefore embrace that doctrine which the Almighty has presented to us: let us return to our beloved brethren from whom an irreverent servant of the devil has separated us: let us go with all speed to the common body and our own natural members. For this is becoming your penetration, faith and sanctity; that since the error has been proved to be due to him who is an enemy to the truth, ye should return to the divine favor. For that which has commended itself to the judgment of three hundred bishops cannot be other than the doctrine of God; seeing that the Holy Spirit dwelling in the minds of so many dignified persons has effectually enlightened them respecting the Divine will. Wherefore let no one vacillate or linger, but let all with alacrity return to the undoubted path of duty; that when I shall arrive among you, which will be as soon as possible, I may with you return due thanks to God, the inspector of all things, for having revealed the pure faith, and restored to you that love for which ye have prayed. May God protect you, beloved brethren.

Thus wrote the emperor to the Christians of Alexandria, assuring them that the exposition of the faith was neither made rashly nor at random, but that it was dictated with much research, and after strict investigation: and not that some things were spoken of, while others were suppressed in silence; but that whatever could be fittingly advanced in support of any opinion was fully stated. That nothing indeed was precipitately determined, but all was previously discussed with minute accuracy; so that every point which seemed to furnish a pretext for ambiguity of meaning, or difference of opinion, was thoroughly sifted, and its difficulties removed. In short he terms the thought of all those who were assembled there the thought of God, and does not doubt that the unanimity of so many eminent bishops was effected by the Holy Spirit. Sabinus, however, the chief of the heresy of the Macedonians, willfully rejects these authorities, and calls those who were convened there ignorant and illiterate persons; nay, he almost accuses Eusebius of Cæsarea himself of ignorance: nor does he reflect, that even if those who constituted that synod had been laymen, yet as being illuminated by God, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, they were utterly unable to err from the truth. Nevertheless, hear farther what the emperor decreed in another circular both against Arius and those who held his opinions, sending it in all directions to the bishops and people.

Another Epistle of Constantine.

Victor Constantine Maximus Augustus, to the bishops and people.—Since Arius has imitated wicked and impious persons, it is just that he should undergo the like ignominy. Wherefore as Porphyry, that enemy of piety, for having composed licentious treatises against religion, found a suitable recompense, and such as thenceforth branded him with infamy, overwhelming him with deserved reproach, his impious writings also having been destroyed; so now it seems fit both that Arius and such as hold his sentiments should be denominated Porphyrians, that they may take their appellation from those whose conduct they have imitated. And in addition to this, if any treatise composed by Arius should be discovered, let it be consigned to the flames, in order that not only his depraved doctrine may be suppressed, but also that no memorial of him may be by any means left. This therefore I decree, that if any one shall be detected in concealing a book compiled by Arius, and shall not instantly bring it forward and burn it, the penalty for this offense shall be death; for immediately after conviction the criminal shall suffer capital punishment. May God preserve you!

Another Epistle.

179 It has always been the common belief of the Eastern Church that the ecumenical councils were inspired in the same sense as the writers of the Sacred Scriptures. Socrates in this respect simply reflects the opinion of the age and region.

180 Cf. III. 23, where the author makes further mention of Porphyry and his writings; see also Smith, Dict. Greek and Roman Biog.

181 Euseb. Life of Const. III. 17–19.
Constantine Augustus, to the Churches.

Having experienced from the flourishing condition of public affairs, how great has been the grace of divine power, I judged this to be an object above all things claiming my care, that one faith, with sincere love, and uniform piety toward Almighty God should be maintained amongst the most blessed assemblies of the Catholic Church. But inasmuch as I perceived that this could not be firmly and permanently established, unless all, or at least the greatest part of the bishops could be convened in the same place, and every point of our most holy religion should be discussed by them in council; therefore as many as possible were assembled, and I myself also as one of you was present; for I will not deny what I especially rejoice in, that I am your fellow-servant. All points were then minutely investigated, until a decision acceptable to Him who is the inspector of all things, was published for the promotion of uniformity of judgment and practice; so that nothing might be henceforth left for dissension or controversy in matters of faith. There also the question having been considered relative to the most holy day of Easter, it was determined by common consent that it should be proper that all should celebrate it on one and the same day everywhere. For what can be more appropriate, or what more solemn, than that this feast from which we have received the hope of immortality, should be invariably kept in one order, and for an obvious reason among all? And in the first place, it seemed very unworthy of this most sacred feast, that we should keep it following the custom of the Jews; a people who having imbrued their hands in a most heinous outrage, have thus polluted their souls, and are deservedly blind. Having then cast aside their usage, we are free to see to it that the celebration of this observance should occur in future in the more correct order which we have kept from the first day of the Passion until the present time. Therefore have nothing in common with that most hostile people the Jews. We have received from the Saviour another way; for there is set before us both a legitimate and accurate course in our holy religion: unanimously pursuing this, let us, most honored brethren, withdraw ourselves from that detestable association. For it is truly absurd for them to boast that we are incapable of rightly observing these things without their instruction. For on what subject will they be competent to form a correct judgment, who after that murder of their Lord, having been bereft of their senses, are led not by any rational motive, but by an ungovernable impulse, wherever their innate fury may drive them? Thence it is therefore, that even in this particular they do not perceive the truth, so that they constantly erring in the utmost degree, instead of making a suitable correction, celebrate the Feast of Passover a second time in the same year.182 Why then

---

182 As the Jewish Passover month was a lunar month and began on the fifth day of March and ended on the third of April, it happened sometimes that their Passover began before the equinox (the beginning of the solar year), so that they celebrated two Passovers during the same solar year. Their own year being lunar, of course they never celebrated the Passover twice in a year according to their point of view.
should we follow the example of those who are acknowledged to be infected with grievous error? Surely we should never suffer Easter to be kept twice in one and the same year! But even if these considerations were not laid before you, it became your prudence at all times to take heed, both by diligence and prayer, that the purity of your soul should in nothing have communion, or seem to do so with the customs of men so utterly depraved. Moreover this should also be considered, that in a matter so important and of such religious significance, the slightest disagreement is most irreverent. For our Saviour left us but one day to be observed in commemoration of our deliverance, that is the day of his most holy Passion: he also wished his Catholic Church to be one; the members of which, however much they may be scattered in various places, are notwithstanding cherished by one Spirit, that is by the will of God. Let the prudence consistent with your sacred character consider how grievous and indecorous it is, that on the same days some should be observing fasts, while others are celebrating feasts; and after the days of Easter some should indulge in festivities and enjoyments, and others submit to appointed fastings. On this account therefore Divine Providence directed that an appropriate correction should be effected, and uniformity of practice established, as I suppose you are all aware.

Since then it was desirable that this should be so amended that we should have nothing in common with that nation of parricides, and of those who slew their Lord; and since the order is a becoming one which is observed by all the churches of the western, southern, and northern parts, and by some also in the eastern; from these considerations for the present all thought it to be proper, and I pledged myself that it would be satisfactory to your prudent penetration, that what is observed with such general unanimity of sentiment in the city of Rome, throughout Italy, Africa, all Egypt, Spain, France, Britain, Libya, the whole of Greece, and the dioceses of Asia, Pontus, and Cilicia, your intelligence also would cheerfully accept; reflecting too that not only is there a greater number of churches in the places before mentioned, but also that this in particular is a most sacred obligation, that all should in common desire whatever strict reason seems to demand, and what has no communion with the perjury of the Jews. But to sum up matters briefly, it was determined by common consent that the most holy festival of Easter should be solemnized on one and the same day; for it is not even seemly that there should be in such a hallowed solemnity any difference: and it is more commendable to adopt that opinion in which there will be no intermixture of strange error, or deviation from what is right. These things therefore being thus consistent, do you gladly receive this heavenly and truly divine command: for whatever is done in the sacred assemblies of the bishops is referable to the Divine will. Wherefore, when ye have indicated the things which have been prescribed to all our beloved brethren, it behooves you to publish the above written statements and to accept the reasoning which has been adduced, and to establish this observance of the most holy day: that when I arrive at the long and earnestly desired
Another Epistle to Eusebius. 183

Victor Constantine Maximus Augustus, to Eusebius.

Since an impious purpose and tyranny have even to the present time persecuted the servants of God our Saviour, I have been credibly informed and am fully persuaded, most beloved brother, that all our sacred edifices have either by neglect gone to decay, or from dread of impending danger have not been adorned with becoming dignity. But now that liberty has been restored, and that persecuting dragon Licinius has by the providence of the Most High God, and our instrumentality, been removed from the administration of public affairs, I imagine that the divine power has been made manifest to all, and at the same time that those who either through fear or unbelief fell into any sins, having acknowledged the living God, will come to the true and right course of life. Wherefore enjoin the churches over which you yourself preside, as well as the other bishops presiding in various places, together with the presbyters and deacons whom you know, to be diligent about the sacred edifices, either by repairing those which remain standing, or enlarging them, or by erecting new ones wherever it may be requisite. And do you yourself ask, and the rest through you, the necessary supplies both from the governors of the provinces, and the officers of the prætorian prefecture: for directions have been given to them to execute with all diligence the orders of your holiness. May God preserve you, beloved brother.

These instructions, concerning the building of churches were sent by the emperor to the bishops in every province: but what he wrote to Eusebius of Palestine respecting the preparation of some copies of the Scriptures, we may ascertain from the letters themselves: 184

Victor Constantine Maximus Augustus, to Eusebius of Cæsarea.

In the city which derives its name from us, a very great multitude of persons, through the assisting providence of our Saviour God, have united themselves to the most holy Church, so that it has received much increase there. It is therefore requisite that more churches should be furnished in that place: wherefore do you most cordially enter into the purpose which I have conceived. I have thought fit to intimate this to your prudence, that you should order to be transcribed on well-prepared parchment, by competent writers accurately acquainted with their art, fifty copies of the Sacred Scriptures, both legibly described, and of 183 Valesius thinks this letter is misplaced; as it alludes to the death of Licinius as a recent event, he thinks it must have been written about 315–316 a.d., hence ten years before the Council of Nicæa. Cf. Euseb. Life of Const. II. 46.

184 Euseb. Life of Const. IV. 36.
a portable size, the provision and use of which you know to be needful for the instruction of the Church. Letters have also been despatched from our clemency, to the financial agent\textsuperscript{185} of the diocese that he be careful to provide all things necessary for the preparation of them. That these copies may be got ready as quickly as possible, let it be a task for your diligence: and you are authorized, on the warrant of this our letter, to use two of the public carriages for their conveyance; for thus the copies which are most satisfactorily transcribed, may be easily conveyed for our inspection, one of the deacons of your church fulfilling this commission; who when he has reached us shall experience our bounty. May God preserve you, beloved brother.

\textit{Another Epistle to Macarius.\textsuperscript{186}}

Victor Constantine Maximus Augustus, to Macarius of Jerusalem.—Such is the grace of our Saviour, that no supply of words seems to be adequate to the expression of its present manifestation. For that the monument\textsuperscript{187} of his most holy passion, long since hidden under the earth, should have lain concealed for a period of so many years, until, through the destruction of the common enemy of all,\textsuperscript{188} it should shine forth to his own servants after their having regained their freedom, exceeds all admiration. For if all those who throughout the whole habitable earth are accounted wise, should be convened in one and the same place, desiring to say something worthy of the event, they would fall infinitely short of the least part of it; for the apprehension of this wonder as far transcends every nature capable of human reasoning, as heavenly things are mightier than human. Hence therefore this is always my especial aim; that as the credibility of the truth daily demonstrates itself by fresh miracles, so the souls of us all should become more diligent respecting the holy law, with modesty and unanimous eagerness. But I desire that you should be fully aware of what I conceive is pretty generally known, that it is now my chief care, that we should adorn with magnificent structures that hallowed spot, which by God’s appointment I have disencumbered of a most disgraceful addition\textsuperscript{189} of an idol, as of some grievous burden; which was consecrated indeed from the beginning in the purpose of God, as becomes evident from his letters. See Euseb. \textit{Life of Const.} III. 36.

\textsuperscript{185} διοικήσεως καθολικόν: this office was peculiar to the Eastern Church. The nearest equivalent to it in the terminology of the Western Church is that of vicar-general; but as the non-technical expression ‘financial agent’ describes the official to the modern reader, it has been adopted in the present translation. Concerning the office, cf. Euseb. \textit{H. E.} VII. 10. It may be also noted that the very common ecclesiastical term \textit{diocese (διοίκησις)} originated during the reign of Constantine, as becomes evident from his letters. See Euseb. \textit{Life of Const.} III. 30.

\textsuperscript{186} Euseb. \textit{Life of Const.} III. 30.

\textsuperscript{187} γνώρισμα: the sepulchre near Calvary commonly known as the Saviour’s is meant.

\textsuperscript{188} Licinius.

\textsuperscript{189} A temple of Venus built by Adrian, the emperor, on Mount Calvary.
prudence to make such arrangements, and provision of everything necessary, that not only a church^190 should be built in itself superior to any elsewhere, but that the rest of its parts also may be such that all the most splendid edifices in every city may be excelled by this. With regard to the workmanship and chaste execution of the walls, know that we have entrusted the care of these things to our friend Dracilian, deputy to the most illustrious prefects of the praetorium, and to the governor of the province: for my piety has ordered that artificers and workmen, and whatever other things they may be informed from your sagacity to be necessary for the structure, shall through their care be immediately sent. Respecting the columns or the marbles, whatever you may judge to be more precious and useful, do you yourself after having inspected the plan take care to write to us; that when we shall understand from your letter how many things and of what kind there may be need of, these may be conveyed to you from all quarters: for it is but just that the most wonderful place in the world, should be adorned in accordance with its dignity. But I wish to know from you, whether you consider that the vault of the basilica should be fretted, or constructed on some other plan: for if it is to be fretted, it can also be decorated with gold. It remains that your holiness should inform the officers before mentioned as soon as possible, how many workmen and artificers, and what money for expenses you will want. Be careful at the same time to report to me speedily, not only concerning the marbles and columns, but also concerning the fretted vault, if indeed you should decide this to be the more beautiful. May God preserve you, beloved brother.

The emperor having also written other letters of a more oratorical character against Arius and his adherents, caused them to be everywhere published throughout the cities, exposing him to ridicule, and taunting him with irony. Moreover, writing to the Nicomedians against Eusebius and Theognis, he censures the misconduct of Eusebius, not only on account of his Arianism, but because also having formerly been well-affected to the ruler, he had traitorously conspired against his affairs. He then exhorts them to elect another bishop instead of him. But I thought it would be superfluous to insert here the letters respecting these things, because of their length: those who wish to do so may find them elsewhere and give them a perusal. This is sufficient notice of these transactions.

---

^190 βασιλικήν, ‘basilica’; the ancient Roman basilicas were often turned into churches. The term has become familiar in ecclesiastical architecture.
Chapter X.—The Emperor also summons to the Synod Acesius, Bishop of the Novatians.

The emperor’s diligence induces me to mention another circumstance expressive of his mind, and serving to show how much he desired peace. For aiming at ecclesiastical harmony, he summoned to the council Acesius also, a bishop of the sect of Novatians. Now, when the declaration of faith had been written out and subscribed by the Synod, the emperor asked Acesius whether he would also agree to this creed to the settlement of the day on which Easter should be observed. He replied, ‘The Synod has determined nothing new, my prince: for thus heretofore, even from the beginning, from the times of the apostles, I traditionally received the definition of the faith, and the time of the celebration of Easter.’ When, therefore, the emperor further asked him, ‘For what reason then do you separate yourself from communion with the rest of the Church?’ he related what had taken place during the persecution under Decius; and referred to the rigidness of that austere canon which declares, that it is not right persons who after baptism have committed a sin, which the sacred Scriptures denominate ‘a sin unto death’\(^{191}\) to be considered worthy of participation in the sacraments:\(^{192}\) that they should indeed be exhorted to repentance, but were not to expect remission from the priest, but from God, who is able and has authority to forgive sins.\(^{193}\) When Acesius had thus spoken, the emperor said to him, ‘Place a ladder, Acesius, and climb alone into heaven.’\(^{194}\) Neither Eusebius Pamphilus nor any other has ever mentioned these things: but I heard them from a man by no means prone to falsehood, who was very old, and simply stated what had taken place in the council in the course of a narrative. From which I conjecture that those who have passed by this occurrence in silence, were actuated by motives which have influenced many other historians: for they frequently suppress important facts, either from prejudice against some, or partiality towards others.

\(^{191}\) John v. 16.
\(^{192}\) θείων μυστηρίων.
\(^{193}\) Cf. IV. 28.
\(^{194}\) Sozom. I. 22.
Chapter XI.—Of the Bishop Paphnutius.

As we have promised above\textsuperscript{195} to make some mention of Paphnutius and Spyridon, it is time to speak of them here. Paphnutius then was bishop of one of the cities in Upper Thebes: he was a man so favored divinely that extraordinary miracles were done by him. In the time of the persecution he had been deprived of one of his eyes. The emperor honored this man exceedingly, and often sent for him to the palace, and kissed the part where the eye had been torn out. So great devoutness characterized the emperor Constantine. Let this single fact respecting Paphnutius suffice: I shall now explain another thing which came to pass in consequence of his advice, both for the good of the Church and the honor of the clergy. It seemed fit to the bishops to introduce a new law into the Church, that those who were in holy orders, I speak of bishops, presbyters, and deacons, should have no conjugal intercourse with the wives whom they had married while still laymen.\textsuperscript{196} Now when discussion on this matter was impending, Paphnutius having arisen in the midst of the assembly of bishops, earnestly entreated them not to impose so heavy a yoke on the ministers of religion: asserting that ‘marriage itself is honorable, and the bed undefiled’;\textsuperscript{197} urging before God that they ought not to injure the Church by too stringent restrictions. ‘For all men,’ said he, ‘cannot bear the practice of rigid continence; neither perhaps would the chastity of the wife of each be preserved’: and he termed the intercourse of a man with his lawful wife chastity. It would be sufficient, he thought, that such as had previously entered on their sacred calling should abjure matrimony, according to the ancient tradition of the Church: but that none should be separated from her to whom, while yet unordained, he had been united. And these sentiments he expressed, although himself without experience of marriage, and, to speak plainly, without ever having known a woman: for from a boy he had been brought up in a monastery,\textsuperscript{198} and was specially renowned above all men for his chastity. The whole assembly of the clergy assented to the reasoning of Paphnutius: wherefore they silenced all further debate on this point, leaving it to the discretion of those who were husbands to exercise abstinence if they so wished in reference to their wives. Thus much concerning Paphnutius.

\textsuperscript{195} Above, chap. 8.

\textsuperscript{196} Cf. Apost. Cann. 5, 17, 26, 51. In general, voluntary celibacy of the clergy was encouraged in the ancient Church.

\textsuperscript{197} Heb. xiii. 4.

\textsuperscript{198} ἀσκητήριον: lit. ‘place for the exercise’ of virtue.
Chapter XII.—Of Spyridon, Bishop of the Cypriots.

With respect to Spyridon, so great was his sanctity while a shepherd, that he was thought worthy of being made a Pastor of men: and having been assigned the bishopric of one of the cities in Cyprus named Trimithus, on account of his extreme humility he continued to feed his sheep during his incumbency of the bishopric. Many extraordinary things are related of him: I shall however record but one or two, lest I should seem to wander from my subject. Once about midnight, thieves having clandestinely entered his sheepfold attempted to carry off some of the sheep. But God who protected the shepherd preserved his sheep also; for the thieves were by an invisible power bound to the folds. At daybreak, when he came to the sheep and found the men with their hands tied behind them, he understood what was done: and after having prayed he liberated the thieves, earnestly admonishing and exhorting them to support themselves by honest labor, and not to take anything unjustly. He then gave them a ram, and sent them away, humorously adding, ‘that ye may not appear to have watched all night in vain.’ This is one of the miracles in connection with Spyridon. Another was of this kind. He had a virgin daughter named Irene, who was a partaker of her father’s piety. An acquaintance entrusted to her keeping an ornament of considerable value: she, to guard it more securely, hid what had been deposited with her in the ground, and not long afterwards died. Subsequently the owner of the property came to claim it; and not finding the virgin, he began an excited conversation with the father, at times accusing him of an attempt to defraud him, and then again beseeching him to restore the deposit. The old man, regarding this person’s loss as his own misfortune, went to the tomb of his daughter, and called upon God to show him before its proper season the promised resurrection. Nor was he disappointed in his hope: for the virgin again reviving appeared to her father, and having pointed out to him the spot where she had hidden the ornament, she once more departed. Such characters as these adorned the churches in the time of the emperor Constantine. These details I obtained from many inhabitants of Cyprus. I have also found a treatise composed in Latin by the presbyter Rufinus, from which I have collected these and some other things which will be hereafter adduced.\(^{199}\)

\(^{199}\) On the use Socrates made of Rufinus, and the question of his knowledge of Latin therein involved, see Introd. p. x.
Chapter XIII.—Of Eutychian the Monk.

I have heard moreover concerning Eutychian, a devout person who flourished about the same time; who also belonged to the Novatian church, yet was venerated for the performance of similar miracles. I shall unequivocally state my authority for this narrative, nor will I attempt to conceal it, even though I give offense to some parties. It was Auxanon, a very aged presbyter of the Novatian church; who when quite a youth accompanied Acesius to the Synod at Nicaea, and related to me what I have said concerning him. His life extended from that period to the reign of Theodosius the Younger; and when I was a mere youth he recounted to me the acts of Eutychian, enlarging much on the divine grace which was manifested in him: but one circumstance he alluded to, which occurred in the reign of Constantine, peculiarly worthy of mention. One of those military attendants, whom the emperor calls his domestic [or body] guards having been suspected of treasonable practices, sought his safety in flight. The indignant monarch ordered that he should be put to death, wherever he might be found: who, having been arrested on the Bithynian Olympus, was bound with heavy and painful chains and kept imprisoned near those parts of Olympus where Eutychian was leading a solitary life, and healing both the bodies and souls of many. The aged Auxanon being then very young was with him, and was being trained by him in the discipline of the monastic life. Many persons came to this Eutychian, entreating him to procure the release of the prisoner by interceding for him with the emperor. For the fame of the miracles done by Eutychian had reached the ears of the emperor. He readily promised to go to the sovereign; but as the chains inflicted intolerable suffering, those who interested themselves on his behalf declared that death caused by the effect of his chains would anticipate both the emperor’s vengeance and any intercession that might be made for the prisoner. Accordingly Eutychian sent to the jailers requesting them to relieve the man; but they having answered that they should bring themselves into danger by relieving a criminal, he went himself to the prison, attended by Auxanon; and as they refused to open the jail, the grace which rested on Eutychian was rendered more conspicuous: for the gates of the prison opened of their own accord, while the jailers had the keys in their custody. As soon as Eutychian, together with Auxanon, had entered the prison, to the great astonishment of all then present the fetters spontaneously fell from the prisoner’s limbs. He then proceeded with Auxanon to the city which was anciently called Byzantium but afterwards Constantinople, where having been admitted into the imperial palace, he saved the man from death; for the emperor, entertaining great veneration for Eutychian, readily granted his request. This indeed occurred some time after [the period to which this part of our history refers].

The bishops who were convened at the council of Nicaea, after having drawn up and enrolled certain other ecclesiastical regulations which they are accustomed to term canons, again departed to their respective cities: and as I conceive it will be appreciated by lovers of learning, I shall here subjoin the names of such as were present, as far as I have been able to ascertain them, with the province and city over which they severally presided, and likewise the date at which this assembly took place. Hosius, who was I believe bishop of Cordova in Spain, as I have before stated. Vito and Vicentius, presbyters of Rome, Alexander, bishop of Egypt, Eustathius of Antiochia Magna, Macarius of Jerusalem, and Harpocratetime of Cy-nopolis: the names of the rest are fully reported in The Synodicon of Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria. This Synod was convened (as we have discovered from the notation of the date prefixed to the record of the Synod) in the consulate of Paulinus and Julian, on the 20th day of May, and in the 636th year from the reign of Alexander the Macedonian.201 Accordingly the work of the council was accomplished. It should be noted that after the council the emperor went into the western parts of the empire.

---

200 This work of Athanasius is not now extant.
201 May 20, 325 a.d.
Chapter XIV.—Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, and Theognis Bishop of Nicæa, who had been banished for agreeing in Opinion with Arius, having published their Recantation, and assented to the Creed, are reinstated in their Sees.

Eusebius²⁰² and Theognis having sent a penitential confession to the principal bishops, were by an imperial edict recalled from exile and restored to their own churches, displacing those who had been ordained in their places; Eusebius [displacing] Amphion, and Theognis Chrestus. This is a copy of their written retraction:

‘We having been sometime since condemned by your piety, without a formal trial, ought to bear in silence the decisions of your sacred adjudication. But since it is unreasonable that we by silence should countenance calumniators against ourselves, we on this account declare that we entirely concur with you in the faith; and also that, after having closely considered the import of the term consubstantial, we have been wholly studious of peace, having never followed the heresy. After suggesting whatever entered our thought for the security of the churches, and fully assuring those under our influence, we subscribed the declaration of faith; we did not subscribe the anathematizing; not as objecting to the creed, but as disbelieving the party accused to be such as was represented, having been satisfied on this point, both from his own letters to us, and from personal conversations. But if your holy council was convinced, we not opposing but concurring in your decisions, by this statement give them our full assent and confirmation: and this we do not as weariest with our exile, but to shake off the suspicion of heresy. If therefore ye should now think fit to restore us to your presence, ye will have us on all points conformable, and acquiescent in your decrees: especially since it has seemed good to your piety to deal tenderly with and recall even him who was primarily accused. It would be absurd for us to be silent, and thus give presumptive evidence against ourselves, when the one who seemed responsible has been permitted to clear himself from the charges brought against him. Vouchsafe then, as is consistent with that Christ-loving piety of yours, to remind our most religious emperor, to present our petitions, and to determine speedily concerning us in a way becoming yourselves.’

Such was the language of the recantation of Eusebius and Theognis; from which I infer that they had subscribed the articles of faith which had been set forth, but would not become parties to the condemnation of Arius. It appears also that Arius was recalled before them; but, although this may be true, yet he had been forbidden to enter Alexandria. This is evident from the fact that he afterwards devised a way of return for himself, both into the church and into Alexandria, by having made a fictitious repentance, as we shall show in its proper place.

---

²⁰² This is not in its place according to chronological order, inasmuch as it occurred in 328 a.d. It appears also from the accounts of the other historians of this period that Socrates does not give the correct reason for the banishment of Eusebius and Theognis. Cf. Theodoret, H. E. I. 20; also Sozom. I. 21.
Chapter XV.—After the Synod, on the Death of Alexander, Athanasius is constituted Bishop of Alexandria.

A little after this, Alexander bishop of Alexandria having died, Athanasius was set over that church. Rufinus relates, that this [Athanasius] when quite a boy, played with others of his own age at a sacred game: this was an imitation of the priesthood and the order of consecrated persons. In this game therefore Athanasius was allotted the episcopal chair, and each of the other lads personated either a presbyter or a deacon. The children engaged in this sport on the day in which the memory of the martyr and bishop Peter was celebrated. Now at that time Alexander bishop of Alexandria happening to pass by, observed the play in which they were engaged, and having sent for the children, enquired from them the part each had been assigned in the game, conceiving that something might be portended by that which had been done. He then gave directions that the children should be taken to the church, and instructed in learning, but especially Athanasius; and having afterwards ordained him deacon on his becoming of adult age, he brought him to Nicæa to assist him in the disputations there when the Synod was convened. This account of Athanasius Rufinus has given in his own writings; nor is it improbable that it took place, for many transactions of this kind have often occurred. Concerning this matter it will suffice to have said the above.

203 Socrates and Sozomen are both mistaken in putting the death of Alexander and ordination of Athanasius after the return of Eusebius and Theognis from exile. According to Theodoret (H. E. I. 26), Alexander died a few months after the Council of Nicæa, hence in 325 a.d., and Athanasius succeeded him at the end of the same year, or at the beginning of the next.

204 See, for additional features of the story not reproduced by Socrates, Rufinus, H. E. I. 14.
Chapter XVI.—The Emperor Constantine having enlarged the Ancient Byzantium, calls it Constantinople.

After the Synod the emperor spent some time in recreation, and after the public celebration of his twentieth anniversary of his accession, he immediately devoted himself to the reparation of the churches. This he carried into effect in other cities as well as in the city named after him, which being previously called Byzantium, he enlarged, surrounded with massive walls, and adorned with various edifices; and having rendered it equal to imperial Rome, he named it Constantinople, establishing by law that it should be designated New Rome. This law was engraven on a pillar of stone erected in public view in the Strategium, near the emperor’s equestrian statue. He built also in the same city two churches, one of which he named Irene, and the other The Apostles. Nor did he only improve the affairs of the Christians, as I have said, but he also destroyed the superstition of the heathens; for he brought forth their images into public view to ornament the city of Constantinople, and set up the Delphic tripods publicly in the Hippodrome. It may indeed seem now superfluous to mention these things, since they are seen before they are heard of. But at that time the Christian cause received its greatest augmentation; for Divine Providence preserved very many other things during the times of the emperor Constantine. Eusebius Pamphilus has in magnificent terms recorded the praises of the emperor; and I considered it would not be ill-timed to advert thus to them as concisely as possible.

---

205 The Vicennalia.
206 These walls were superseded by the great walls built under Theodosius the Younger; see VII. 31.
207 ‘Mansion house,’ the building in which the two chief magistrates had their headquarters.
208 The city was formally dedicated as the capital of the empire in 330 a.d.
209 Cf. II. 16, and I. 40.
210 The text seems somewhat doubtful here. Valesius conjectures Ἄ τε ἄλλα πλεῖότα καὶ τοῦτο μᾶλιστα, idiomatically, ‘this among many other things’; but the mss. read more obscurely, καὶ ἄλλα πλεῖότα.
211 Euseb. Life of Const. III. 33; cf. also 52–55.
Chapter XVII.—The Emperor’s Mother Helena having come to Jerusalem, searches for and finds the Cross of Christ, and builds a Church.

Helena, the emperor’s mother (from whose name having made Drepanum, once a village, a city, the emperor called it Helenopolis), being divinely directed by dreams went to Jerusalem. Finding that which was once Jerusalem, desolate as a Preserve for autumnal fruits, according to the prophet, she sought carefully the sepulchre of Christ, from which he arose after his burial; and after much difficulty, by God’s help she discovered it. What the cause of the difficulty was I will explain in a few words. Those who embraced the Christian faith, after the period of his passion, greatly venerated this tomb; but those who hated Christianity, having covered the spot with a mound of earth, erected on it a temple to Venus, and set up her image there, not caring for the memory of the place. This succeeded for a long time; and it became known to the emperor’s mother. Accordingly she having caused the statue to be thrown down, the earth to be removed, and the ground entirely cleared, found three crosses in the sepulchre: one of these was that blessed cross on which Christ had hung, the other two were those on which the two thieves that were crucified with him had died. With these was also found the tablet of Pilate, on which he had inscribed in various characters, that the Christ who was crucified was king of the Jews. Since, however, it was doubtful which was the cross they were in search of, the emperor’s mother was not a little distressed; but from this trouble the bishop of Jerusalem, Macarius, shortly relieved her. And he solved the doubt by faith, for he sought a sign from God and obtained it. The sign was this: a certain woman of the neighborhood, who had been long afflicted with disease, was now just at the point of death; the bishop therefore arranged it so that each of the crosses should be brought to the dying woman, believing that she would be healed on touching the precious cross. Nor was he disappointed in his expectation: for the two crosses having been applied which were not the Lord’s, the woman still continued in a dying state; but when the third, which was the true cross, touched her, she was immediately healed, and recovered her former strength. In this manner then was the genuine cross discovered. The emperor’s mother erected over the place of the sepulchre a magnificent church, and named it New Jerusalem, having built it facing that old and deserted city. There she left a portion of the cross, enclosed in a silver case, as a memorial to those who might wish to see it: the other part she sent to the

---

212 Isa. i. 8. ὀπωροφυλάκιον, ‘a lodge in a garden of cucumbers,’ according to the English versions (both authorized and revised), which follows the Hebrew; in the LXX the words ἐν σικυηράτῳ are added.

213 See the Ep. of Constantine to Macarius, in chap. 9 above.

214 ξύλον, as distinguished from ἄγαλμα, or ἁνδρίας, used with less reverence; the word is derived from ξέω, ‘to polish.’

215 σανίς, ‘board.’

216 οἶκον εὐκτήριον, ‘house of prayer.’

65
emperor, who being persuaded that the city would be perfectly secure where that relic should be preserved, privately enclosed it in his own statue, which stands on a large column of porphyry in the forum called Constantine’s at Constantinople. I have written this from report indeed; but almost all the inhabitants of Constantinople affirm that it is true. Moreover the nails with which Christ’s hands were fastened to the cross (for his mother having found these also in the sepulchre had sent them) Constantine took and had made into bridle-bits and a helmet, which he used in his military expeditions. The emperor supplied all materials for the construction of the churches, and wrote to Macarius the bishop to expedite these edifices. When the emperor’s mother had completed the New Jerusalem, she reared another church not at all inferior, over the cave at Bethlehem where Christ was born according to the flesh: nor did she stop here, but built a third on the mount of his Ascension. So devoutly was she affected in these matters, that she would pray in the company of women; and inviting the virgins enrolled in the register\textsuperscript{217} of the churches to a repast, serving them herself, she brought the dishes to table. She was also very munificent to the churches and to the poor; and having lived a life of piety, she died when about eighty years old. Her remains were conveyed to New Rome, the capital, and deposited in the imperial sepulchres.

\textsuperscript{217} κανόνι: a word of many meanings; see Sophocles’ Lex. and a dissertation on the word in Westcott \textit{On the Canon} Appendix A, p. 499.
Chapter XVIII.—The Emperor Constantine abolishes Paganism and erects many Churches in Different Places.

After this the emperor became increasingly attentive to the interests of the Christians, and abandoned the heathen superstitions. He abolished the combats of the gladiators, and set up his own statues in the temples. And as the heathens affirmed that it was Serapis who brought up the Nile for the purpose of irrigating Egypt, because a cubit was usually carried into his temple, he directed Alexander to transfer the cubit to the church. And although they predicted that the Nile would not overflow because of the displeasure of Serapis, nevertheless there was an inundation in the following year and afterwards, taking place regularly: thus it was proved by fact that the rising of the Nile was not in consequence of their superstition, but by reason of the decrees of Providence. About the same time those barbarians the Sarmatians and Goths made incursions on the Roman territory; yet the emperor’s earnestness respecting the churches was by no means abated, but he made suitable provision for both these matters. Placing his confidence in the Christian banner, he completely vanquished his enemies, so as even to cast off the tribute of gold which preceding emperors were accustomed to pay the barbarians: while they themselves, being terror-struck at the unexpectedness of their defeat, then for the first time embraced the Christian religion, by means of which Constantine had been protected. Again he built other churches, one of which was erected near the Oak of Mamre, under which the Sacred Oracles declare that Abraham entertained angels. For the emperor having been informed that altars had been reared under that oak, and that pagan sacrifices were offered upon them, censured by letter Eusebius bishop of Cæsarea, and ordered that the altars should be demolished, and a house of prayer erected beside the oak. He also directed that another church should be constructed in Heliopolis in Phœnicia, for this reason. Who originally legislated for the inhabitants of Heliopolis I am unable to state, but his character and morals may be judged of from the [practice of that] city; for the laws of the country ordered the women among them to be common, and therefore the children born there were of doubtful descent, so that there was no distinction of fathers and their offspring. Their virgins also were presented for prostitution to the strangers who resorted thither. The emperor hastened to correct this evil which had long prevailed among them. And passing a solemn law of chastity, he removed the shameful evil and provided for the mutual recognition of families. And having built churches there, he took care that a bishop and sacred clergy should be ordained. Thus he reformed the corrupt manners of the people of Heliopolis. He likewise demolished the temple of Venus at Aphaca on Mount Libanus, and abolished the infamous deeds which were there celebrated. Why need I describe his expulsion of the Pythonic demon from Cilicia, by commanding the mansion in which he was lurking to be razed from its foundations? So great indeed was the emperor’s devotion to Christianity, that when he was about to enter on a war with Persia, he prepared a tabernacle formed of embroidered linen on the model of a church, just as Moses had done in the wilderness;\(^{219}\) and this so constructed as to be adapted to conveyance from place to place, in order that he might have a house of prayer even in the most desert regions. But the war was not at that time carried on, being prevented through dread of the emperor. It would, I conceive, be out of place here to describe the emperor’s diligence in rebuilding cities and converting many villages into cities; as for example Drepanum, to which he gave his mother’s name, and Constantia in Palestine, so called from his sister. For my task is not to enumerate of the emperor’s actions, but simply such as are connected with Christianity, and especially those which relate to the churches. Wherefore I leave to others more competent to detail such matters, the emperor’s glorious achievements, inasmuch as they belong to a different subject, and require a distinct treatise. But I myself should have been silent, if the Church had remained undisturbed by divisions: for where the subject does not supply matter for relation, there is no necessity for a narrator. Since however subtle and vain disputation has confused and at the same time scattered the apostolic faith of Christianity, I thought it desirable to record these things, in order that the transactions of the churches might not be lost in obscurity. For accurate information on these points procures celebrity among the many, and at the same time renders him who is acquainted with them more secure from error, and instructs him not to be carried away by any empty sound of sophistical argumentation which he may chance to hear.\(^{219}\)

\(^{219}\) Ex. xxxv.–xl.
Chapter XIX. — In what Manner the Nations in the Interior of India were Christianized in the Times of Constantine.

We must now mention in what manner Christianity was spread in this emperor's reign: for it was in his time that the nations both of the Indians in the interior, and of the Iberians first embraced the Christian faith. But I shall briefly explain why I have used the appended expression in the interior. When the apostles went forth by lot among the nations, Thomas received the apostleship of the Parthians; Matthew was allotted Ethiopia; and Bartholomew the part of India contiguous to that country; but the interior India, in which many barbarous nations using different languages lived, was not enlightened by Christian doctrine before the times of Constantine. I now come to speak of the cause which led them to become converts to Christianity. A certain philosopher, Meropius, a Tyrian by race, determined to acquaint himself with the country of the Indians, being stimulated to this by the example of the philosopher Metrodorus, who had previously traveled through the region of India. Having taken with him therefore two youths to whom he was related, who were by no means ignorant of the Greek language, Meropius reached the country by ship; and when he had inspected whatever he wished, he touched at a certain place which had a safe harbor, for the purpose of procuring some necessaries. It so happened that a little before that time the treaty between the Romans and Indians had been violated. The Indians, therefore, having seized the philosopher and those who sailed with him, killed them all except his two youthful kinsmen; but sparing them from compassion for their tender age, they sent them as a gift to the king of the Indians. He being pleased with the personal appearance of the youths, constituted one of them, whose name was Edesius, cup-bearer at his table; the other, named Frumentius, he entrusted with the care of the royal records. The king dying soon after, left them free, the government devolving on his wife and infant son. Now the queen seeing her son thus left in his minority, begged the young men to undertake the charge of him, until he should become of adult age. Accordingly, the youths accepted the task, and entered on the administration of the kingdom. Thus Frumentius controlled all things and made it a task to enquire whether among the Roman merchants trafficking with that country, there were any Christians to be found: and having discovered some, he informed them who he was, and exhorted them to select and occupy some appropriate places for the celebration of Christian worship. In the course of a little while he built a house of prayer; and having instructed some of the Indians in the principles of Christianity, they fitted them for participation in the worship. On the young king’s reaching maturity, Frumentius and his associates resigned to him the administration of public affairs, in the management of which they had honorially acquitted themselves, and besought permission to return to their own country.
Both the king and his mother entreated them to remain; but being desirous of revisiting their native place, they could not be prevailed on, and consequently departed. Edesius for his part hastened to Tyre to see his parents and kindred; but Frumentius arriving at Alexandria, reported the affair to Athanasius the bishop, who had but recently been invested with that dignity; and acquainting him both with the particulars of his wanderings and the hopes Indians had of receiving Christianity. He also begged him to send a bishop and clergy there, and by no means to neglect those who might thus be brought to salvation. Athanasius having considered how this could be most profitably effected, requested Frumentius himself to accept the bishopric, declaring that he could appoint no one more suitable than he was.
Accordingly this was done; Frumentius invested with episcopal authority, returned to India and became there a preacher of the Gospel, and built several churches, being aided also by divine grace, he performed various miracles, healing with the souls also the bodily diseases of many. Rufinus assures us that he heard these facts from Edesius, who was afterwards ordained to the priesthood at Tyre.
Chapter XX.—In what Manner the Iberians were converted to Christianity.

It is now proper to relate how the Iberians about the same time became proselytes to the faith. A certain woman leading a devout and chaste life, was, in the providential ordering of God, taken captive by the Iberians. Now these Iberians dwell near the Euxine Sea, and are a colony of the Iberians of Spain. Accordingly the woman in her captivity exercised herself among the barbarians in the practice of virtue: for she not only maintained the most rigid continence, but spent much time in fastings and prayers. The barbarians observing this were astonished at the strangeness of her conduct. It happened then that the king’s son, then a mere babe, was attacked with disease; the queen, according to the custom of the country, sent the child to other women to be cured, in the hope that their experience would supply a remedy. After the infant had been carried around by its nurse without obtaining relief from any of the women, he was at length brought to this captive. She had no knowledge of the medical art, and applied no material remedy; but taking the child and laying it on her bed which was made of horsecloth, in the presence of other females, she simply said, ‘Christ, who healed many, will heal this child also’; then having prayed in addition to this expression of faith, and called upon God, the boy was immediately restored, and continued well from that period. The report of this miracle spread itself far and wide among the barbarian women, and soon reached the queen, so that the captive became very celebrated. Not long afterwards the queen herself having fallen sick sent for the captive woman. Inasmuch as she being a person of modest and retiring manners excused herself from going, the queen was conveyed to her. The captive did the same to her as she had done to her son before; and immediately the disease was removed. And the queen thanked the stranger; but she replied, ‘this work is not mine, but Christ’s, who is the Son of God that made the world’; she therefore exhorted her to call upon him, and acknowledge the true God. Amazed at his wife’s sudden restoration to health, the king of the Iberians wished to requite with gifts her whom he had understood to be the means of effecting these cures; she however said that she needed not riches, inasmuch as she possessed as riches the consolations of religion; but that she would regard as the greatest present he could offer her, his recognition of the God whom she worshiped and declared. With this she sent back the gifts. This answer the king treasured up in his mind, and going forth to the chase the next day, the following circumstance occurred: a mist and thick darkness covered the mountain tops and forests where he was hunting, so that their 223 These Iberians dwelt on the east shore of the Black Sea in the present region of Georgia. What their relation to the Spanish Iberians was, or why both the peoples had the same name it is not possible to know at present. It was probably not the one suggested by Socrates. For a similar identity of name in peoples living widely apart, compare the Gauls of Europe and the Galatæ of Asia.

224 ἐφιλοσόφει: the ethical sense here attached to the word became very common after the time of the Stoics and their attempt to make ethics the basis and starting-point of philosophy.
sport was embarrassed, and their path became inextricable. In this perplexity the prince earnestly invoked the gods whom he worshiped; and as it availed nothing, he at last determined to implore the assistance of the captive’s God; when scarcely had he begun to pray, ere the darkness arising from the mist was completely dissipated. Wondering at that which was done, he returned to his palace rejoicing, and related to his wife what had happened; he also immediately sent for the captive stranger, and begged her to inform him who that God was whom she adored. The woman on her arrival caused the king of the Iberians to become a preacher of Christ: for having believed in Christ through this devoted woman, he convened all the Iberians who were under his authority; and when he had declared to them what had taken place in reference to the cure of his wife and child not only, but also the circumstances connected with the chase, he exhorted them to worship the God of the captive. Thus, therefore, both the king and the queen were made preachers of Christ, the one addressing their male, and the other their female subjects. Moreover, the king having ascertained from his prisoner the plan on which churches were constructed among the Romans, ordered a church to be built, and immediately provided all things necessary for its erection; and the edifice was accordingly commenced. But when they came to set up the pillars, Divine Providence interposed for the confirmation of the inhabitants in the faith; for one of the columns remained immovable, and no means were found capable of moving it; but their ropes broke and their machinery fell to pieces; at length the workmen gave up all further effort and departed. Then was proved the reality of the captive’s faith in the following manner: going to the place at night without the knowledge of any one, she spent the whole time in prayer; and by the power of God the pillar was raised, and stood erect in the air above its base, yet so as not to touch it. At daybreak the king, who was an intelligent person, came himself to inspect the work, and seeing the pillar suspended in this position without support, both he and his attendants were amazed. Shortly after, in fact before their very eyes, the pillar descended on its own pedestal, and there remained fixed. Upon this the people shouted, attesting the truth of the king’s faith, and hymning the praise of the God of the captive. They believed thenceforth, and with eagerness raised the rest of the columns, and the whole building was soon completed. An embassy was afterwards sent to the Emperor Constantine, requesting that henceforth they might be in alliance with the Romans, and receive from them a bishop and consecrated clergy, since they sincerely believed in Christ. Rufinus says that he learned these facts from Bacurius, who was formerly one of the petty princes of the Iberians, but subsequently went over to the Romans, and was made a captain of the military force in Palestine; being at length entrusted with the supreme com-

---

225 Rufinus, H. E. I. 10, gives their story and adds that Bacurius was a faithful and religious person and rendered service to Theodosius in his war with Eugenius.
226 βασιλίσκος: lit. ‘little king.’
mand in the war against the tyrant Maximus, he assisted the Emperor Theodosius. In this way then, during the days of Constantine, were the Iberians also converted to Christianity.
Chapter XXI.—Of Anthony the Monk.

What sort of a man the monk Anthony was, who lived in the same age, in the Egyptian desert, and how he openly contended with devils, clearly detecting their devices and wily modes of warfare, and how he performed many miracles, it would be superfluous for us to say; for Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, has anticipated us, having devoted an entire book to his biography.\textsuperscript{227} Of such good men there was a large number at one time during the years of the Emperor Constantine.

\textsuperscript{227} Athanasius’ \textit{Life of Anthony} is included in the editions of his works, such as the Benedictine (1698), that of Padua (1777). On Anthony, see also Soz. I. 3; II. 31, 34.
Chapter XXII.—Manes, the Founder of the Manichæan Heresy, and on his Origin.

But amidst the good wheat, tares are accustomed to spring up; for envy loves to plot insidiously against the good. Hence it was that a little while before the time of Constantine, a species of heathenish Christianity made its appearance together with that which was real; just as false prophets sprang up among the true, and false apostles among the true apostles. For at that time a dogma of Empedocles, the heathen philosopher, by means of Manichæus, assumed the form of Christian doctrine. Eusebius Pamphilus has indeed mentioned this person in the seventh book of his Ecclesiastical History, but has not entered into minute details concerning him. Wherefore, I deem it incumbent on me to supply some particulars which he has left unnoticed: thus it will be known who this Manichæus was, whence he came, and what was the nature of his presumptuous daring.

A Saracen named Scythian married a captive from the Upper Thebes. On her account he dwelt in Egypt, and having versed himself in the learning of the Egyptians, he subtly introduced the theory of Empedocles and Pythagoras among the doctrines of the Christian faith. Asserting that there were two natures, a good and an evil one, he termed, as Empedocles had done, the latter Discord, and the former Friendship. Of this Scythian, Buddas, who had been previously called Terebinthus, became a disciple; and he having proceeded to Babylon, which the Persians inhabit, made many extravagant statements respecting himself, declaring that he was born of a virgin, and brought up in the mountains. The same man afterwards composed four books, one he entitled The Mysteries, another The Gospel, a third The Treasure, and the fourth Heads [Summaries]; but pretending to perform some mystic rites, he was hurled down a precipice by a spirit, and so perished. A certain woman at whose house he had lodged buried him, and taking possession of his property, bought a boy about seven years old whose name was Cubricus: this lad she enfranchised, and having given him a liberal education, she soon after died, leaving him all that belonged to Terebinthus, including the books he had written on the principles inculcated by Scythian. Cubricus, the freedman, taking these things with him and having withdrawn into the regions of Persia, changed his name, calling himself Manes; and disseminated the books of Buddas or Terebinthus among his deluded followers as his own. Now the contents of these treatises apparently agree with Christianity in expression, but are pagan in sentiment: for Manichæus being an atheist, incited his disciples to acknowledge a plurality of gods, and taught them to worship the sun. He also introduced the doctrine of Fate, denying human free-will; and affirmed a transmutation of bodies, clearly following the opinions of Empedocles, Pythagoras, and the Egyptians. He denied that Christ existed in the flesh, asserting that he was an apparition; and rejected moreover the law and the prophets, calling himself the ‘Comforter,’—all of which dogmas are totally at variance with the orthodox faith of the church. In his epistles he even dared to call himself an apostle; but for a pretension so unfounded he brought upon himself merited retribution in the following manner. The son of the Persian monarch having been attacked with disease, his father became anxious for his recovery, and left no means untried in order to effect it; and as he had heard of the wonder-working of Manichæus, and thinking that these miracles were real, he sent for him as an apostle, trusting that through him his son might be restored. He accordingly presented himself at court, and with his assumed manner undertook the treatment of the young prince. But the king seeing that the child died in his hands shut up the deceiver in prison, with the intention of putting him to death. However, he contrived to escape, and fled into Mesopotamia; but the king of Persia having discovered that he was dwelling there, caused him to be brought thence by force, and after having flayed him alive, he stuffed his skin with chaff, and suspended it in front of the gate of the city. These things we state not having manufactured them ourselves, but collected from a book entitled The disputation of Archelaus bishop of Caschara (one of the cities of Mesopotamia). For Archelaus himself states that he disputed with Manichæus face to face, and mentions the circumstances connected with his life to which we have now alluded. Envy thus delights, as we before remarked, to be insidiously at work in the midst of a prosperous condition of affairs. But for what reason the goodness of God permits this to be done, whether he wishes thereby to bring into activity the excellence of the principles of the church, and to utterly break down the self-importance which is wont to unite itself with faith; or for what other cause, is, at the same time, a difficult question, and not relevant to the present discussion. For our object is neither to examine the soundness of doctrinal views, nor to analyze the mysterious reasons for the providences and judgments of God; but to detail as faithfully as possible the history of transactions which have taken place in the churches. The way in which the superstition of the Manichæans sprang up a little before the time of Constantine has been thus described; now let us return to the times and events which are the proper subjects of this history.

228 Cf. Eus. H. E. VII. 31. The literature of Manicheism is voluminous and will be found in Smith, Dict. of the Bible, as well as encyclopædias like Herzog, McClintock and Strong, &c.
229 πνεύματος: possibly 'wind.'
230 μετενσωμάτωσιν, the converse of metempsychosis.

231 The more commonly known name of the town is ‘Carrha,’ and the exact title of Archelaus’ work as it appears in Valesius’ Annotationes [ed. of 1677, see Introd. p. xvi.] is Disputatio adversus Manichæum. It constitutes p. 197–203 of the Annotationes, and is in Latin. It has been published also in Latin by L. A. Zacagui in his collectanea monumentorum veterum Ecclesie Graecæ ac Latinae, 1698.
Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, and Theognis Bishop of Nicæa, having recovered Confidence, endeavor to subvert the Nicene Creed, by plotting against Athanasius.

The partisans of Eusebius and Theognis having returned from their exile, these latter were reinstated in their churches, having expelled, as we observed, those who had been ordained in their stead. Moreover, they came into great consideration with the emperor, who honored them exceedingly, as those who had returned from error to the orthodox faith. They, however, abused the license thus afforded them, by exciting greater commotions in the world than they had done before; being instigated to this by two causes—on the one hand the Arian heresy with which they had been previously infected, and bitter animosity against Athanasius on the other, because he had so vigorously withstood them in the Synod while the articles of faith were under discussion. And in the first place they objected to the ordination of Athanasius partly as a person unworthy of the prelacy, and partly because he had been elected by disqualified persons. But when Athanasius had shown himself superior to this calumny (for having assumed control of the church of Alexandria, he ardently contended for the Nicene creed), then Eusebius exerted himself to the utmost insidiously to cause the removal of Athanasius and to bring Arius back to Alexandria; for he thought that thus only he should be able to expunge the doctrine of consubstantiality, and introduce Arianism. Eusebius therefore wrote to Athanasius, desiring him to re-admit Arius and his adherents into the church. Now the tone of his letter indeed was that of entreaty, but openly he menaced him. And as Athanasius would by no means accede to this, he endeavored to induce the emperor to give Arius an audience, and then permit him to return to Alexandria: and by what means he attained his object, I shall mention in its proper place. Meanwhile before this another commotion was raised in the church. In fact, her own children again disturbed her peace. Eusebius Pamphilus says, that immediately after the Synod, Egypt became agitated by intestine divisions: not assigning, however, the reason for this, so that hence he has won the reputation of disingenuousness, and of avoiding to specify the causes of these dissensions, from a determination on his part not to give his sanction to the proceedings at Nicæa. Yet as we ourselves have discovered from various letters which the bishops wrote to one another after the Synod, the term homoousios troubled some of them. So that while they occupied themselves in a too minute investigation of its import, they roused the strife against each other; it seemed not unlike a contest in the dark; for neither party appeared to understand distinctly the grounds on which they calumniated one another. Those who objected to the word homoousios, conceived that those who approved it favored the opinion of Sabellius; and Montanus; they therefore called them blasphemers, as 233 Cf. ch. 5, and note.

234 It is not clear why Socrates joins the name of Montanus to that of Sabellius; the former was undoubtedly in accord with the common doctrine of the church as to the Trinity. Cf. Epiphan. Haer. XLVIII. and Tertullian subverting the existence of the Son of God. And again the advocates of this term, charging their opponents with polytheism, inveighed against them as introducers of heathen superstitions. Eustathius, bishop of Antioch, accuses Eusebius Pamphilus of perverting the Nicene Creed; Eusebius again denies that he violates that exposition of the faith, and recriminates, saying that Eustathius was a defender of the opinion of Sabellius. In consequence of these misunderstandings, each of them wrote as if contending against adversaries: and although it was admitted on both sides that the Son of God has a distinct person and existence, and all acknowledged that there is one God in three Persons, yet from what cause I am unable to divine, they could not agree among themselves, and therefore could in no way endure to be at peace.

---

ad. Praxeam. It was, however, frequently alleged by various writers of the age that Montanus and the Montanists held erroneous views concerning the Godhead. See Eus. H. E. V. 16.
Chapter XXIV.—Of the Synod held at Antioch, which deposed Eustathius, Bishop of Antioch, on whose account a Sedition broke out and almost ruined the City.

Having therefore convened a Synod at Antioch, they deposed Eustathius, as a supporter of the Sabellian heresy, rather than of the tenets which the council at Nicæa had formulated. As some affirm [this measure was taken] for other and unsatisfactory reasons, though none other have been openly assigned: this is a matter of common occurrence; the bishops are accustomed to do this in all cases, accusing and pronouncing impious those whom they depose, but not explaining their warrant for so doing. George, bishop of Laodicea in Syria, one of the number of those who abominated the term homoousios, assures us in his Encomium of Eusebius Emisenus, that they deposed Eustathius as favoring Sabellianism, on the impeachment of Cyrus, bishop of Berœa. Of Eusebius Emisenus we shall speak elsewhere in due order. 235 George has written of Eustathius [somewhat inconsistently]; for after asserting that he was accused by Cyrus of maintaining the heresy of Sabellius, he tells us again that Cyrus himself was convicted of the same error, and degraded for it. Now how was it possible that Cyrus should accuse Eustathius as a Sabellian, when he inclined to Sabellianism himself? It appears likely therefore that Eustathius must have been condemned on other grounds. At that time, however, there arose a dangerous sedition at Antioch on account of his deposition: for when they proceeded to the election of a successor, so fierce a dissension was kindled, as to threaten the whole city with destruction. The populace was divided into two factions, one of which vehemently contended for the translation of Eusebius Pamphilus from Cæsarea in Palestine to Antioch; the other equally insisted on the reinstatement of Eustathius. And the populace of the city were infected with the spirit of partisanship in this quarrel among the Christians, a military force was arrayed on both sides with hostile intent, so that a bloody collision would have taken place, had not God and the dread of the emperor repressed the violence of the multitude. For the emperor through letters, and Eusebius by refusing to accept the bishopric, served to allay the ferment: on which account that prelate was exceedingly admired by the emperor, who wrote to him commending his prudent determination, and congratulating him as one who was considered worthy of being bishop not of one city merely, but of almost the whole world. Consequently it is said that the episcopal chair of the church at Antioch was vacant for eight consecutive years after this period; 236 but at length by the exertions of those who aimed at the subversion of the Nicene creed, Euphronius was duly installed. This is the amount of my information respecting the Synod held at Antioch on account of Eustathius. Immediately after these events Eusebius, 235 See II. 9.

236 Socrates is in error here, as according to Eusebius (H. E. X. 1), immediately after the deposition of Eustathius and his own refusal of the bishopric of Antioch, Paulinus was transferred there from the see of Tyre. This was in 329 a.d., so that no vacancy of eight years intervened. who had long before left Berytus, and was at that time presiding over the church at Nicomedia, strenuously exerted himself in connection to those of his party, to bring back Arius to Alexandria. But how they managed to effect this, and by what means the emperor was prevailed on to admit both Arius and with him Euzoïus into his presence must now be related.
Chapter XXV.—Of the Presbyter who exerted himself for the Recall of Arius.²³⁷

The Emperor Constantine had a sister named Constantia, the widow of Licinius, who had for some time shared the imperial dignity with Constantine, but had assumed tyrannical powers and had been put to death in consequence. This princess maintained in her household establishment a certain confidential presbyter, tinctured with the dogmas of Arianism; Eusebius and others having prompted him, he took occasion in his familiar conversations with Constantia, to insinuate that the Synod had done Arius injustice, and that the common report concerning him was not true. Constantia gave full credence to the presbyter’s assertions, but durst not report them to the emperor. Now it happened that she became dangerously ill, and her brother visited her daily. As the disease became aggravated and she expected to die, she commended this presbyter to the emperor, testifying to his diligence and piety, as well as his devoted loyalty to his sovereign. She died soon after, whereupon the presbyter became one of the most confidential persons about the emperor; and having gradually increased in freedom of speech, he repeated to the emperor what he had before stated to his sister, affirming that Arius had no other views than the sentiments avowed by the Synod; and that if he were admitted to the imperial presence, he would give his full assent to what the Synod had decreed: he added, moreover, that he had been unreasonably slandered. The presbyter’s words appeared strange to the emperor, and he said, ‘If Arius subscribes with the Synod and holds its views, I will both give him an audience, and send him back to Alexandria with honor.’ Having thus said, he immediately wrote to him in these words:

‘Victor Constantine Maximus Augustus, to Arius.’

It was intimated to your reverence some time since, that you might come to my court, in order to obtain an interview with us. We are not a little surprised that you did not do this immediately. Wherefore having at once mounted a public vehicle, hasten to arrive at our court; that when you have experienced our clemency and regard for you, you may return to your own country. May God protect you, beloved. Dated the twenty-fifth of November.

This was the letter of the emperor to Arius. And I cannot but admire the ardent zeal which the prince manifested for religion: for it appears from this document that he had often before exhorted Arius to change his views, inasmuch as he censures his delaying to return to the truth, although he had himself written frequently to him. Now on the receipt of this letter, Arius came to Constantinople accompanied by Euzoïus, whom Alexander had divested of his deaconship when he excommunicated Arius and his partisans. The emperor accordingly admitted them to his presence, and asked them whether they would agree to the creed.

²³⁷ Cf. Rufinus, H. E. I. 11. The fact that the name of this presbyter is not mentioned, and Athanasius’ apparent ignorance of the story, together with the untrustworthiness of Rufinus, throw suspicion on the authenticity of this account. Cf. also ch. 39, note 2.
And when they readily gave their assent, he ordered them to deliver to him a written statement of their faith.
Arius, on being recalled, presents a Recantation to the Emperor, and pretends to accept the Nicene Creed.

They having drawn up a declaration to the following effect, presented it to the emperor.

‘Arius and Euzoïus, to our Most Religious and Pious Lord, the Emperor Constantine.

‘In accordance with the command of your devout piety, sovereign lord, we declare our faith, and before God profess in writing, that we and our adherents believe as follows:

‘We believe in one God the Father Almighty: and in the Lord Jesus Christ his Son, who was begotten of him before all ages, God the Word through whom all things were made, both those which are in the heavens and those upon the earth; who descended, and became incarnate, and suffered, and rose again, ascended into the heavens, and will again come to judge the living and the dead. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit, and in the resurrection of the flesh, and in the life of the coming age, and in the kingdom of the heavens, and in one Catholic Church of God, extending from one end of the earth to the other.

‘This faith we have received from the holy gospels, the Lord therein saying to his disciples, “Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.” If we do not so believe and truly receive the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, as the whole Catholic Church and the holy Scriptures teach (in which we believe in every respect), God is our judge both now, and in the coming judgment. Wherefore we beseech your piety, most devout emperor, that we who are persons consecrated to the ministry, and holding the faith and sentiments of the church and of the holy Scriptures, may by your pacific and devoted piety be reunited to our mother, the Church, all superfluous questions and disputings being avoided: that so both we and the whole church being at peace, may in common offer our accustomed prayers for your tranquil reign, and on behalf of your whole family.’

238 The old English translation rendered ‘made’ on the assumption that the Greek was γεγενημένον, not γεγεννημένον. So also Valesius read and translated ‘factum’; but Bright without mentioning any variant reading, gives γεγεννημένον, and we have ventured to translate accordingly.

239 Matt. xxviii. 9.
Chapter XXVII.—Arius having returned to Alexandria with the Emperor’s Consent, and not being received by Athanasius, the Partisans of Eusebius bring Many Charges against Athanasius before the Emperor.

Arius having thus satisfied the emperor, returned to Alexandria. But his artifice for suppressing the truth did not succeed; for on his arrival at Alexandria, as Athanasius would not receive him, but turned away from him as a pest, he attempted to excite a fresh commotion in that city by disseminating his heresy. Then indeed both Eusebius himself wrote, and prevailed on the emperor also to write, in order that Arius and his partisans might be readmitted into the church. Athanasius nevertheless wholly refused to receive them, and wrote to inform the emperor in reply, that it was impossible for those who had once rejected the faith, and had been anathematized, to be again received into communion on their return. But the emperor, provoked at this answer, menaced Athanasius in these terms:

‘Since you have been apprised of my will, afford unhindered access into the church to all those who are desirous of entering it. For if it shall be intimated to me that you have prohibited any of those claiming to be reunited to the church, or have hindered their admission, I will forthwith send some one who at my command shall depose you, and drive you into exile.’

The emperor wrote thus from a desire of promoting the public good, and because he did not wish to see the church ruptured; for he labored earnestly to bring them all into harmony. Then indeed the partisans of Eusebius, ill-disposed towards Athanasius, imagining they had found a seasonable opportunity, welcomed the emperor’s displeasure as an auxiliary to their own purpose: and on this account they raised a great disturbance, endeavoring to eject him from his bishopric; for they entertained the hope that the Arian doctrine would prevail only upon the removal of Athanasius. The chief conspirators against him were Eusebius bishop of Nicomedia, Theognis of Nicæa, Maris of Chalcedon, Ursacius of Singidnum in Upper Moesia, and Valens of Mursa in Upper Pannonia. These persons suborn by bribes certain of the Melitian heresy to fabricate various charges against Athanasius; and first they accuse him through the Melitians Ision, Eudæmon and Callinicus, of having ordered the Egyptians to pay a linen garment as tribute to the church at Alexandria. But this calumny was immediately disproved by Alypius and Macarius, presbyters of the Alexandrian church, who then happened to be at Nicomedia; they having convinced the emperor that these statements to the prejudice of Athanasius were false. Wherefore the emperor by letter severely censured his accusers, but urged Athanasius to come to him. But before he came the Eusebian faction anticipating his arrival, added to their former accusation the charge of another crime of a still more serious nature than the former; charging Athanasius with plotting against his sovereign, and with having sent for treasonable purposes a chest full of gold to one Philumenus. When, however, the emperor had himself investigated this matter at Psamathia, which is in the suburbs of Nicomedia, and had found Athanasius innocent, he dismissed him with honor; and wrote with his own hand to the church at Alexandria to assure them that their bishop had been falsely accused. It would indeed have been both proper and desirable to have passed over in silence the subsequent attacks which the Eusebians made upon Athanasius, lest from these circumstances the Church of Christ should be judged unfavorably of by those who are adverse to its interests. But since having been already committed to writing, they have become known to everybody, I have on that account deemed it necessary to make as cursory allusion to these things as possible, the particulars of which would require a special treatise. Whence the slanderous accusation originated, and the character of those who devised it, I shall now therefore state in brief. Mareotes is a district of Alexandria; there are contained in it very many villages, and an abundant population, with numerous splendid churches; these churches are all under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Alexandria, and are subject to his city as parishes. There was in this region a person named Ischyras, who had been guilty of an act deserving of many deaths; for although he had never been admitted to holy orders, he had the audacity to assume the title of presbyter, and to exercise sacred functions belonging to the priesthood. But having been detected in his sacrilegious career, he made his escape thence and sought refuge in Nicomedia, where he implored the protection of the party of Eusebius; who from their hatred to Athanasius, not only received him as a presbyter, but even promised to confer upon him the dignity of the episcopacy, if he would frame an accusation against Athanasius, listening as a pretext for this to whatever stories Ischyras had invented. For he spread a report that he had suffered dreadfully in consequence of an assault; and that Macarius had rushed furiously toward the altar, had overturned the table, and broken a mystical cup: he added also that he had burnt the sacred books. As a reward for this accusation, the Eusebian faction, as I have said, promised him a bishopric; foreseeing that the charges against Macarius would involve, along with the accused party, Athanasius, under whose orders he would seem to have acted. But this charge they formulated later; before it they devised another full of the 240 From the sentiments expressed here may be inferred the respect of the author for the church. His view on the suppression of facts which did not redound to the honor of the church does not show a very high ideal of history, but it bespeaks a laudable regard for the good name of Christianity.

241 This description is probably dependent on Athanasius, who says in his Apologia contra Arianos, 85, 'Mareotes is a region of Alexandria. In that region there never was a bishop or a deputy bishop; but the churches of the whole region are subject to the bishop of Alexandria. Each of the presbyters has separate villages, which are numerous,—sometimes ten or more.' Ischyras was probably a resident of one of the obscurest of these villages; and it can be seen that what is said of his doings here could easily come to pass.

242 παροικία = later 'parochia'; hence the derivatives.

243 Another evidence of the author’s reverence for the institutions of religion. For subsequent history of Ischyras, see II. 20.
bitterest malignity, to which I shall now advert. Having by some means, I know not what, obtained a man’s hand; whether they themselves had murdered any one, and cut off his hand, or had severed it from some dead body, God knows and the authors of the deed: but be that as it may, they publicly exposed it as the hand of Arsenius, a Melitian bishop, while they kept the alleged owner of it concealed. This hand, they asserted, had been made use of by Athanasius in the performance of certain magic arts; and therefore it was made the gravest ground of accusation which these calumniators had concerted against him: but as it generally happens, all those who entertained any pique against Athanasius came forward at the same time with a variety of other charges. When the emperor was informed of these proceedings, he wrote to his nephew Dalmatius the censor, who then had his residence at Antioch in Syria, directing him to order the accused parties to be brought before him, and after due investigation, to inflict punishment on such as might be convicted. He also sent thither Eusebius and Theognis, that the case might be tried in their presence. When Athanasius knew that he was to be summoned before the censor, he sent into Egypt to make a strict search after Arsenius; and he ascertained indeed that he was secreted there, but was unable to apprehend him, because he often changed his place of concealment. Meanwhile the emperor suppressed the trial which was to have been held before the censor, on the following account.
Chapter XXVIII.—On Account of the Charges against Athanasius, the Emperor convokes a Synod of Bishops at Tyre.

The emperor had ordered a Synod of bishops to be present at the consecration of the church which he had erected at Jerusalem. He therefore directed that, as a secondary matter, they should on their way first assemble at Tyre, to examine into the charges against Athanasius; in order that all cause of contention being removed there, they might the more peacefully perform the inaugural ceremonies in the dedication of the church of God. This was the thirtieth year of Constantine’s reign, and sixty bishops were thus convened at Tyre from various places, on the summons of Dionysius the consul. As to Macarius the presbyter, he was conducted from Alexandria in chains, under a military escort; while Athanasius was unwilling to go thither, not so much from dread, because he was innocent of the charges made, as because he feared lest any innovations should be made on the decisions of the council at Nicæa; he was, however, constrained to be present by the menacing letters of the emperor. For it had been written him that if he did not come voluntarily, he should be brought by force.

244 ἐπιβατηρία: lit. ‘ceremonies performed at embarkation.’
Chapter XXIX.—Of Arsenius, and his Hand which was said to have been cut off.

The special providence of God drove Arsenius also to Tyre; for, disregarding the injunctions he had received from the accusers who had bribed him, he went thither disguised to see what would be done. It by some means happened that the servants of Archelaus, the governor of the province, heard some persons at an inn affirm that Arsenius, who was reported to have been murdered, was concealed in the house of one of the citizens. Having heard this and marked the individuals by whom this statement was made, they communicated the information to their master, who causing strict search to be made for the man immediately, discovered and properly secured him; after which he gave notice to Athanasius that he need not be under any alarm, inasmuch as Arsenius was alive and there present. Arsenius on being apprehended, at first denied that he was the person; but Paul, bishop of Tyre, who had formerly known him, established his identity. Divine providence having thus disposed matters, Athanasius was shortly after summoned by the Synod; and as soon as he presented himself, his traducers exhibited the hand, and pressed their charge. He managed the affair with great prudence, for he enquired of those present, as well as of his accusers, who were the persons who knew Arsenius? and several having answered that they knew him, he caused Arsenius to be introduced, having his hands covered by his cloak. Then he again asked them, ‘Is this the person who has lost a hand?’ All were astonished at the unexpectedness of this procedure, except those who knew whence the hand had been cut off; for the rest thought that Arsenius was really deficient of a hand, and expected that the accused would make his defense in some other way. But Athanasius turning back the cloak of Arsenius on one side showed one of the man’s hands; again, while some were supposing that the other hand was wanting, permitting them to remain a short time in doubt afterward he turned back the cloak on the other side and exposed the other hand. Then addressing himself to those present, he said, ‘Arsenius, as you see, is found to have two hands: let my accusers show the place whence the third was cut off.’

245 A full account of the circumstances narrated in this and the following chapters is given by Athanasius in his Apol. contra Arianos, 65, 71 and 72. Parallel accounts may also be found in Sozom. II. 25; Theodoret, H. E. I. 28; Rufinus, H. E. X. 17; Philostorgius, II. 11.
Chapter XXX.—Athanasius is found Innocent of what he was accused; his Accusers take to Flight.

Matters having been brought to this issue with regard to Arsenius, the contrivers of this imposture were reduced to perplexity; and Achab, 246 who was also called John, one of the principal accusers, having slipped out of court in the tumult, effected his escape. Thus Athanasius cleared himself from this charge, without having recourse to any pleading; 247 for he was confident that the sight only of Arsenius alive would confound his calumniators.

---

246 In Athanasius’ account (Apol. c. Arian. 65) this man’s name is given as Ἄρχαψ (Archaph), which is an Egyptian name; its assonance with the biblical Ἀχαάβ may have made the latter a current appellation. John was no doubt his monastic name.

247 παραγραφή, legal term; γραφή = 'indictment,' παραγραφή = 'demurrer,' so used by Isocrates, Demosthenes, &c., of the classical authors.
Chapter XXXI.—When the Bishops will not listen to Athanasius’ Defense on the Second Charge, he betakes himself to the Emperor.

But in refuting the false allegations against Macarius, he made use of legal forms; taking exception in the first place to Eusebius and his party, as his enemies, protesting against the injustice of any man’s being tried by his adversaries. He next insisted on its being proved that his accuser Ischyras had really obtained the dignity of presbyter; for so he had been designated in the indictment. But as the judges would not allow any of these objections, the case of Macarius was entered into, and the informers being found deficient of proofs, the hearing of the matter was postponed, until some persons should have gone into Mareotis, in order that all doubtful points might be examined on the spot. Athanasius seeing that those very individuals were to be sent to whom he had taken exception (for the persons sent were Theognis, Maris, Theodorus, Macedonius, Valens, and Ursacius), exclaimed that ‘their procedure was both treacherous and fraudulent; for that it was unjust that the presbyter Macarius should be detained in bonds, while the accuser together with the judges who were his adversaries, were permitted to go, in order that an ex parte collection of the facts in evidence might be made.’ Having made this protest before the whole Synod and Dionysius the governor of the province, and finding that no one paid any attention to his appeal, he privately withdrew. Those, therefore, who were sent to Mareotis, having made an ex parte investigation, held that what the accuser said was true.

---

248 ἐκ μονομεροῦς, Lat. ex parte; the term, however, is not restricted to this technical sense, but may be used of any form of partiality. Cf. Sophocles’ Greek Lex. of Rom. and Byz. As already noted in the Intro. p. ix, Harnack denies that there is any special juristic knowledge shown here; it must be conceded that the language used is such as might have been at the command of any intelligent and educated non-professional man.
Chapter XXXII.—On the Departure of Athanasius, those who composed the Synod vote his Deposition.

Thus Athanasius departed, hastening to the emperor, and the Synod in the first place condemned him in his absence; and when the result of the enquiry which had been instituted at Mareotis was presented, they voted to depose him; loading him with opprobrious epithets in their sentence of deposition, but being wholly silent respecting the disgraceful defeat of the charge of murder brought by his calumniators. They moreover received into communion Arsenius, who was reported to have been murdered; and he who had formerly been a bishop of the Melitian heresy subscribed to the deposition of Athanasius as bishop of the city of Hypselopolis. Thus by an extraordinary course of circumstances, the alleged victim of assassination by Athanasius, was found alive to assist in deposing him.
Chapter XXXIII.—The Members of the Synod proceed from Tyre to Jerusalem, and having celebrated the Dedication of the ‘New Jerusalem,’ receive Arius and his Followers into Communion.

Letters in the meantime were brought from the emperor directing those who composed the Synod to hasten to the New Jerusalem: 249 having therefore immediately left Tyre, they set forward with all despatch to Jerusalem, where, after celebrating a festival in connection with the consecration of the place, they readmitted Arius 250 and his adherents into communion, in obedience, as they said, to the wishes of the emperor, who had signified in his communication to them, that he was fully satisfied respecting the faith of Arius and Euzoïus. They moreover wrote to the church at Alexandria, 251 stating that all envy being now banished, the affairs of the church were established in peace: and that since Arius had by his recantation acknowledged the truth, it was but just that, being thenceforth a member of the church, he should also be henceforth received by them, alluding to the banishment of Athanasius [in their statement that ‘all envy was now banished’]. At the same time they sent information of what had been done to the emperor, in terms nearly to the same effect. But whilst the bishops were engaged in these transactions, other letters came unexpectedly from the emperor, intimating that Athanasius had fled to him for protection; and that it was necessary for them on his account to come to Constantinople. This unanticipated communication from the emperor was as follows.

249 See above, ch. 17.
250 Arius, the originator of the Arian heresy, died before the council at Jerusalem; hence Valesius infers that this Arius must be another man of the same name mentioned in the encyclical of Alexander of Alexandria as a partisan of the arch-heretic. Cf. ch. 6.
251 This letter is contained in Athanasius’ de Synod, 21, and a portion of it in Apol. contra Arian, 84.
Chapter XXXIV.—The Emperor summons the Synod to himself by Letter, in order that the Charges against Athanasius might be carefully examined before him.

Victor Constantine Maximus Augustus, to the bishops convened at Tyre.

I am indeed ignorant of the decisions which have been made by your Council with so much turbulence and storm: but the truth seems to have been perverted by some tumultuous and disorderly proceedings: because, that is to say, in your mutual love of contention, which you seem desirous of perpetuating, you disregard the consideration of those things which are acceptable to God. It will, however, I trust, be the work of Divine Providence to dissipate the mischiefs resulting from this jealous rivalry, as soon as they shall have been detected; and to make it apparent to us, whether ye who have been convened have had regard to truth, and whether your decisions on the subjects which have been submitted to your judgment have been made apart from partiality or prejudice. Wherefore it is indispensable that you should all without delay attend upon my piety, that you may yourselves give a strict account of your transactions. For what reason I have deemed it proper to write thus, and to summon you before me, you will learn from what follows. As I was making my entry into the city which bears our name, in this our most flourishing home, Constantinople,—and it happened that I was riding on horseback at the time,—suddenly the Bishop Athanasius, with certain ecclesiastics whom he had around him, presented himself so unexpectedly in our path, as to produce an occasion of consternation. For the Omniscient God is my witness that at first sight I did not recognize him until some of my attendants, in answer to my enquiry, informed me, as was very natural, both who he was, and what injustice he had suffered. At that time indeed I neither conversed, nor held any communication with him. But as he repeatedly entreated an audience, and I had not only refused it, but almost ordered that he should be removed from my presence, he said with greater boldness, that he petitioned for nothing more than that you might be summoned hither, in order that in our presence, he, driven by necessity to such a course, might have a fair opportunity afforded him of complaining of his wrongs. Wherefore as this seems reasonable, and consistent with the equity of my government, I willingly gave instructions that these things should be written to you. My command therefore is, that all, as many as composed the Synod convened at Tyre, should forthwith hasten to the court of our clemency, in order that from the facts themselves you may make clear the purity and integrity of your decision in my presence, whom you cannot but own to be a true servant of God. It is in consequence of the acts of my religious service towards God that peace is everywhere reigning; and that the name of God is sincerely had in reverence even among the barbarians themselves, who until now were ignorant of the truth. Now it is evident that he who knows not the truth, does not have a true knowledge of God also: yet, as I before said even the barbarians on my account, who am a genuine servant of God, have acknowledged and learned to worship him, whom they have perceived in very deed protecting and caring for me everywhere. So that from dread of us chiefly, they... have been thus brought to the knowledge of the true God whom they now worship. Nevertheless we who pretend to have a religious veneration for (I will not say who guard) the holy mysteries of his church, we, I say, do nothing but what tends to discord and animosity, and to speak plainly, to the destruction of the human race. But hasten, as I have already said, all of you to us as speedily as possible: and be assured that I shall endeavor with all my power to cause that what is contained in the Divine Law may be preserved inviolate, on which neither stigma nor reproach shall be able to fasten itself; and this will come to pass when its enemies, who under cover of the sacred profession introduce numerous and diversified blasphemies, are dispersed, broken to pieces, and altogether annihilated.
Chapter XXXV.—The Synod not having come to the Emperor, the Partisans of Eusebius accuse Athanasius of having threatened to divert the Corn supplied to Constantinople from Alexandria: the Emperor being exasperated at this banishes Athanasius into Gaul.\(^{252}\)

This letter rendered those who constituted the Synod very fearful, wherefore most of them returned to their respective cities. But Eusebius, Theognis, Maris, Patrophilus, Ursacius, and Valens, having gone to Constantinople, would not permit any further enquiry to be instituted concerning the broken cup, the overturned communion table, and the murder of Arsenius; but they had recourse to another calumny, informing the emperor that Athanasius had threatened to prohibit the sending of corn which was usually conveyed from Alexandria to Constantinople. They affirmed also that these menaces were heard from the lips of Athanasius by the bishops Adamantius, Anubion, Arbathion and Peter, for slander is most prevalent when of the assertor of it appears to be a person worthy of credit. Hence the emperor being deceived, and excited to indignation against Athanasius by this charge, at once condemned him to exile, ordering him to reside in the Gauls. Now some affirm that the emperor came to this decision with a view to the establishment of unity in the church, since Athanasius was inexorable in his refusal to hold any communion with Arius and his adherents. He accordingly took up his abode at Treves, a city of Gaul.

---

\(^{252}\) Cf. Theodoret, \textit{H. E.} I. 31. The ancient Gallia or Gaul included the modern France, Belgium, Lombardy, and Sardinia.
Chapter XXXVI.—Of Marcellus Bishop of Ancyra, and Asterius the Sophist.

The bishops assembled at Constantinople deposed also Marcellus bishop of Ancyra, a city of Galatia Minor, on this account. A certain rhetorician of Cappadocia named Asterius having abandoned his art, and professed himself a convert to Christianity, undertook the composition of some treatises, which are still extant, in which he commended the dogmas of Arius; asserting that Christ is the power of God, in the same sense as the locust and the palmer-worm are said by Moses to be the power of God, with other similar utterances. Now Asterius was in constant association with the bishops, and especially with those of their number who did not discountenance the Arian doctrine; he also attended their Synods, in the hope of insinuating himself into the bishopric of some city: but he failed to obtain ordination, in consequence of having sacrificed during the persecution. Going therefore throughout the cities of Syria, he read in public the books which he had composed. Marcellus being informed of this, and wishing to counteract his influence, in his over-anxiety to confute him, fell into the diametrically opposite error; for he dared to say, as the Samosatene had done, that Christ was a mere man. When the bishops then convened at Jerusalem had intelligence of these things, they took no notice of Asterius, because he was not enrolled even in the catalogue of ordained priests; but they insisted that Marcellus, as a priest, should give an account of the book which he had written. Finding that he entertained Paul of Samosata’s sentiments, they required him to retract his opinion; and he being thoroughly ashamed of himself, promised to burn his book. But the convention of bishops being hastily dissolved by the emperor’s summoning them to Constantinople, the Eusebians on their arrival at that city, again took the case of Marcellus into consideration; and as Marcellus refused to fulfil his promise of burning his untimely book, those present deposed him, and sent Basil into Ancyra in his stead. Moreover Eusebius wrote a refutation of this work in three books, in which he exposed its erroneous doctrine. Marcellus however was afterwards reinstated in his bishopric by the Synod at Sardica, on his assurance that his book had been misunder-

253 Joel ii. 25.
254 In the persecution under Decius (249 a.d.), those who yielded so far as to perform the heathen rites were branded with the title of ‘the lapsed’; and a controversy arose later on the manner in which they should be treated. One of the consequences of lapsing was disqualification for high office in the church. See Neander, Hist. of Christ. Ch. Vol. I. p. 226 seq.
255 Paul of Samosata, who has been surnamed in modern times the Socinus of the third century, was deposed in 269 a.d. by a council held at Antioch for unchristian character and unsound views. His peculiarity in the latter respect was his denial of the divinity of Jesus Christ. For fuller information, see Eus. H. E. VII. 30; Epiph. Haer. LXVII.; Neander, Hist. of the Christ. Ch. Vol. I, 602 seq.; Gieselee, Hist. of the Ch. Vol. I. 201; Smith and Wace Dict. of Christ. Biog.
256 See II. 20.
stood, and that on that account he was supposed to favor the Samosatene's views. But of this we shall speak more fully in its proper place.
Chapter XXXVII.—After the Banishment of Athanasius, Arius having been sent for by the Emperor, raises a Disturbance against Alexander Bishop of Constantinople.

While these things were taking place, the thirtieth year of Constantine’s reign was completed. But Arius with his adherents having returned to Alexandria, again disturbed the whole city; for the people of Alexandria were exceedingly indignant both at the restoration of this incorrigible heretic with his partisans, and also because their bishop Athanasius had been sent to exile. When the emperor was apprised of the perverse disposition of Arius, he once more ordered him to repair to Constantinople, to give an account of the commotions he had afresh endeavored to excite. It happened at that time that Alexander, who had some time before succeeded Metrophanes, presided over the church at Constantinople. That this prelate was a man of devoted piety was distinctly manifested by the conflict he entered into with Arius; for when Arius arrived and the people were divided into two factions and the whole city was thrown into confusion: some insisting that the Nicene Creed should be by no means infringed on, while others contended that the opinion of Arius was consonant to reason. In this state of affairs, Alexander was driven to straits: more especially since Eusebius of Nicomedia had violently threatened that he would cause him to be immediately deposed, unless he admitted Arius and his followers to communion. Alexander, however, was far less troubled at the thought of his own deposition as fearful of the subversion of the principles of the faith, which they were so anxious to effect: and regarding himself as the constituted guardian of the doctrines recognized, and the decisions made by the council at Nicæa, he exerted himself to the utmost to prevent their being violated or depraved. Reduced to this extremity, he bade farewell to all logical resources, and made God his refuge, devoting himself to continued fasting and never ceased from praying. Communicating his purpose to no one, he shut himself up alone in the church called Irene: there going up to the altar, and prostrating himself on the ground beneath the holy communion table, he poured forth his fervent prayers weeping; and this he ceased not to do for many successive nights and days. What he thus earnestly asked from God, he received: for his petition was such a one: ‘If the opinion of Arius were correct, he might not be permitted to see the day appointed for its discussion; but that if he himself held the true faith, Arius, as the author of all these evils, might suffer the punishment due to his impiety.’
Chapter XXXVIII.—The Death of Arius.\textsuperscript{257}

Such was the supplication of Alexander. Meanwhile the emperor, being desirous of personally examining Arius, sent for him to the palace, and asked him whether he would assent to the determinations of the Synod at Nicaea. He without hesitation replied in the affirmative, and subscribed the declaration of the faith in the emperor’s presence, acting with duplicity. The emperor, surprised at his ready compliance, obliged him to confirm his signature by an oath. This also he did with equal dissimulation. The way he evaded, as I have heard, was this: he wrote his own opinion on paper, and carried it under his arm, so that he then swore truly that he really held the sentiments he had written. That this is so, however, I have written from hearsay, but that he added an oath to his subscription, I have myself ascertained, from an examination of the emperor’s own letters. The emperor being thus convinced, ordered that he should be received into communion by Alexander, bishop of Constantinople. It was then Saturday, and Arius was expecting to assemble with the church on the day following: but divine retribution overtook his daring criminalities. For going out of the imperial palace, attended by a crowd of Eusebian partisans like guards, he paraded proudly through the midst of the city, attracting the notice of all the people. As he approached the place called Constantine’s Forum, where the column of porphyry is erected, a terror arising from the remorse of conscience seized Arius, and with the terror a violent relaxation of the bowels: he therefore enquired whether there was a convenient place near, and being directed to the back of Constantine’s Forum, he hastened thither. Soon after a faintness came over him, and together with the evacuations his bowels protruded, followed by a copious hemorrhage, and the descent of the smaller intestines: moreover portions of his spleen and liver were brought off in the effusion of blood, so that he almost immediately died. The scene of this catastrophe still is shown at Constantinople, as I have said, behind the shambles in the colonnade: and by persons going by pointing the finger at the place, there is a perpetual remembrance preserved of this extraordinary kind of death. So disastrous an occurrence filled with dread and alarm the party of Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia; and the report of it quickly spread itself over the city and throughout the whole world. As the king grew more earnest in Christianity and confessed that the confession at Nicaea was attested by God, he rejoiced at the occurrences. He was also glad because of his three sons whom he had already proclaimed Cæsars; one of each of them having been created at every successive decennial anniversary of his reign. To the eldest, whom he called Constantine, after his own name, he assigned the government of the western parts of the empire, on the completion of his first decade. His second son Constantius, who bore his grandfather’s name, he constituted Cæsar in the eastern division, when the second decade had been \textsuperscript{257} For a reproduction of the circumstances related in this chapter, together with a historical estimate of them based on additional evidence, see Neander, Hist. of the Christ. Ch. Vol. II. p. 384–388.

completed. And Constans, the youngest, he invested with a similar dignity, in the thirtieth year of his own reign.
Chapter XXXIX.—The Emperor falls sick and dies.

A year having passed, the Emperor Constantine having just entered the sixty-fifth year of his age, was taken with a sickness; he therefore left Constantinople, and made a voyage to Helenopolis, that he might try the effect of the medicinal hot springs which are found in the vicinity of that city. Perceiving, however, that his illness increased, he deferred the use of the baths; and removing from Helenopolis to Nicomedia, he took up his residence in the suburbs, and there received Christian baptism. After this he became cheerful; and making his will, appointed his three sons heirs to the empire, allotting to each one of them his portion, in accordance with the arrangements he had made while living. He also granted many privileges to the cities of Rome and Constantinople; and entrusting the custody of his will to that presbyter by whose means Arius had been recalled, and of whom we have already made mention, he charged him to deliver it into no one’s hand, except that of his son Constantius, to whom he had given the sovereignty of the East. After the making of his will, he survived a few days and died. Of his sons none were present at his death. A courier was therefore immediately despatched into the East, to inform Constantius of his father’s decease.

258 It was the belief of many in the earlier ages of the church that baptism had a certain magical power purging away the sins previous to it, but having no force as regards those that might follow; this led many to postpone their baptism until disease or age warned them of the nearness of death; such delayed baptism was called ‘clinic baptism,’ and was discouraged by the more judicious and spiritual-minded Fathers, some of whom doubted its validity and rebuked those who delayed as actuated by selfishness and desire to indulge in sin. The church, however, encouraged it in the cases of gross offenders. Cf. Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. IV. 3, and XI. 11, and Bennett, Christian Archæology, pp. 407 and 409.

259 Cf. Euseb. Life of Const. IV. 63, and Rufinus, H. E. I. 11. The story is, however, doubtful, as Valesius observes. It is more likely that some one of the lay officials of the government, or, as Philostorgius says, Eusebius of Nicomedia, was entrusted with this will, and not a mere presbyter. That it was probably Eusebius of Nicomedia becomes the more probable when we consider that that bishop also probably baptized Constantine.
Chapter XL.—The Funeral of the Emperor Constantine.

The body of the emperor was placed in a coffin of gold by the proper persons, and then conveyed to Constantinople, where it was laid out on an elevated bed of state in the palace, surrounded by a guard, and treated with the same respect as when he was alive, and this was done until the arrival of one of his sons. When Constantius was come out of the eastern parts of the empire, it was honored with an imperial sepulture, and deposited in the church called The Apostles: which he had caused to be constructed for this very purpose, that the emperors and prelates might receive a degree of veneration but little inferior to that which was paid to the relics of the apostles. The Emperor Constantine lived sixty-five years, and reigned thirty-one. He died in the consulate of Felician and Tatian, on the twenty-second of May, in the second year of the 278th Olympiad. This book, therefore, embraces a period of thirty-one years.

260 337 a.d. The 22d of May that year was the day of Pentecost.
Book II.

Chapter I.—Introduction containing the Reason for the Author’s Revision of his First and Second Books.

Rufinus, who wrote an Ecclesiastical History in Latin,\textsuperscript{261} has erred in respect to chronology. For he supposes that what was done against Athanasius occurred after the death of the Emperor Constantine; he was also ignorant of his exile to the Gauls and of various other circumstances. Now we in the first place wrote the first two books of our history following Rufinus; but in writing our history from the third to the seventh, some facts we collected from Rufinus, others from different authors, and some from the narration of individuals still living. Afterward, however, we perused the writings of Athanasius, wherein he depicts his own sufferings and how through the calumnies of the Eusebian fiction he was banished, and judged that more credit was due to him who had suffered, and to those who were witnesses of the things they describe, than to such as have been dependent on conjecture, and had therefore erred. Moreover, having obtained several letters of persons eminent at that period, we have availed ourselves of their assistance also in tracing out the truth as far as possible. On this account we were compelled to revise the first and second books of this history, using, however, the testimony of Rufinus where it is evident that he could not be mistaken. It should also be observed, that in our former edition, neither the sentence of deposition which was passed upon Arius, nor the emperor’s letters were inserted, but simply the narration or facts in order that the history might not become bulky and weary the readers with tedious matters of detail. But in the present edition, such alterations and additions have been made for your sake, O sacred man of God, Theodore,\textsuperscript{262} in order that you might not be ignorant what the princes wrote in their own words, as well as the decisions of the bishops in their various Synods, wherein they continually altered the confession of faith. Wherefore, whatever we have deemed necessary we have inserted in this later edition. Having adopted this course in the first book, we shall endeavor to do the same in the consecutive portion of our history, I mean the second. On this let us now enter.

\textsuperscript{261} Rufinus’ \textit{Historia Ecclesiastica}, in two books, begins with Arius and ends with Theodosius the Great. It is not very accurate, but written largely from memory. It is dedicated to Chromatius, bishop of Aquileja, and translated into Greek by Gelasius and Cyril of Jerusalem. On the edition used by Socrates, see Introd. and I. 12, note 1. Cf. also on his knowledge of Latin, II. 23, 30, and 37.

\textsuperscript{262} ὄ ἱερὲ τοῦ Ἱερού ἄνθρωπε Θεόδωρε; cf. Introd. p. x, also VI. Introd. and VII. 48.
Chapter II.—Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, and his Party, by again endeavoring to introduce the Arian Heresy, create Disturbances in the Churches.

After the death of the Emperor Constantine, Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia, and Theognis of Nicæa, imagining that a favorable opportunity had arisen, used their utmost efforts to expunge the doctrine of homoousion, and to introduce Arianism in its place. They, nevertheless, despaired of effecting this, if Athanasius should return to Alexandria: in order therefore to accomplish their designs, they sought the assistance of that presbyter by whose means Arius had been recalled from exile a little before. How this was done shall now be described. The presbyter in question presented the will and the request of the deceased king to his son Constantius; who finding those dispositions in it which he was most desirous of, for the empire of the East was by his father’s will apportioned to him, treated the presbyter with great consideration, loaded him with favors, and ordered that free access should be given him both to the palace and to himself. This license soon obtained for him familiar intercourse with the empress, as well as with her eunuchs. There was at that time a chief eunuch of the imperial bed-chamber named Eusebius; him the presbyter persuaded to adopt Arian’s views, after which the rest of the eunuchs were also prevailed on to adopt the same sentiments. Not only this but the empress also, under the influence of the eunuchs and the presbyters, became favorable to the tenets of Arius; and not long after the subject was introduced to the emperor himself. Thus it became gradually diffused throughout the court, and among the officers of the imperial household and guards, until at length it spread itself over the whole population of the city. The chamberlains in the palace discussed this doctrine with the women; and in the family of every citizen there was a logical contest. Moreover, the mischief quickly extended to other provinces and cities, the controversy, like a spark, insignificant at first, exciting in the auditors a spirit of contention: for every one who inquired the cause of the tumult, found immediately occasion for disputing, and determined to take part in the strife at the moment of making the inquiry. By general altercation of this kind all order was subverted; the agitation, however, was confined to the cities of the East, those of Illyricum and the western parts of the empire meanwhile were perfectly tranquil, because they would not annul the decisions of the Council of Nicæa. As this affair increased, going from bad to worse, Eusebius of Nicomedia and his party looked upon popular ferment as a piece of good fortune. For only thus they thought they would be enabled to constitute some one who held their own sentiments bishop of Alexandria. But the return of Athanasius at that time defeated their purpose; for he came thither fortified by a letter from one of the Augusti, which the younger Constantine, who bore his father’s name, addressed to the people of Alexandria, from Treves, a city in Gaul. 263 A copy of this epistle is here subjoined.

263 There is some difference of opinion as to the exact year of the recall of Athanasius. Baronius and others allege that this took place in 338 a.d., the year after the death of Constantine; but Valesius maintains that Athanasius was recalled the year preceding. This he infers from the words of Athanasius (Apol. c. Arian, 61), and the title of the letter which Constantine the younger addressed to the church in Alexandria.
Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, and his Party, by again endeavoring to introduce...

Chapter III.—Athanasius, encouraged by the Letter of Constantine the Younger, returns to Alexandria.

Constantine Cæsar to the members of the Catholic Church of the Alexandrians.

It cannot, I conceive, have escaped the knowledge of your devout minds, that Athanasius, the expositor of the venerated law, was sent for a while unto the Gauls, lest he should sustain some irreparable injury from the perverseness of his blood-thirsty adversaries, whose ferocity continually endangered his sacred life. To evade this [perverseness], therefore, he was taken from the jaws of the men who threatened him into a city under my jurisdiction, where, as long as it was his appointed residence, he has been abundantly supplied with every necessity: although his distinguished virtue trusting in divine aid would have made light of the pressure of a more rigorous fortune. And since our sovereign, my father, Constantine Augustus of blessed memory, was prevented by death from accomplishing his purpose of restoring this bishop to his see, and to your most sanctified piety, I have deemed it proper to carry his wishes into effect, having inherited the task from him. With how great veneration he has been regarded by us, ye will learn on his arrival among you; nor need any one be surprised at the honor I have put upon him, since I have been alike influenced by a sense of what was due to so excellent a personage, and the knowledge of your affectionate solicitude respecting him. May Divine Providence preserve you, beloved brethren.

Relying on this letter, Athanasius came to Alexandria, and was most joyfully received by the people of the city. Nevertheless as many in it as had embraced Arianism, combining together, entered into conspiracies against him, by which frequent seditions were excited, affording a pretext to the Eusebians for accusing him to the emperor of having taken possession of the Alexandrian church on his own responsibility, in spite of the adverse judgment of a general council of bishops. So far indeed did they succeed in pressing their charges, that the emperor became exasperated, and banished him from Alexandria. How indeed this came about I shall hereafter explain.
Chapter IV.—On the Death of Eusebius Pamphilus, Acacius succeeds to the Bishopric of Cæsarea.

At this time Eusebius, who was bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine, and had the surname of Pamphilus, having died, Acacius, his disciple, succeeded him in the bishopric. This individual published several books, and among others a biographical sketch of his master.
Chapter V.—The Death of Constantine the Younger.

Not long after this the brother of the Emperor Constantius, Constantine the younger, who bore his father’s name, having invaded those parts of the empire which were under the government of his younger brother Constans, engaging in a conflict with his brother’s soldiery, was slain by them. This took place under the consulship of Acindynus and Proclus.
Chapter VI.—Alexander, Bishop of Constantinople, when at the Point of Death proposes the Election either of Paul or of Macedonius as his Successor.

About the same time another disturbance in addition to those we have recorded, was raised at Constantinople on the following account. Alexander, who had presided over the churches in that city, and had strenuously opposed Arius, departed this life, having occupied the bishopric for twenty-three years and lived ninety-eight years in all, without having ordained any one to succeed him. But he had enjoined the proper persons to choose one of the two whom he named; that is to say, if they desired one who was competent to teach, and of eminent piety, they should elect Paul, whom he had himself ordained presbyter, a man young indeed in years, but of advanced intelligence and prudence; but if they wished a man of venerable aspect, and external show only of sanctity, they might appoint Macedonius, who had long been a deacon among them and was aged. Hence there arose a great contest respecting the choice of a bishop which troubled the church exceedingly; for ever since the people were divided into two parties, one of which favored the tenets of Arius, while the other held what the Nicene Synod had defined, those who held the doctrine of consubstantiality always had the advantage during the life of Alexander, the Arians disagreeing among themselves and perpetually conflicting in opinion. But after the death of that prelate, the issue of the struggle became doubtful, the defenders of the orthodox faith insisting on the ordination of Paul, and all the Arian party espousing the cause of Macedonius. Paul therefore was ordained bishop in the church called Irene, which is situated near the great church of Sophia; whose election appeared to be more in accordance with the suffrage of the deceased.

265 Socrates is undoubtedly mistaken in setting the date of Alexander’s death as late as 340 a.d. The council convened to examine and confute the charges against Athanasius met in 339 a.d., and the record at that date has it (see chap. 7) that Eusebius had taken possession of the see of Constantinople. Alexander must therefore have died before 339.

266 So called, not because there was a saint or eminent person of that name, but on the same principle as the church called Sophia. For the history of the latter church, see Dehio and Bezold, Die Kirchliche Baukunst des Abendlandes, I. p. 21.
Chapter VII.—The Emperor Constantius ejects Paul after his Election to the Bishopric, and sending for Eusebius of Nicomedia, invests him with the Bishopric of Constantinople.

Not long afterwards the emperor having arrived at Constantinople was highly incensed at the consecration [of Paul]; and having convened an assembly of bishops of Arian sentiments, he divested Paul of his dignity, and translating Eusebius from the see of Nicomedia, he appointed him bishop of Constantinople. Having done this the emperor proceeded to Antioch.
Chapter VIII.—Eusebius having convened Another Synod at Antioch in Syria, causes a New Creed to be promulgated.

Eusebius, however, could by no means remain quiet, but as the saying is, left no stone unturned, in order to effect the purpose he had in view. He therefore causes a Synod to be convened at Antioch in Syria, under pretense of dedicating the church which the father of the Augusti had commenced, and which his son Constantius had finished in the tenth year after its foundations were laid, but with the real intention of subverting and abolishing the doctrine of the homoousion. There were present at this Synod ninety bishops from various cities. Maximus, however, bishop of Jerusalem; who had succeeded Macarius, did not attend, recollecting that he had been deceived and induced to subscribe the deposition of Athanasius. Neither was Julius, bishop of the great Rome, there, nor had he sent a substitute, although an ecclesiastical canon commands that the churches shall not make any ordinances against the opinion of the bishop of Rome. This Synod assembled at Antioch in presence of the emperor Constantius in the consulate of Marcellus and Probinus, which was the fifth year after the death of Constantine, father of the Augusti. Placidus, otherwise called Flaccillus, successor to Euphranius, at that time presided over the church at Antioch. The confederates of Eusebius had previously designed to calumniate Athanasius; accusing him in the first place of having acted contrary to a canon which they then constituted, in resuming his episcopal authority without the license of a general council of bishops, inasmuch as on his return from exile he had on his own responsibility taken possession of the church; and then because a tumult had been excited on his entrance and many were killed in the riot; moreover that some had been scourged by him, and others brought before the tribunals. Besides they brought forward what had been determined against Athanasius at Tyre.

---

268 The word ‘canon’ here is evidently used in its general sense. There is no record of any enactment requiring the consent of the bishop of Rome to the decisions of the councils before they could be considered valid. There may have been a general understanding to that effect, having the force of an unwritten law. In any case the use of the word by Socrates is quite singular, unless we assume that he supposed there was such an enactment somewhere, as is implied by its use ordinarily.

269 341 a.d.
Chapter IX.—Of Eusebius of Emisa.

On the ground of such charges as these, they proposed another bishop for the Alexandrian church, and first indeed Eusebius surnamed Emisenus. Who this person was, George, bishop of Laodicea, who was present on this occasion, informs us. For he says in the book which he has composed on his life, that Eusebius was descended from the nobility of Edessa in Mesopotamia, and that from a child he had studied the holy Scriptures; that he was afterwards instructed in Greek literature by a master resident at Edessa; and finally that the sacred books were expounded to him by Patrophilus and Eusebius, of whom the latter presided over the church at Caesarea, and the former over that at Scythopolis. Afterwards when he dwelt in Antioch, it happened that Eustathius was deposed on the accusation of Cyrus of Berœa for holding the tenets of Sabellius. Then again he associated with Euphronius, successor of Eustathius, and avoiding a bishopric, he retired to Alexandria, and there devoted himself to the study of philosophy. On his return to Antioch he formed an intimate acquaintance with Placitus [or Flaccillus], the successor of Euphronius. At length he was ordained bishop of Alexandria, by Eusebius, bishop of Constantinople; but did not go thither in consequence of the attachment of the people of that city to Athanasius, and was therefore sent to Emisa. As the inhabitants of Emisa excited a sedition on account of his appointment,—for he was commonly charged with the study and practice of judicial astrology,—he fled and came to Laodicea, to George, who has given so many historical details of him. George having taken him to Antioch, procured his being again brought back to Emisa by Placitus and Narcissus; but he was afterwards charged with holding the Sabellian views. George more elaborately describes the circumstances of his ordination and adds at the close that the emperor took him with him in his expedition against the barbarians, and that miracles were wrought by his hand. The information given by George concerning Eusebius of Emisa may be considered reproduced at sufficient length by me here.

---

270 Sozom. H. E. III. 6. From the passage in Sozomen it appears that it was customary in Edessa to teach the Scriptures to boys, and that many of them thus became quite familiar with the Bible, knowing many passages by heart.

271 μαθηματικήν. From its use in astronomy the science of mathematics soon came to be identified with that counterfeit of astronomy,—astrology. It is so used by Sextus Empiricus (616. 20; 728. 20) and by Iamblichus, Myrt. 277. 2.
Chapter X.—The Bishops assembled at Antioch, on the Refusal of Eusebius of Emisa to accept the Bishopric of Alexandria, ordain Gregory, and change the Language of the Nicene Creed.

Now at that time Eusebius having been proposed and fearing to go to Alexandria, the Synod at Antioch designated Gregory as bishop of that church. This being done, they altered the creed; not as condemning anything in that which was set forth at Nicæa, but in fact with a determination to subvert and nullify the doctrine of consubstantiality by means of frequent councils, and the publication of various expositions of the faith, so as gradually to establish the Arian views. How these things issued we will set forth in the course of our narrative; but the epistle then promulgated respecting the faith was as follows:

‘We have neither become followers of Arius,—for how should we who are bishops be guided by a presbyter?—nor have we embraced any other faith than that which was set forth from the beginning. But being constituted examiners and judges of his sentiments, we admit their soundness, rather than adopt them from him: and you will recognize this from what we are about to state. We have learned from the beginning to believe in one God of the Universe, the Creator and Preserver of all things both those thought of and those perceived by the senses: and in one only-begotten Son of God, subsisting before all ages, and co-existing with the Father who begat him, through whom also all things visible and invisible were made; who in the last days according to the Father’s good pleasure, descended, and assumed flesh from the holy virgin, and having fully accomplished his Father’s will, that he should suffer, and rise again, and ascend into the heavens, and sit at the right hand of the Father; and is coming to judge the living and the dead, continuing King and God for ever. We believe also in the Holy Spirit. And if it is necessary to add this, we believe in the resurrection of the flesh, and the life everlasting.’

Having thus written in their first epistle, they sent it to the bishops of every city. But after remaining some time at Antioch, as if to condemn the former, they published another letter in these words:

Another Exposition of the Faith.

In conformity with evangelic and apostolic tradition, we believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Creator and Framer of the universe. And in one Lord Jesus Christ, his Son, God the only-begotten, through whom all things were made: begotten of the Father before all ages, God of God, Whole of Whole, Only of Only, Perfect of Perfect, King of King, Lord of Lord; the living Word, the Wisdom, the Life, the True Light, the Way of Truth, the Resurrection, the Shepherd, the Gate; immutable and inconvertible; the unaltering image of the Divinity, Substance and Power, and Counsel and Glory of the Father; born ‘before all creation’; who was in the beginning with God, God the Word, according as it is declared in the 272 Athanas. de Synodd. 22, 23.

Gospel,\textsuperscript{273} and the Word was God, by whom all things were made, and in whom all things subsist: who in the last days came down from above, and was born of the virgin according to the Scriptures; and was made man, the Mediator between God and men, the Apostle of our Faith, and the Prince of Life, as he says,\textsuperscript{274} ‘I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.’ Who suffered on our behalf, and rose again for us on the third day, and ascended into the heavens, and is seated at the right hand of the Father; and will come again with glory and power to judge the living and the dead. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit, who is given to believers for their consolation, sanctification, and perfection; even as our Lord Jesus Christ commanded his disciples, saying,\textsuperscript{275} ‘Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit’; that is to say of the Father who is truly the Father, of the Son who is truly the Son, and of the Holy Spirit who is truly the Holy Spirit, these words not being simply or insignificantly applied, but accurately expressing the proper subsistence, glory, and order, of each of these who are named: so that there are three in person, but one in concordance. Holding therefore this faith in the presence of God and of Christ, we anathematize all heretical and false doctrine. And if any one shall teach contrary to the sound and right faith of the Scriptures, affirming that there is or was a period or an age before the Son of God existed, let him be accursed. And if any one shall say that the Son is a creature as one of the creatures, or that he is offspring as one of the offsprings, and shall not hold each of the aforesaid doctrines as the Divine Scriptures have delivered them to us: or if any one shall teach or preach any other doctrine contrary to that which we have received, let him be accursed. For we truly and unreservedly believe and follow all things handed down to us from the sacred Scriptures by the prophets and apostles.

Such was the exposition of the faith published by those then assembled at Antioch, to which Gregory also subscribed as bishop of Alexandria, although he had not yet entered that city. The Synod having done these things, and legislated some other canons, was dissolved. At this time it happened that public affairs also were disturbed. The nation called Franks made incursions into the Roman territories in Gaul, and at the same time there occurred violent earthquakes in the East, and especially at Antioch, which continued to suffer concussions during a whole year.

\textsuperscript{273} John i. 1.
\textsuperscript{274} John vi. 38.
\textsuperscript{275} Matt. xxviii. 19.
Chapter XI.—On the Arrival of Gregory at Alexandria, tended by a Military Escort, Athanasius flees.

After these things, Syrian, the military commander, and the corps of heavy armed soldiers, five thousand in number, conducted Gregory to Alexandria; and such of the citizens as were of Arian sentiments combined with them. But it will be proper here to relate by what means Athanasius escaped the hands of those who wished to apprehend him, after his expulsion from the church. It was evening, and the people were attending the vigil there, a service being expected. The commander arrived, and posted his forces in order of battle on every side of the church. Athanasius having observed what was done, considered within himself how he might prevent the people’s suffering in any degree on his account: accordingly having directed the deacon to give notice of prayer, after that he ordered the recitation of a psalm; and when the melodious chant of the psalm arose, all went out through one of the church doors. While this was doing, the troops remained inactive spectators, and Athanasius thus escaped unhurt in the midst of those who were chanting the psalm, and immediately hastened to Rome. Gregory then prevailed in the church: but the people of Alexandria, being indignant at this procedure, set the church called that of Dionysius on fire. Let this be sufficient on this subject. Now Eusebius, having thus far obtained his object, sent a deputation to Julius, bishop of Rome, begging that he would himself take cognizance of the charges against Athanasius, and order a judicial investigation to be made in his presence.

276 συνάξεως: literally ‘congregation,’ from συνάγω; but later applied to any service held in the church. In mod. Συναξάριον, ‘Prayer-book.’

277 So also Sozom. III. 7. But according to Valesius, both Socrates and Sozomen are here mistaken, and Eusebius sent the deputation before the council at Antioch, as is shown by the words of Athanasius in his Apol. contra Arian., 21.

278 See Hammond, Canons of the Church (notes on the Canons of Nicæa), for the prerogatives of the see of Rome recognized at this time.
Chapter XII.—The People of Constantinople restore Paul to his See after the Death of Eusebius, while the Arians elect Macedonius.

But Eusebius did not live to learn the decision of Julius concerning Athanasius, for he died a short time after that Synod was held. Whereupon the people introduced Paul again into the church of Constantinople: the Arians, however, ordained Macedonius at the same time, in the church dedicated to Paul. This those who had formerly co-operated with Eusebius (that disturber of the public peace) brought about, assuming all his authority. These were Theognis, bishop of Nicæa, Maris of Chalcedon, Theodore of Heraclea in Thrace, Ursacius of Singidunum in Upper Mysia, and Valens of Mursa in Upper Pannonia. Ursacius and Valens indeed afterward altered their opinions, and presented a written recantation of them to bishop Julius, so that on subscribing the doctrine of consubstantiability they were again admitted to communion; but at that time they warmly supported the Arian error, and were instigators of the most violent conflicts in the churches, one of which was connected with Macedonius at Constantinople. By this intestine war among the Christians, continuous seditions arose in that city, and many lives were sacrificed in consequence of these occurrences.
Chapter XIII.—Paul is again ejected from the Church by Constantius, in consequence of the Slaughter of Hermogenes, his General.

Intelligence of these proceedings reached the ears of the Emperor Constantius, whose residence was then at Antioch. Accordingly he ordered his general Hermogenes, who had been despatched to Thrace, to pass through Constantinople on his way, and expel Paul from the church. He, on arriving at Constantinople, threw the whole city into confusion, attempting to cast out the bishops; for sedition immediately arose from the people in their eagerness to defend the bishop. And when Hermogenes persisted in his efforts to drive out Paul by means of his military force, the people became exasperated as is usual in such cases; and making a desperate attack upon him, they set his house on fire, and after dragging through the city, they at last put him to death. This took place in the consulate\(^\text{279}\) of the two Augusti,—that is to say, the third consulship,—Constantius, and the second of Constans: at which time Constans, having subdued the Franks, compelled them to enter into a treaty of peace with the Romans. The Emperor Constantius, on being informed of the assassination of Hermogenes, set off on horseback from Antioch, and arriving at Constantinople immediately expelled Paul, and then punished the inhabitants by withdrawing from them more than 40,000 measures of the daily allowance of wheat which had been granted by his father for gratuitous distribution among them: for prior to this catastrophe, nearly 80,000 measures of wheat brought from Alexandria had been bestowed on the citizens.\(^\text{280}\) He hesitated, however, to ratify\(^\text{281}\) the appointment of Macedonius to the bishopric of that city, being irritated against him not only because he had been ordained without his own consent; but also because on account of the contests in which he had been engaged with Paul, Hermogenes, his general, and many other persons had been slain. But having given him permission to minister in the church in which he had been consecrated, he returned to Antioch.

\(^{279}\) 342 a.d. This assassination of Hermogenes was evidently recorded in that portion of Am. Marcellinus’ work which has been lost; at least a record of it is referred to in that author’s Rerum Gestarum, XIV. x. 2 (ed. Eyssenhart).

\(^{280}\) On the gratuitous distribution of grain or bread practised under Constantine and later under Theodosius, see Cod. Theod. XIV. tit. XVI., and cf. Eunap. Aedes. par. 22.

\(^{281}\) Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. IV. xi. 19, on the control over the appointment of bishops by the emperor at this time.
Chapter XIV.—The Arians remove Gregory from the See of Alexandria, and appoint George in his Place.\textsuperscript{282}

About the same time the Arians ejected Gregory from the see of Alexandria, on the ground that he was unpopular and at the same time because he had set a church\textsuperscript{283} on fire, and did not manifest sufficient zeal in promoting the interests of their party.\textsuperscript{284} They therefore inducted George into his see, who was a native of Cappadocia, and had acquired the reputation of being an able advocate of their tenets.

\textsuperscript{282} There is an error here, repeated also by Sozomen (III. 7), but corrected by Theodoret, \textit{H. E.} II. 4 and 12, without the mention of the names of his predecessors. The error consists in the statement that Gregory was ejected at this time. It appears that he remained in his position until the Council of Sardica, by which he was deposed and excommunicated. He survived this council by six months.

\textsuperscript{283} That of Dionysius.

\textsuperscript{284} This is the same Gregory that is mentioned in ch. 10 as violently put into possession of the see of Alexandria by the Arians. It is evident that they were disappointed in him.
Chapter XV.—Athanasius and Paul going to Rome, and having obtained Letters from Bishop Julius, recover their respective Dioceses.

Athanasius, meanwhile, after a lengthened journey, at last reached Italy. The western division of the empire was then under the sole power of Constans, the youngest of Constantine’s sons, his brother Constantine having been slain by the soldiers, as was before stated. At the same time also Paul, bishop of Constantinople, Asclepas of Gaza, Marcellus of Ancyr, a city of the Lesser Galatia, and Lucius of Adrianople, having been accused on various charges, and expelled from their several churches arrived at the imperial city. There each laid his case before Julius, bishop of Rome. He on his part, by virtue of the Church of Rome’s peculiar privilege, sent them back again into the East, fortifying them with commendatory letters; and at the same time restored to each his own place, and sharply rebuked those by whom they had been deposed. Relying on the signature of the bishop Julius, the bishops departed from Rome, and again took possession of their own churches, forwarding the letters to the parties to whom they were addressed. These persons considering themselves treated with indignity by the reproaches of Julius, called a council at Antioch, assembled themselves and dictated a reply to his letters as the expression of the unanimous feeling of the whole Synod. It was not his province, they said, to take cognizance of their decisions in reference to any whom they might wish to expel from their churches; seeing that they had not opposed themselves to him, when Novatus was ejected from the church. These things the bishops of the Eastern church communicated to Julius, bishop of Rome. But, as on the entry of Athanasius into Alexandria, a tumult was raised by the partisans of George the Arian, in consequence of which, it is affirmed, many persons were killed; and since the Arians endeavor to throw the whole odium of this transaction on Athanasius as the author of it, it behooves us to make a few remarks on the subject. God the Judge of all only knows the true causes of these disorders; but no one of any experience can be ignorant of the fact, that such fatal accidents are for the most part concomitants of the factious movements of the populace. It is vain, therefore, for the calumniators of Athanasius to attribute the blame to him; and especially Sabinus, bishop of the Macedonian heresy. For had the latter reflected on the 285 Julius, in his letter to the Eastern bishops (Ep. I. adv. Eusebianos, 4 and 5), mentions Athanasius and Marcellus, ex-bishop of Ancyr, as with him at this time, but does not allude to Paul; from which it has been inferred that Socrates is in error here in setting the date of Paul’s visit to Rome at this time, as otherwise Julius would have named him also with Athanasius and Marcellus. Sozomen, as usual, copies the mistake of Socrates; cf. Sozom. III. 15.

286 It appears from this that there was no recognition of any special prerogative or right belonging to the bishop of Rome as yet. The position of that bishop during these agitations in the Eastern church, when the Western church was in comparative peace, seems to be that of an arbitrator voluntarily invoked, rather than of an official judge. Cf. Neander, Hist. of the Christ. Church, Vol. II. p. 171, 172.

287 i.e. in his Collection of Synodical Transactions, mentioned in chap. 17.
number and magnitude of the wrongs which Athanasius, in conjunction with the rest who hold the doctrine of consubstantiality, had suffered from the Arians, or on the many complaints made of these things by the Synods convened on account of Athanasius, or in short on what that arch-heretic Macedonius himself has done throughout all the churches, he would either have been wholly silent, or if constrained to speak, would have spoken more plausible words, instead of these reproaches. But as it is intentionally overlooking all these things, he willfully misrepresents the facts. He makes, however, no mention whatever of the heresiarch, desiring by all means to conceal the daring enormities of which he knew him to be guilty. And what is still more extraordinary, he has not said one word to the disadvantage of the Arians, although he was far from entertaining their sentiments. The ordination of Macedonius, whose heretical views he had adopted, he has also passed over in silence; for had he mentioned it, he must necessarily have recorded his impieties also, which were most distinctly manifested on that occasion. Let this suffice on this subject.
Chapter XVI.—The Emperor Constantius, through an Order to Philip the Prætorian Prefect, secures the Exile of Paul, and the Installation of Macedonius in his See.

When the Emperor Constantius, who then held his court at Antioch, heard that Paul had again obtained possession of the episcopal throne, he was excessively enraged at his presumption. He therefore despatched a written order to Philip, the Prætorian Prefect, whose power exceeded that of the other governors of provinces, and who was styled the second person from the emperor, to drive Paul out of the church again, and introduce Macedonius into it in his place. Now the prefect Philip, dreading an insurrectionary movement among the people, used artifice to entrap the bishop: keeping, therefore, the emperor’s mandate secret, he went to the public bath called Zeuxippus, and on pretense of attending to some public affairs, sent to Paul with every demonstration of respect, requesting his attendance there, on the ground that his presence was indispensable. The bishop came; and as he came in obedience to this summons, the prefect immediately showed him the emperor’s order; the bishop patiently submitted condemnation without a hearing. But as Philip was afraid of the violence of the multitude—for great numbers had gathered around the building to see what would take place, for their suspicions had been aroused by current reports—he commanded one of the bath doors to be opened which communicated with the imperial palace, and through that Paul was carried off, put on board a vessel provided for the purpose, and so sent into exile immediately. The prefect directed him to go to Thessalonica, the metropolis of Macedonia, whence he had derived his origin from his ancestors; commanding him to reside in that city, but granting him permission to visit other cities of Illyricum, while he strictly forbade his passing into any portion of the Eastern empire. Thus was Paul, contrary to his expectation, at once expelled from the church, and from the city, and again hurried off into exile. Philip, the imperial prefect, leaving the bath, immediately proceeded to the church. Together with him, as if thrown there by an engine, Macedonius rode seated in the same seat with the prefect in the chariot seen by everybody, and a military guard with drawn swords was about them. The multitude was completely overawed by this spectacle, and both Arians and Homoousians hastened to the church, every one endeavoring to secure an entrance there. As the prefect with Macedonius came near the church, an irrational panic seized the multitude and even the soldiers themselves; for as the assemblage was so numerous and no room to admit the passage of the prefect and Macedonius was found, the soldiers attempted to thrust aside the people by force. But the confined space into which they were crowded together rendering it impossible to recede, the soldiers imagined that resistance was offered, and that the populace intentionally stopped the passage; they accordingly began to use their naked swords, and to cut down those that stood in their way. It is affirmed that 288 δεύτερος μετὰ βασιλέα; not only second in rank, but first after him in power, ‘his right-hand man.’ Cf. Vergil’s alter ab illo, Ecl. V. 49, and VIII. 39.

about 3150 persons were massacred on this occasion; of whom the greater part fell under the weapons of the soldiers, and the rest were crushed to death by the desperate efforts of the multitude to escape their violence. After such distinguished achievements, Macedonius, as if he had not been the author of any calamity, but was altogether guiltless of what had been perpetrated, was seated in the episcopal chair by the prefect, rather than by the ecclesiastical canon. Thus, then, by means of so many murders in the church, Macedonius and the Arians grasped the supremacy in the churches. About this period the emperor built the great church called Sophia, adjoining to that named Irene, which being originally of small dimensions, the emperor’s father had considerably enlarged and adorned. In the present day both are seen within one enclosure, and have but one appellation.
Chapter XVII.—Athanasius, intimidated by the Emperor’s Threats, returns to Rome again.

At this time another accusation was concocted against Athanasius by the Arians, who invented this pretext for it. The father of the Augusti had long before granted an allowance of corn to the church of the Alexandrians for the relief of the indigent. This, they asserted, had usually been sold by Athanasius, and the proceeds converted to his own advantage. The emperor, giving credence to this slanderous report, threatened Athanasius with death, as a penalty; who, becoming alarmed at the intimation of this threat, took to flight, and kept himself concealed. When Julius, bishop of Rome, was apprised of these fresh machinations of the Arians against Athanasius, and had also received the letter of the then deceased Eusebius, he invited the persecuted Athanasius to come to him, having ascertained where he was secreted. The epistle also of the bishops who had been some time before assembled at Antioch, just then reached him; and at the same time others from the bishops in Egypt, assuring him that the entire charge against Athanasius was a fabrication. On the receipt of these contradictory communications, Julius first replied to the bishops who had written to him from Antioch, complaining of the acrimonious feeling they had evinced in their letter, and charging them with a violation of the canons, because they had not requested his attendance at the council, seeing that the ecclesiastical law required that the churches should pass no decisions contrary to the views of the bishop of Rome: he then censured them with great severity for clandestinely attempting to pervert the faith; in addition, that their former proceedings at Tyre were fraudulent, because the investigation of what had taken place at Mareotes was on one side of the question only; not only this, but that the charge respecting Arsenius had plainly been proved a false charge. Such and similar sentiments did Julius write in his answer to the bishops convened at Antioch; we should have inserted here at length, these as well as those letters which were addressed to Julius, did not their prolixity interfere with our purpose. But Sabinus, the advocate of the Macedonian heresy, of whom we have before spoken, has not incorporated the letters of Julius in his Collection of Synodical Transactions; although he has not omitted that which the bishops of Antioch sent to Julius. This, however, is usual with him; he carefully introduces such letters as make no reference to, or wholly repudiate the term homoousion; while he purposely passes over in silence those of a contrary tendency. This is sufficient on this subject. Not long after this, Paul, pretending to make a journey from Thessalonica to Corinth, arrived in Italy: upon 289 Sozom. X. 3 follows Socrates. The contents of the letter written by Julius to the Eusebians, found in Athanasius’ Apologia contra Arianos, c. 20, are different from those here given by Socrates. Julius there complains of their ignoring his invitation to the synod at Rome, but says nothing of any canon such as is mentioned here. Cf. ch. 8, note 2.

---

290 See above, ch. 15.
which both the bishops\textsuperscript{291} made an appeal to the emperor of those parts, laying their respective cases before him.

\textsuperscript{291} Athanasius and Paul.
Chapter XVIII.—The Emperor of the West requests his Brother to send him Three Persons who could give an Account of the Deposition of Athanasius and Paul. Those who are sent publish Another Form of the Creed.

When the Western emperor\(^\text{292}\) was informed of their affairs, he sympathized with their sufferings; and wrote to his brother [Constantius], begging him to send three bishops who should explain to him the reason for the deposition of Athanasius and Paul. In compliance with this request, Narcissus the Cilician, Theodore the Thracian, Maris of Chalcedon, and Mark the Syrian, were deputed to execute this commission; who on their arrival refused to hold any communication with Athanasius or his friends, but suppressing the creed which had been promulgated at Antioch, presented to the Emperor Constans another declaration of faith composed by themselves, in the following terms:

Another Exposition of the Faith.

We believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Creator and Maker of all things, of whom the whole family in heaven and upon earth is named;\(^\text{293}\) and in his only-begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was begotten of the Father before all ages; God of God; Light of Light; through whom all things in the heavens and upon the earth, both visible and invisible, were made: who is the Word, and Wisdom, and Power, and Life, and true Light: who in the last days for our sake was made man, and was born of the holy virgin; was crucified, and died; was buried, arose again from the dead on the third day, ascended into the heavens, is seated at the right hand of the Father, and shall come at the consummation of the ages, to judge the living and the dead, and to render to every one according to his works: whose kingdom being perpetual, shall continue to infinite ages; for he shall sit at the right hand of the Father, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come. [We believe] in the Holy Spirit, that is, in the Comforter, whom the Lord, according to his promise, sent to his apostles after his ascension into the heavens, to teach them, and bring all things to their remembrance: by whom also the souls of those who have sincerely believed on him shall be sanctified; and those who assert that the Son was made of things which are not, or of another substance, and not of God, or that there was a time when he did not exist, the Catholic Church accounts as aliens.

Having delivered this creed to the emperor, and exhibited it to many others also, they departed without attending to anything besides. But while there was yet an inseparable communion between the Western and Eastern churches, there sprang up another heresy at Sirmium, a city of Illyricum; for Photinus, who presided over the churches in that district, a native of the Lesser Galatia, and a disciple of that Marcellus who had been deposed, adopting \(^{292}\) Constantine the Younger. See I. 38, end.

\(^{293}\) Eph. iii. 15.
his master’s sentiments, asserted that the Son of God was a mere man. We shall, however, enter into this matter more fully in its proper place.\footnote{294 See below, ch. 59.}
Chapter XIX.—Of the Creed sent by the Eastern Bishops to those in Italy, called the Lengthy Creed. 295

After the lapse of about three years from the events above recorded, the Eastern bishops again assembled a Synod, and having composed another form of faith, they transmitted it to those in Italy by the hands of Eudoxius, at that time bishop of Germanicia, and Martyrius, and Macedonius, who was bishop of Mopsuestia 296 in Cilicia. This expression of the Creed, being written in more lengthy form, contained many additions to those which had preceded it, and was set forth in these words:

'We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, the Creator and Maker of all things, of whom the whole family in heaven and upon earth is named; and in his only-begotten Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who was begotten of the Father before all ages; God of God; Light of Light; through whom all things in the heavens and upon the earth, both visible and invisible, were made: who is the Word, and Wisdom, and Power, and Life, and true Light: who in the last days for our sake was made man, and was born of the holy virgin; who was crucified, and died, and was buried, and rose again from the dead on the third day, and ascended into heaven, and is seated at the right hand of the Father, and shall come at the consummation of the ages, to judge the living and the dead, and to render to every one according to his works: whose kingdom being perpetual shall continue to infinite ages; for he sits at the right hand of the Father, not only in this age, but also in that which is to come. We believe also in the Holy Spirit, that is, in the Comforter, whom the Lord according to his promise sent to his apostles after his ascension into heaven, to teach them and bring all things to their remembrance, through whom also the souls of those who sincerely believe on him are sanctified. But those who assert that the Son was made of things not in being, or of another substance, and not of God, or that there was a time or age when he did not exist, 297 the holy catholic Church accounts as aliens. The holy and catholic Church likewise anathematizes those also who say that there are three Gods, or that Christ is not God before all ages, or that he is neither Christ, nor the Son of God, or that the same person is Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, or that the Son was not begotten, or that the Father begat not the Son by his 295 This creed was called μακρόστιχος from its length, and the date of its promulgation must be put after the Council of Sardica, according to Hefele. See Hefele, History of the Church Councils, Vol. II. p. 85, 89, and 180 (ed. T. & T. Clark).

296 Μόψου ἑστία, lit. ‘the hearth of Mopsus,’ son of Apollo and Manto, daughter of Tiresias, according to the Greek mythology. Mopsuestia has become famous in the history of the church through its great citizen, Theodore. Cf. Smith and Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog.

297 This is the end of the first creed adopted at Antioch, as given in the preceding chapter; it is couched in almost identical terms in both these versions. The rest of the version here given is the addition that constitutes the characteristic of the 'Lengthy Creed.'
own will or desire. Neither is it safe to affirm that the Son had his existence from things that were not, since this is nowhere declared concerning him in the divinely inspired Scriptures. Nor are we taught that he had his being from any other pre-existing substance besides the Father, but that he was truly begotten of God alone; for the Divine word teaches that there is one unbegotten principle without beginning, the Father of Christ. But those who unauthorized by Scripture rashly assert that there was a time when he was not, ought not to preconceive any antecedent interval of time, but God only who without time begat him; for both times and ages were made through him. Yet it must not be thought that the Son is co-inoriginate, or co-unbegotten with the Father: for there is properly no father of the co-inoriginate or co-unbegotten. But we know that the Father alone being inoriginate and incomprehensible has ineffably and incomprehensibly to all begotten, and that the Son was begotten before the ages, but is not unbegotten like the Father, but has a beginning, viz. the Father who begat him, for “the head of Christ is God.”

Now although according to the Scriptures we acknowledge three things or persons, viz. that of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, we do not on that account make three Gods: since we know that that there is but one God perfect in himself, unbegotten, inoriginate, and invisible, the God and Father of the only-begotten, who alone has existence from himself, and alone affords existence abundantly to all other things. But neither while we assert that there is one God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the only-begotten, do we therefore deny that Christ is God before the ages, as the followers of Paul of Samosata do, who affirm that after his incarnation he was by exaltation deified, in that he was by nature a mere man. We know indeed that he was subject to his God and Father: nevertheless he was begotten of God, and is by nature true and perfect God, and was not afterwards made God out of man; but was for our sake made man out of God, and has never ceased to be God. Moreover we execrate and anathematize those who falsely style him the mere unsubstantial word of God, having existence only in another, either as the word to which utterance is given, or as the word conceived in the mind: and who pretend that before the ages he was neither the Christ, the Son of God, the Mediator, nor the Image of God; but that he became the Christ, and the Son of God, from the time he took our flesh from the virgin, about four hundred years ago. For they 298 συνάναρχον. It has been thought advisable to retain the above uncouth rendering of this word, as also of one or two others immediately following, on the ground that the etymological precision at which they aim compensates for their non-classical ring.

---

299 συναγέννητον.

300 ἀνέφικτον.

301 1 Cor. xi. 3.

302 “There has arisen in our days a certain Marcellus of Galatia, the most execrable of all heretics, who with a sacrilegious mind and impious mouth and wicked argument will needs set bounds to the perpetual, eternal, and timeless kingdom of our Lord Christ, saying that he began to reign four hundred years since, and shall end assert that Christ had the beginning of his kingdom from that time, and that it shall have an end after the consummation of all things and the judgment. Such persons as these are the followers of Marcellus and Photinus, the Ancyro-Galatians, who under pretext of establishing his sovereignty, like the Jews set aside the eternal existence and deity of Christ, and the perpetuity of his kingdom. But we know him to be not simply the word of God by utterance or mental conception, but God the living Word subsisting of himself; and Son of God and Christ; and who did, not by presence only, co-exist and was conversant with his Father before the ages, and ministered to him at the creation of all things, whether visible or invisible, but was the substantial Word of the Father, and God of God: for this is he to whom the Father said, "Let us make man in our image, and according to our likeness:" who in his own person appeared to the fathers, gave the law, and spake by the prophets; and being at last made man, he manifested his Father to all men, and reigns to endless ages. Christ has not attained any new dignity; but we believe that he was perfect from the beginning, and like his Father in all things; and those who say that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are the same person, impiously supposing the three names to refer to one and the same thing and person, we deservedly expel from the church because by the incarnation they render the Father, who is incomprehensible and insusceptible of suffering, subject to comprehension and suffering. Such are those denominated Patropassians among the Romans, and by us Sabellians. For we know that the Father who sent, remained in the proper nature of his own immutable deity; but that Christ who was sent, has fulfilled the economy of the incarnation. In like manner those who irreverently affirm that Christ was begotten not by the will and pleasure of his Father; thus attributing to God an involuntary necessity not springing from choice, as if he begat the Son by constraint, we consider most impious and strangers to the truth because they have dared to determine such things respecting him as are inconsistent with our common notions of God, and are contrary indeed to the sense of the divinely-inspired Scripture. For knowing that God is self-dependent and Lord of himself we devoutly maintain that of his own volition and pleasure he begat the Son. And while we reverentially believe what is spoken concerning him; "The Lord created me the beginning of his ways on account of his works": yet we do not suppose that he was made similarly to the creatures or works made by him. For it is impious and repugnant to the church’s faith to compare at the dissolution of the present world.’ This is the description given of the heresy here hinted at by the synodical letter of the Oriental bishops at Sardica. On Marcellus and the various opinions concerning him, see Zahn, Marcellus von Ancyra, Gotha, 1867; also monographs on Marcellus by Rettberg (1794) and by Klose (1837 and 1859). Cf. Neander, Hist. of Chr. Ch. Vol. II. p. 394.

304 Prov. viii. 22. The ancient bishops quote the LXX verbatim. The English versions (Authorised and Revised) follow the Hebrew, ‘The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old.’
the Creator with the works created by him; or to imagine that he had the same manner of generation as things of a nature totally different from himself: for the sacred Scriptures teach us that the alone only-begotten Son was really and truly begotten. Nor when we say that the Son is of himself, and lives and subsists in like manner to the Father, do we therefore separate him from the Father, as if we supposed them dissociated by the intervention of space and distance in a material sense. For we believe that they are united without medium or interval, and that they are incapable of separation from each other: the whole Father embosoming the Son; and the whole Son attached to and eternally reposing in the Father’s bosom. Believing, therefore, in the altogether perfect and most holy Trinity, and asserting that the Father is God, and that the Son also is God, we do not acknowledge two Gods, but one only, on account of the majesty of the Deity, and the perfect blending and union of the kingdoms:
the Father ruling over all things universally, and even over the Son himself; the Son being subject to the Father, but except him, ruling over all things which were made after him and by him; and by the Father’s will bestowing abundantly on the saints the grace of the Holy Spirit. For the Sacred Oracles inform us that in this consists the character of the sovereignty which Christ exercises.

‘We have been compelled, since the publication of our former epitome, to give this more ample exposition of the creed; not in order to gratify a vain ambition, but to clear ourselves from all strange suspicion respecting our faith which may exist among those who are ignorant of our real sentiments. And that the inhabitants of the West may both be aware of the shameless misrepresentations of the heterodox party; and also know the ecclesiastical opinion of the Eastern bishops concerning Christ, confirmed by the unwrested testimony of the divinely-inspired Scriptures, among all those of unperverted minds.’
Chapter XX.—Of the Council at Sardica.\textsuperscript{305}

The Western prelates on account of their being of another language, and not understanding this exposition, would not admit of it; saying that the Nicene Creed was sufficient, and that they would not waste time on anything beyond it. But when the emperor had again written to insist on the restoration to Paul and Athanasius of their respective sees, but without effect in consequence of the continual agitation of the people—these two bishops demanded that another Synod should be convened, so that their case, as well as other questions in relation to the faith might be settled by an ecumenical council, for they made it obvious that their deposition arose from no other cause than that the faith might be the more easily perverted. Another general council was therefore summoned to meet at Sardica,—a city of Illyricum,—by the joint authority of the two emperors; the one requesting by letter that it might be so, and the other, of the East, readily acquiescing in it. It was the eleventh year after the death of the father of the two Augusti, during the consulship of Rufinus and Eusebius,\textsuperscript{306} that the Synod of Sardica met. According to the statement of Athanasius\textsuperscript{307} about 300 bishops from the western parts of the empire were present; but Sabinus says there came only seventy from the eastern parts, among whom was Ischyras of Mareotes,\textsuperscript{308} who had been ordained bishop of that country by those who deposed Athanasius. Of the rest, some pretended infirmity of body; others complained of the shortness of the notice given, casting the blame of it on Julius, bishop of Rome, although a year and a half had elapsed from the time of its having been summoned: in which interval Athanasius remained at Rome awaiting the assembling of the Synod. When at last they were convened at Sardica, the Eastern prelates refused either to meet or to enter into any conference with those of the West, unless they first excluded Athanasius and Paul from the convention. But as Protogenes, bishop of Sardica, and Hosius, bishop of Cordova, a city in Spain, would by no means permit them to be absent, the Eastern bishops immediately withdrew, and returning to Philippopolis in Thrace, held a separate council, wherein they openly anathematized the term \textit{homoousios}; and having introduced the Anomoian\textsuperscript{309} opinion into their epistles, they sent them in all directions. On the other hand those who remained at Sardica, condemning \textsuperscript{305} Cf. Sozom. III. 11; Theodoret, \textit{H. E.} II. 7; also Hefele, \textit{Hist. of the Church Councils}, Vol. II. p. 87–176.

\textsuperscript{306} 347 a.d.

\textsuperscript{307} Athanasius’ statement is that those who were present at the Council of Sardica, together with those who afterwards subscribed the Synodical Epistle sent to them and those who before the council had written in his behalf out of Phrygia, Asia, and Isauria, were in all about three hundred and forty. So in his \textit{Apol. contra Arianos}, c. 50. In his \textit{Ep. ad Solitar.} c. 15, he gives the number of those who met at Sardica as about one hundred and seventy,—no more.

\textsuperscript{308} Cf. I. 27.

\textsuperscript{309} \textit{ἀνομοίου}, ‘different,’ ‘unlike.’
in the first place their departure, afterwards divested the accusers of Athanasius of their dignity; then confirming the Nicene Creed, and rejecting the term anomoion, they more distinctly recognized the doctrine of consubstantiality, which they also inserted in epistles addressed to all the churches. Both parties believed they had acted rightly: those of the East, because the Western bishops had countenanced those whom they had deposed; and these again, in consequence not only of the retirement of those who had deposed them before the matter had been examined into, but also because they themselves were the defenders of the Nicene faith, which the other party had dared to adulterate. They therefore restored to Paul and Athanasius their sees, and also Marcellus of Ancyra in Lesser Galatia, who had been deposed long before, as we have stated in the former book.\(^{310}\) At that time indeed he exerted himself to the utmost to procure the revocation of the sentence pronounced against him, declaring that his being suspected of entertaining the error of Paul of Samosata arose from a misunderstanding of some expressions in his book. It must, however, be noticed that Eusebius Pamphilus wrote three entire books against Marcellus,\(^{311}\) in which he quotes that author’s own words to prove that he asserts with Sabellius the Libyan, and Paul of Samosata, that the Lord [Jesus] was a mere man.
Chapter XXI.—Defense of Eusebius Pamphilus.

But since some have attempted to stigmatize even Eusebius Pamphilus himself as having favored the Arian views in his works, it may not be irrelevant here to make a few remarks respecting him. In the first place then he was both present at the council of Nicæa, which defined the doctrine of the homoousion and gave his assent to what was there determined. And in the third book of the Life of Constantine, he expressed himself in these words: 312

‘The emperor incited all to unanimity, until he had rendered them united in judgment on those points on which they were previously at variance; so that they were quite agreed at Nicæa in matters of faith.’ Since therefore Eusebius, in mentioning the Nicene Synod, says that all differences were removed, and that all came to unity of sentiment, what ground is there for assuming that he was himself an Arian? The Arians are also certainly deceived in supposing him to be a favorer of their tenets. But some one will perhaps say that in his discourses he seems to have adopted the opinions of Arius, because of his frequently saying through Christ, 313 to whom we should answer that ecclesiastical writers often use this mode of expression and others of a similar kind denoting the economy of our Saviour’s humanity: and that before all these the apostle 314 made use of such expressions, and never has been accounted a teacher of false doctrine. Moreover, inasmuch as Arius has dared to say that the Son is a creature, as one of the others, observe what Eusebius says on this subject, in his first book against Marcellus: 315

‘He alone, and no other, has been declared to be, and is the only-begotten Son of God; whence any one could justly censure those who have presumed to affirm that he is a Creature made of nothing, like the rest of the creatures; for how then would he be a Son? and how could he be God’s only-begotten, were he assigned the same nature as the other creatures...and were he one of the many created things, seeing that he, like them, would in that case be partaker of a creation from nothing? But the Sacred Scriptures do not thus instruct us.’ He again adds a little afterwards: ‘Whoever then defines the Son as made of things that are not, and as a creature produced from nothing pre-existing, forgets that while he concedes the name of Son, he denies him to be a Son in reality. For he that is made of nothing, cannot truly be the Son of God, any more than the other things which have been made; but the true Son of God, forasmuch as he is begotten of the Father, is properly denominated the only-begotten and beloved of the Father. For this reason also, he himself is God; for what can the offspring of God be, but the perfect resemblance of him who begot him?

312 Life of Const. III. 13.
313 Eusebius was accustomed to end his sermons with the formula ‘Glory be to the unborn God through his only-begotten Son,’ &c. So also at the end of his contra Sabell. I.
314 1 Cor. i.; Eph. iii. 9.
315 De Eccl. Theol. I. 8, 9, and 10.
A sovereign indeed builds a city, but does not beget it; and is said to beget a son, not to build one. An artificer, also, may be called the framer, but not the father of his work; while he could by no means be styled the framer of him whom he had begotten. So also the God of the Universe is the Father of the Son; but might be fitly termed the Framer and Maker of the world. And although it is once said in Scripture,316 “The Lord created me the beginning of his ways on account of his works,” yet it becomes us to consider the import of this phrase, which I shall hereafter explain; and not, as Marcellus has done, from a single passage to jeopardize the most important doctrine of the church.’

These and many other such expressions Eusebius Pamphilus has given utterance to in the first book against Marcellus; and in his third book,317 declaring in what sense the term creature is to be taken, he says:

‘Accordingly, these things being thus established, it follows that in the same sense as that which preceded, the words, “The Lord created me the beginning of his ways, on account of his works,” must have been spoken. For although he says that he was created, it is not as if he should say that he had arrived at existence from what was not, nor that he himself also was made of nothing like the rest of the creatures, which some have erroneously supposed; but as subsisting, living, pre-existing, and being before the constitution of the whole world; and having been appointed to rule the universe by his Lord and Father: the word created being here used instead of ordained or constituted. Certainly the apostle318 expressly called the rulers and governors among men creature, when he said, “Submit yourselves to every human creature for the Lord’s sake; whether to the king as supreme, or to governors as those sent by him.” The prophet also319 when he says, “Prepare, Israel, to invoke thy God. For behold he who confirms the thunder, creates the Spirit, and announces his Christ unto men”: …has not used the word “he who creates” in the sense of makes out of nothing. For God did not then create the Spirit, when he declared his Christ to all men, since320 “There is nothing new under the sun”; but the Spirit existed, and had being previously: but he was sent at what time the apostles were gathered together, when like thunder “There came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind; and they were filled with the Holy Spirit.”321 And thus they declared unto all men the Christ of God, in accordance with that prophecy which says,322 “Behold he who confirms the thunder, creates the Spirit, and announces his 316  Prov. viii. 22.

318  1 Pet. ii. 13.
319  Amos iv. 12, 13 (LXX).
320  Eccl. i. 9.
321  Acts ii. 2, 4.
322  Amos iv. 13.
Christ unto men”: the word “creates” being used instead of “sends down,” or appoints; and thunder in another figure implying the preaching of the Gospel. Again he that says, “Create in me a clean heart, O God,” said not this as if he had no heart; but prayed that his mind might be purified. Thus also it is said, “That he might create the two into one new man,” instead of unite. Consider also whether this passage is not of the same kind, “Clothe yourselves with the new man, which is created according to God”; and this, “If, therefore, any one be in Christ, he is a new creature”; and whatever other expressions of a similar nature any one may find who shall carefully search the divinely inspired Scripture. Wherefore, one should not be surprised if in this passage, “The Lord created me the beginning of his ways,” the term “created” is used metaphorically, instead of “appointed” or constituted.’

Such words Eusebius uses in his work against Marcellus; we have quoted them on account of those who have slanderously attempted to traduce and criminate him. Neither can they prove that Eusebius attributes a beginning of subsistence to the Son of God, although they may find him often using the expressions by accommodation; and especially so, because he was an emulator and admirer of the works of Origen, in which those who are able to comprehend the depth of Origen’s writings, will perceive it to be everywhere stated that the Son was begotten of the Father. These remarks have been made in passing, in order to refute those who have misrepresented Eusebius.

---

323 Psalm li. 10 (LXX).
324 Eph. ii. 15.
325 Eph. iv. 24.
326 2 Cor. v. 17.
Chapter XXII.—The Council of Sardica restores Paul and Athanasius to their Sees; and on the Eastern Emperor’s Refusal to admit them, the Emperor of the West threatens him with War.

Those convened at Sardica, as well as those who had formed a separate council at Philippopolis in Thrace, having severally performed what they deemed requisite, returned to their respective cities. From that time, therefore, the Western church was severed from the Eastern; and the boundary of communion between them was the mountain called Soucis, which divides the Illyrians from the Thracians. As far as this mountain there was indiscriminate communion, although there was a difference of faith; but beyond it they did not commune with one another. Such was the perturbed condition of the churches at that period. Soon after these transactions, the emperor of the Western parts informed his brother Constantius of what had taken place at Sardica, and begged him to restore Paul and Athanasius to their sees. But as Constantius delayed to carry this matter into effect, the emperor of the West again wrote to him, giving him the choice either of re-establishing Paul and Athanasius in their former dignity, and restoring their churches to them; or, on his failing to do this, of regarding him as his enemy, and immediately expecting war. The letter which he addressed to his brother was as follows:

‘Athanasius and Paul are here with me; and I am quite satisfied after investigation, that they are persecuted for the sake of piety. If, therefore, you will pledge yourself to reinstate them in their sees, and to punish those who have so unjustly injured them, I will send them to you; but should you refuse to do this, be assured, that I will myself come thither, and restore them to their own sees, in spite of your opposition.’

327 This separation was only temporary and must be distinguished from the great schism, which grew slowly and culminated with the adoption of the expression ‘filioque’ into the Apostles’ Creed by the Western church in the eleventh century. On the various degrees of unity and communion recognized in the ancient church, see Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. Bk. XVI. 1.

328 Τισούκις.
Chapter XXIII.—Constantius, being Afraid of his Brother’s Threats, recalls Athanasius by Letter, and sends him to Alexandria.

On receiving this communication the emperor of the East fell into perplexity; and immediately sending for the greater part of the Eastern bishops, he acquainted them with the choice his brother had submitted to him, and asked what ought to be done. They replied, it was better to concede the churches to Athanasius, than to undertake a civil war. Accordingly the emperor, urged by necessity, summoned Athanasius and his friends to his presence. Meanwhile the emperor of the West sent Paul to Constantinople, with two bishops and other honorable attendance, having fortified him with his own letters, together with those of the Synod. But while Athanasius was still apprehensive, and hesitated to go to him,—for he dreaded the treachery of his calumniators,—the emperor of the East not once only, but even a second and a third time, invited him to come to him; this is evident from his letters, which, translated from the Latin tongue, are as follows:

Epistle of Constantius to Athanasius. 329

Constantius Victor Augustus to Athanasius the bishop.

Our compassionate clemency cannot permit you to be any longer tossed and disquieted as it were by the boisterous waves of the sea. Our unwearied piety has not been unmindful of you driven from your native home, despoiled of your property, and wandering in pathless solitudes. And although I have too long deferred acquainting you by letter with the purpose of my mind, expecting your coming to us of your own accord to seek a remedy for your troubles; yet since fear perhaps has hindered the execution of your wishes, we therefore have sent to your reverence letters full of indulgence, in order that you may fearlessly hasten to appear in our presence, whereby after experiencing our benevolence, you may attain your desire, and be re-established in your proper position. For this reason I have requested my Lord and brother Constans Victor Augustus to grant you permission to come, to the end that by the consent of us both you may be restored to your country, having this assurance of our favor.

Another Epistle to Athanasius.

Constantius Victor Augustus to the bishop Athanasius.

Although we have abundantly intimated in a former letter that you might confidently come to our court, 330 as we are extremely anxious to reinstate you in your proper place, yet we have again addressed this letter to your reverence. We therefore urge you, without any distrust or apprehension, to take a public vehicle and hasten to us, in order that you may be able to obtain what you desire.

330 κομιτάτον = Lat. comitatus; by analogy of the New Test. words κήσσος κουστωδία, σπεικολάτωρ, &c., and frequently in Byzantine Greek κομβίνευμα σουφράγιον, &c.
Another Epistle to Athanasius.
Constantius Victor Augustus to the bishop Athanasius.

While we were residing at Edessa, where your presbyters were present, it pleased us to send one of them to you, for the purpose of hastening your arrival at our court, in order that after having been introduced to our presence, you might forthwith proceed to Alexandria. But inasmuch as a considerable time has elapsed since you received our letter, and yet have not come, we now therefore hasten to remind you to speedily present yourself before us, that so you may be able to return to your country, and obtain your desire. For the more ample assurance of our intention, we have despatched to you Achetas the deacon, from whom you will learn both our mind in regard to you, and that you will be able to secure what you wish; viz., our readiness to facilitate the objects you have in view.

When Athanasius had received these letters at Aquileia,—for there he abode after his departure from Sardica,—he immediately hastened to Rome; and having shown these communications to Julius the bishop, he caused the greatest joy in the Roman Church. For it seemed as if the emperor of the East also had recognized their faith, since he had recalled Athanasius. Julius then wrote to the clergy and laity of Alexandria on behalf of Athanasius as follows:

Epistle of Julius, Bishop of Rome, to those at Alexandria.\(^{331}\)

Julius, the bishop, to the presbyters, deacons, and people inhabiting Alexandria, brethren beloved, salutations in the Lord.

I also rejoice with you, beloved brethren, because you at length see before your eyes the fruit of your faith. For that this is really so, any one may perceive in reference to my brother and fellow-prelate Athanasius, whom God has restored to you, both on account of his purity of life, and in answer to your prayers. From this it is evident that your supplications to God have unceasingly been offered pure and abounding with love; for mindful of the divine promises and of the charity connected with them, which ye learned from the instruction of my brother, ye knew assuredly, and according to the sound faith which is in you clearly foresaw that your bishop would not be separated from you for ever, whom ye had in your devout hearts as though he were ever present. Wherefore it is unnecessary for me to use many words in addressing you, for your faith has already anticipated whatever I could have said; and the common prayer of you all has been fulfilled according to the grace of Christ. I therefore rejoice with you, and repeat that ye have preserved your souls invincible in the faith. And with my brother Athanasius I rejoice equally; because, while suffering many afflictions, he has never been unmindful of your love and desire; for although he seemed to be withdrawn from you in person for a season, yet was he always present with you in spirit. Moreover, I am convinced, beloved, that every trial which he has endured has not been in-\(^{331}\) Athen. Apol. c. Arian. 52.

---

glorious; since both your faith and his has thus been tested and made manifest to all. But had not so many troubles happened to him, who would have believed, either that you had so great esteem and love for this eminent prelate, or that he was endowed with such distinguished virtues, on account of which also he will by no means be defrauded of his hope in the heavens? He has accordingly obtained a testimony of confession in every way glorious both in the present age and in that which is to come. For having suffered so many and diversified trials both by land and by sea, he has trampled on every machination of the Arian heresy; and though often exposed to danger in consequence of envy, he despised death, being protected by Almighty God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, ever trusting that he should not only escape the plots [of his adversaries], but also be restored for your consolation, and bring back to you at the same time greater trophies from your own conscience. By which means he has been made known even to the ends of the whole earth as glorious, his worth having been approved by the purity of his life, the firmness of his purpose, and his steadfastness in the heavenly doctrine, all being attested by your unchanging esteem and love. He therefore returns to you, more illustrious now than when he departed from you. For if the fire tries the precious metals (I speak of gold and silver) for purification, what can be said of so excellent a man proportionate to his worth, who after having overcome the fire of so many calamities and dangers, is now restored to you, being declared innocent not only by us, but also by the whole Synod? Receive therefore with godly honor and joy, beloved brethren, your bishop Athanasius, together with those who have been his companions in tribulation. And rejoice in having attained the object of your prayers, you who have supplied with meat and drink, by your supporting letters, your pastor hungering and thirsting, so to speak, for your spiritual welfare. And in fact ye were a comfort to him while he was sojourning in a strange land; and ye cherished him in your most faithful affections when he was plotted against and persecuted. As for me, it makes me happy even to picture to myself in imagination the delight of each one of you at his return, the pious greetings of the populace, the glorious festivity of those assembled to meet him, and indeed what the entire aspect of that day will be when my brother shall be brought back to you again; when past troubles will be at an end, and his prized and longed-for return will unite all hearts in the warmest expression of joy. This feeling will in a very high degree extend to us, who regard it as a token of divine favor that we should have been privileged to become acquainted with so eminent a person. It becomes us therefore to close this epistle with prayer. May God Almighty and his Son our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ afford you this grace continually, thus rewarding the admirable faith which ye have manifested in reference to your bishop by an illustrious testimony: that the things most excellent which "Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man; even the things which God has prepared for them that love him," may await you and yours in the world to come, through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom be glory to God Almighty for ever and ever, Amen. I pray that ye may be strengthened, beloved brethren.

332 1 Cor. ii. 9

Athanasius, relying on these letters, arrived at the East. The Emperor Constantius did not at that time receive him with hostility of feeling; nevertheless at the instigation of the Arians he endeavored to circumvent him, and addressed him in these words: 'You have been reinstated in your see in accordance with the decree of the Synod, and with our consent. But inasmuch as some of the people of Alexandria refuse to hold communion with you, permit them to have one church in the city.' To this demand Athanasius promptly replied: 'You have the power, my sovereign, both to order, and to carry into effect, whatever you may please. I also, therefore, would beg you to grant me a favor.' The emperor having readily promised to acquiesce, Athanasius immediately added, that he desired the same thing might be conceded to him, which the emperor had sought from him, viz.: that in every city one church should be assigned to those who might refuse to hold communion with the Arians. The Arians perceiving the purpose of Athanasius to be inimical to their interests, said that this affair might be postponed to another time: but they suffered the emperor to act as he pleased. He therefore restored to Athanasius, Paul, and Marcellus their respective sees; as also to Asclepas, bishop of Gaza, and Lucius of Adrianople. For these, too, had been received by the Council of Sardica: Asclepas, because he showed records from which it appeared that Eusebius Pamphilus, in conjunction with several others, after having investigated his case, had restored him to his former rank; and Lucius, because his accusers had fled. Hereupon the emperor’s edicts were despatched to their respective cities, enjoining the inhabitants to receive them readily. At Ancyra indeed, when Basil was ejected, and Marcellus was introduced in his stead, there was a considerable tumult made, which afforded his enemies an occasion of calumniating him: but the people of Gaza willingly received Asclepas. Macedonius at Constantinople, for a short time gave place to Paul, convening assemblies by himself separately, in a separate church in that city. Moreover the emperor wrote on behalf of Athanasius to the bishops, clergy, and laity, in regard to receiving him cheerfully: and at the same time he ordered by other letters, that whatever had been enacted against him in the judicial courts should be abrogated. The communications respecting both these matters were as follows:

The Epistle of Constantius in Behalf of Athanasius.

Victor Constantius Maximus Augustus, to the bishops and presbyters of the Catholic Church.

The most reverend bishop Athanasius has not been forsaken by the grace of God. But although he was for a short time subjected to trial according to men, yet has he obtained from an omniscient Providence the exoneration which was due to him; having been restored by the will of God, and our decision, both to his country and to the church over which by divine permission he presided. It was therefore suitable that what is in accordance with this should be duly attended to by our clemency: so that all things which have been heretofore determined against those who held communion with him should now be rescinded; that all suspicion against him should henceforward cease; and that the immunity which those clergymen who are with him formerly enjoyed, should be, as it is meet, confirmed to them.

---

Moreover, we thought it just to add this to our grace toward him, that the whole ecclesiast-cical body should understand that protection is extended to all who have adhered to him, whether bishops or other clergymen: and union with him shall be a sufficient evidence of each person’s right intention. Wherefore we have ordered, according to the similitude of the previous providence, that as many as have the wisdom to enroll themselves with the sounder judgment and party and to choose his communion, shall enjoy that indulgence which we have now granted in accordance with the will of God.

Another Epistle sent to the Alexandrians. 334

Victor Constantius Maximus Augustus, to the people of the Catholic Church at Alexandria.

Setting before us as an aim your good order in all respects, and knowing that you have long since been bereft of episcopal oversight, we thought it just to send back to you again Athanasius your bishop, a man known to all by the rectitude and sanctity of his life and manners. Having received him with your usual and becoming courtesy, and constituted him the assistant of your prayers to God, exert yourselves to maintain at all times, according to the ecclesiastical canon, harmony and peace, which will be alike honorable to yourselves, and grateful to us. For it is unreasonable that any dissension or faction should be excited among you, hostile to the prosperity of our times; and we trust that such a misfortune will be wholly removed from you. We exhort you, therefore, to assiduously persevere in your accustomed devotions, by his assistance, as we before said: so that when this resolution of yours shall become generally known, entering into the prayers of all, even the pagans, who are still enslaved in the ignorance of idolatrous worship, may haste to seek the knowledge of our sacred religion, most beloved Alexandrians. Again, therefore, we exhort you to give heed to these things: heartily welcome your bishop, as one appointed you by the will of God and our decree; and esteem him worthy of being embraced with all the affections of your souls. For this becomes you, and is consistent with our clemency. But in order to check all tendency to seditions and tumult in persons of a factious disposition, orders have been issued to our judges to give up to the severity of the laws all whom they may discover to be seditious.
Having regard, therefore, to our determination and God’s, 335 as well as to the anxiety we 335 τοῦ κρείτονος; cf. I. 7, and note.

feel to secure harmony among you, and remembering also the punishment that will be inflicted on the disorderly, make it your especial care to act agreeably to the sanctions of our sacred religion, with all reverence honoring your bishop; that so in conjunction with him you may present your supplications to the God and Father of the universe, both for yourselves, and for the orderly government of the whole human race.

An Epistle respecting the Rescinding of the Enactments against Athanasius.

Victor Constantius Augustus to Nestorius, and in the same terms to the governors of Augustamnica, Thebaïs, and Libya.

If it be found that at any time previously any enactment has been passed prejudicial and derogatory to those who hold communion with Athanasius the bishop, our pleasure is that it should now be wholly abrogated; and that his clergy should again enjoy the same immunity which was granted to them formerly. We enjoin strict obedience to this command, to the intent that since the bishop Athanasius has been restored to his church, all who hold communion with him may possess the same privileges as they had before, and such as other ecclesiastics now enjoy: that so their affairs being happily arranged, they also may share in the general prosperity.
Chapter XXIV.—Athanasius, passing through Jerusalem on his Return to Alexandria, is received into Communion by Maximus: and a Synod of Bishops, convened in that City, confirms the Nicene Creed.

Athanasius the bishop being fortified with such letters as these, passed through Syria, and came into Palestine. On arriving at Jerusalem he acquainted Maximus the bishop both with what had been done in the Council of Sardica, and also that the Emperor Constantius had confirmed its decision: he then proposed that a Synod of the bishops there should be held. Maximus, therefore, without delay sent for certain of the bishops of Syria and Palestine, and having assembled a council, he restored Athanasius to communion, and to his former dignity. After which the Synod communicated by letter to the Alexandrians, and to all the bishops of Egypt and Libya, what had been determined respecting Athanasius. Whereupon the adversaries of Athanasius exceedingly derided Maximus, because having before assisted in his deposition, he had suddenly changed his mind, and as if nothing had previously taken place, had voted for his restoration to communion and rank. When Ursacius and Valens, who had been fiery partisans of Arianism, ascertained these things, condemning their former zeal, they proceeded to Rome, where they presented their recantation to Julius the bishop, and gave their assent to the doctrine of consubstantiality: they also wrote to Athanasius, and expressed their readiness to hold communion with him in future. Thus Ursacius and Valens were at that time subdued by the good fortune of Athanasius and induced to recognize the orthodox faith. Athanasius passed through Pelusium on his way to Alexandria, and admonished the inhabitants of every city to beware of the Arians, and to receive those only that professed the Homoousian faith. In some of the churches also he performed ordination; which afforded another ground of accusation against him, because of his undertaking to ordain in the dioceses of others. Such was the progress of affairs at that period in reference to Athanasius.

336 The bishop of Jerusalem was under the jurisdiction of the metropolitan bishop of Cæsarea, and according to later usage and canon, had no right to call a synod without the permission of the metropolitan. Evidently usage had not yet become fixed into uniformity in this respect.

338 Cf. Apost. Cann. XXXV. 'Let not a bishop dare to ordain beyond his limits, in cities and places not subject to him.' It follows, therefore, that the whole of Egypt was not under the bishop of Alexandria; otherwise no such charge as is here mentioned could have been made against Athanasius. That these ordinations were made in Egypt is evident from the mention of Pelusium, which Athanasius had already passed through.
Chapter XXV.—Of the Usurpers Magnentius and Vetranio.

About this time an extraordinary commotion shook the whole state, of the principal heads, of which we shall give a brief account, deeming it necessary not to pass over them altogether. We mentioned in our first book,\(^{339}\) that after the death of the founder of Constantinople, his three sons succeeded him in the empire: it must now be also stated, that a kinsman of theirs, Dalmatius, so named from his father, shared with them the imperial authority. This person after being associated with them in the sovereignty for a very little while, the soldiers put to death,\(^{340}\) Constantius having neither commanded his destruction, nor forbidden it. The manner in which Constantine the younger was also killed by the soldiers, on his invading that division of the empire which belonged to his brother, has already been recorded\(^{341}\) more than once. After his death, the Persian war was raised against the Romans, in which Constantius did nothing prosperously: for in a battle fought by night on the frontiers of both parties, the Persians had to some slight extent the advantage. And this at a time when the affairs of the Christians became no less unsettled, there being great disturbance throughout the churches on account of Athanasius, and the term homoousion. Affairs having reached this pass, there sprang up a tyrant in the western parts called Magnentius,\(^{342}\) who by treachery slew Constans, the emperor of the western division of the empire, at that time residing in the Gauls. This being done, a furious civil war arose, and Magnentius made himself master of all Italy, reduced Africa and Libya under his power, and even obtained possession of the Gauls. But at the city of Sirmium in Illyricum, the military set up another tyrant whose name was Vetranio;\(^{343}\) while a fresh trouble threw Rome itself into commotion. For there was a nephew of Constantine’s, Nepotian by name, who, supported by a body of gladiators, there assumed the sovereignty. He was, however, slain by some of the officers of Magnentius, who himself invaded the western provinces, and spread desolation in every direction.

---

\(^{339}\) I. 38.

\(^{340}\) The same account is given by Eunap. X. 9, and by Zosimus, II. 40.

\(^{341}\) Ch. 5, above.

\(^{342}\) Magnentius was governor of the provinces of Rhœtia, and assassinated Constans, as above. Cf. Zosimus, II. 43.

\(^{343}\) This whole affair is treated extensively in Zosimus, II. 43–48.
Chapter XXVI.—After the Death of Constans, the Western Emperor, Paul and Athanasius are again ejected from their Sees: the Former on his Way into Exile is slain; but the Latter escapes by Flight.

The conflux of these disastrous events occurred during a short space of time; for they happened in the fourth year after the council at Sardica, during the consulate of Sergius and Nigrinian.\(^{344}\) When these circumstances were published, the entire sovereignty of the empire seemed to devolve on Constantius alone, who, being accordingly proclaimed in the East sole Autocrat, made the most vigorous preparations against the usurpers. Hereupon the adversaries of Athanasius, thinking a favorable crisis had arisen, again framed the most calumnious charges against him, before his arrival at Alexandria; assuring the Emperor Constantius that he was subverting all Egypt and Libya. And his having undertaken to ordain out of the limits of his own diocese, tended not a little to accredit the accusations against him. Meanwhile in this conjuncture, Athanasius entered Alexandria; and having convened a council of the bishops in Egypt, they confirmed by their unanimous vote, what had been determined in the Synod at Sardica, and that assembled at Jerusalem by Maximus. But the emperor, who had been long since imbued with Arian doctrine, reversed all the indulgent proceedings he had so recently resolved on. And first of all he ordered that Paul, bishop of Constantinople, should be sent into exile; whom those who conducted strangled, at Cucusus in Cappadocia. Marcellus was also ejected, and Basil again made ruler of the church at Ancyra. Lucius of Adrianople, being loaded with chains, died in prison. The reports which were made concerning Athanasius so wrought on the emperor’s mind, that in an ungovernable fury he commanded him to be put to death wherever he might be found: he moreover included Theodulus and Olympius, who presided over churches in Thrace, in the same proscription. Athanasius, however, was not ignorant of the intentions of the emperor; but learning of them he once more had recourse to flight, and so escaped the emperor’s menaces. The Arians denounced this retreat as criminal, particularly Narcissus, bishop of Neronias in Cilicia, George of Laodicæa, and Leontius who then had the oversight of the church at Antioch. This last person, when a presbyter, had been divested of his rank,\(^{345}\) because in \(^{344}\) 350 a.d.

\(^{345}\) Cf. Apost. Cann. XXII. and XXIII.; according to these any cleric was to be deposed if found guilty of such a crime. The Council of Nicæa also passed a canon on the subject which is as follows: ‘If a man has been mutilated by physicians during sickness, or by barbarians, he may remain among the clergy; but if a man in good health has mutilated himself, he must resign his post after the matter has been proved among the clergy, and in future no one who has thus acted should be ordained. But as it is evident that what has just been said only concerns those who have thus acted with intention, and have dared to mutilate themselves, those who have been made eunuchs by barbarians or by their masters will be allowed, conformably to the canon, to remain among the clergy, if in other respects they are worthy.’ Canon I. See Hefele, Hist. of the Councils, Vol. I. p. 375, 376. order to remove all suspicion of illicit intercourse with a woman named Eustolium, with whom he spent a considerable portion of his time, he had castrated himself and thencefor-ward lived more unreservedly with her, on the ground that there could be no longer any ground for evil surmises. Afterwards however, at the earnest desire of the Emperor Constan-tius, he was created bishop of the church at Antioch, after Stephen, the successor of Placitus.
So much respecting this.
Chapter XXVII.—Macedonius having possessed himself of the See of Constantinople inflicts much Injury on those who differ from him.

At that time Paul having been removed in the manner described, Macedonius became ruler of the churches in Constantinople; who, acquiring very great ascendency over the emperor, stirred up a war among Christians, of a no less grievous kind than that which the usurpers themselves were waging. For having prevailed on his sovereign to co-operate with him in devastating the churches, he procured that whatever pernicious measures he determined to pursue should be ratified by law. And on this account throughout the several cities an edict was proclaimed, and a military force appointed to carry the imperial decrees into effect. Accordingly those who acknowledged the doctrine of consubstantiality were expelled not only from the churches, but also from the cities. Now at first they were satisfied with expulsion; but as the evil grew they resorted to the worse extremity of inducing compulsory communion with them, caring but little for such a desecration of the churches. Their violence indeed was scarcely less than that of those who had formerly obliged the Christians to worship idols; for they applied all kinds of scourgings, a variety of tortures, and confiscation of property. Many were punished with exile; some died under the torture; and others were put to death while they were being led into exile. These atrocities were exercised throughout all the eastern cities, but especially at Constantinople; the internal strife which was but slight before was thus savagely increased by Macedonius, as soon as he obtained the bishopric. The cities of Greece, however, and Illyricum, with those of the western parts, still enjoyed tranquillity; inasmuch as they preserved harmony among themselves, and continued to adhere to the rule of faith promulgated by the council of Nicæa.
Chapter XXVIII.—Athanasius’ Account of the Deeds of Violence committed at Alexandria by George the Arian.

What cruelties George perpetrated at Alexandria at the same time may be learned from the narration of Athanasius, who both suffered in and witnessed the occurrences. In his 'Apology for his flight,' speaking of these transactions, he thus expresses himself:

'Moreover, they came to Alexandria, again seeking to destroy me: and on this occasion their proceedings were worse than before; for the soldiery having suddenly surrounded the church, there arose the din of war, instead of the voice of prayer. Afterwards, on his arrival during Lent, George, sent from Cappadocia, added to the evil which he was instructed to work. When Easter-week was passed, the virgins were cast into prison, the bishops were led in chains by the military, and the dwellings even of orphans and widows were forcibly entered and their provisions pillaged. Christians were assassinated by night; houses were sealed, and the relatives of the clergy were endangered on their account. Even these outrages were dreadful; but those that followed were still more so. For in the week after the holy Pentecost, the people, having fasted, went forth to the cemetery to pray, because all were averse to communion with George: that wickedest of men being informed of this, instigated against them Sebastian, an officer who was a Manichean. He, accordingly, at the head of a body of troops armed with drawn swords, bows, and darts, marched out to attack the people, although it was the Lord’s day: finding but few at prayers,—as the most part had retired because of the lateness of the hour,—he performed such exploits as might be expected from them. Having kindled a fire, he set the virgins near it, in order to compel them to say that they were of the Arian faith: but seeing they stood their ground and despised the fire, he then stripped them, and so beat them on the face, that for a long time afterwards they could scarcely be recognized. Seizing also about forty men, he flogged them in an extraordinary manner: for he so lacerated their backs with rods fresh cut from the palm-tree, which still had their thorns on, that some were obliged to resort repeatedly to surgical aid in order to have the thorns extracted from their flesh, and others, unable to bear the agony, died.

346 Athan. Apol. de Fuga, 6.
347 Τεσσαρακοστή, lit. = 'forty days' fast,' formed by mistaken analogy to πεντηκοστή.
348 Suspending, i.e., all violence during the period of festivity attending the observance of Easter.
349 Houses are often sealed by state and municipal officials in the East, even at the present time, when their contents are to be confiscated, or for any other reason an inventory is to be made by the authorities. The sealing consists in fastening and securing the locks and bolts and attaching the impression of the official seal to some sealing-wax which is put over them. In this case the object of the sealing was apparently the confiscation of the contents.
under its infliction. All the survivors with one virgin they banished to the Great Oasis.\textsuperscript{350} The bodies of the dead they did not so much as give up to their relatives, but denying them the rites of sepulture they concealed them as they thought fit, that the evidences of their cruelty might not appear. They did this acting as madmen. For while the friends of the deceased rejoiced on account of their confession, but mourned because their bodies were un-interred, the impious inhumanity of these acts was sounded abroad the more conspicuously. For soon after this they sent into exile out of Egypt and the two Libyas the following bishops: Ammonius, Thmuïs, Caïus, Philo, Hermes, Pliny, Psenosiris, Nilammon, Agatho, Anagamphus, Mark, Ammonius, another Mark, Dracontius, Adelphius, and Athenodorus; and the presbyters Hierax and Discorus. And so harshly did they treat them in conducting them, that some expired while on their journey, and others in the place of banishment. In this way they got rid of more than thirty bishops, for the anxious desire of the Arians, like Ahab’s, was to exterminate the truth if possible.’

Such are the words of Athanasius in regard to the atrocities perpetrated by George at Alexandria. The emperor meanwhile led his army into Illyricum. For there the urgency of public affairs demanded his presence; and especially the proclamation of Vetranio\textsuperscript{351} as emperor by the military. On arriving at Sirmium, he came to a conference with Vetranio during a truce; and so managed, that the soldiers who had previously declared for him changed sides, and saluted Constantius alone as Augustus and sovereign autocrat. In the acclamations, therefore, no notice was taken of Vetranio. Vetranio, perceiving himself to be abandoned, immediately threw himself at the feet of the emperor; Constantius, taking from him his imperial crown and purple, treated him with great clemency, and recommended him to pass the rest of his days tranquilly in the condition of a private citizen: observing that a life of repose at his advanced age was far more suitable than a dignity which entailed anxieties and care. Vetranio’s affairs came to this issue; and the emperor ordered that a liberal provision out of the public revenue should be given him. Often afterwards writing to the emperor during his residence at Prusa in Bithynia, Vetranio assured him that he had conferred the greatest blessing on him, by liberating him from the disquietudes which are the inseparable concomitants of sovereign power. Adding that he himself did not act wisely in depriving himself of that happiness in retirement, which he had bestowed upon him. Let this suffice on this point. After these things, the Emperor Constantius having created Gallus \textsuperscript{350} The modern \textit{El-Onah} or \textit{El-Kharjeh}, situated west of the Nile, seven days’ journey from Thebes, contains several small streams, and abounds in vegetation, including palm-trees, orange and citron groves, olive orchards, &c. See Smith, \textit{Dict. of Geogr.}

\textsuperscript{351} Sozomen (IV. 4) calls him \textit{Οὐετερανίων}; cf. also Zosimus, II. 44, on the way in which he was elevated and soon afterwards reduced.
his kinsman Cæsar, and given him his own name,\textsuperscript{352} sent him to Antioch in Syria, providing thus for the guarding of the eastern parts. When Gallus was entering this city, the Savior’s sign appeared in the East:\textsuperscript{353} for a pillar in the form of a cross seen in the heavens gave occasion of great amazement to the spectators. His other generals the emperor despatched against Magnentius with considerable forces, and he himself remained at Sirmium, awaiting the course of events.

\textsuperscript{352} See I. 1, and note on the name of Eusebius Pamphilus; cf. Smith and Cheetham, \textit{Dict. of Christ. Ant. Names}.

\textsuperscript{353} Similar to the appearance mentioned in I. 2. See note on that passage.
Chapter XXIX.—Of the Heresiarch Photinus.

During this time Photinus,\(^{354}\) who then presided over the church in that city more openly avowed the creed he had devised; wherefore a tumult being made in consequence, the emperor ordered a Synod of bishops to be held at Sirmium. There were accordingly convened there of the Oriental bishops,\(^{355}\) Mark of Arethusa, George of Alexandria, whom the Arians sent, as I have before said, having placed him over that see on the removal of Gregory, Basil who presided over the church at Ancyræ after Marcellus was ejected, Pan克拉提乌斯 of Pelusium, and Hypatian of Heraclea. Of the Western bishops there were present Valens of Mursa, and the then celebrated Hosius of Cordova in Spain, who attended much against his will. These met at Sirmium, after the consulate of Sergius and Nigrinian,\(^{356}\) in which year no consul celebrated the customary inaugural\(^{357}\) solemnities, in consequence of the tumults of war; and having met and found that Photinus held the heresy of Sabellius the Libyan, and Paul of Samosata, they immediately deposed him. This decision was both at that time and afterwards universally commended as honorable and just; but those who continued there, subsequently acted in a way which was by no means so generally approved.

\(^{354}\) A disciple of Marcellus (see ch. 18). See Hilar. de Synod. 61, Cave on Photinus.

\(^{355}\) The bishops here mentioned, according to Valesius, took part not in this council, but in another held at the same place nine years later, under the consuls Eusebius and Hypatius.

\(^{356}\) 351 a.d. So also Sozomen, IV. 6.

\(^{357}\) The Ludi circenses, consisting of five games, leaping, wrestling, boxing, racing, and hurling,—called in Greek πένταθλον,—with scenic representations and spectacles of wild beasts at the amphitheatre; with these the consuls entertained the people at their entrance on the consulate. Alluded to by Tacitus (Ann. I. 2) and Juvenal (Sat. X. 1). Cf. Smith, Dict. of Greek and Rom. Antiq.
Chapter XXX.—Creeds published at Sirmium in Presence of the Emperor Constantius.

As if they would rescind their former determinations respecting the faith, they published anew other expositions of the creed, viz.: one which Mark of Arethusa composed in Greek; and others in Latin, which harmonized neither in expression nor in sentiment with one another, nor with that dictated by the bishop of Arethusa. I shall here subjoin one of those drawn up in Latin, to that prepared in Greek by Mark: the other, which was afterwards recited at Sirmium, will be given when we describe what was done at Ariminum. It must be understood, however, that both the Latin forms were translated into Greek. The declaration of faith set forth by Mark, was as follows:359

‘We believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Creator and Maker of all things, of whom the whole family in heaven and on earth is named, and in his only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was begotten of the Father before all ages, God of God, Light of Light, by whom all things visible and invisible, which are in the heavens and upon the earth, were made: who is the Word, and the Wisdom, and the true Light, and the Life; who in the last days for our sake was made man and born of the holy virgin, and was crucified and died, and was buried, and rose again from the dead on the third day, and was received up into heaven, and sat at the right hand of the Father, and is coming at the completion of the age to judge the living and the dead, and to requite every one according to his works: whose kingdom being everlasting, endures into infinite ages; for he will be seated at the Father’s right hand, not only in the present age, but also in that which is to come. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit, that is to say the Comforter, whom, having promised to his apostles after his ascension into the heavens, to teach them, and bring all things to their remembrance, he sent; by whom also the souls of those who have sincerely believed in him are sanctified. But those who affirm that the Son is of things which are not, or of another substance, and not of God, and that there was a time or an age when he was not, the holy and catholic Church recognizes to be aliens. We therefore again say, if any one affirms that the Father and Son are two Gods, let him be anathema. And if any one admits that Christ is God and the Son of God before the ages, but does not confess that he ministered to the Father in the formation of all things, let him be anathema. If any one shall dare to assert that the Unbegotten, or a part of him, was born of Mary, let him be anathema. If any one should say that the Son was of Mary according to foreknowledge, and not that he was with God, begotten 358 There were three councils held at Sirmium: one in 351, as already indicated in note 3, ch. 29; another in 357, in which Hosius and Potamius composed their blasphemy; and one in 359. It was in this last council that that creed was drawn up which was recited in Ariminum. The confusion of Socrates on this point has been alluded to in the Introd.

359 Athan. de Synod. 27.
360 Eph. iii. 15.
of the Father before the ages, and that all things were not made by him, let him be anathema. If any one affirms the essence of God to be dilated or contracted, let him be anathema. If any one says that the dilated essence of God makes the Son, or shall term the Son the dilatation of his essence, let him be anathema. If any one calls the Son of God the internal or uttered word, let him be anathema. If any one declares that the Son that was born of Mary was man only, let him be anathema. If any man affirming him that was born of Mary to be God and man, shall imply the unbegotten God himself, let him be anathema. If any one shall understand the text, "I am the first, and I am the last, and besides me there is no God," which was spoken for the destruction of idols and false gods, in the sense the Jews do, as if it were said for the subversion of the only-begotten of God before the ages, let him be anathema. If any one hearing “the Word was made flesh,” should imagine that the Word was changed into flesh, or that he underwent any change in assuming flesh, let him be anathema. If any one hearing that the only-begotten Son of God was crucified, should say that his divinity underwent any corruption, or suffering, or change, or diminution, or destruction, let him be anathema. If any one should affirm that the Father said not to the Son, “Let us make man,” but that God spoke to himself, let him be anathema. If any one says that it was not the Son that was seen by Abraham, but the unbegotten God, or a part of him, let him be anathema. If any one says that it was not the Son that as man wrestled with Jacob, but the unbegotten God, or a part of him, let him be anathema. If any one shall understand the words, “The Lord rained from the Lord,” not in relation to the Father and the Son, but shall say that he rained from himself, let him be anathema: for the Lord the Son rained from the Lord the Father. If any one hearing “the Lord the Father, and the Lord the Son,” shall term both the Father and the Son Lord, and saying “the Lord from the Lord” shall assert that there are two Gods, let him be anathema. For we do not co-ordinate the Son with the Father, but [conceive him to be] subordinate to the Father. For he neither came down to the body without his Father’s will; nor did he rain from himself, but from the Lord (i.e. the Father) who exercises supreme authority: nor does he sit at the Father’s right hand of himself, but in obedience to the Father saying, “Sit thou at my right hand” [let him be anathema]. If any one should say that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one person, let him be anathema. If any one, speaking of the Holy Spirit the Comforter, shall call him the 361 Isa. xliv. 6.

362 John i. 14.
363 Gen. i. 26.
364 Gen. xix. 24: 'Then the Lord…rained brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven.'
365 Athanasius reads ἐπὶ Σόδομα, οὐτ εἰς σῶμα. If this be the true reading, we should translate 'came down to Sodom,' &c.
366 Ps. cix. 1 (LXX).
unbegotten God, let him be anathema. If any one, as he hath taught us, shall not say that the Comforter is other than the Son, when he has himself said, “the Father, whom I will ask, shall send you another Comforter,” let him be anathema. If any one affirm that the Spirit is part of the Father and of the Son, let him be anathema. If any one say that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are three Gods, let him be anathema. If any one say that the Son of God was made as one of the creatures by the will of God, let him be anathema. If any one shall say that the Son was begotten without the Father’s will, let him be anathema: for the Father did not, as compelled by any natural necessity, beget the Son at a time when he was unwilling; but as soon as it pleased him, he has declared that of himself without time and without passion, he begot him. If any one should say that the Son is unbegotten, and without beginning, intimating that there are two without beginning, and unbegotten, so making two Gods, let him be anathema: for “the head of Christ is God.” Thus do we devoutly trace up all things by the Son to one source of all things who is without beginning. Moreover, to give an accurate conception of Christian doctrine, we again say, that if any one shall not declare Christ Jesus to have been the Son of God before all ages, and to have ministered to the Father in the creation of all things; but shall affirm that from the time only when he was born of Mary, was he called the Son and Christ, and that he then received the commencement of his divinity, let him be anathema, as the Samosatan.

Another Exposition of the Faith set forth at Sirmium in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek.

Since it appeared good that some deliberation respecting the faith should be undertaken, all points have been carefully investigated and discussed at Sirmium, in presence of Valens, Ursacius, Germinius, and others.

It is evident that there is one God, the Father Almighty, according as it is declared over the whole world; and his only-begotten Son Jesus Christ, our Lord, God, and Saviour, begotten of him before the ages. But we ought not to say that there are two Gods, since the Lord himself has said ‘I go unto my Father and your Father, and unto my God and your God.’ Therefore he is God even of all, as the apostle also taught, ‘Is he the God of the Jews only?

367 John xiv. 16, 26.
368 1 Cor. xi. 3.
369 Paul of Samosata, see I. 36, note 3.
370 Athan. de Synod. 28, and Hilar. de Synod. calls this creed ‘The blasphemy composed at Sirmium by Hosius and Potamius.’
371 John xx. 17.
Is he not also of the Gentiles? Yea of the Gentiles also; seeing that it is one God who shall justify the circumcision by faith.\textsuperscript{372} And in all other matters there is agreement, nor is there any ambiguity. But since it troubles very many to understand about that which is termed \textit{substantia} in Latin, and \textit{ousia} in Greek; that is to say, in order to mark the sense more accurately, the word \textit{homoousion}\textsuperscript{373} or \textit{homoiousion},\textsuperscript{374} it is altogether desirable that none of these terms should be mentioned: nor should they be preached on in the church, for this reason, that nothing is recorded concerning them in the holy Scriptures; and because these things are above the knowledge of mankind and human capacity, and that no one can explain the Son’s generation, of which it is written, ‘And who shall declare his generation?’\textsuperscript{375} It is manifest that the Father only knows in what way he begat the Son; and again the Son, how he was begotten by the Father. But no one can doubt that the Father is greater in honor, dignity, and divinity, and in the very name of Father; the Son himself testifying ‘My Father who hath sent me is greater than I.’\textsuperscript{376} And no one is ignorant that this is also catholic doctrine,\textsuperscript{377} that there are two persons of the Father and Son, and that the Father is the greater: but that the Son is subject, together with all things which the Father has subjected to him. That the Father had no beginning, and is invisible, immortal, and impassible: but that the Son was begotten of the Father, God of God, Light of Light; and that no one comprehends his generation, as was before said, but the Father alone. That the Son himself, our Lord and God, took flesh or a body, that is to say human nature, according as the angel brought glad tidings: and as the whole Scriptures teaches, and especially the apostle who was the great teacher of the Gentiles, Christ assumed the human nature through which he suffered, from the Virgin Mary. But the summary and confirmation of the entire faith is, that [the doctrine of] the Trinity should be always maintained, according as we have read in the gospel, ‘Go ye and disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.’\textsuperscript{378} Thus the number of the Trinity is complete and perfect. Now the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, sent by the Son, came according to his promise, in order to sanctify and instruct the apostles and all believers.

They endeavored to induce Photinus, even after his deposition, to assent to and subscribe these things, promising to restore him his bishopric, if by recantation he would anathematize the dogma he had invented, and adopt their opinion. But he did not accept their proposal,

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{372} Rom. iii. 29, 30.
\item \textsuperscript{373} Of the same substance.
\item \textsuperscript{374} Of similar substance.
\item \textsuperscript{375} Isa. liii. 5.
\item \textsuperscript{376} John xiv. 28.
\item \textsuperscript{377} καθολικόν, ‘universally accepted.’
\item \textsuperscript{378} Matt. xxviii. 19.
\end{itemize}
and on the other hand he challenged them to a disputation: and a day being appointed by the emperor’s arrangement, the bishops who were there present assembled, and not a few of the senators, whom the emperor had directed to attend to the discussion. In their presence, Basil, who at that time presided over the church at Ancyra, was appointed to oppose Photinus, and short-hand writers took down their respective speeches. The conflict of arguments on both sides was extremely severe; but Photinus having been worsted, was condemned, and spent the rest of his life in exile, during which time he composed treatises in both languages—for he was not unskilled in Latin—against all heresies, and in favor of his own views. Concerning Photinus let this suffice.

Now the bishops who were convened at Sirmium, were afterwards dissatisfied with that form of the creed which had been promulgated by them in Latin; for after its publication, it appeared to them to contain many contradictions. They therefore endeavored to get it back again from the transcribers; but inasmuch as many secreted it, the emperor by his edicts commanded that the version should be sought for, threatening punishment to any one who should be detected concealing it. These menaces, however, were incapable of suppressing what had already fallen into the hands of many. Let this suffice in regard to these affairs.

379 ‘Epiphanius relates that Photinus, after he had been condemned and deposed in the synod of Sirmium, went to Constantius, and requested that he might dispute concerning the faith before judges nominated by him; and that Constantius enjoined Basilius, bishop of Ancyra, to undertake a disputation with Photinus, and gave leave that Thalassiuss, Datianus, Cerealis, and Taurus should be arbiters’ (Valesius).
Chapter XXXI.—Of Hosius, Bishop of Cordova.

Since we have observed that Hosius the Spaniard was present [at the council of Sirmium] against his will, it is necessary to give some brief account of him. A short time before he had been sent into exile by the intrigues of the Arians: but at the earnest solicitation of those convened at Sirmium, the emperor summoned him thither, wishing that by persuasion, or by compulsion he should give his sanction to their proceedings; for if this could be effected, they considered it would give great authority to their sentiments. On this ground, therefore, as I have said, he was most unwillingly obliged to be present: and when he refused to concur with them, stripes and tortures were inflicted on the old man. Wherefore he was constrained by force to acquiesce in and subscribe to their exposition of the faith. Such was the issue of affairs at that time transacted at Sirmium. But the emperor Constantius after these things still continued to reside at that place, awaiting there the result of the war against Magnentius.
Chapter XXXII.—Overthrow of the Usurper Magnentius.

Magnentius in the meanwhile having made himself master of the imperial city Rome, put to death many members of the senatorial council, as well as many of the populace. But as soon as the commanders under Constantius had collected an army of Romans, and commenced their march against him, he left Rome, and retired into the Gauls. There several battles were fought, sometimes to the advantage of one party, and sometimes to that of the other: but at last Magnentius having been defeated near Mursa—a fortress of Gaul—was there closely besieged. In this place the following remarkable incident is said to have occurred. Magnentius desiring to reassure the courage of his soldiers who were disheartened by their late overthrow, ascended a lofty tribunal for this purpose. They, wishing to give utterance to the usual acclamation with which they greet emperors, contrary to their intention simultaneously all shouted the name not of Magnentius, but of Constantius Augustus. Regarding this as an omen unfavorable to himself, Magnentius immediately withdrew from the fortress, and retreated to the remotest parts of Gaul. Thither the generals of Constantius hastened in pursuit. An engagement having again taken place near Mount Seleucus, Magnentius was totally routed, and fled alone to Lyons, a city of Gaul, which is distant three days’ journey from the fortress at Mursa. Magnentius, having reached this city, first slew his own mother; then having killed his brother also, whom he had created Cæsar, he at last committed suicide by falling on his own sword. This happened in the sixth consulate of Constantius, and the second of Constantius Gallus, on the fifteenth day of August. Not long after, the other brother of Magnentius, named Decentius, put an end to his own life by hanging himself. Such was the end of the enterprises of Magnentius. The affairs of the empire were not altogether quieted; for soon after this another usurper arose whose name was Silvanus: but the generals of Constantius speedily put him also out of the way, whilst raising disturbances in Gaul.

380 So in the Allat. ms., with the variant reading in other mss. Μιλτοσέλευκος.
381 353 a.d.; but the date is given differently in Idatius’ Fasti.
Chapter XXXIII.—Of the Jews inhabiting Dio-Cæsarea in Palestine.

About the same time there arose another intestine commotion in the East: for the Jews who inhabited Dio-Cæsarea in Palestine took up arms against the Romans, and began to ravage the adjacent places. But Gallus who was also called Constantius, whom the emperor, after creating Cæsar, had sent into the East, despatched an army against them, and completely vanquished them: after which he ordered that their city Dio-Cæsarea should be razed to the foundations.
Chapter XXXIV.—Of Gallus Caesar.

Gallus, having accomplished these things, was unable to bear his success with moderation; but forthwith attempted innovations against the authority of him who had constituted him Caesar, himself aspiring to the sovereign power. His purpose was, however, soon detected by Constantius: for he had dared to put to death, on his own responsibility, Domitian, at that time Prætorian prefect of the East, and Magnus the quæstor, not having disclosed his designs to the emperor. Constantius, extremely incensed at this conduct, summoned Gallus to his presence, who being in great terror went very reluctantly; and when he arrived in the western parts, and had reached the island of Flanona, Constantius ordered him to be slain. But not long after he created Julian, the brother of Gallus, Caesar, and sent him against the barbarians in Gaul. It was in the seventh consulate of the emperor Constantius that Gallus, who was surnamed Constantius, was slain, when he himself was a third time consul: and Julian was created Caesar on the 6th of November in the following year, when Arbetion and Lollian were consuls; of him we shall make farther mention in the next book. When Constantius was thus relieved from the disquietudes which had occupied him, his attention was again directed to ecclesiastical contentions. Going therefore from Sirmium to the imperial city Rome, he again appointed a synod of bishops, summoning some of the eastern prelates to hasten into Italy, and arranging for those of the west to meet them there. While preparations were making in the east for this purpose, Julius bishop of Rome died, after having presided over the church in that place fifteen years, and was succeeded in the episcopal dignity by Liberius.

---

382 354 a.d.
383 355 a.d.
384 See III. 1.
385 So rightly in the Allat. ms.; the variant Γαλλίαν is inconsistent with the context.
Chapter XXXV.—Of Aëtius the Syrian, Teacher of Eunomius.

At Antioch in Syria another heresiarch sprang up, Aëtius, surnamed Atheus. He agreed in doctrine with Arius, and maintained the same opinions: but separated himself from the Arian party because they had admitted Arius into communion. For Arius, as I have before related,386 entertaining one opinion in his heart, professed another with his lips; having hypocritically assented to and subscribed the form of faith set forth at the council of Nicæa, in order to deceive the reigning emperor. On this account, therefore, Aëtius separated himself from the Arians. He had, however, previously been a heretic, and a zealous advocate of Arian views. After receiving some very scanty instruction at Alexandria, he departed thence, and arrived at Antioch in Syria, which was his native place, was ordained deacon by Leontius, who was then bishop of that city. Upon this he began to astonish those who conversed with him by the singularity of his discourses. And this he did in dependence on the precepts of Aristotle's Categories; there is a book of that name, the scope of which he neither himself perceived, nor had been enlightened on by intercourse with learned persons: so that he was little aware that he was framing fallacious arguments to perplex and deceive himself. For Aristotle had composed this work to exercise the ingenuity of his young disciples, and to confound by subtle arguments the sophists who affected to deride philosophy. Wherefore the Ephectic academicians,387 who expound the writings of Plato and Plotinus, censure the vain subtlety which Aristotle has displayed in that book: but Aëtius, who never had the advantage of an academical preceptor, adhered to the sophisms of the Categories. For this reason he was unable to comprehend how there could be generation without a beginning, and how that which was begotten can be co-eternal with him who begat. In fact, Aëtius was a man of so superficial attainments, and so little acquainted with the sacred Scriptures, and so extremely fond of caviling, a thing which any clown might do, that he had never carefully studied those ancient writers who have interpreted the Christian oracles; wholly rejecting Clemens and Africanus and Origen, men eminent for their information in every department of literature and science. But he composed epistles both to the emperor Constantius, and to some other persons, wherein he interwove tedious disputes for the purpose of displaying his sophisms. He has therefore been surnamed Atheus. But although his doctrinal statements were similar to those of the Arians, yet from the abstruse nature of 387 Diogenes Laertius, Proem. XI (16), says: 'Philosophers were generally divided into two classes,—the dogmatics, who spoke of things as they might be comprehended; and the ephectics, who refused to define anything, and disputed so as to make the understanding of them impossible.' The word ‘ephectic’ is derived from the verb ἐπέχω, ‘to hold back,’ and was used by the philosophers to whom it is applied as a title because they claimed to hold back their judgment, being unable to reach a conclusion. Cf. also the name ‘skeptic,’ from σκέπτομαι. See Zeller, Stoics, Epicureans, and Skeptics, p. 525.

386 I. 26.
his syllogisms, which they were unable to comprehend, his associates in Arianism pronounced him a heretic. Being for that reason expelled from their church, he pretended to have separated himself from their communion. Even in the present day there are to be found some who from him were formerly named Aëtians, but now Eunomians. For some time later Eunomius, who had been his amanuensis, having been instructed by his master in this heretical mode of reasoning, afterwards became the head of that sect. But of Eunomius we shall speak more fully in the proper place.\textsuperscript{388}
Chapter XXXVI.—Of the Synod at Milan.

Now at that time the bishops met in Italy, very few indeed from the East, most of them being hindered from coming either by the firmities of age or by the distance; but of the West there were more than three hundred.\(^{389}\) It was a command of the emperor that they should be assembled at Milan. On meeting, the Eastern prelates opened the Synod by calling upon those convened to pass a unanimous sentence of condemnation against Athanasius; with this object in view, that he might thenceforward be utterly shut out from Alexandria. But Paulinus, bishop of Treves in Gaul, and Dionysius, of whom the former was bishop of Alba,\(^{390}\) the metropolis of Italy, and Eusebius of Vercellæ, a city of Liguria in Italy, perceiving that the Eastern bishops, by demanding a ratification of the sentence against Athanasius, were intent on subverting the faith, arose and loudly exclaimed that ‘this proposition indicated a covert plot against the principles of Christian truth. For they insisted that the charges against Athanasius were unfounded, and merely invented by his accusers as a means of corrupting the faith.’ Having made this protest with much vehemence of manner, the congress of bishops was then dissolved.

\(^{389}\) So also Sozomen, IV. 9; but the number appears exorbitant. Valesius conjectures that the texts of Socrates and Sozomen are corrupted, and that we must read thirty instead of three hundred. The smaller number agrees exactly with the list given in the epistle of this council to Eusebius of Vercellæ; in this list thirty bishops are named as agreeing to the condemnation of Athanasius, Marcellus, and Photinus. Cf. Baronius, Annal. year 355.

\(^{390}\) Sozomen (IV. 9) agrees here also with Socrates; but Athanasius, in Epist. ad Solitar., and after him Baronius and Valesius, make Milan and not Alba, the metropolis of Italy, and Dionysius bishop of Milan, and not of Alba.
Chapter XXXVII.—Of the Synod at Ariminum, and the Creed there published.\footnote{Cf. Sozomen, III. 19; IV. 15–19; Theodoret, \textit{H. E.} II. 18–21; Rufin. II. 21; Philostorgius, IV. 10. Also Hefele, \textit{Hist. of the Ch. Councils}, Vol. II. p. 246–271.}

The emperor on being apprised of what had taken place, sent these three bishops into exile; and determined to convene an ecumenical council, that by drawing all the Eastern bishops into the West, he might if possible bring them all to agree. But when, on consideration, the length of the journey seemed to present serious obstacles, he directed that the Synod should consist of two divisions; permitting those present at Milan to meet at Ariminum in Italy; but the Eastern bishops he instructed by letters to assemble at Nicomedia in Bithynia. The emperor’s object in these arrangements was to effect a general unity of opinion; but the issue was contrary to his expectation. For neither of the Synods was in harmony with itself, but each was divided into opposing factions: for those convened at Ariminum could not agree with one another; and the Eastern bishops assembled at Seleucia in Isauria made another schism. The details of what took place in both we will give in the course of our history,\footnote{Ch. 39.} but we shall first make a few observations on Eudoxius. About that time Leontius having died, who had ordained the heretic Aëtius\footnote{According to Theodoret (\textit{H. E.} II. 19) Aëtius was promoted to the diaconate under Leontius at Antioch; but Leontius, on being censured by Flavian and Diodorus for ordaining one who was notorious for his blasphemous utterances, divested him of his diaconate. Hence, later, Eudoxius attempted to restore him, as is here said.} as deacon, Eudoxius bishop of Germanicia—this city is in Syria—who was then at Rome, thinking no time was to be lost, speciously represented to the emperor that the city over which he presided was in need of his counsel and care, and requested permission to return there immediately. This the emperor readily acceded to, having no suspicion of a clandestine purpose: Eudoxius having some of the principal officers of the emperor’s bedchamber as coadjutors, deserted his own diocese, and fraudulently installed himself in the see of Antioch. His first desire was to restore Aëtius; accordingly he convened a council of bishops for the purpose of reinvesting Aëtius with the dignity of the diaconate. But this could in no way be brought about, for the odium with which Aëtius was regarded was more prevalent than the exertions of Eudoxius in his favor. When the bishops were assembled at Ariminum, those from the East declared that they were willing to pass in silence the case of Athanasius: a resolution that was zealously supported by Ursacius and Valens, who had formerly maintained the tenets of Arius; but, as I have already stated, had afterwards presented a recantation of their opinion to the bishop of Rome, and publicly avowed their assent to the doctrine of consubstantiality. For these men always inclined to side with the dominant party. Germinius, Auxentius, Demophilus and Gaius made the same declaration in reference to Athanasius. When therefore some endeavored to propose one thing in the convocation of bishops, and some another, Ursacius... and Valens said that all former draughts of the creed ought to be considered as set aside, and the last alone, which had been prepared at their late convention at Sirmium, regarded as authorized. They then caused to be read a paper which they held in their hands, containing another form of the creed: this had indeed been drawn up at Sirmium, but had been kept concealed, as we have before observed, until their present publication of it at Ariminum. It has been translated from the Latin into Greek, and is as follows: 394

'The catholic faith was expounded at Sirmium in presence of our lord Constantius, 395 in the consulate 396 of the most illustrious Flavius Eusebius, and Hypatius, on the twenty-third of May.

‘We believe in one only and true God, the Father Almighty, the Creator and Framer of all things: and in one only-begotten Son of God, before all ages, before all beginning, before all conceivable time, and before all comprehensible thought, begotten without passion: by whom the ages were framed, and all things made: who was begotten as the only-begotten of the Father, only of only, God of God, like to the Father who begat him, according to the Scriptures: whose generation no one knows, but the Father only who begat him. We know that this his only-begotten Son came down from the heavens by his Father’s consent for the putting away of sin, was born of the Virgin Mary, conversed with his disciples, and fulfilled every dispensation according to the Father’s will: was crucified and died, and descended into the lower parts of the earth, and disposed matters there; at the sight of whom the (doorkeepers of Hades trembled 397): having arisen on the third day, he again conversed with his disciples, and after forty days were completed he ascended into the heavens, and is seated at the Father’s right hand; and at the last day he will come in his Father’s glory to render to every one according to his works. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit, whom the only-begotten Son of God Jesus Christ himself promised to send to the human race as the Comforter, according to that which is written: 398 ‘I go away to my Father, and will ask him, and he will 394 Athan. de Synod. 8; but Athanasius does not say that this creed was translated from Latin, as he does whenever he produces any document put into Greek from Latin; whence it appears, according to Valesius, that this is the form drawn up in Greek by Marcus of Arethusa, and submitted to the third Sirmium council in 359, but read at Ariminum as here said (cf. ch. 30, and note). The argument is not considered conclusive by Reading as far as it regards the original language of the creed; that it was written by Marcus of Arethusa, however, seems to be proved.

396 359 a.d.

397 Job xxxviii. 17 (LXX).

398 John xiv. 16; xvi. 14.
send you another Comforter, the Spirit of truth. He shall receive of mine, and shall teach you, and bring all things to your remembrance.” As for the term “substance,” which was used by our fathers for the sake of greater simplicity, but not being understood by the people has caused offense on account of the fact that the Scriptures do not contain it, it seemed desirable that it should be wholly abolished, and that in future no mention should be made of substance in reference to God, since the divine Scriptures have nowhere spoken concerning the substance of the Father and the Son. But we say that the Son is in all things like the Father, as the Holy Scriptures affirm and teach.’

These statements having been read, those who were dissatisfied with them rose and said ‘We came not hither because we were in want of a creed; for we preserve inviolate that which we received from the beginning; but we are here met to repress any innovation upon it which may have been made. If therefore what has been recited introduces no novelties, now openly anathematize the Arian heresy, in the same manner as the ancient canon of the church has rejected all heresies as blasphemous: for it is evident to the whole world that the impious dogma of Arius has excited the disturbances of the church, and the troubles which exist until now.’ This proposition, which was not accepted by Ursacius, Valens, Germinius, Auxentius, Demophilus, and Gaius, rent the church asunder completely: for these prelates adhered to what had then been recited in the Synod of Ariminum; while the others again confirmed the Nicene Creed. They also ridiculed the superscription of the creed that had been read; and especially Athanasius, in a letter which he sent to his friends, wherein he thus expresses himself:399

‘What point of doctrine was wanting to the piety of the catholic church, that they should now make an investigation respecting the faith, and prefix moreover the consulate of the present times to their published exposition of it? For Ursacius, Valens, and Germinius have done what was neither done, nor even heard of, at any time before among Christians: having composed a creed such as they themselves are willing to believe, they prefaced it with the consulate, month, and day of the present time, in order to prove to all discerning persons that theirs is not the ancient faith, but such as was originated under the reign of the present emperor Constantius.400 Moreover they have written all things with a view to their own heresy: and besides this, pretending to write respecting the Lord, they name another “Lord” as theirs, even Constantius, who has countenanced their impiety, so that those who deny the Son to be eternal, have styled him eternal emperor. Thus are they proved to be the enemies of Christ by their profanity. But perhaps the holy prophets’ record of time afforded them a precedent for [noticing] the consulate! Now even if they should presume to make this pretext, they would most glaringly expose their own ignorance. The prophecies of these holy men do indeed mark the times. Isaiah and Hosea lived in the days of Uzziiah, Joatham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah;\textsuperscript{401} Jeremiah in the time of Josiah;\textsuperscript{402} Ezekiel and Daniel in the reign of Cyrus and Darius; and others uttered their predictions in other times. Yet they did not then lay the foundations of religion. That was in existence before them, and always was, even before the creation of the world, God having prepared it for us in Christ. Nor did they designate the commencement of their own faith; for they were themselves men of faith previously: but they signified the times of the promises given through them. Now the promises primarily referred to our Saviour’s advent; and all that was foretold respecting the course of future events in relation to Israel and the Gentiles was collateral and subordinate. Hence the periods mentioned indicated not the beginning of their faith, as I before observed, but the times in which these prophets lived and foretold such things. But these sages of our day, who neither compile histories, nor predict future events, after writing, “The Catholic Faith was published,” immediately add the consulate, with the month and the day: and as the holy prophets wrote the date of their records and of their own ministration, so these men intimate the era of their own faith. And would that they had written concerning their own faith only—since they have now begun to believe—and had not undertaken to write respecting the Catholic faith. For they have not written, “Thus we believe”; but, “The Catholic Faith was published.” The temerity of purpose herein manifested argues their ignorance; while the novelty of expression found in the document they have concoct shows it to be the same as the Arian heresy. By writing in this manner, they have declared when they themselves began to believe, and from what time they wish it to be understood their faith was first preached. And just as when the evangelist Luke says,\textsuperscript{403} “A decree of enrolment was published,” he speaks of an edict which was not in existence before, but came into operation at that time, and was published by him who had written it; so these men by writing “The faith has now been published,” have declared that the tenets of their heresy are of modern invention, and did not exist previously. But since they apply the term “Catholic” to it, they seem to have unconsciously fallen into the extravagant assumption of the Cataphrygians, asserting even as they did, that “the Christian faith was first revealed to us, and commenced with us.” And as those termed Maximilla and Montanus, so these style Constantius their Lord, instead of Christ. But if according to them the faith had its beginning from the present consulate, what will the fathers and the blessed martyrs do? Moreover what will they themselves do with those who were instructed in religious principles by them, and died before this consulate? By what means will they recall them to life, in order to obliterate from their minds what they seemed \textsuperscript{401} Isa. i. 2; Hos. i. 1.

\textsuperscript{402} Jer. i. 2.

\textsuperscript{403} Luke ii. 1.
to have taught them, and to implant in its stead those new discoveries which they have published? So stupid are they as to be only capable of framing pretenses, and these such as are unbecoming and unreasonable, and carry with them their own refutation.’

Athanasius wrote thus to his friends: and the interested who may read through his whole epistle will perceive how powerfully he treats the subject; but for brevity’s sake we have here inserted a part of it only. The Synod deposed Valens, Ursacius, Auxentius, Germinius, Gaïus, and Demophilus for refusing to anathematize the Arian doctrine; who being very indignant at their deposition, hastened directly to the emperor, carrying with them the exposition of faith which had been read in the Synod. The council also acquainted the emperor with their determinations in a communication which translated from the Latin into Greek, was to the following effect:404

Epistle of the Synod of Ariminum to the Emperor Constantius.

We believe that it was by the appointment of God, as well as at the command of your piety, that the decrees formerly published have been executed. Accordingly we Western bishops came out of various districts to Ariminum, in order that the faith of the catholic church might be made manifest, and that those who held contrary views might be detected. For on a considerate review by us of all points, our decision has been to adhere to the ancient faith which the prophets, the gospels, and the apostles have revealed through our Lord Jesus Christ, the guardian of your empire, and the protector of your person, which faith also we have always maintained. We conceived that it would be unwarrantable and impious to mutilate any of those things which have been justly and rightly ratified, by those who sat in the Nicene council with Constantine of glorious memory, the father of your piety. Their doctrine and views have been infused into the minds and preached in the hearing of the people, and found to be powerfully opposed, even fatal, to the Arian heresy. And not only this heresy, but also all others have been put down by it. Should therefore anything be added to or taken away from what was at that time established, it would prove perilous; for if either of these things should happen, the enemy will have boldness to do as they please.405 404 Athan, de Synod. 10. The Latin original which is given in Hilar. Fragm. 8, was adopted by Valesius in this place, and subsequently also by the English translators. We have followed the Greek of Socrates, giving the most important differences in the following four notes; viz. 15, 16, 17, and 18. How these variations originated it is impossible to tell with assurance; but it is not improbable that they may represent two drafts, of which one was originally tentative.

405 The Latin original here contains the following paragraph not reproduced by Socrates: ‘These matters having been strictly investigated and the creed drawn up in the presence of Constantine, who after being baptized, departed to God’s rest in the faith of it, we regard as an abomination any infringement thereon, or any attempt to invalidate the authority of so many saints, confessors, and successors of the martyrs, who assisted at that council, and themselves preserved inviolate all the determinations of the ancient writers of the catholic church:
Wherefore Ursacius and Valens being heretofore suspected of entertaining Arian sentiments, were suspended from communion: but in order to be restored to it they made an apology, and claimed that they had repented of their shortcoming, as their written recantation attests: they therefore obtained pardon and complete absolution.

The time when these things occurred was when the council was in session at Milan, when the presbyters of the church of Rome were also present.

At the same time, having known that Constantine, who even after his death is worthy of honorable mention, exposed the faith with due precision, but being born of men was baptized and departed to the peace due to him as his reward, we have deemed it improper to innovate after him disregarding so many holy confessors and martyrs, who also were authors of this confession, and persevered in their faith in the ancient system of the catholic church. Their faith God has perpetuated down to the years of your own reign through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whose grace it also became possible for you to so strengthen your dominion as to rule over one portion of the world.

Yet have these infatuated and wretched persons, endued with an unhappy disposition, again had the temerity to declare themselves the propagators of false doctrine, and even endeavor to subvert the constitution of the Church. For when the letters of your piety had ordered us to assemble for the examination of the faith, they laid bare their intention, stripped of its deceitful garb. For they attempted with certain craft and confusion to propose innovations, having in this as allies Germinius, Auxentius, and Gaius, who continually cause strife and dissension, and their single teaching has surpassed the whole body of blasphemies. But when they perceived that we had not the same disposition or mind as they in regard to their false views they changed their minds during our council and said another expression of belief should be put forth. And short indeed was the time which convinced them of the falsity of their views.

In order, therefore, that the affairs of the Church may not be continually brought into the same condition, and in order that trouble and tumult may not continually arise and confuse all things, it appeared safe to preserve the previously determined views firm and unalterable, and to separate from our communion the persons above named; for which reason we have despatched to your clemency delegates who will communicate the opinion of the council to you. And to our delegates we have given this commission above all, that they should accredit the truth taking their motive from the ancient and right decisions. They will inform your holiness that peace will not be established as Ursacius and Valens say when whose faith has remained unto these times in which your piety has received from God the Father, through Jesus Christ our God and Lord, the power of ruling the world.’

406 The Latin original omits the following paragraph, ending with the words ‘over our portion of the world.’

407 The Latin original in Hilar. omits the name of Auxentius.
some point of the right be overturned. For how can those be at peace who destroy peace? Rather will strife and tumult be occasioned by these things in the church of Rome also, as in the other cities. Wherefore, now, we beseech your clemency that you should look upon our delegation with a calm eye and listen to it with favor, and not allow that anything should be changed, thus bringing insult to the deceased, but permit us to continue in those things which have been defined and legislated by our ancestors; who, we should say, acted with shrewdness and wisdom and with the Holy Spirit. For the innovations they introduce at present fill the believing with distrust and the unbelieving with cruelty.

We further implore you to instruct that the bishops who dwell in foreign parts, whom both the infirmity of age and the ills of poverty harass should be assisted to return easily and speedily to their own homes, so that the churches may not remain bereft of their bishops. Still further we beg of you this also, that nothing be stricken off, nor anything be added, to the articles [of faith] remaining over from the times of your pious father even until now; but that these may continue inviolate. Permit us not to toil and suffer longer, nor to be separated from our dioceses, but that together with our own peoples we may in peace have time to offer prayers and thanksgiving, supplicating for your safety and continuance in the dominion, which may the divinity grant unto you perpetually. Our delegates bear the signatures and greetings of the bishops. These [delegates] will from the Divine Scriptures themselves instruct your piety.

The Synod then thus wrote and sent their communications to the emperor by the bishops [selected for that purpose]. But the partisans of Ursacius and Valens having arrived before them, did their utmost to calumniate the council, exhibiting the exposition of the faith which they had brought with them. The emperor, prejudiced beforehand towards Arianism, became extremely exasperated against the Synod, but conferred great honor on Valens and Ursacius and their friends. Those deputed by the council were consequently detained a considerable time, without being able to obtain an answer: at length, however, the emperor replied through those who had come to him, in the manner following:

‘Constantius Victor and Triumphator Augustus to all the bishops convened at Ariminum.

‘That our especial care is ever exercised respecting the divine and venerated law even your sanctity is not ignorant. Nevertheless we have hitherto been unable to give an audience to the twenty bishops sent as deputation from you, for an expedition against the barbarians has become necessary. And since, as you will admit, matters relative to the divine law ought to be entered on with a mind free from all anxiety; I have therefore ordered these bishops to await our return to Adrianople; that when all public business shall have been duly attended to, we may be able then to hear and consider what they shall propose. In the meanwhile let it not seem troublesome to your gravity to wait for their return; since when they shall convey

408 Instead of the Greek words here translated, ‘fill the believing with distrust and the unbelieving with cruelty,’ the Latin original reads ‘verum etiam infideles ad credulitatem vetantur accedere.’
to you our resolution, you will be prepared to carry into effect such measures as may be most advantageous to the welfare of the catholic church.’

The bishops on receipt of this letter wrote thus in reply: 409

‘We have received your clemency’s letter, sovereign lord, most beloved of God, in which you inform us that the exigencies of state affairs have hitherto prevented your admitting our delegates to your presence: and you bid us await their return, until your piety shall have learnt from them what has been determined on by us in conformity with the tradition of our ancestors. But we again protest by this letter that we can by no means depart from our primary resolution; and this also we have commissioned our deputies to state. We beseech you therefore, both with serene countenance to order this present epistle of our modesty to be read; and also to listen favorably to the representations with which our delegates have been charged. Your mildness doubtless perceives, as well as we, to how great an extent grief and sadness prevail, because of so many churches being bereft of their bishops in these most blessed times of yours. Again therefore we entreat your clemency, sovereign lord most dear to God, to command us to return to our churches, if it please your piety, before the rigor of winter; in order that we may be enabled, in conjunction with the people, to offer up our accustomed prayers to Almighty God, and to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, his only-begotten Son, for the prosperity of your reign, as we have always done, and even now do in our prayers.’

The bishops having waited together some time after this letter had been despatched, inasmuch as the emperor deigned no reply, they departed to their respective cities. Now the emperor had long before intended to disseminate Arian doctrine throughout the churches; and was anxious to give it the pre-eminence; hence he pretended that their departure was an act of contumely, declaring that they had treated him with contempt by dissolving the council in opposition to his wishes. He therefore gave the partisans of Ursacius unbounded license to act as they pleased in regard to the churches: and directed that the revised form of creed which had been read at Ariminum should be sent to the churches throughout Italy; ordering that whoever would not subscribe it should be ejected from their sees, and that others should be substituted in their place. 410 And first Liberius, bishop of Rome, having refused his assent to that creed, was sent into exile; the adherents of Ursacius appointing Felix to succeed him, who had been a deacon in that church, but on embracing the Arian heresy was elevated to the episcopate. Some however assert that he was not favorable to that opinion, but was constrained by force to receive the ordination of bishop. After this all parts of the West were filled with agitation and tumult, some being ejected and banished, and others established in their stead. These things were effected by violence, on the authority of the imperial edicts, which were also sent into the eastern parts. Not long after indeed Liberius was recalled, and reinstated in his see; for the people of Rome having raised a sedition, and expelled Felix from their church, the emperor even though against his wish consented. The partisans of Ursacius, quitting Italy, passed through the eastern parts; and arriving at Nice, a city of Thrace, they dwelt there a short time and held another Synod, and after translating the form of faith which was read at Ariminum into Greek, they confirmed and published it afresh in the form quoted above, giving it the name of the general council, in this way attempting to deceive the more simple by the similarity of names, and to impose upon them as the creed promulgated at Niceæa in Bithynia, that which they had prepared at Nice in Thrace.\footnote{Hilar. \textit{Fragm.} 8; Hefele, \textit{Hist. of Ch. Councils}, Vol. II. p. 257.} But this artifice was of little advantage to them; for it was soon detected, they became the object of derision. Enough now has been said of the transactions which took place in the West: we must now proceed to the narrative of what was done in the East at the same time.

410 Cf. Theodoret, H. E. II. 16.
Chapter XXXVIII.—Cruelty of Macedonius, and Tumults raised by him.

The bishops of the Arian party began to assume greater assurance from the imperial edicts. In what manner they undertook to convene a Synod, we will explain somewhat later. Let us now briefly mention a few of their previous acts. Acacius and Patrophilus having ejected Maximus, bishop of Jerusalem, installed Cyril in his see. Macedonius subverted the order of things in the cities and provinces adjacent to Constantinople, promoting to ecclesiastical honors his assistants in his intrigues against the churches. He ordained Eleusius bishop of Cyzicus, and Marathonius, bishop of Nicomedia: the latter had before been a deacon under Macedonius himself, and proved very active in founding monasteries both of men and women. But we must now mention in what way Macedonius desolated the churches in the cities and provinces around Constantinople. This man, as I have already said, having seized the bishopric, inflicted innumerable calamities on such as were unwilling to adopt his views. His persecutions were not confined to those who were recognized as members of the catholic church, but extended to the Novatians also, inasmuch as he knew that they maintained the doctrine of the homoousion; they therefore with the others underwent the most intolerable sufferings, but their bishop, Angelius by name, effected his escape by flight. Many persons eminent for their piety were seized and tortured, because they refused to communicate with him: and after the torture, they forcibly constrained the men to be partakers of the holy mysteries, their mouths being forced open with a piece of wood, and then the consecrated elements thrust into them. Those who were so treated regarded this as a punishment far more grievous than all others. Moreover they laid hold of women and children, and compelled them to be initiated (by baptism); and if any one resisted or otherwise spoke against it, stripes immediately followed, and after the stripes, bonds and imprisonment, and other violent measures. I shall here relate an instance or two whereby the reader may form some idea of the extent of the harshness and cruelty exercised by Macedonius and those who were then in power. They first pressed in a box, and then sawed off, the breasts of such women as were unwilling to communicate with them. The same parts of the persons of other women they burnt partly with iron, and partly with eggs intensely heated in the fire. This mode of torture which was unknown even among the heathen, was invented by 412 From this place it plainly appears, as Valesius remarks, that the authority of the see of Constantinople was acknowledged, even before the council of Constantinople, throughout the region of the Hellespont and Bithynia, which conclusion is also confirmed by the acts of Eudoxius, bishop of Constantinople, who made Eunomius bishop of Cyzicus. Two causes co-operated to secure this authority, viz. (1) the official establishment of the city as the capital of the empire by Constantine, and (2) the transference to it of Eusebius of Nicomedia, a most vigorous and aggressive bishop, who missed no opportunity for enlarging and consolidating the power of his see.

413 See above, ch. 16.
those who professed to be Christians. These facts were related to me by the aged Auxanon, the presbyter in the Novatian church of whom I spoke in the first book. He said also that he had himself endured not a few severities from the Arians, prior to his reaching the dignity of presbyter; having been thrown into prison and beaten with many stripes, together with Alexander the Paphlagonian, his companion in the monastic life. He added that he had himself been able to sustain these tortures, but that Alexander died in prison from the effects of their infliction. He is now buried on the right of those sailing into the bay of Constantinople which is called Ceras, close by the rivers, where there is a church of the Novatians named after Alexander. Moreover the Arians, at the instigation of Macedonius, demolished with many other churches in various cities, that of the Novatians at Constantinople near Pelargus. Why I particularly mention this church, will be seen from the extraordinary circumstances connected with it, as testified by the same aged Auxanon. The emperor’s edict and the violence of Macedonius had doomed to destruction the churches of those who maintained the doctrine of consubstantiality; the decree and violence reached this church, and those also who were charged with the execution of the mandate were at hand to carry it into effect. I cannot but admire the zeal displayed by the Novatians on this occasion, as well as the sympathy they experienced from those whom the Arians at that time ejected, but who are now in peaceful possession of their churches. For when the emissaries of their enemies were urgent to accomplish its destruction, an immense multitude of Novatians, aided by numbers of others who held similar sentiments, having assembled around this devoted church, pulled it down, and conveyed the materials of it to another place: this place stands opposite the city, and is called Sycæ, and forms the thirteenth ward of the town of Constantinople. This removal was effected in a very short time, from the extraordinary ardor of the numerous persons engaged in it: one carried tiles, another stones, a third timber; some loading themselves with one thing, and some with another. Even women and children assisted in the work, regarding it as the realization of their best wishes, and esteeming it the greatest honor to be accounted the faithful guardians of things consecrated to God. In this way at that time was the church of the Novatians transported to Sycæ. Long afterwards when Constantius was dead, the emperor Julian ordered its former site to be restored, and permitted them to rebuild it there. The people therefore, as before, having carried back the materials, reared the church in its former position; and from this circumstance, and its great improvement in structure and ornament, they not inappropriately called it Anastasia. The church as we before said was restored afterwards in the reign of Julian. But at that time both the Catholics and the Novatians were alike subjected to persecution: for the former abominated offering their devotions in those churches in which the Arians assembled, but frequented the other three\textsuperscript{415}—for this is the number of the churches which the Novatians have in the city—and engaged in divine service with them. Indeed they would have been wholly united, had not the Novatians refused from regard to their ancient precepts. In other respects however, they mutually maintained such a degree of cordiality and affection, as to be ready to lay down their lives for one another: both parties were therefore persecuted indiscriminately, not only at Constantinople, but also in other provinces and cities. At Cyzicus, Eleusius, the bishop of that place, perpetrated the same kind of enormities against the Christians there, as Macedonius had done elsewhere, harassing and putting them to flight in all directions and [among other things] he completely demolished the church of the Novatians at Cyzicus. But Macedonius consummated his wickedness in the following manner. Hearing that there was a great number of the Novatian sect in the province of Paphlagonia, and especially at Mantinium, and perceiving that such a numerous body could not be driven from their homes by ecclesiastics alone, he caused, by the emperor’s permission, four companies of soldiers to be sent into Paphlagonia, that through dread of the military they might receive the Arian opinion. But those who inhabited Mantinium, animated to desperation by zeal for their religion, armed themselves with long reap-hooks, hatchets, and whatever weapon came to hand, and went forth to meet the troops; on which a conflict ensuing, many indeed of the Paphlagonians were slain, but nearly all the soldiers were destroyed. I learnt these things from a Paphlagonian peasant who said that he was present at the engagement; and many others of that province corroborate this account. Such were the exploits of Macedonius on behalf of Christianity, consisting of murders, battles, incarcerations, and civil wars: proceedings which rendered him odious not only to the objects of his persecution, but even to his own party. He became obnoxious also to the emperor on these accounts, and particularly so from the circumstance I am about to relate. The church where the coffin lay that contained the relics of the emperor Constantine threatened to fall. On this account those that entered, as well as those who were accustomed to remain there for devotional purposes, were in much fear. Macedonius, therefore, wished to remove the emperor’s remains, lest the coffin should be injured by the ruins. The populace getting intelligence of this, endeavored to prevent it, insisting ‘that the emperor’s bones should not be disturbed,\textsuperscript{415} According to Valesius it appears incredible that the Catholics should have done what Socrates says they did. ‘For there is nothing more contrary to ecclesiastical discipline than to communicate with heretics either in the sacraments or in prayer.’ Hence ‘Socrates was probably imposed upon by the aged Auxano, who fixed upon all the Catholics what was perhaps done by some few Christians who were less cautious.’ But Socrates’ own attitude towards the Novatians (cf. Intro. p. x.) shows that the difference between them and the Catholics (οἱ τῆς ἐκκλησίας) was not universally regarded as an absolute schism forbidding communication even during such times of trial as these described here, which might certainly have drawn together parties already as near to one another as the Novatians and Catholics.
as such a disinterment would be equivalent, to their being dug up: many however affirmed that its removal could not possibly injure the dead body, and thus two parties were formed on this question; such as held the doctrine of consubstantiality joining with those who opposed it on the ground of its impiety. Macedonius, in total disregard of these prejudices, caused the emperor’s remains to be transported to the church where those of the martyr Acacius lay. Whereupon a vast multitude rushed toward that edifice in two hostile divisions, which attacked one another with great fury, and great loss of life was occasioned, so that the churchyard was covered with gore, and the well also which was in it overflowed with blood, which ran into the adjacent portico, and thence even into the very street. When the emperor was informed of this unfortunate occurrence, he was highly incensed against Macedonius, both on account of the slaughter which he had occasioned, and because he had dared to move his father’s body without consulting him. Having therefore left the Cæsar Julian to take care of the western parts, he himself set out for the east. How Macedonius was a short time afterwards deposed, and thus suffered a most inadequate punishment for his infamous crimes, I shall hereafter relate.

416 See below, ch. 42.
Chapter XXXIX.—Of the Synod at Seleucia, in Isauria.

But I must now give an account of the other Synod, which the emperor's edict had convoked in the east, as a rival to that of Ariminum. It was at first determined that the bishops should assemble at Nicomedia in Bithynia; but a great earthquake having nearly destroyed that city, prevented their being convened there. This happened in the consulate of Tatian and Cerealis, on the 28th day of August. They were therefore planning to transfer the council to the neighboring city of Nicæa: but this plan was again altered, as it seemed more convenient to meet at Tarsus in Cilicia. Being dissatisfied with this arrangement also, they at last assembled themselves at Seleucia, surnamed Aspera, a city of Isauria. This took place in the same year [in which the council of Ariminum was held], under the consulate of Eusebius and Hypatius, the number of those convened being about 160. There was present on this occasion Leonas, an officer of distinction attached to the imperial household, before whom the emperor's edict had enjoined that the discussion respecting the faith should be entered into. Lauricius also, the commander-in-chief of the troops in Isauria, was ordered to be there, to serve the bishops in such things as they might require. In the presence of these personages therefore, the bishops were there convened on the 27th of the month of September, and immediately began a discussion on the basis of the public records, shorthand writers being present to write down what each might say. Those who desire to learn the particulars of the several speeches, will find copious details of them in the collection of Sabinus; but we shall only notice the more important heads. On the first day of their being convened, Leonas ordered each one to propose what he thought fit: but those present said that no question ought to be agitated in the absence of those prelates who had not yet arrived; for Macedonius, bishop of Constantinople, Basil of Ancyra, and some others who were apprehensive of an impeachment for their misconduct, had not made their appearance. Macedonius pleaded indisposition, and failed to attend; Patrophilus said he had some trouble with his eyes, and that on this account it was needful for him to remain in the suburbs of Seleucia; and the rest offered various pretexts to account for their absence. When, however, Leonas declared that the subjects which they had met to consider must be entered on, notwithstanding the absence of these persons, the bishops replied that they could not proceed to the discussion of any question, until the life and conduct of the parties accused had been investigated: for Cyril of Jerusalem, Eustathius of Sebastia in Armenia,

---

417 358 a.d.

418 In this calamity Cecropius, the bishop of Nicomedia, perished, and the splendid cathedral of the city was ruined; both of which misfortunes were attributed by the heathen to the wrath of their gods. See Sozom. IV. 16.

419 Τραχεῖα, on account of the neighboring steep mountains. This Seleucia was the capital of Isauria.

and some others, had been charged with misconduct on various grounds long before. A sharp contest arose in consequence of this demur; some affirming that cognizance ought first to be taken of all such accusations, and others denying that anything whatever should have precedence of matters of faith. The emperor’s orders contributed not a little to augment this dispute, inasmuch as letters of his were produced urging now this and now that as ne-necessary to be considered first. The dispute having arisen on this subject, a schism was thus made, and the Seleucian council was divided into two factions, one of which was headed by Acacius of Cæsarea in Palestine, George of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, and Eudoxius of Antioch, who were supported by only about thirty-two other bishops. Of the opposite party, which was by far the more numerous, the principal were George of Laodicea in Syria, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis in Paphlagonia, and Eleusius of Cyzicus. It being determined by the majority to examine doctrinal matters first, the party of Acacius openly opposed the Nicene Creed, and wished to introduce another instead of it. The other faction,\textsuperscript{421} which was considerably more numerous, concurred in all the decisions of the council of Nicæa, but criticised its adoption of the term \textit{homoousion}. Accordingly they debated on this point, much being said on each side, until late in the evening, when Silvanus, who presided over the church at Tarsus, insisted with much vehemence of manner, ‘that there was no need of a new exposition of the faith; but that it was their duty rather to confirm that which was published at Antioch,\textsuperscript{422} at the consecration of the church in that place.’ On this declaration, Acacius and his partisans privately withdrew from the council; while the others, producing the creed composed at Antioch, read it, and then separated for that day. Assembling in the church of Seleucia on the day following, after having closed the doors, they again read the same creed, and ratified it by their signatures. At this time the readers and deacons present signed on behalf of certain absent bishops, who had intimated their acquiescence in its form.

\textsuperscript{421} Cf Athan. \textit{de Synodd.} 12.
\textsuperscript{422} See chaps. 8 and 10.
Chapter XL.—Acacius, Bishop of Cæsarea, dictates a new Form of Creed in the Synod at Seleucia.

Acacius and his adherents criticised what was done: because, that is to say, they closed the church doors and thus affixed their signatures; declaring that ‘all such secret transactions were justly to be suspected, and had no validity whatever.’ These objections he made because he was anxious to bring forward another exposition of the faith drawn up by himself, which he had already submitted to the governors Leonas and Lauricius, and was now intent on getting it alone confirmed and established, instead of that which had been subscribed. The second day was thus occupied with nothing else but exertions on his part to effect this object. On the third day Leonas endeavored to produce an amicable meeting of both parties; Macedonius of Constantinople, and also Basil of Ancyra, having arrived during its course. But when the Acacians found that both the parties had come to the same position, they refused to meet; saying that not only those who had before been deposed, but also such as were at present under any accusation, ought to be excluded from the assembly.’ And as after much cavilling on both sides, this opinion prevailed; those who lay under any charge went out of the council, and the party of Acacius entered in their places. Leonas then said that a document had been put into his hand by Acacius, to which he desired to call their attention: but he did not state that it was the drought of a creed, which in some particulars covertly, and in others unequivocally contradicted the former. When those present became silent, thinking that the document contained something else besides an exposition of a creed, the following creed composed by Acacius, together with its preamble, was read.

'We having yesterday assembled by the emperor’s command at Seleucia, a city of Isauria, on the 27th day of September, exerted ourselves to the utmost, with all moderation, to preserve the peace of the church, and to determine doctrinal questions on prophetic and evangelical authority, so as to sanction nothing in the ecclesiastic confession of faith at variance with the sacred Scriptures, as our Emperor Constantius most beloved of God has ordered. But inasmuch as certain individuals in the Synod have acted injuriously toward several of us, preventing some from expressing their sentiments, and excluding others from the council against their wills; and at the same time have introduced such as have been deposed, and persons who were ordained contrary to the ecclesiastical canon, so that the Synod has presented a scene of tumult and disorder, of which the most illustrious Leonas, the Comes, and the most eminent Lauricius, governor of the province, have been eye-witnesses, we are therefore under the necessity of making this declaration. That we do not repudiate the faith which was ratified at the consecration of the church at Antioch; for we give it our decided preference, because it received the concurrence of our fathers who were assembled there to consider some controverted points. Since, however, the terms homoousion and homoiousion have in time past troubled the minds of many, and still continue to disquiet them; and moreover that a new term has recently been coined by some who assert the anomoion of the Son to the Father: we reject the first two, as expressions which are not found in the Scriptures; but we utterly anathematize the last, and regard such as countenance its use, as alienated from the church. We distinctly acknowledge the homoion of the Son to the Father, in accordance with what the apostle has declared concerning him, 424 “Who is the image of the invisible God.”

---

423 Athanas. (de Synodd. 29) gives the following portion of this creed apparently as the only declaration made by the council.

‘We confess then, and believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Maker of heaven and earth, and of things visible and invisible. We believe also in his Son our Lord Jesus Christ, who was begotten of him without passion before all ages, God the Word, the only-begotten of God, the Light, the Life, the Truth, the Wisdom: through whom all things were made which are in the heavens and upon the earth, whether visible or invisible. We believe that he took flesh of the holy Virgin Mary, at the end of the ages, in order to abolish sin; that he was made man, suffered for our sin, and rose again, and was taken up into the heavens, to sit at the right hand of the Father, whence he will come again in glory to judge the living and the dead. We believe also in the Holy Spirit, whom our Lord and Saviour has denominated the Comforter, and whom he sent to his disciples after his departure, according to his promise: by whom also he sanctifies all believers in the church, who are baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Those who preach anything contrary to this creed, we regard as aliens from the catholic church.’

This was the declaration of faith proposed by Acacius, and subscribed by himself and as many as adhered to his opinion, the number of whom we have already given. When this had been read, Sophronius bishop of Pompeiopolis in Paphlagonia, thus expressed himself: ‘If to express a separate opinion day after day, be received as the exposition of the faith, we shall never arrive at any accurate understanding of the truth.’ These were the words of Sophronius. And I firmly believe, that if the predecessors of these prelates, as well as their successors, had entertained similar sentiments in reference to the Nicene creed, all polemical debates would have been avoided; nor would the churches have been agitated by such violent and irrational disturbances. However let those judge who are capable of understanding how these things are. At that time after many remarks on all sides had been made both in reference to this doctrinal statement, and in relation to the parties accused, the assembly was dissolved. On the fourth day they all again met in the same place, and resumed their proceedings in the same contentious spirit as before. On this occasion Acacius expressed himself in these words: ‘Since the Nicene creed has been altered not once only, but frequently, there is no hindrance to our publishing another at this time.’ To which Eleusius bishop of 424  Col. i. 15.

Cyzicus, replied: 'The Synod is at present convened not to learn what it had no previous knowledge of, nor to receive a creed which it had not assented to before, but to confirm the faith of the fathers, from which it should never recede, either in life or death.' Thus Eleusius opposing Acacius spoke meaning by 'the faith of the fathers,' that creed which had been promulgated at Antioch. But surely he too might have been fairly answered in this way: 'How is it O Eleusius, that you call those convened at Antioch “the fathers,” seeing that you do not recognize those who were their fathers? The framers of the Nicene creed, by whom the homoousian faith was acknowledged, have a far higher claim to the title of “the fathers”; both as having the priority in point of time, and also because those assembled at Antioch were by them invested with the sacerdotal office. Now if those at Antioch have disowned their own fathers, those who follow them are unconsciously following parricides. Besides how can they have received a legitimate ordination from those whose faith they pronounce unsound and impious? If those, however, who constituted the Nicene Synod had not the Holy Spirit which is imparted by the imposition of hands,⁴²⁵ those at Antioch have not duly received the priesthood: for how could they have received it from those who had not the power of conferring it?’ Such considerations as these might have been submitted to Eleusius in reply to his objections. But they then proceeded to another question, connected with the assertion made by Acacius in his exposition of the faith, ‘that the Son was like the Father’; enquiring of one another in what this resemblance consisted. The Acacian party affirmed that the Son was like the Father as it respected his will only, and not his ‘substance’ or ‘essence’; but the rest maintained that the likeness extended to both essence and will. In alternations on this point, the whole day was consumed; and Acacius, being confuted by his own published works, in which he had asserted that ‘the Son is in all things like the Father,’ his opponents asked him ‘how do you now deny the likeness of the Son to the Father as to his “essence”?’ Acacius in reply said, that ‘no author, ancient or modern, was ever condemned out of his own writings.’ As they kept on their discussion on this matter to a most tedious extent, with much acrimonious feeling and subtlety of argument, but without any approach to unity of judgment, Leonas arose and dissolved the council: and this was the conclusion of the Synod at Seleucia. For on the following day [Leonas] being urged to do so would not again meet with them. ‘I have been deputed by the emperor,’ said he, ‘to attend a council where unanimity was expected to prevail: but since you can by no means come to a mutual understanding, I can no longer be present: go therefore to the church, if you please, and indulge in vain babbling there.’ The Acacian faction conceiving this decision to be advantageous to themselves, also refused to meet with the others. The adverse party left alone met in the church and requested the attendance of those who followed Acacius, that cognizance might be taken of the case of Cyril, bishop of Jerusalem: for that prelate had been accused long before, on what grounds however I am unable to state. He had even been deposed, because owing to fear, he had not made his appearance during two whole years, after having been repeatedly summoned in order that the charges against him might be investigated. Nevertheless, when he was deposed, he sent a written notification to those who had condemned him, that he should appeal to a higher jurisdiction: and to this appeal the emperor Constantius gave his sanction. Cyril was thus the first and indeed only clergyman who ventured to break through ecclesiastical usage, by becoming an appellant, in the way commonly done in the secular courts of judicature.\footnote{He was the only one, inasmuch as the General Synod of Constantinople (381 a.d.) expressly forbade all appeals from the ecclesiastical to the civil courts, attaching severe penalties to the violation of its canon on this subject. Cf. Canon 6 of Council of Constantinople. Hefele, \textit{Hist. of the Ch. Councils}, Vol. II. p. 364.} and he was now present at Seleucia, ready to be put upon his trial; on this account the other bishops invited the Acacian party to take their places in the assembly, that in a general council a definite judgment might be pronounced on the case of those who were arraigned: for they cited others also charged with various misdemeanors to appear before them at the same time, who to protect themselves had sought refuge among the partisans of Acacius. When therefore that faction persisted in their refusal to meet, after being repeatedly summoned, the bishops deposed Acacius himself, together with George of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, Theodulus of Chæretapi in Phrygia, Theodosius of Philadelphia in Lydia, Evagrius of the island of Mytilene, Leontius of Tripolis in Lydia, and Eudoxius who had formerly been bishop of Germanica, but had afterwards insinuated himself into the bishopric of Antioch in Syria. They also deposed Patrophilus for contumacy, in not having presented himself to answer a charge preferred against him by a presbyter named Dorotheus. These they deposed: they also excommunicated Asterius, Eusebius, Abgarus, Basilicus, Phœbus, Fidelis, Eutychius, Magnus, and Eustathius; determining that they should not be restored to communion, until they made such a defense as would clear them from the imputations under which they lay. This being done, they addressed explanatory letters to each of the churches whose bishops had been deposed. Anianus was then constituted bishop of Antioch instead of Eudoxius: but the Acacians having soon after apprehended him, he was delivered into the hands of Leonas and Lauricius, by whom he was sent into exile. The bishops who had ordained him being incensed on this account, lodged protests against the Acacian party with Leonas and Lauricius, in which they openly charged them with having violated the decisions of the Synod. Finding that no redress could be obtained by this means, they went to Constantinople to lay the whole matter before the emperor.

⁴²⁵ See Chrysostom, Homilies 9 and 27, on Acts, and Hom. 1, on 2 Tim., for the belief of the ancient Church in the descent of the Holy Spirit on the ordained in and through ordination.
Chapter XLI.—On the Emperor's Return from the West, the Acacians assemble at Constantinople, and confirm the Creed of Ariminum, after making Some Additions to it.

And now the emperor returned from the West and appointed a prefect over Constantinople, Honoratus by name, having abolished the office of proconsul. But the Acacians being beforehand with the bishops, calumniated them to the emperor, persuading him not to admit the creed which they had proposed. This so annoyed the emperor that he resolved to disperse them; he therefore published an edict, commanding that such of them as were subject to fill certain public offices should be no longer exempted from the performance of the duties attached to them. For several of them were liable to be called on to occupy various official departments, connected both with the city magistracy, and in subordination to the presidents and governors of provinces. While these were thus harassed the partisans of Acacius remained for a considerable time at Constantinople and held another Synod. Sending for the bishops at Bithynia, about fifty assembled on this occasion, among whom was Maris, bishop of Chalcedon: these confirmed the creed read at Ariminum to which the names of the consuls had been prefixed. It would have been unnecessary to repeat it here, had there not been some additions made to it; but since that was done, it may be desirable to transcribe it in its new form.

'We believe in one God the Father Almighty, of whom are all things. And in the only-begotten Son of God, begotten of God before all ages, and before every beginning; through whom all things visible and invisible were made: who is the only-begotten born of the Father, the only of the only, God of God, like to the Father who begat him, according to the Scriptures, and whose generation no one knows but the Father only that begat him. We know that this only-begotten Son of God, as sent of the Father, came down from the heavens, as it is written, for the destruction of sin and death: and that he was born of the Holy Spirit, and of the Virgin Mary according to the flesh, as it is written, and conversed with his disciples; and that after every dispensation had been fulfilled according to his Father's will, he was crucified and died, and was buried and descended into the lower parts of the earth, at whose... presence hades itself trembled: who also arose from the dead on the third day, again conversed with his disciples, and after the completion of forty days was taken up into the heavens, and sits at the right hand of the Father, whence he will come in the last day, the day of the resurrection, in his Father’s glory, to requite every one accord to his works. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit, whom he himself the only-begotten of God, Christ our Lord and God, promised to send to mankind as the Comforter, according as it is written, 432 “the Spirit of truth”; whom he sent to them after he was received into the heavens. But since the term ousia [substance or essence], which was used by the fathers in a very simple and intelligible sense, but not being understood by the people, has been a cause of offense, we have thought proper to reject it, as it is not contained even in the sacred writings; and that no mention of it should be made in future, inasmuch as the holy Scriptures have nowhere mentioned the substance of the Father and of the Son. Nor ought the “subsistence” of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit to be even named. But we affirm that the Son is like the Father, in such a manner as the sacred Scriptures declare and teach. Let therefore all heresies which have been already condemned, or may have arisen of late, which are opposed to this exposition of the faith, be anathema.’

These things were recognized at that time at Constantinople. And now as we have at length wound our way through the labyrinth of all the various forms of faith, let us reckon the number of them. After that which was promulgated at Nicæa, two others were proposed at Antioch at the dedication of the church there. 433 A third was presented to the Emperor in Gaul by Narcissus and those who accompanied him. 434 The fourth was sent by Eudoxius into Italy. 435 There were three forms of the creed published at Sirmium, one of which having the consuls’ names prefixed was read at Ariminum. 436 The Acacian party produced an eighth at Seleucia. 437 The last was that of Constantinople, containing the prohibitory clause respecting the mention of ‘substance’ or ‘subsistence’ in relation to God. To this creed Ulfilas bishop of the Goths gave his assent, although he had previously adhered to that of Nicæa; for he was a disciple of Theophilus bishop of the Goths, who was present at the Nicene council, and subscribed what was there determined. Let this suffice on these subjects.

---

433 Chap. 10.
434 Chap. 18.
435 Chap. 19.
436 Chaps. 30, 37.
437 Chap. 41.
Chapter XLII.—On the Deposition of Macedonius, Eudoxius obtains the Bishopric of Constantinople.

Acacius, Eudoxius, and those at Constantinople who took part with them, became exceedingly anxious that they also on their side might depose some of the opposite party. Now it should be observed that neither of the factions were influenced by religious considerations in making depositions, but by other motives: for although they did not agree respecting the faith, yet the ground of their reciprocal depositions was not error in doctrine. The Acacian party therefore availing themselves of the emperor’s indignation against others, and especially against Macedonius, which he was cherishing and anxious to vent, in the first place deposed Macedonius, both on account of his having occasioned so much slaughter, and also because he had admitted to communion a deacon who had been found guilty of fornication. They then deposed Eleusius bishop of Cyzicus, for having baptized, and afterwards invested with the diaconate, a priest of Hercules at Tyre named Heraclius, who was known to have practiced magic arts. A like sentence was pronounced against Basil, or Basilas,—as he was also called,—who had been constituted bishop of Ancyra instead of Marcellus: the causes assigned for this condemnation were, that he had unjustly imprisoned a certain individual, loaded him with chains, and put him to the torture; that he had traduced some persons; and that he had disturbed the churches of Africa by his epistles. Dracontius was also deposed, because he had left the Galatian church for that of Pergamos. Moreover they deposed, on various pretenses, Neonas bishop of Seleucia, the city in which the Synod had been convened, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis in Paphlagonia, Elpidius of Satala, in Macedonia, and Cyril of Jerusalem, and others for various reasons.

438 Cf. Apost. Canon, XXV.

439 Cf. Tertull. de Idol. IX.: Post evangelium nusquam invenies aut sophistas, aut Chaldæos, aut Incantatores, aut Conjectores, aut magos, nisi plane punitos. See also Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. XVI. 5.
Chapter XLIII.—Of Eustathius Bishop of Sebastia.

But Eustathius bishop of Sebastia in Armenia was not even permitted to make his defense; because he had been long before deposed by Eulalius, his own father, who was bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia, for dressing in a style unbecoming the sacerdotal office. Let it be noted that Meletius was appointed his successor, of whom we shall hereafter speak. Eustathius indeed was subsequently condemned by a Synod convened on his account at Gangra in Paphlagonia; he having, after his deposition by the council at Caesarea, done many things repugnant to the ecclesiastical canons. For he had ‘forbidden marriage,’ and maintained that meats were to be abstained from: he even separated many from their wives, and persuaded those who disliked to assemble in the churches to commune at home. Under the pretext of piety, he also seduced servants from their masters. He himself wore the habit of a philosopher, and induced his followers to adopt a new and extraordinary garb, directing that the hair of women should be cropped. He permitted the prescribed fasts to be neglected, but recommended fasting on Sundays. In short, he forbade prayers to be offered in the houses of married persons: and declared that both the benediction and the communion of a presbyter who continued to live with a wife whom he might have lawfully married, while still a layman, ought to be shunned as an abomination. For doing and teaching these things and many others of a similar nature, a Synod convened, as we have said, at Gangra in Paphlagonia deposed him, and anathematized his opinions. This, however, was done afterwards. But on Macedonius being ejected from the see of Constantinople, Eudoxius, who now looked upon the see of Antioch as secondary in importance, was promoted to the vacant bishopric; being consecrated by the Acacians, who in this instance cared not to consider that it was inconsistent with their former proceedings. For they who had deposed Dраcontius because of his translation from Galatia to Pergamos, were clearly acting in contrariety to their own principles and decisions, in ordaining Eudoxius, who then made a second change. After this they sent their own exposition of the faith, in its corrected and supplementary form, to Arminium, ordering that all those who refused to sign it should be exiled on the authority of the emperor’s edict. They also informed such other prelates in the East as coincided with them in opinion of what they had done; and more especially Patrophiulus 440 On the prescribed dress of the clergy, and the punishment of those who did not constantly adopt it, see Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. VI. 4. 15.

441 1 Tim. iv. 3. Cf. Euseb. H. E. IV. 29, on the earliest forms of expression against marriage in the Christian Church; also Apost. Canon, LI. and Augustine, Haer. XXV., XL., XLVI. See Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. XXII. 1.
442 On Synod of Gangra, see Hefele, Hist. of the Ch. Councils, Vol. II. p. 325–339. Almost all the canons of the synod seem to be addressed against the teachings of Eustathius. The fourth canon is expressly on the celibacy of the clergy, as follows: ‘If any one maintains that, when a married priest offer the sacrifice, no one should take part in the service, let him be anathema.’

186 bishop of Scythopolis, who on leaving Seleucia had proceeded directly to his own city. Eu-doxius having been constituted bishop of the imperial city, the great church named Sophia was at that time consecrated,443 in the tenth consulate444 of Constantius, and the third of Julian Cæsar, on the 15th day of February. It was while Eudoxius occupied this see, that he first uttered that sentence which is still everywhere current, ‘The Father is impious, the Son is pious.’ When the people seemed startled by this expression, and a disturbance began to be made, ‘Be not troubled,’ said he, ‘on account of what I have just said: for the Father is impious, because he worships no person; but the Son is pious because he worships the Father.’ Eudoxius having said this, the tumult was appeased, and great laughter was excited in the church: and this saying of his continues to be a jest, even in the present day. The heresiarchs indeed frequently devised such subtle phrases as these, and by them rent the church asunder. Thus was the Synod at Constantinople terminated.

443 This was evidently the second consecration of the earlier church of St. Sophia (cf. I. 16, II. 6); the first consecration was celebrated in 326 a.d. Later, the structure was destroyed in a fire, in connection with a popular uprising; and the great church of St. Sophia, at present a Mohammedan mosque, was erected by Justinian, with Isidore of Miletus and Anthimius of Tralles as architects.

444 360 a.d.
Chapter XLIV.—Of Meletius Bishop of Antioch.

It becomes us now to speak of Meletius, who, as we have recently observed, was created bishop of Sebastia in Armenia, after the deposition of Eustathius; from Sebastia he was transferred to Beroea, a city of Syria. Being present at the Synod of Seleucia, he subscribed the creed set forth there by Acacius, and immediately returned thence to Beroea. When the convention of the Synod at Constantinople was held, the people of Antioch finding that Eudoxius, captivated by the magnificence of the see of Constantinople, had contemned their church, they sent for Meletius, and invested him with the bishopric of the church at Antioch. Now he at first avoided all doctrinal questions, confining his discourses to moral subjects; but subsequently he expounded to his auditors the Nicene creed, and asserted the doctrine of the homoousion. The emperor being informed of this, ordered that he should be sent into exile; and caused Euzoïus, who had before been deposed together with Arius, to be installed bishop of Antioch in his stead. Such, however, as were attached to Meletius, separated themselves from the Arian congregation, and held their assemblies apart: nevertheless, those who originally embraced the homoousian opinion would not communicate with them, because Meletius had been ordained by the Arians, and his adherents had been baptized by them. Thus was the Antiochian church divided, even in regard to those whose views on matters of faith exactly corresponded. Meanwhile the emperor getting intelligence that the Persians were preparing to undertake another war against the Romans, repaired in great haste to Antioch.

445 The name has been written 'Melitius' thus far, but is found as 'Meletius' from this point, and through Bk. III. Cf. Euseb. H. E. VII. 32.
Chapter XLV.—The Heresy of Macedonius.

Macedonius, on being ejected from Constantinople, bore his condemnation ill and became restless; he therefore associated himself with the other faction that had deposed Acacius and his party at Seleucia, and sent a deputation to Sophronius and Eleusius, to encourage them to adhere to that creed which was first promulgated at Antioch, and afterwards confirmed at Seleucia, proposing to give it the counterfeit name of the 'homoiousian' creed. By this means he drew around him a great number of adherents, who from him are still denominated 'Macedonians.' And although such as dissented from the Acacians at the Seleucian Synod had not previously used the term homoiousios, yet from that period they distinctly asserted it. There was, however, a popular report that this term did not originate with Macedonius, but was the invention rather of Marathonius, who a little before had been set over the church at Nicomedia; on which account the maintainers of this doctrine were also called 'Marathonians.' To this party Eustathius joined himself, who for the reasons before stated had been ejected from the church at Sebastia. But when Macedonius began to deny the Divinity of the Holy Spirit in the Trinity, Eustathius said: 'I can neither admit that the Holy Spirit is God, nor can I dare affirm him to be a creature.' For this reason those who hold the homoousion of the Son call these heretics 'Pneumatomachi.' By what means these Macedonians became so numerous in the Hellespont, I shall state in its proper place.

The Acacians meanwhile became extremely anxious that another Synod should be convened at Antioch, in consequence of having changed their mind respecting their former assertion of the likeness 'in all things' of the Son to the Father. A small number of them therefore assembled in the following consulate which was that of Taurus and Florentius, at Antioch in Syria, where the emperor was at that time residing, Euzoïus being bishop. A discussion was then renewed on some of those points which they had previously determined, in the course of which they declared that the term 'homoios' ought to be erased from the form of faith which had been published both at Ariminum and Constantinople; and they no longer concealed but openly declared that the Son was altogether unlike the Father, not merely in relation to his essence, but even as it respected his will; asserting boldly also, as Arius had already done, that he was made of nothing. Those in that city who favored the heresy of Aëtius, gave their assent to this opinion; from which circumstance in addition to the general

---

446 παράσημος; just as a counterfeit coin has the appearance of the genuine, and is meant to deceive those who do not investigate its genuineness, so the term 'homoioousios' (ὁμοιοούσιος), the author implies, was meant to deceive the popular ear by its likeness to the genuine 'homoousios.'

448 Πνευματομάχοι, lit. 'active enemies of the Spirit.'

449 I. 4.

450 361 a.d.
appellation of Arians, they were also termed ‘Anomœans,’\textsuperscript{451} and ‘Exucontians,’\textsuperscript{452} by those at Antioch who embraced the homoousian, who nevertheless were at that time divided among themselves on account of Meletius, as I have before observed. Being therefore questioned by them, how they dared to affirm that the Son is unlike the Father, and has his existence from nothing, after having acknowledged him ‘God of God’ in their former creed? they endeavored to elude this objection by such fallacious subterfuges as these. ‘The expression, “God of God,”’ said they, ‘is to be understood in the same sense as the words of the apostle,’\textsuperscript{453} “but all things of God.” Wherefore the Son is of God, as being one of these \textit{all things}: and it is for this reason the words “according to the Scriptures” are added in the draught of the creed.’ The author of this sophism was George bishop of Laodicea, who being unskilled in such phrases, was ignorant of the manner in which Origen had formerly explained these peculiar expressions of the apostle, having thoroughly investigated the matter. But notwithstanding these evasive cavilings, they were unable to bear the reproach and contumely they had drawn upon themselves, and fell back upon the creed which they had before put forth at Constantinople; and so each one retired to his own district. George returning to Alexandria, resumed his authority over the churches there, Athanasius still not having made his appearance. Those in that city who were opposed to his sentiments he persecuted; and conducting himself with great severity and cruelty, he rendered himself extremely odious to the people. At Jerusalem Arrenius\textsuperscript{454} was placed over the church instead of Cyril: we may also remark that Heraclius was ordained bishop there after him, and after him Hilary. At length, however, Cyril returned to Jerusalem, and was again invested with the presidency over the church there. About the same time another heresy sprang up, which arose from the following circumstance.

\textsuperscript{451} ‘Ἀνόμοιοι, because they held that the essence of the Son was ‘dissimilar,’ ἀνόμοιος, to that of the Father.

\textsuperscript{452} ‘Ἐξουκόντιοι, from the phrase ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων = ‘from [things] not existing,’ because they asserted that the Son was made \textit{ex nihilo}. The term might be put roughly in some such form as ‘Fromnothingians.’

\textsuperscript{453} 1 Cor. xi. 12.

\textsuperscript{454} Written ‘Errenius’ in the Allat. ms.
Chapter XLVI.—Of the Apollinarians, and their Heresy.455

There were two men of the same name at Laodicea in Syria, a father and son: their name was Apollinaris; the former of them was a presbyter, and the latter a reader in that church. Both taught Greek literature, the father grammar, and the son rhetoric. The father was a native of Alexandria, and at first taught at Berytus, but afterwards removed to Laodicea, where he married, and the younger Apollinaris was born. They were contemporaries of Epiphanius the sophist, and being true friends they became intimate with him; but Theodotus bishop of Laodicea, fearing that such communication should pervert their principles, and lead them into paganism, forbade their associating with him: they, however, paid but little attention to this prohibition, their familiarity with Epiphanius being still continued. George, the successor of Theodotus, also endeavored to prevent their conversing with Epiphanius; but not being able in any way to persuade them on this point, he excommunicated them. The younger Apollinaris regarding this severe procedure as an act of injustice, and relying on the resources of his rhetorical sophistry, originated a new heresy, which was named after its inventor, and still has many supporters. Nevertheless some affirm that it was not for the reason above assigned that they dissented from George, but because they saw the unsettledness and inconsistency of his profession of faith; since he sometimes maintained that the Son is like the Father, in accordance with what had been determined in the Synod at Seleucia, and at other times countenanced the Arian view. They therefore made this a pretext for separation from him: but as no one followed their example, they introduced a new form of doctrine, and at first they asserted that in the economy of the incarnation, God the Word assumed a human body without a soul. Afterwards, as if changing mind, they retracted, admitting that he took a soul indeed, but that it was an irrational one, God the Word himself being in the place of a mind. Those who followed them and bear their name at this day affirm that this is their only point of distinction [from the Catholics]; for they recognize the consubstantiality of the persons in the Trinity. But we will make further mention of the two Apollinares in the proper place.456

456 III. 16.
Chapter XLVII.—Successes of Julian; Death of the Emperor Constantius.

While the Emperor Constantius continued his residence at Antioch, Julian Caesar engaged with an immense army of barbarians in the Gauls, and obtaining the victory over them, he became extremely popular among the soldiery and was proclaimed emperor by them. When this was made known, the Emperor Constantius was affected most painfully; he was therefore baptized by Euzoïus, and immediately prepared to undertake an expedition against Julian. On arriving at the frontiers of Cappadocia and Cilicia, his excessive agitation of mind produced apoplexy, which terminated his life at Mopsucrene, in the consulate of Taurus and Florentius, \(^457\) on the 3d of November. This was in the first year of the 285th Olympiad. Constantius had lived forty-five years, having reigned thirty-eight years; thirteen of which he was his father’s colleague in the empire, and after his father’s death for twenty-five years [sole emperor], the history of which latter period is contained in this book.
Book III.

Chapter I.—Of Julian; his Lineage and Education; his Elevation to the Throne; his Apostasy to Paganism.

The Emperor Constantius died on the frontiers of Cilicia on the 3d of November, during the consulate of Taurus and Florentius; Julian leaving the western parts of the empire about the 11th of December following, under the same consulate, came to Constantinople, where he was proclaimed emperor.\(^458\) As I must needs speak of the character of this prince who was eminently distinguished for his learning, let not his admirers expect that I should attempt a pompous rhetorical style, as if it were necessary to make the delineation correspond with the dignity of the subject: for my object being to compile a history of the Christian religion, it is both proper in order to the being better understood, and consistent with my original purpose, to maintain a humble and unaffected style.\(^459\) However, it is proper to describe his person, birth, education, and the manner in which he became possessed of the sovereignty; and in order to do this it will be needful to enter into some antecedent details. Constantine who gave Byzantium his own name, had two brothers named Dalmatius and Constantius, the offspring of the same father, but by a different mother. The former of these had a son who bore his own name: the latter had two sons, Gallus and Julian. Now as on the death of Constantine who founded Constantinople, the soldiery had put the younger brother Dalmatius to death, the lives of his two orphan children were also endangered: but a disease which threatened to be fatal preserved Gallus from the violence of his father’s murderers; while the tenderness of Julian’s age—for he was only eight years old at the time—protected him. The emperor’s jealousy toward them having been gradually subdued, Gallus attended the schools at Ephesus in Ionia, in which country considerable hereditary possessions had been left them. And Julian, when he was grown up, pursued his studies at Constantinople, going constantly to the palace, where the schools then were, in plain clothes, under the superintendence of the eunuch Mardonius. In grammar Nicocles the Lacædemonian was his instructor; and Ecebolius the Sophist, who was at that time a Christian, taught him rhetoric: for the emperor had made the provision that he should have no pagan masters, lest he should be seduced to the pagan superstitions. For Julian was a Christian at the beginning. His proficiency in literature soon became so remarkable, that it began to be said that he was capable of governing the Roman empire; and this popular rumor becoming generally diffused, greatly disquieted the emperor’s mind, so that he had him removed from the Great City to Nicomedia, forbidding him at the same time to frequent the school of Libanius the Syrian Sophist. For Libanius having been driven at that time from Constantinople, by a \(^458\) December, 361 a.d. This proclamation must be distinguished from the one in Gaul (II. 47); the latter was the proclamation by the army, and occurred during the lifetime of Constantius.

\(^459\) Cf. I. 1.
combination of the educators there, had retired to Nicomedia, where he opened a school. Here he gave vent to his indignation against the educators in the treatise he composed regarding them. Julian was, however, interdicted from being his auditor, because Libanius was a pagan in religion: nevertheless he privately procured his orations, which he not only greatly admired, but also frequently and with close study perused. As he was becoming very expert in the rhetorical art, Maximus the philosopher arrived at Nicomedia (not the Byzantine, Euclid’s father) but the Ephesian, whom the emperor Valentinian afterwards caused to be executed as a practicer of magic. This took place later; at that time the only thing that attracted him to Nicomedia was the fame of Julian. From him [Julian] received, in addition to the principles of philosophy, his own religious sentiments, and a desire to possess the empire. When these things reached the ears of the emperor, Julian, between hope and fear, became very anxious to lull the suspicions which had been awakened, and therefore began to assume the external semblance of what he once was in reality. He was shaved to the very skin, and pretended to live a monastic life: and while in private he pursued his philosophical studies, in public he read the sacred writings of the Christians, and moreover was constituted a reader in the church of Nicomedia. Thus by these specious pretexts he succeeded in averting the emperor’s displeasure. Now he did all this from fear, but he by no means abandoned his hope; telling his friends that happier times were not far distant, when he should possess the imperial sway. In this condition of things his brother Gallus having been created Caesar, on his way to the East came to Nicomedia to see him. But when not long after this Gallus was slain, Julian was suspected by the emperor; wherefore he directed that a guard should be set over him: he soon, however, found means of escaping from them, and fleeing from place to place he managed to be in safety. At last the Empress Eusebia having discovered his retreat, persuaded the emperor to leave him uninjured, and permit him to go to Athens to pursue his philosophical studies. From thence—to be brief—the emperor recalled him, and after created him Caesar; in addition to this, uniting him in marriage to his own sister Helen, he sent him against the barbarians. For the barbarians whom the Emperor Constantius had engaged as auxiliary forces against the usurper Magnentius, having proved of no use against the usurper, were beginning to pillage the Roman cities. And inasmuch as he was young he ordered him to undertake nothing without consulting the other military chiefs.

Now these generals having obtained such authority, became lax in their duties, and the barbarians in consequence strengthened themselves. Julian perceiving this allowed the commanders to give themselves up to luxury and revelling, but exerted himself to infuse

---

460 See Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. VI. 4, end.

461 The ‘reader,’ ἀναγνώστης, lector, was commonly a young man possessed of a good voice, who read the Scriptures from the pulpit or reading-desk (not the altar). Bennett, Christ. Archæol. p. 374.
courage into the soldiery, offering a stipulated reward to any one who should kill a barbarian. This measure effectually weakened the enemy and at the same time conciliated to himself the affections of the army. It is reported that as he was entering a town a civic crown which was suspended between two pillars fell upon his head, which it exactly fitted: upon which all present gave a shout of admiration, regarding it as a presage of his one day becoming emperor. Some have affirmed that Constantius sent him against the barbarians, in the hope that he would perish in an engagement with them. I know not whether those who say this speak the truth; but it certainly is improbable that he should have first contracted so near an alliance with him, and then have sought his destruction to the prejudice of his own interests. Let each form his own judgment of the matter. Julian’s complaint to the emperor of the inertness of his military officers procured for him a coadjutor in the command more in sympathy with his own ardor; and by their combined efforts such an assault was made upon the barbarians, that they sent him an embassy, assuring him that they had been ordered by the emperor’s letters, which were produced, to march into the Roman territories. But he cast the ambassador into prison, and vigorously attacking the forces of the enemy, totally defeated them; and having taken their king prisoner, he sent him alive to Constantius. Immediately after this brilliant success he was proclaimed emperor by the soldiers; and inasmuch as there was no imperial crown at hand, one of his guards took the chain which he wore about his own neck, and bound it around Julian’s head. Thus Julian became emperor: but whether he subsequently conducted himself as became a philosopher, let my readers determine. For he neither entered into communication with Constantius by an embassy, nor paid him the least homage in acknowledgment of past favors; but constituting other governors over the provinces, he conducted everything just as it pleased him. Moreover, he sought to bring Constantius into contempt, by reciting publicly in every city the letters which he had written to the barbarians; and thus having rendered the inhabitants of these places disaffected, they were easily induced to revolt from Constantius to himself. After this he no longer wore the mask of Christianity, but everywhere opened the pagan temples, offering sacrifice to the idols; and designating himself ‘Pontifex Maximus,’ 462 gave permission to such as would to celebrate their superstitious festivals. In this manner he managed to excite a civil war against Constantius; and thus, as far as he was concerned, he would have involved the empire in all the disastrous consequences of a war. For this philosopher’s aim could not have been attained without much bloodshed: but God, in the sovereignty of his own councils, checked the fury of these antagonists without detriment to the state, by the removal of one of them. For when Julian arrived among the Thracians, intelligence was brought him that Constantius was dead; and thus was the Roman empire at that time preserved from the intestine strife that 462 See Smith, Dict. of Greek and Rom. Antiq. See also, on sacrificing to idols as a sign of apostacy, Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. XVI. iv. 5. threatened it. Julian forthwith made his public entry into Constantinople; and considered with himself how he might best conciliate the masses and secure popular favor. Accordingly he had recourse to the following measures: he knew that Constantius had rendered himself odious to the defenders of the homoousian faith by having driven them from the churches, and proscribed their bishops. He was also aware that the pagans were extremely discontented because of the prohibitions which prevented their sacrificing to their gods, and were very anxious to get their temples opened, with liberty to exercise their idolatrous rites. In fact, he was sensible that while both these classes secretly entertained rancorous feelings against his predecessor, the people in general were exceedingly exasperated by the violence of the eunuchs, and especially by the rapacity of Eusebius the chief officer of the imperial bed-chamber. Under these circumstances he treated all parties with subtlety: with some he dissimulated; others he attached to himself by conferring obligations upon them, for he was fond of affecting beneficence; but to all in common he manifested his own predilection for the idolatry of the heathens. And first in order to brand the memory of Constantius by making him appear to have been cruel toward his subjects, he recalled the exiled bishops, and restored to them their confiscated estates. He next commanded the suitable agents to see that the pagan temples should be opened without delay. Then he directed that such individuals as had been victims of the extortionate conduct of the eunuchs, should receive back the property of which they had been plundered. Eusebius, the chief of the imperial bed-chamber, he punished with death, not only on account of the injuries he had inflicted on others, but because he was assured that it was through his machinations that his brother Gallus had been killed. The body of Constantius he honored with an imperial funeral, but expelled the eunuchs, barbers, and cooks from the palace. The eunuchs he dispensed with, because they were unnecessary in consequence of his wife’s decease, as he had resolved not to marry again; the cooks, because he maintained a very simple table; and the barbers, because he said one was sufficient for a great many persons. These he dismissed for the reasons given; he also reduced the majority of the secretaries to their former condition, and appointed for those who were retained a salary befitting their office. The mode of public traveling and conveyance of necessaries he also reformed, abolishing the use of mules, oxen, and asses for this purpose, and permitting horses only to be so employed. These various retrenchments were highly lauded by some few, but strongly reprobated by all others, as tending to bring the imperial dignity into contempt, by stripping it of those appendages of pomp and magnificence which exercise so powerful an influence over the minds of the vulgar. Not only so, but at night he was accustomed to sit up composing orations which he afterwards delivered in the senate: though in fact he was the first and only emperor since the time of Julius Caesar who made speeches in that assembly. To those who were eminent for literary attainments, he extended the most flattering patronage, and especially to those who were professional philosophers; in consequence of which, abundance of pretenders to learning of this sort resorted to the palace from all quarters, wearing their palliums, being more conspicuous for their costume than their erudition. These impostors, who invariably adopted the religious sentiments of their prince, were all inimical to the welfare of the Christians; and Julian himself, whose excessive vanity prompted him to deride all his predecessors in a book which he wrote entitled The Caesars, was led by the same haughty disposition to compose treatises against the Christians also. The expulsion of the cooks and barbers is in a manner becoming a philosopher indeed, but not an emperor; but ridiculing and caricaturing of others is neither the part of the philosopher nor that of the emperor: for such personages ought to be superior to the influence of jealousy and detraction. An emperor may be a philosopher in all that regards moderation and self-control; but should a philosopher attempt to imitate what might become an emperor, he would frequently depart from his own principles. We have thus briefly spoken of the Emperor Julian, tracing his extraction, education, temper of mind, and the way in which he became invested with the imperial power.

---

463 See II. 7, 13, 16, &c.

464 It is difficult to determine in what particulars the improvements mentioned here were made. Gregory Nazianzen, Contra Julianum, I. lxxv., confesses that Julian had made reforms in the matter.

---

465 See chap. 23.
Chapter II.—Of the Sedition excited at Alexandria, and how George was slain.

It is now proper to mention what took place in the churches under the same [emperor]. A great disturbance occurred at Alexandria in consequence of the following circumstance. There was a place in that city which had long been abandoned to neglect and filth, wherein the pagans had formerly celebrated their mysteries, and sacrificed human beings to Mithra.\textsuperscript{466} This being empty and otherwise useless, Constantius had granted to the church of the Alexandrians; and George wishing to erect a church on the site of it, gave directions that the place should be cleansed. In the process of clearing it, an adytum\textsuperscript{467} of vast depth was discovered which unveiled the nature of their heathenish rites: for there were found there the skulls of many persons of all ages, who were said to have been immolated for the purpose of divination by the inspection of entrails, when the pagans performed these and such like magic arts whereby they enchanted the souls of men. The Christians on discovering these abominations in the adytum of the Mithreum, went forth eagerly to expose them to the view and execration of all; and therefore carried the skulls throughout the city, in a kind of triumphal procession, for the inspection of the people. When the pagans of Alexandria beheld this, unable to bear the insulting character of the act, they became so exasperated, that they assailed the Christians with whatever weapon chanced to come to hand, in their fury destroying numbers of them in a variety of ways: some they killed with the sword, others with clubs and stones; some they strangled with ropes, others they crucified, purposely inflicting this last kind of death in contempt of the cross of Christ: most of them they wounded; and as it generally happens in such a case, neither friends nor relatives were spared, but friends, brothers, parents, and children imbrued their hands in each other’s blood. Wherefore the Christians ceased from cleansing the Mithreum: the pagans meanwhile having dragged George out of the church, fastened him to a camel, and when they had torn him to pieces, they burnt him together with the camel.\textsuperscript{468}

\textsuperscript{466} The friendly or propitious divinity of the Persian theology; hence identified with the light and life-giving sun.

\textsuperscript{467} The secret or innermost sanctuary of the temple, where none but priests were permitted to enter; afterwards applied to any secret place.

\textsuperscript{468} This George is, according to some authorities, the St. George of the legend. In its Arian form the legend represents St. George as warring against the wizard Athanasius; later, the wizard was transformed to a dragon, and George to an armed knight slaying the dragon. On other forms and features of the legend, see Smith & Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biogr., Georgius (43).
Chapter III.—The Emperor Indignant at the Murder of George, rebukes the Alexandrians by Letter.

The emperor being highly indignant at the assassination of George, wrote to the citizens of Alexandria, rebuking their violence in the strongest terms. A report was circulated that those who detested him because of Athanasius, perpetrated this outrage upon George: but as for me I think it is undoubtedly true that such as cherish hostile feelings against particular individuals are often found identified with popular commotions; yet the emperor’s letter evidently attaches the blame to the populace, rather than to any among the Christians. George, however, was at that time, and had for some time previously been, exceedingly obnoxious to all classes, which is sufficient to account for the burning indignation of the multitude against him. That the emperor charges the people with the crime may be seen from his letter which was expressed in the following terms.

Emperor Cæsar Julian Maximus Augustus to the Citizens of Alexandria. 469

Even if you have neither respect for Alexander the founder of your city, nor, what is more, for that great and most holy god Serapis; yet how is it you have made no account not only of the universal claims of humanity and social order, but also of what is due to us, to whom all the gods, and especially the mighty Serapis, have assigned the empire of the world, for whose cognizance therefore it became you to reserve all matters of public wrong? But perhaps the impulse of rage and indignation, which taking possession of the mind, too often stimulate it to the most atrocious acts, has led you astray. It seems, however, that when your fury had in some degree moderated, you aggravated your culpability by adding a most heinous offense to that which had been committed under the excitement of the moment: nor were you, although but the common people, ashamed to perpetrate those very acts on account of which you justly detested them. By Serapis I conjure you tell me, for what unjust deed were ye so indignant at George? You will perhaps answer, it was because he exasperated Constantius of blessed memory against you: because he introduced an army into the sacred city: because in consequence the governor 470 of Egypt despoiled the god’s most holy temple of its images, votive offerings, and such other consecrated apparatus as it contained; who, when ye could not endure the sight of such a foul desecration, but attempted to defend the god from sacrilegious hands, or rather to hinder the pillage of what had been consecrated to his service, in contravention of all justice, law, and piety, dared to send armed bands against you. This he probably did from his dreading George more than Constantius: but he would have consulted better for his own safety had he not been guilty of this tyrannical conduct, but persevered in his former moderation toward you. Being on all these accounts enraged against George as the adversary of the gods, you have again polluted your sacred 469 Julian, Ep. 10.

470 Artemius, whom the Emperor Julian afterwards beheaded for desecrating the pagan temple.
city; whereas you ought to have impeached him before the judges. For had you thus acted, neither murder, nor any other unlawful deed would have been committed; but justice being equitably dispensed, would have preserved you innocent of these disgraceful excesses, while it brought on him the punishment due to his impious crimes. Thus too, in short, the insolence of those would have been curbed who contemn the gods, and respect neither cities of such magnitude, nor so flourishing a population; but make the barbarities they practice against them the prelude, as it were, of their exercise of power. Compare therefore this my present letter, with that which I wrote you some time since. With what high commendation did I then greet you! But now, by the immortal gods, with an equal disposition to praise you I am unable to do so on account of your heinous misdoings. The people have had the audacity to tear a man in pieces, like dogs; nor have they been subsequently ashamed of this inhuman procedure, nor desirous of purifying their hands from such pollution, that they may stretch them forth in the presence of the gods undefiled by blood. You will no doubt be ready to say that George justly merited this chastisement; and we might be disposed perhaps to admit that he deserved still more acute tortures. Should you farther affirm that on your account he was worthy of these sufferings, even this might also be granted. But should you add that it became you to inflict the vengeance due to his offenses, that I could by no means acquiesce in; for you have laws to which it is the duty of every one of you to be subject, and to evince your respect for both publicly, as well as in private. If any individual should transgress those wise and salutary regulations which were originally constituted for the well-being of the community, does that absolve the rest from obedience to them? It is fortunate for you, ye Alexandrians, that such an atrocity has been perpetrated in our reign, who, by reason of our reverence for the gods, and on account of our grandfather and uncle whose name we bear, and who governed Egypt and your city, still retain a fraternal affection for you. Assuredly that power which will not suffer itself to be disrespected, and such a government as is possessed of a vigorous and healthy constitution, could not connive at such unbridled licentiousness in its subjects, without unsparingly purging out the dangerous distemper by the application of remedies sufficiently potent. We shall however in your case, for the reasons already assigned, restrict ourselves to the more mild and gentle medicine of remonstrance and exhortation; to the which mode of treatment we are persuaded ye will the more readily submit, inasmuch as we understand ye are Greeks by original descent, and also still preserve in your memory and character the traces of the glory of your ancestors. Let this be published to our citizens of Alexandria.

Such was the emperor’s letter.

---

471 Philostorgius (VII. 10) calls this Julian ‘the governor of the East, who was the uncle on the maternal side of Julian the Apostate.’ Sozomen also (V. 7 and 8) and Theodoret (H. E. III. 12, 13) furnish information regarding him, as well as Ammianus Marcellius XXIII. i. Cf. also Julian, Epist. XIII. (Spanheim, p. 382).
Chapter IV.—On the Death of George, Athanasius returns to Alexandria, and takes Possession of his See.

Not long after this, Athanasius returning from his exile, was received with great joy by the people of Alexandria. They expelled at that time the Arians from the churches, and restored Athanasius to the possession of them. The Arians meanwhile assembling themselves in low and obscure buildings, ordained Lucius to supply the place of George. Such was the state of things at that time at Alexandria.
Chapter V.—Of Lucifer and Eusebius.

About the same time Lucifer and Eusebius\textsuperscript{472} were by an imperial order, recalled from banishment out of the Upper Thebaïs; the former being bishop of Carala, a city of Sardinia, the latter of Vercellæ, a city of the Ligurians in Italy, as I have said\textsuperscript{473} previously. These two prelates therefore consulted together on the most effectual means of preventing the neglected canons\textsuperscript{474} and discipline of the church from being in future violated and despised.

\textsuperscript{472} Theodoret, \textit{H. E.} III, 4, mentions Hilarius, Astenius, and some other bishops who were at this time recalled from exile by Julian’s edict, and joined Lucifer and Eusebius in these deliberations about restoring the authority of the canons and correcting abuses in the church.

\textsuperscript{473} Cf. II. 36.

\textsuperscript{474} More especially the canons of the Council of Nicaea.
Chapter VI.—Lucifer goes to Antioch and consecrates Paulinus.

It was decided therefore that Lucifer should go to Antioch in Syria, and Eusebius to Alexandria, that by assembling a Synod in conjunction with Athanasius, they might confirm the doctrines of the church. Lucifer sent a deacon as his representative, by whom he pledged himself to assent to whatever the Synod might decree; but he himself went to Antioch, where he found the church in great disorder, the people not being agreed among themselves. For not only did the Arian heresy, which had been introduced by Euzoïus, divide the church, but, as we before said, the followers of Meletius also, from attachment to their teacher, separated themselves from those with whom they agreed in sentiment. When therefore Lucifer had constituted Paulinus their bishop, he again departed.

475 II. 44.
Chapter VII.—By the Co-operation of Eusebius and Athanasius a Synod is held at Alexandria, wherein the Trinity is declared to be Consubstantial.

As soon as Eusebius reached Alexandria, he in concert with Athanasius immediately convoked a Synod. The bishops assembled on this occasion out of various cities, took into consideration many subjects of the utmost importance. They asserted the divinity of the Holy Spirit and comprehended him in the consubstantial Trinity: they also declared that the Word in being made man, assumed not only flesh, but also a soul, in accordance with the views of the early ecclesiastics. For they did not introduce any new doctrine of their own devising into the church, but contented themselves with recording their sanction of those points which ecclesiastical tradition has insisted on from the beginning, and wise Christians have demonstratively taught. Such sentiments the ancient fathers have uniformly maintained in all their controversial writings. Irenæus, Clemens, Apollinaris of Hierapolis, and Serapion who presided over the church at Antioch, assure us in their several works, that it was the generally received opinion that Christ in his incarnation was endowed with a soul. Moreover, the Synod convened on account of Beryllus bishop of Philadelphia in Arabia, recognized the same doctrine in their letter to that prelate. Origen also everywhere in his extant works accepts that the Incarnate God took on himself a human soul. But he more particularly explains this mystery in the ninth volume of his Comments upon Genesis, where he shows that Adam and Eve were types of Christ and the church. That holy man Pamphilus, and Eusebius who was surnamed after him, are trustworthy witnesses on this subject: both these witnesses in their joint life of Origen, and admirable defense of him in answer to such as were prejudiced against him, prove that he was not the first who made this declaration, but that in doing so he was the mere expositor of the mystical tradition of the church. Those who assisted at the Alexandrian Council examined also with great minuteness the question concerning ‘Essence’ or ‘Substance,’ and ‘Existence,’ ‘Subsistence,’ or ‘Personality.’ For Hosius, bishop of Cordova in Spain, who has been before referred to as having been sent by the Emperor Constantine to allay the excitement which Arius had caused, originated the controversy about these terms in his earnestness to overthrow the dogma of Sabellius the Libyan. In the council of Nicæa, however, which was held soon after, this dispute was not agitated; but in consequence of the contention about it which subsequently arose, the matter was freely 476 The bishops composing the Council of Nicaea simply declared their faith in the Holy Spirit, without adding any definition; they were not met with any denial of the divinity of the Holy Spirit. This denial was first made by Macedonius, in the fourth century.

477 Euseb. H. E. VI. 33, says that this Beryllus denied that Christ was God before the Incarnation. He, however, gives the see of Beryllus as Bostra in Arabia, instead of Philadelphia. So also Epiphanius Scholasticus; though Nicephorus, X. 2, calls him Cyrillus, instead of Beryllus.
discussed at Alexandria. It was there determined that such expressions as ousia and hypostasis ought not to be used in reference to God: for they argued that the word ousia is nowhere employed in the sacred Scriptures; and that the apostle has misapplied the term hypostasis owing to an inevitable necessity arising from the nature of the doctrine. They nevertheless decided that in refutation of the Sabellian error these terms were admissible, in default of more appropriate language, lest it should be supposed that one thing was indicated by a threefold designation; whereas we ought rather to believe that each of those named in the Trinity is God in his own proper person. Such were the decisions of this Synod. If we may express our own judgment concerning substance and personality, it appears to us that the Greek philosophers have given us various definitions of ousia, but have not taken the slightest notice of hypostasis. Irenæus the grammarian indeed, in his Alphabetical [Lexicon entitled] Atticistes, even declares it to be a barbarous term; for it is not to be found in any of the ancients, except occasionally in a sense quite different from that which is attached to it in the present day. Thus Sophocles, in his tragedy entitled Phœnix, uses it to signify ‘treachery’: in Menander it implies ‘sauces’; as if one should call the ‘sediment’ at the bottom of a hogshead of wine hypostasis. But although the ancient philosophical writers scarcely noticed this word, the more modern ones have frequently used it instead of ousia. This term, as we before observed, has been variously defined: but can that which is capable of being circumscribed by a definition be applicable to God who is incomprehensible? Evagrius in his Monachicus, cautions us against rash and inconsiderate language in reference to God; forbidding all attempt to define the divinity, inasmuch as it is wholly simple in its nature: ‘for,’ says he, ‘definition belongs only to things which are compound.’ The same author further adds, ‘Every proposition has either a “genus” which is predicted, or a “species,” or a “differentia,” or a “proprium,” or an “accidens,” or that which is compounded of these: but none of these can be supposed to exist in the sacred Trinity. Let then what is inexplicable be adored in silence.’ Such is the reasoning of Evagrius, of whom we shall again speak hereafter. We have indeed made a digression here, but such as will tend to illustrate the subject under consideration.

478 Valesius conjectures that Socrates is wrong here in attributing such an action to the Synod of Alexandria, as the term ousia does not occur in the Nicene Creed, and such action would therefore be in manifest contradiction to the action at Nicea. This, however, is not probable, in view of the dominating influence of Athanasius in both. But, as the acts of the Alexandrian synod are not extant, it is impossible to verify this conjecture.

479 Heb. i. 3.

480 See Suidas, Lexicon.

481 The only work of Evagrius preserved to our days is his Ecclesiastical History.

482 IV. 23.
Chapter VIII.—Quotations from Athanasius’ ‘Defense of his Flight.’

On this occasion Athanasius read to those present the Defense which he had composed some time before in justification of his flight; a few passages from which it may be of service to introduce here, leaving the entire production, which is too long to be transcribed, to be sought out and perused by the studious. See the daring enormities of the impious persons! Such are their proceedings: and yet instead of blushing at their former clumsy intrigues against us, they even now abuse us for having effected our escape out of their murderous hands; nay, are grievously vexed that they were unable to put us out of the way altogether. In short, they overlook the fact that while they pretend to upbraid us with ‘cowardice,’ they are really criminating themselves: for if it be disgraceful to flee, it is still more so to pursue, since the one is only endeavoring to avoid being murdered, while the other is seeking to commit the deed. But Scripture itself directs us to flee: and those who persecute unto death, in attempting to violate the law, constrain us to have recourse to flight. They should rather, therefore, be ashamed of their persecution, than reproach us for having sought to escape from it: let them cease to harass, and those who flee will also cease. Nevertheless they set no bounds to their malevolence, using every art to entrap us, in the consciousness that the flight of the persecuted is the strongest condemnation of the persecutor: for no one runs away from a mild and beneficent person, but from one who is of a barbarous and cruel disposition. Hence it was that ‘Every one that was discontented and in debt’ fled from Saul to David. Wherefore these [foes of ours] in like manner desire to kill such as conceal themselves, that no evidence may exist to convict them of their wickedness. But in this also these misguided men most egregiously deceive themselves: for the more obvious the effort to elude them, the more manifestly will their deliberate slaughters and exiles be exposed. If they act the part of assassins, the voice of the blood which is shed will cry against them the louder: and if they condemn to banishment, they will raise so everywhere living monuments of their own injustice and oppression. Surely unless their intellects were unsound they would perceive the dilemma in which their own counsels entangle them. But since they have lost sound judgment, their folly is exposed when they vanish, and when they seek to stay they do not see their wickedness. But if they reproach those who succeed in secreting themselves from the malice of their blood-thirsty adversaries, and revile such as flee from their persecutors, what will they say to Jacob’s retreat from the rage of his brother Esau, and to Moses retiring into the land of Midian for fear of Pharaoh? And what apology will these 483 Athan. de Fuga. 7.

484 Matt. x. 23.
485 2 Kings xxii. 2 (LXX).
486 Athanas. de Fuga. 10.
487 Gen. xxviii.
488 Ex. ii. 15.
babblers make for David’s flight from Saul, when he sent messengers from his own house to dispatch him; and for his concealment in a cave, after contriving to extricate himself from the treacherous designs of Abimelech, by feigning madness? What will these reckless asserters of whatever suits their purpose answer, when they are reminded of the great prophet Elijah, who by calling upon God had recalled the dead to life, hiding himself from dread of Ahab, and fleeing on account of Jezebel’s menaces? At which time the sons of the prophets also, being sought for in order to be slain, withdrew, and were concealed in caves by Obadiah; or are they unacquainted with these instances because of their antiquity? Have they forgotten also what is recorded in the Gospel, that the disciples retreated and hid themselves for fear of the Jews? Paul, when sought for by the governor [of Damascus] ‘was let down from the wall in a basket, and thus escaped the hands of him that sought him.’ Since then Scripture relates these circumstances concerning the saints, what excuse can they fabricate for their temerity? If they charge us with ‘cowardice,’ it is in utter insensibility to the condemnation it pronounces on themselves. If they asperse these holy men by asserting that they acted contrary to the will of God, they demonstrate their ignorance of Scripture. For it was commanded in the Law that ‘cities of refuge’ should be constituted, by which provision was made that such as were pursued in order to be put to death might have means afforded of preserving themselves. Again in the consummation of the ages, when the Word of the Father, who had before spoken by Moses, came himself to the earth, he gave this express injunction, ‘When they persecute you in one city, flee unto another:’ and shortly after, ‘When therefore ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (let whosoever reads, understand), then let those in Judea flee unto the mountains: let him that is on the house-top not come down to take anything out of his house; nor him that is in the fields return to take his clothes.’ The saints therefore knowing these precepts, had such a sort of training for their action: for what the Lord then commanded, he had before his coming in the flesh already spoken of by his servants. And this is a universal rule for man, leading to perfection, ‘to practice whatever God has enjoined.’ On this account the Word himself, becoming incarnate for our sake, deigned... to conceal himself when he was sought for; and being again persecuted, condescended to withdraw to avoid the conspiracy against him. For thus it became him, by hungering and thirsting and suffering other afflictions, to demonstrate that he was indeed made man. For at the very commencement, as soon as he was born, he gave this direction by an angel to Joseph: ‘Arise and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, for Herod will seek the infant’s life.’ And after Herod’s death, it appears that for fear of his son Archelaus he retired to Nazareth. Subsequently, when he gave unquestionable evidence of his Divine character by healing the withered hand, ‘when the Pharisees took council how they might destroy him, Jesus knowing their wickedness withdrew himself thence.’ Moreover, when he had raised Lazarus from the dead, and they had become still more intent on destroying him, [we are told that] ‘Jesus walked no more openly among the Jews, but retired into a region on the borders of the desert.’ Again when the Saviour said, ‘Before Abraham was, I am;’ and the Jews took up stones to cast at him; Jesus concealed himself, and going through the midst of them out of the Temple, went away thence, and so escaped. Since then they see these things, or rather understand them, (for they will not see,) are they not deserving of being burnt with fire, according to what is written, for acting and speaking so plainly contrary to all that the Lord did and taught? Finally, when John had suffered martyrdom, and his disciples had buried his body, Jesus having heard what was done, departed thence by ship into a desert place apart. Now the Lord did these things and so taught. But would that these men of whom I speak, had the modesty to confine their rashness to men only, without daring to be guilty of such madness as to accuse the Saviour himself of ‘cowardice’; especially after having already uttered blasphemies against him. But even if they be insane they will not be tolerated and their ignorance of the gospels be detected by every one. The cause for retreat and flight under such circumstances as these is reasonable and valid, of which the evangelists have afforded us precedents in the conduct of our Saviour himself: from which it may be inferred that the saints have always been justly influenced by the same principle, since whatever is recorded of him as man, is applicable to mankind in general. For he took on himself our nature, and exhibited in himself the affections of our infirmity, which John has thus indicated: ‘Then they sought to take him; but no man laid

498 John viii. 59.
499 Abbreviated from Athanasius.
500 Matt. ii. 13, 22.
501 Matt. xii. 14, 15.
502 John xi. 53, 54.
503 John viii. 58.
504 Matt. xiii. 13; Isa. ix. 5.
505 Matt. xiv. 12, 13.
hands on him, because his hour was not yet come. Moreover, before that hour came, he himself said to his mother, 'Mine hour is not yet come;' and to those who were denomination his brethren, 'My time is not yet come.' Again when the time had arrived, he said to his disciples, 'Sleep on now, and take your rest: for behold the hour is at hand, and the Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of sinners.

... So that he neither permitted himself to be apprehended before the time came; nor when the time was come did he conceal himself, but voluntarily gave himself up to those who had conspired against him.

Thus also the blessed martyrs have guarded themselves in times of persecution: being persecuted they fled, and kept themselves concealed; but being discovered they suffered martyrdom.

Such is the reasoning of Athanasius in his apology for his own flight.

506 John vii. 30.
507 John ii. 4; iii. 6.
508 Matt. xxvi. 45.
509 Athan. de Fuga. 15.
510 Athan. de Fuga. 22.
Chapter IX.—After the Synod of Alexandria, Eusebius proceeding to Antioch finds the Catholics at Variance on Account of Paulinus’ Consecration; and having exerted himself in vain to reconcile them, he departs; Indignation of Lucifer and Origin of a Sect called after him.

As soon as the council of Alexandria was dissolved, Eusebius bishop of Vercellæ went from Alexandria to Antioch; there finding that Paulinus had been ordained by Lucifer, and that the people were disagreeing among themselves,—for the partisans of Meletius held their assemblies apart,—he was exceedingly grieved at the want of harmony concerning this election, and in his own mind disapproved of what had taken place. His respect for Lucifer however induced him to be silent about it, and on his departure he engaged that all things should be set right by a council of bishops. Subsequently he labored with great earnestness to unite the dissentients, but did not succeed. Meanwhile Meletius returned from exile; and finding his followers holding their assemblies apart from the others, he set himself at their head. But Euzoïus, the chief of the Arian heresy, had possession of the churches: Paulinus only retained a small church within the city, from which Euzoïus had not ejected him, on account of his personal respect for him. But Meletius assembled his adherents without the gates of the city. It was under these circumstances that Eusebius left Antioch at that time.

When Lucifer understood that his ordination of Paul was not approved of by Eusebius, regarding it as an insult, he became highly incensed; and not only separated himself from communion with him, but also began, in a contentious spirit, to condemn what had been determined by the Synod. These things occurring at a season of grievous disorder, alienated many from the church; for many attached themselves to Lucifer, and thus a distinct sect arose under the name of ‘Luciferians.’ Nevertheless Lucifer was unable to give full expression to his anger, inasmuch as he had pledged himself by his deacon to assent to whatever should be decided on by the Synod. Wherefore he adhered to the tenets of the church, and returned to Sardinia to his own see: but such as at first identified themselves with his quarrel, still continue separate from the church. Eusebius, on the other hand, traveling throughout the Eastern provinces like a good physician, completely restored those who were weak in the faith, instructing and establishing them in ecclesiastical principles. After this he passed over to Illyricum, and thence to Italy, where he pursued a similar course.

511 V. 5.
512 Cf. Sozom. III. 15, and V. 12.
Chapter X.—Of Hilary Bishop of Poictiers.

There, however, Hilary bishop of Poictiers (a city of Aquitania Secunda) had anticipated him, having previously confirmed the bishops of Italy and Gaul in the doctrines of the orthodox faith; for he first had returned from exile to these countries. Both therefore nobly combined their energies in defense of the faith: and Hilary being a very eloquent man, maintained with great power the doctrine of the homoousion in books which he wrote in Latin. In these he gave sufficient support [to the doctrine] and unanswerably confuted the Arian tenets. These things took place shortly after the recall of those who had been banished. But it must be observed, that at the same time Macedonius, Eleusius, Eustathius, and Sophronius, with all their partisans, who had but the one common designation Macedonians, held frequent Synods in various places. 513 Having called together those of Seleucia who embraced their views, they anathematized the bishops of the other party, that is the Acacian: and rejecting the creed of Ariminum, they confirmed that which had been read at Seleucia. This, as I have stated in the preceding book, 514 was the same as had been before promulgated at Antioch. When they were asked by some one, ‘Why have ye, who are called Macedonians hitherto, retained communion with the Acacians, as though ye agreed in opinion, if ye really hold different sentiments?’ they replied thus, through Sophronius, bishop of Pompeiopolis, a city of Paphlagonia: ‘Those in the West,’ said he, ‘were infected with the homoousian error as with a disease: Aëtius in the East adulterated the purity of the faith by introducing the assertion of a dissimilitude of substance. Now both of these dogmas are illegitimate; for the former rashly blended into one the distinct persons of the Father and the Son, binding them together by that cord of iniquity the term homoousion; while Aëtius wholly separated that affinity of nature of the Son to the Father, by the expression anomoion, unlike as to substance or essence. Since then both these opinions run into the very opposite extremes, the middle course between them appeared to us to be more consistent with truth and piety: we accordingly assert that the Son is “like the Father as to subsistence.”’

Such was the answer the Macedonians made by Sophronius to that question, as Sabinus assures us in his Collection of the Synodical Acts. But in decrying Aëtius as the author of the Anomoion doctrine, and not Acacius, they flagrantly disguise the truth, in order to seem as far removed from the Arians on the one side, as from the Homoousians on the other: for their own words convict them of having separated from them both, merely from the love of innovation. With these remarks we close our notice of these persons.

513 Sozom. V. 14; Theodoret, Haeret. Fabul. IV.
514 II. 10. 39.
Chapter XI.—The Emperor Julian extracts Money from the Christians.

Although at the beginning of his reign the Emperor Julian conducted himself mildly toward all men; but as he went on he did not continue to show the same equanimity. He most readily indeed acceded to the requests of the Christians, when they tended in any way to cast odium on the memory of Constantius; but when this inducement did not exist, he made no effort to conceal the rancorous feelings which he entertained towards Christians in general. Accordingly he soon ordered that the church of the Novatians at Cyzicus, which Euzoïus had totally demolished, should be rebuilt, imposing a very heavy penalty upon Eleusius bishop of that city, if he failed to complete that structure at his own expense within the space of two months. Moreover, he favored the pagan superstitions with the whole weight of his authority: and the temples of the heathen were opened, as we have before stated; but he himself also publicly offered sacrifices to Fortune, goddess of Constantinople, in the cathedral, where her image was erected.

---

515 Chap. 1.
516 ἡ βασιλική. On the origin and history of the term, see Bennett, Christian Archæology, pp. 157–163. The special basilica meant here was situated, according to Valesius, in the fourth precinct, and alone called ἡ βασιλική, or ‘cathedral’ without qualification. The ‘Theodosian cathedral’ was situated in the seventh ward.
Chapter XII.—Of Maris Bishop of Chalcedon; Julian forbids Christians from entering Literary Pursuits.

About this time, Maris bishop of Chalcedon in Bithynia being led by the hand into the emperor’s presence,—for on account of extreme old age he had a disease in his eyes termed ‘cataract,’—severely rebuked his impiety, apostasy, and atheism. Julian answered his reproaches by loading him with contumelious epithets: and he defended himself by words calling him ‘blind.’ ‘You blind old fool,’ said he, ‘this Galilæan God of yours will never cure you.’ For he was accustomed to term Christ ‘the Galilæan,’ and Christians Galileans. Maris with still greater boldness replied, ‘I thank God for bereaving me of my sight, that I might not behold the face of one who has fallen into such awful impiety.’ The emperor suffered this to pass without farther notice at that time; but he afterwards had his revenge. Observing that those who suffered martyrdom under the reign of Diocletian were greatly honored by the Christians, and knowing that many among them were eagerly desirous of becoming martyrs, he determined to wreak his vengeance upon them in some other way. Abstaining therefore from the excessive cruelties which had been practiced under Diocletian; he did not however altogether abstain from persecution (for any measures adopted to disquiet and molest I regard as persecution). This then was the plan he pursued: he enacted a law by which Christians were excluded from the cultivation of literature; ‘lest,’ said he, ‘when they have sharpened their tongue, they should be able the more readily to meet the arguments of the heathen.’

517 Cf. John i. 46, and Acts ii. 7. Later the word was used by the heathen also, contemptuously, as a term of reproach.

518 Chap. 16.
Chapter XIII.—Of the Outrages committed by the Pagans against the Christians.

He moreover interdicted such as would not abjure Christianity, and offer sacrifice to idols, from holding any office at court: nor would he allow Christians to be governors of provinces; ‘for,’ said he, ‘their law forbids them to use the sword against offenders worthy of capital punishment.’ He also induced many to sacrifice, partly by flatteries, and partly by gifts. Immediately, as if tried in a furnace, it at once became evident to all, who were the real Christians, and who were merely nominal ones. Such as were Christians in integrity of heart, very readily resigned their commission, choosing to endure anything rather than deny Christ. Of this number were Jovian, Valentinian, and Valens, each of whom afterwards became emperor. But others of unsound principles, who preferred the riches and honor of this world to the true felicity, sacrificed without hesitation. Of these was Ecebolius, a sophist of Constantinople who, accommodating himself to the dispositions of the emperors, pretended in the reign of Constantius to be an ardent Christian; while in Julian’s time he appeared an equally vigorous pagan: and after Julian’s death, he again made a profession of Christianity. For he prostrated himself before the church doors, and called out, ‘Trample on me, for I am as salt that has lost its savor.’ Of so fickle and inconstant a character was this person, throughout the whole period of his history. About this time the emperor wishing to make reprisals on the Persians, for the frequent incursions they had made on the Roman territories in the reign of Constantius, marched with great expedition through Asia into the East. But as he well knew what a train of calamities attend a war, and what immense resources are needful to carry it on successfully and that without it cannot be carried on, he craftily devised a plan for collecting money by extorting it from the Christians. On all those who refused to sacrifice he imposed a heavy fine, which was exacted with great rigor from such as were true Christians, every one being compelled to pay in proportion to what he possessed. By these unjust means the emperor soon amassed immense wealth; for this law was put in execution, both where Julian was personally present, and where he was not. The pagans at the same time assailed the Christians; and there was a great concourse of those who styled themselves ‘philosophers.’ They then proceeded to institute certain abominable mysteries; and sacrificing pure children both male and female, they inspected their entrails, and even tasted their flesh. These infamous rites were practiced in other cities, but more particularly 519 Based, probably, on Matt. xxvi. 52, and John xviii. 11.

520 ἐξετάσει; literally, ‘put off their girdle,’ as the badge of office.
521 The term was used first by traveling teachers of rhetoric at the time of the philosopher Socrates as descriptive of their profession; and although it later acquired an unfavorable significance, it continued to be used also as a professional name given to teachers of rhetoric, as here.
522 Cf. Tertull. Apol. IX. ‘In the bosom of Africa infants were publicly sacrificed to Saturn, even to the days of a proconsul under Tiberius,’ &c. at Athens and Alexandria; in which latter place, a calumnious accusation was made against Athanasius the bishop, the emperor being assured that he was intent on desolating not that city only, but all Egypt, and that nothing but his expulsion out of the country could save it. The governor of Alexandria was therefore instructed by an imperial edict to apprehend him.
Chapter XIV.—Flight of Athanasius.

But he fled again, saying to his intimates, 'Let us retire for a little while, friends; it is but a small cloud which will soon pass away.' He then immediately embarked, and crossing the Nile, hastened with all speed into Egypt, closely pursued by those who sought to take him. When he understood that his pursuers were not far distant, his attendants were urging him to retreat once more into the desert, but he had recourse to an artifice and thus effected his escape. He persuaded those who accompanied him to turn back and meet his adversaries, which they did immediately; and on approaching them they were simply asked 'where they had seen Athanasius': to which they replied that 'he was not a great way off,' and, that 'if they hastened they would soon overtake him.' Being thus deluded, they started afresh in pursuit with quickened speed, but to no purpose; and Athanasius making good his retreat, returned secretly to Alexandria; and there he remained concealed until the persecution was at an end. Such were the perils which succeeded one another in the career of the bishop of Alexandria, these last from the heathen coming after that to which he was before subjected from Christians. In addition to these things, the governors of the provinces taking advantage of the emperor's superstition to feed their own cupidity, committed more grievous outrages on the Christians than their sovereign had given them a warrant for; sometimes exacting larger sums of money than they ought to have done, and at others inflicting on them corporal punishments. The emperor learning of these excesses, connived at them; and when the sufferers appealed to him against their oppressors, he tauntingly said, 'It is your duty to bear these afflictions patiently; for this is the command of your God.'
Chapter XV.—Martyrs at Merum in Phrygia, under Julian.

Amachius governor of Phrygia ordered that the temple at Merum, a city of that province, should be opened, and cleared of the filth which had accumulated there by lapse of time: also that the statues it contained should be polished fresh. This in being put into operation grieved the Christians very much. Now a certain Macedonius and Theodulus and Tatian, unable to endure the indignity thus put upon their religion, and impelled by a fervent zeal for virtue, rushed by night into the temple, and broke the images in pieces. The governor infuriated at what had been done, would have put to death many in that city who were altogether innocent, when the authors of the deed voluntarily surrendered themselves, choosing rather to die themselves in defense of the truth, than to see others put to death in their stead. The governor seized and ordered them to expiate the crime they had committed by sacrificing: on their refusal to do this, their judge menaced them with tortures; but they despising his threats, being endowed with great courage, declared their readiness to undergo any sufferings, rather than pollute themselves by sacrificing. After subjecting them to all possible tortures he at last laid them on gridirons under which a fire was placed, and thus slew them. But even in this last extremity they gave the most heroic proofs of fortitude, addressing the ruthless governor thus: ‘If you wish to eat broiled flesh, Amachius, turn us on the other side also, lest we should appear but half cooked to your taste.’ Thus these martyrs ended their life.
Chapter XVI.—Of the Literary Labors of the Two Apollinares and the Emperor’s Prohibition of Christians being instructed in Greek Literature.

The imperial law which forbade Christians to study Greek literature, rendered the two Apollinares of whom we have above spoken, much more distinguished than before. For both being skilled in polite learning, the father as a grammarian, and the son as a rhetorician, they made themselves serviceable to the Christians at this crisis. For the former, as a grammarian, composed a grammar consistent with the Christian faith: he also translated the Books of Moses into heroic verse; and paraphrased all the historical books of the Old Testament, putting them partly into dactylic measure, and partly reducing them to the form of dramatic tragedy. He purposely employed all kinds of verse, that no form of expression peculiar to the Greek language might be unknown or unheard of amongst Christians. The younger Apollinaris, who was well trained in eloquence, expounded the gospels and apostolic doctrines in the way of dialogue, as Plato among the Greeks had done. Thus showing themselves useful to the Christian cause they overcame the subtlety of the emperor through their own labors. But Divine Providence was more potent than either their labors, or the craft of the emperor: for not long afterwards, in the manner we shall hereafter explain, the law became wholly inoperative; and the works of these men are now of no greater importance, than if they had never been written. But perhaps some one will vigorously reply saying: ‘On what grounds do you affirm that both these things were effected by the providence of God? That the emperor’s sudden death was very advantageous to Christianity is indeed evident: but surely the rejection of the Christian compositions of the two Apollinares, and the Christians beginning afresh to imbue their minds with the philosophy of the heathens, this works out no benefit to Christianity, for pagan philosophy teaches Polytheism, and is injurious to the promotion of true religion.’ This objection I shall meet with such considerations as at present occur to me. Greek literature certainly was never recognized either by Christ or his Apostles as divinely inspired, nor on the other hand was it wholly rejected as pernicious. And this they did, I conceive, not inconsiderately. For there were many philosophers among the Greeks who were not far from the knowledge of God; and in fact these being disciplined by logical science, strenuously opposed the Epicureans and other contentious Sophists who denied Divine Providence, confuting their ignorance. And for these reasons they have become useful to all lovers of real piety: nevertheless they themselves were not acquainted with the Head of true religion, being ignorant of the mystery of Christ which ‘had been hidden from generations and ages.’ And that this was so, the Apostle in his epistle to the Romans thus declares: ‘For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness. Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God has shown it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, that they may be without excuse; because that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God.' From these words it appears that they had the knowledge of truth, which God had manifested to them; but were guilty on this account, that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God. Wherefore by not forbidding the study of the learned works of the Greeks, they left it to the discretion of those who wished to do so. This is our first argument in defense of the position we took: another may be thus put: The divinely inspired Scriptures undoubtedly inculcate doctrines that are both admirable in themselves, and heavenly in their character: they also eminently tend to produce piety and integrity of life in those who are guided by their precepts, pointing out a walk of faith which is highly approved of God. But they do not instruct us in the art of reasoning, by means of which we may be enabled successfully to resist those who oppose the truth. Besides adversaries are most easily foiled, when we can use their own weapons against them. But this power was not supplied to Christians by the writings of the Apollinares. Julian had this in mind when he by law prohibited Christians from being educated in Greek literature, for he knew very well that the fables it contains would expose the whole pagan system, of which he had become the champion to ridicule and contempt. Even Socrates, the most celebrated of their philosophers, despised these absurdities, and was condemned on account of it, as if he had attempted to violate the sanctity of their deities. Moreover, both Christ and his Apostle enjoin us 'to become discriminating money-changers,'\footnote{527} so that we might 'prove all things, and hold fast that which is good':\footnote{528} directing us also to 'beware lest any one should spoil us through philosophy and vain deceit.'\footnote{529} But this we cannot do, unless we possess ourselves of the weapons of our adversaries: taking care that in making this acquisition we do not adopt their sentiments, but testing them, reject the evil, but retain all that is good and true: for good wherever it is found, is a property of truth. Should any one imagine that in making these assertions we wrest the Scriptures from their legitimate construction, let it be remembered that the Apostle not only does not forbid our being instructed in Greek learning, but that he himself seems by no means to have neglected it, inasmuch as he knows many of the sayings of the Greeks. Whence did he get the saying, 'The Cretans are always liars, evil

\footnote{527}{On this extra-Scriptural saying attributed to Jesus Christ, see n. 54, Introd, p. xi.}
\footnote{528}{1 Thess. v. 21.}
\footnote{529}{Col. ii. 8.}
beasts, slow-bellies,530 but from a perusal of The Oracles of Epimenides,531 the Cretan Initiator? Or how would he have known this, ‘For we are also his offspring,’532 had he not been acquainted with The Phenomena of Aratus533 the astronomer? Again this sentence, ‘Evil communications corrupt good manners,’534 is a sufficient proof that he was conversant with the tragedies of Euripides.535 But what need is there of enlarging on this point? It is well known that in ancient times the doctors of the church by unhindered usage were accustomed to exercise themselves in the learning of the Greeks, until they had reached an advanced age: this they did with a view to improve themselves in eloquence and to strengthen and polish their mind, and at the same time to enable them to refute the errors of the heathen. Let these remarks be sufficient in the subject suggested by the two Apollinares.

---

530  Tit. i. 12.
531  Cf. Theophrastus, VII. x. and Diogenes Laërtius, I. x. The latter gives a list of Epimenides’ works, but makes no mention of any ‘Oracles.’ Socrates must have used this term in a more general sense therefore, and meant some collection of obscure and mystical writings. He also calls Epimenides an ‘Initiator,’ because, according to the testimony of Theophrastus, he was versed particularly in lustration and coruscation.
532  Acts xvii. 28.
534  1 Cor. xv. 33.
535  Menander, and not Euripides, is the only author to whom this line can be traced (see Tertull. ad Uxor. 1. 8, and Meineke, Fragm. Comic. Græc. Vol. IV. p. 132), but it may have been a popular proverb, or even originally a composition of Euripides, which Menander simply used.
Chapter XVII.—The Emperor preparing an Expedition against the Persians, arrives at Antioch, and being ridiculed by the Inhabitants, he retorts on them by a Satirical Publication entitled ‘Misopogon, or the Beard-Hater.’

The emperor having extorted immense sums of money from the Christians, hastening his expedition against the Persians, arrived at Antioch in Syria. There, desiring to show the citizens how much he affected glory, he unduly depressed the prices of commodities; neither taking into account the circumstances of that time, nor reflecting how much the presence of an army inconveniences the population of the provinces, and of necessity lessens the supply of provisions to the cities. The merchants and retailers therefore left off trading, being unable to sustain the losses which the imperial edict entailed upon them; consequently the necessaries failed. The Antiochians not bearing the insult,—for they are a people naturally impatient with insult,—instantly broke forth into invectives against Julian; caricaturing his beard also, which was a very long one, and saying that it ought to be cut off and manufactured into ropes. They added that the bull which was impressed upon his coin, was a symbol of his having desolated the world. For the emperor, being excessively superstitious, was continually sacrificing bulls on the altars of his idols; and had ordered the impression of a bull and altar to be made on his coin. Irritated by these scoffs, he threatened to punish the city of Antioch, and returned to Tarsus in Cilicia, giving orders that preparations should be made for his speedy departure thence. Whence Libanius the sophist took occasion to compose two orations, one addressed to the emperor in behalf of the Antiochians, the other to the inhabitants of Antioch on the emperor’s displeasure. It is however affirmed that these compositions were merely written, and never recited in public. Julian abandoning his former purpose of revenging himself on his satirists by injurious deeds, expended his wrath in reciprocating their abusive taunts; for he wrote a pamphlet against them which he entitled Antiochicus, or Misopogon, thus leaving an indelible stigma upon that city and its inhabitants. But we must now speak of the evils which he brought upon the Christians at Antioch.

---

536 μεταβολεῖς. Cf. μεταβολή, used to designate all merchandising, Julius Pollux, III. 25; hence μεταβολεύς, a ‘retailer,’ ‘small merchant.’

537 Hence Gregory of Nazianus calls him καυσίταυρος, ‘a burner of bulls.’
Chapter XVIII.—The Emperor consulting an Oracle, the Demon gives no Response, being awed by the Nearness of Babylas the Martyr.

Having ordered that the pagan temples at Antioch should be opened, he was very eager to obtain an oracle from Apollo of Daphne. But the demon that inhabited the temple remained silent through fear of his neighbor, Babylas the martyr; for the coffin which contained the body of that saint was close by. When the emperor was informed of this circumstance, he commanded that the coffin should be immediately removed: upon which the Christians of Antioch, including women and children, transported the coffin from Daphne to the city, with solemn rejoicings and chanting of psalms. The psalms were such as cast reproach on the gods of the heathen, and those who put confidence in them and their images.

538 See Euseb. H. E. VI. 20 and 39; also Chrysostom, de S. Babyl. According to these authorities Babylas was bishop of Antioch, succeeding Sabrinus, and was beheaded in prison during the reign of Decius. His remains were transferred to a church built over against the temple of Apollo of Daphne (Sozom. V. 19) by Gallus, Julian’s brother.

539 Ps. xcvi. 7 (LXX).
Chapter XIX.—Wrath of the Emperor, and Firmness of Theodore the Confessor.

Then indeed the emperor’s real temper and disposition, which he had hitherto kept as much as possible from observation, became fully manifested: for he who had boasted so much of his philosophy, was no longer able to restrain himself; but being goaded almost to madness by these reproachful hymns, he was ready to inflict the same cruelties on the Christians, with which Diocletian’s agents had formerly visited them. Since, however, his solicitude about the Persian expedition afforded him no leisure for personally executing his wishes, he commanded Sallust the Praetorian Prefect to seize those who had been most conspicuous for their zeal in psalm-singing, in order to make examples of them. The prefect, though a pagan, was far from being pleased with his commission; but since he durst not contravene it, he caused several of the Christians to be apprehended, and some of them to be imprisoned. One young man named Theodore, whom the heathens brought before him, he subjected to a variety of tortures, causing his person to be so lacerated and only released him from further punishment when he thought that he could not possibly outlive the torments: yet God preserved this sufferer, so that he long survived that confession. Rufinus, the author of the Ecclesiastical History written in Latin, states that he himself conversed with the same Theodore a considerable time afterwards: and enquired of him whether in the process of scourging and racking he had not felt the most intense pains; his answer was, that he felt the pain of the tortures to which he was subjected for a very short time; and that a young man stood by him who both wiped off the sweat which was produced by the acuteness of the ordeal through which he was passing, and at the same time strengthened his mind, so that he rendered this time of trial a season of rapture rather than of suffering. Let this suffice concerning the most wonderful Theodore. About this time Persian ambassadors came to the emperor, requesting him to terminate the war on certain express conditions. But Julian abruptly dismissed them, saying, ‘You shall very shortly see me in person, so that there will be no need of an embassy.’
Chapter XX.—The Jews instigated by the Emperor attempt to rebuild their Temple, and are frustrated in their Attempt by Miraculous Interposition.

The emperor in another attempt to molest the Christians exposed his superstition. Being fond of sacrificing, he not only himself delighted in the blood of victims, but considered it an indignity offered to him, if others did not do likewise. And as he found but few persons of this stamp, he sent for the Jews and enquired of them why they abstained from sacrificing, since the law of Moses enjoined it? On their replying that it was not permitted them to do this in any other place than Jerusalem, he immediately ordered them to rebuild Solomon’s temple. Meanwhile he himself proceeded on his expedition against the Persians. The Jews who had been long desirous of obtaining a favorable opportunity for rearing their temple afresh in order that they might therein offer sacrifice, applied themselves very vigorously to the work. Moreover, they conducted themselves with great insolence toward the Christians, and threatened to do them as much mischief, as they had themselves suffered from the Romans. The emperor having ordered that the expenses of this structure should be defrayed out of the public treasury, all things were soon provided, such as timber and stone, burnt brick, clay, lime, and all other materials necessary for building. On this occasion Cyril bishop of Jerusalem, called to mind the prophecy of Daniel, which Christ also in the holy gospels has confirmed, and predicted in the presence of many persons, that the time had indeed come ‘in which one stone should not be left upon another in that temple,’ but that the Saviour’s prophetic declaration should have its full accomplishment. Such were the bishop’s words: and on the night following, a mighty earthquake tore up the stones of the old foundations of the temple and dispersed them all together with the adjacent edifices. Terror consequently possessed the Jews on account of the event; and the report of it brought many to the spot who resided at a great distance: when therefore a vast multitude was assembled, another prodigy took place. Fire came down from heaven and consumed all the builders’ tools: so that the flames were seen preying upon mallets, irons to smooth and polish stones, saws, hatchets, adzes, in short all the various implements which the workmen had procured as necessary for the undertaking; and the fire continued burning among these for a whole day. The Jews indeed were in the greatest possible alarm, and unwillingly confessed Christ, calling him God: yet they did not do his will; but influenced by inveterate prepossessions they still clung to Judaism. Even a third miracle which afterwards happened failed to lead them to a belief of the truth. For the next night luminous impressions of a cross appeared imprinted on their garments, which at daybreak they in vain attempted to rub or wash out. They were therefore ‘blinded’ as the apostle says, and cast away the good

540 Matt. xxiv. 2, 15.
541 Rom. xi. 25; 2 Cor. iii. 14.
The Jews instigated by the Emperor attempt to rebuild their Temple, and…

which they had in their hands: and thus was the temple, instead of being rebuilt, at that time wholly overthrown.
Chapter XXI.—The Emperor’s Invasion of Persia, and Death.

The emperor meanwhile invaded the country of the Persians a little before spring, having learnt that the races of Persia were greatly enfeebled and totally spiritless in winter. For from their inability to endure cold, they abstain from military service at that season, and it has become a proverb that ‘a Mede will not then draw his hand from underneath his cloak.’ And well knowing that the Romans were inured to brave all the rigors of the atmosphere he let them loose on the country. After devastating a considerable tract of country, including numerous villages and fortresses, they next assailed the cities; and having invested the great city Ctesiphon, he reduced the king of the Persians to such straits that the latter sent repeated embassies to the emperor, offering to surrender a portion of his dominions, on condition of his quitting the country, and putting an end to the war. But Julian was unaffected by these submissions, and showed no compassion to a suppliant foe: nor did he think of the adage, ‘To conquer is honorable, but to be more than conqueror gives occasion for envy.’ Giving credit to the divinations of the philosopher Maximus, with whom he was in continual intercourse, he was deluded into the belief that his exploits would not only equal, but exceed those of Alexander of Macedon; so that he spurned with contempt the entreaties of the Persian monarch. He even supposed in accordance with the teachings of Pythagoras and Plato on the transmigration of souls,\footnote{μετενσωματώσεως, lit. ‘exchange of bodies,’ formed in analogy with μετεμψύχωσις and logically inseparable from that doctrine.} that he was possessed of Alexander’s soul, or rather that he himself was Alexander in another body. This ridiculous fancy deluded and caused him to reject the negotiations for peace proposed by the king of the Persians. Wherefore the latter convinced of the uselessness of them was constrained to prepare for conflict, and therefore on the next day after the rejection of his embassy, he drew out in order of battle all the forces he had. The Romans indeed censured their prince, for not avoiding an engagement when he might have done so with advantage: nevertheless they attacked those who opposed them, and again put the enemy to flight. The emperor was present on horseback, and encouraged his soldiers in battle; but confiding simply in his hope of success, he wore no armor. In this defenceless state, a dart cast by some one unknown, pierced through his arm and entered his side, making a wound. In consequence of this wound he died. Some say that a certain Persian hurled the javelin, and then fled; others assert that one of his own men was the author of the deed, which indeed is the best corroborated and most current report. But Callistus, one of his body-guards, who celebrated this emperor’s deeds in heroic verse, says in narrating the particulars of this war, that the wound of which he died was inflicted by a demon. This is possibly a mere poetical fiction, or perhaps it was really the fact; for vengeful furies have undoubtedly destroyed many persons. Be the case however as it may, this is certain, that the ardor of his natural temperament rendered him... incautious, his learning made him vain, and his affectation of clemency exposed him to contempt. Thus Julian ended his life in Persia, as we have said, in his fourth consulate, which he bore with Sallust his colleague. This event occurred on the 26th of June, in the third year of his reign, and the seventh from his having been created Caesar by Constantius, he being at that time in the thirty-first year of his age.

---

543 Theodoret, H. E. III. 25, gives the familiar version of the death of Julian, according to which, on perceiving the character of his wound, the dying emperor filled his hand with blood and threw it up into the air, crying, ‘Galilean, thou hast overcome!’

544 363 a.d.
Chapter XXII.—Jovian is proclaimed Emperor.

The soldiery being thrown into extreme perplexity by an event so unexpected, and without delay, on the following day proclaimed Jovian emperor, a person alike distinguished for his courage and birth. He was a military tribune when Julian put forth an edict giving his officers the option of either sacrificing or resigning their rank in the army, and chose rather to lay down his commission, than to obey the mandate of an impious prince. Julian, however, being pressed by the urgency of the war which was before him, retained him among his generals. On being saluted emperor, he positively declined to accept the sovereign power: and when the soldiers brought him forward by force, he declared that 'being a Christian, he did not wish to reign over a people who chose to adopt paganism as their religion.' They all then with one voice answered that they also were Christians: upon which he accepted the imperial dignity. Perceiving himself suddenly left in very difficult circumstances, in the midst of the Persian territory, where his army was in danger of perishing for want of necessaries, he agreed to terminate the war, even on terms by no means honorable to the glory of the Roman name, but rendered necessary by the exigencies of the crisis. Submitting therefore to the loss of the government of Syria, and giving up also Nisibis, a city of Mesopotamia, he withdrew from their territories. The announcement of these things gave fresh hope to the Christians; while the pagans vehemently bewailed Julian’s death. Nevertheless the whole army reprobated his intemperate heat, and ascribed to his rashness in listening to the wily reports of a Persian deserter, the humiliation of ceding the territories lost: for being imposed upon by the statements of this fugitive, he was induced to burn the ships which supplied them with provisions by water, by which means they were exposed to all the horrors of famine. Then also Libanius composed a funeral oration on him, which he designated Julianus, or Epitaph, wherein he celebrates with lofty encomiums almost all his actions; but in referring to the books which Julian wrote against the Christians, he says that he has therein clearly demonstrated the ridiculous and trifling character of their sacred books. Had this sophist contented himself with extolling the emperor’s other acts, I should have quietly proceeded with the course of my history; but since this famous rhetorician has thought proper to take occasion to inveigh against the Scriptures of the Christian faith, we also propose to pause a little and in a brief review consider his words.

545 See above, chap. 13.
546 So the mss. and Bright. The same reading was also before Epiphanius Scholasticus and Nicephorus; but Valesius conjecturally amends the reading τοὺς Σύρους τῆς ἀρχῆς into τοὺς ὅρους τῆς ἀρχῆς, alleging that Socrates himself later mentions the loss as ζημίαν τῶν ὅρων. If the reading of Valesius be considered correct, then we must translate ‘submitting to the loss of the borders,’ supplying ‘of the empire.’ This would include the districts beyond the Tigris.
Chapter XXIII.—Refutation of what Libanius the Sophist said concerning Julian.

‘When the winter,’ says he, 547 ‘had lengthened the nights, the emperor made an attack on those books which made the man of Palestine both God, and the Son of God: and by a long series of arguments having proved that these writings, which are so much revered by Christians, are ridiculous and unfounded, he has evinced himself wiser and more skilful than the Tyrian 548 old man. But may this Tyrian sage be propitious to me, and mildly bear with what has been affirmed, seeing that he has been excelled by his son!’ Such is the language of Libanius the Sophist. But I confess, indeed, that he was an excellent rhetorician, but am persuaded that had he not coincided with the emperor in religious sentiment, he would not only have given expression to all that has been said against him by Christians, but would have magnified every ground of censure as naturally becomes a rhetorician. For while Constantius was alive he wrote encomiums upon him; but after his death he brought the most insulting and reproachful charges against him. So that if Porphyry had been emperor, Libanius would certainly have preferred his books to Julian’s: and had Julian been a mere sophist, he would have termed him a very indifferent one, as he does Ecebolius in his Epitaph upon Julian. Since then he has spoken in the spirit of a pagan, a sophist, and the friend of him whom he lauded, we shall endeavor to meet what he has advanced, as far as we are able.

In the first place he says that the emperor undertook to ‘attack’ these books during the long winter nights. Now to ‘attack’ means to make the writing of a confutation of them a task, as the sophists commonly do in teaching the rudiments of their art; for he had perused these books long before, but attacked them at this time. But throughout the long contest into which he entered, instead of attempting to disprove anything by sound reasoning, as Libanius asserts, in the absence of truth he had recourse to sneers and contemptuous jests, of which he was excessively fond; and thus he sought to hold up to derision what is too firmly established to be overthrown. For every one who enters into controversy with another, sometimes trying to pervert the truth, and at others to conceal it, falsifies by every possible means the position of his antagonist. And an adversary is not satisfied with doing malignant acts against one with whom he is at variance, but will speak against him also, and charge upon the object of his dislike the very faults he is conscious of in himself. That both Julian and Porphyry, whom Libanius calls the ‘Tyrian old man,’ took great delight in scoffing, is evident from their own works. For Porphyry in his History of the Philosophers has treated with ridicule the life of Socrates, the most eminent of all the philosophers, making such remarks on him as neither Melitus, nor Anytus, his accusers, would have dared to utter; of Socrates, I say, who was admired by all the Greeks for his modesty, justice, and other virtues;

547 Liban. Orat. xviii. (Opera, i. Reiske).
548 Porphyry. See above, I. 9.
whom Plato, the most admirable among them, Xenophon, and the rest of the philosophic band, not only honor as one beloved of God, but also are accustomed to think of as having been endowed with superhuman intelligence. And Julian, imitating his ‘father,’ displayed a like morbidness of mind in his book, entitled The Caesars, wherein he traduces all his imperial predecessors, not sparing even Mark the philosopher. Their own writings therefore show that they both took pleasure in taunts and reviling; and I have no need of profuse and clever expressions to do this; but what has been said is enough concerning their mood in this respect. Now I write these things, using the oration of each as witnesses respecting their dispositions, but of Julian in particular, what Gregory of Nazianzus says in his Second Oration against the Pagans is in the following terms:

“These things were made evident to others by experience, after the possession of imperial authority had left him free to follow the bent of his inclinations: but I had foreseen it all, from the time I became acquainted with him at Athens. Thither he came, by permission of the emperor, soon after the change in his brother’s fortune. His motive for this visit was twofold: one reason was honorable to him, viz. to see Greece, and attend the schools there; the other was a more secret one, which few knew anything about, for his impiety had not yet presumed to openly avow itself, viz. to have opportunity of consulting the sacrificers and other impostors respecting his own destiny. I well remember that even then I was no bad diviner concerning this person, although I by no means pretend to be one of those skilled in the art of divination: but the fickleness of his disposition, and the incredible extravagancy of his mind, rendered me prophetic; if indeed he is the “best prophet who conjectures correctly” events. For it seemed to me that no good was portended by a neck seldom steady, the frequent shrugging of shoulders, an eye scowling and always in motion, together with a frenzied aspect; a gait irregular and tottering, a nose breathing only contempt and insult, with ridiculous contortions of countenance expressive of the same thing; immoderate and very loud laughter, nods as it were of assent, and drawings back of the head as if in denial, without any visible cause; speech with hesitancy and interrupted by his breathing; disorderly and senseless questions, answers no better, all jumbled together without the least consistency or method. Why need I enter into minute particulars? Such I foresaw he would be beforehand as I found him afterwards from experience. And if any of those who were then present and heard me, were now here, they would readily testify that when I observed these prognostics I exclaimed, “Ah! how great a mischief to itself is the Roman empire fos-

---

549 In his Crito, Phaedo, Phaedrus, and Apology of Socrates. See also Xenophon’s Memorabilia of Socrates and Symposium.
550 Marcus Aurelius.
552 Euripid. Fragm.
tering!” And that when I had uttered these words I prayed God that I might be a false prophet. For it would have been far better [that I should have been convicted of having formed an erroneous judgment], than that the world should be filled with so many calamities, and that such a monster should have appeared as never before had been seen: although many deluges and conflagrations are recorded, many earthquakes and chasms, and descriptions are given of many ferocious and inhuman men, as well as prodigies of the brute creation, compounded of different races, of which nature produced unusual forms. His end has indeed been such as corresponds with the madness of his career."

This is the sketch which Gregory has given us of Julian. Moreover, that in their various compilations they have endeavored to do violence to the truth, sometimes by the corruption of passages of sacred Scripture, at others by either adding to the express words, and putting such a construction upon them as suited their own purpose, many have demonstrated, by confuting their cavils, and exposing their fallacies. Origen in particular, who lived long before Julian’s time, by himself raising objections to such passages of Holy Scripture\(^{553}\) as seemed to disturb some readers, and then fully meeting them, has shut out the invidious clamors of the thoughtless. And had Julian and Porphyry given his writings a candid and serious perusal, they would have discoursed on other topics, and not have turned to the framing of blasphemous sophisms. It is also very obvious that the emperor in his discourses was intent on beguiling the ignorant, and did not address himself to those who possess the ‘form’ of the truth as it is presented in the sacred Scriptures. For having grouped together various expressions in which God is spoken of dispensationally, and more according to the manner of men, he thus comments on them.\(^{554}\) ‘Every one of these expressions is full of blasphemy against God, unless the phrase contains some occult and mysterious sense, which indeed I can suppose.’ This is the exact language he uses in his third book against the Christians. But in his treatise \textit{On the Cynic Philosophy}, where he shows to what extent fables may be invented on religious subjects, he says that in such matters the truth must be veiled: ‘For,’ to quote his very words,\(^{555}\) ‘Nature loves concealment; and the hidden substance of the gods cannot endure being cast into polluted ears in naked words.’ From which it is manifest that the emperor entertained this notion concerning the divine Scriptures, that they are mystical discourses, containing in them some abstruse meaning. He is also very indignant because all men do not form the same opinion of them; and inveighs against those Christians who understand the sacred oracles in a more literal sense. But it ill became him to rail so vehe-

\(^{553}\) Probably Socrates means Origen’s lost work, known as \textit{Stromata}, which Jerome (in his \textit{Ep. ad Magnum}) says was written to show the harmony of the Christian doctrines and the teachings of the philosophers. The description here given does not tally more precisely with any other work of Origen now extant.

\(^{554}\) Cyril, \textit{Contra Julian.} III. (p. 93, ed. Spanheim).

\(^{555}\) Julian, \textit{Orat.} VII.
mently against the simplicity of the vulgar, and on their account to behave so arrogantly towards the sacred Scriptures: nor was he warranted in turning with aversion from those things which others rightly apprehended, because forsooth they understood them otherwise than he desired they should. But now as it seems a similar cause of disgust seems to have operated upon him to that which affected Porphyry, who having been beaten by some Christians at Cæsarea in Palestine and not being able to endure [such treatment], from the working of unrestrained rage renounced the Christian religion: and from hatred of those who had beaten him he took to write blasphemous works against Christians, as Eusebius Pamphilus has proved who at the same time refuted his writings. So the emperor having uttered disdainful expressions against the Christians in the presence of an unthinking multitude, through the same morbid condition of mind fell into Porphyry’s blasphemies. Since therefore they both willfully broke forth into impiety, they are punished by the consciousness of their guilt. But when Libanius the Sophist says\textsuperscript{556} in derision, that the Christians make ‘a man of Palestine both God and the Son of God,’ he appears to have forgotten that he himself has deified Julian at the close of his oration. ‘For they almost killed,’ says he, ‘the first messenger of his death, as if he had lied against a god.’ And a little afterwards he adds, ‘O thou cherished one of the gods! thou disciple of the gods! thou associate\textsuperscript{557} with the gods!’ Now although Libanius may have meant otherwise, yet inasmuch as he did not avoid the ambiguity of a word which is sometimes taken in a bad sense, he seems to have said the same things as the Christians had done reproachfully. If then it was his intention to praise him, he ought to have avoided equivocal terms; as he did on another occasion, when being criticised he avoided a certain word, cutting it out of his works. Moreover, that man in Christ was united to the Godhead, so that while he was apparently but man, he was the invisible
God, and that both these things are most true, the divine books of Christians distinctly teach.
But the heathen before they believe, cannot understand: for it is a divine oracle that declares\textsuperscript{558} ‘Unless ye believe, assuredly ye shall not understand.’ Wherefore they are not ashamed to place many men among the number of their gods: and would that they had done this, at least to the good, just, and sober, instead of the impure, unjust, and those addicted to drunkenness, like the Hercules, the Bacchus, and the Æsculapius, by whom Libanius does not blush to swear frequently in his orations. And were I to attempt to enumerate the unnatural debaucheries and infamous adulteries of these, the digression would be lengthened beyond measure: but for those who desire to be informed on the subject, \textit{Aristotle’s Peplum, Dionysius’ Corona, Rheginus’ Polymnemon}, and the whole host of poets will be enough to show that the pagan theology is a tissue of extravagant absurdities. We \textsuperscript{556} Liban. \textit{Orat.} XVIII. (\textit{Oper.} I. 625, Reiske).

\textsuperscript{557} παρεδρευτά, term applied to associates on the bench in judicatories.

\textsuperscript{558} \textit{Isa.} vii. 9 (LXX, καὶ ἐ& 129·ν μὴ πιστεύσητε, οὐδὲ μὴ συνήτε).
might indeed show by a variety of instances that the practice of deifying human beings was far from uncommon among the heathen, nay, that they did so without the slightest hesitation: let a few examples suffice. The Rhodians having consulted an oracle on some public calamity, a response was given directing them to pay their adoration to Atys, a pagan priest who instituted frantic rites in Phrygia. The oracle was thus expressed:

‘Atys propitiate, the great god, the chaste Adonis, the blessed fair-haired Dionysius rich in gifts.’

Here Atys, who from an amatory mania had castrated himself, is by the oracle designated as Adonis and Bacchus.

Again, when Alexander, king of the Macedonians, passed over into Asia, the Amphictyons courted his favor, and the Pythoness uttered this oracle:

‘To Zeus supreme among the gods, and Athene Tritogonia pay homage, and to the king divine concealed in mortal form, him Zeus begat in honor to be the protector and dispenser of justice among mortals, Alexander the king.’

These are the words of the demon at Delphi, who when he wished to flatter potentates, did not scruple to assign them a place among the gods. The motive here was perhaps to conciliate by adulation: but what could one say of the case of Cleomedes the pugilist, whom they ranked among the gods in this oracle?

‘The last of the heroes is Cleomedes, the Astypalian. Him honor with sacrifices; for he is no longer a mortal.’

Because of this oracle Diogenes the cynic, and Oenomaus the philosopher, strongly condemned Apollo. The inhabitants of Cyzicus declared Hadrian to be the thirteenth god; and Adrian himself deified his own catamite Antinoüs.\footnote[559]{For a full account of Antinoüs and his relations to Hadrian, see Smith, Dict. of Greek and Roman Biogr. and Mythol., article Antinoüs. The story has been put into literary fiction in the historical novels Antinoüs, by George Taylor (A. Hausrath), and The Emperor, by Georg Ebers.} Libanius does not term these ‘ridiculous and contemptible absurdities,’ although he was familiar with these oracles, as well as with the work of Adrias on the life of Alexander\footnote[560]{It is uncertain what the true reading should be here. In one of the mss. it is Ἀδρίας, in another Ἀνδρίας; according to others Ἀδριανός, or Ἄρριανός. Valesius suggests the substitution of Λουκιανός. If this be adopted, then the Alexander suggested is Lucian’s Alexander of Abonoteichus. For a lucid and suggestive reproduction of this story, see Froude, Short Studies on Great Subjects, essay on Lucian.} (the pseudo-prophet of Paphlagonia): nor does he himself hesitate to dignify Porphyry in a similar manner, when after having preferred Julian’s books to his, he says, ‘May the Syrian be propitious to me.’ This digression will suffice to repel the scoffs of the sophist, without following him farther in what he has advanced; for to enter into a complete refutation would require an express work. We shall therefore proceed with our history.
Refutation of what Libanius the Sophist said concerning Julian.
Chapter XXIV.—The Bishops flock around Jovian, each attempting to draw him to his own Creed.

Jovian having returned from Persia, ecclesiastical commotions were again renewed: for those who presided over the churches endeavored to anticipate each other, in the hope that the emperor would attach himself to their own tenets. He however had from the beginning adhered to the homoousian faith, and openly declared that he preferred this to all others. Moreover, he wrote letters to and encouraged Athanasius bishop of Alexandria, who immediately after Julian’s death had recovered the Alexandrian church, and at that time gaining confidence from the letters [spoken of] put away all fear. The emperor further recalled from exile all those prelates whom Constantius had banished, and who had not been re-established by Julian. Moreover, the pagan temples were again shut up, and they secreted themselves wherever they were able. The philosophers also laid aside their palliums, and clothed themselves in ordinary attire. That public pollution by the blood of victims, which had been profusely lavished even to disgust in the reign of Julian, was now likewise taken away.
Chapter XXV.—The Macedonians and Acacians meet at Antioch, and proclaim their Assent to the Nicene Creed.

Meanwhile the state of the church was by no means tranquil; for the heads of the sects assiduously paid their court to the emperor their king that protection for themselves meant also power against their acknowledged opponents. And first the Macedonians presented a petition to him, in which they begged that all those who asserted the Son to be unlike the Father, might be expelled from the churches, and themselves allowed to take their place. This supplication was presented by Basil bishop of Ancyra, Silvanus of Tarsus, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis, Pasinicus of Zelæ, Leontius of Comana, Callicrates of Claudiopolis, and Theophilus of Castabala. The emperor having perused it, dismissed them without any other answer than this: ‘I abominate contentiousness; but I love and honor those who exert themselves to promote unanimity.’ When this remark became generally known, it subdued the violence of those who were desirous of altercation and thus was realized in the design of the emperor. At this time the real spirit of the Acacian sect, and their readiness to accommodate their opinions to those invested with supreme authority, became more conspicuous than ever. For assembling themselves at Antioch in Syria, they entered into a conference with Melitius, who had separated from them a little before, and embraced the ‘homoousian’ opinion. This they did because they saw Melitius was in high estimation with the emperor, who then resided at Antioch; and assenting therefore by common consent, they drew up a declaration of their sentiments acknowledging the homoousion and ratifying the Nicene Creed and presented it to the emperor. It was expressed in the following terms.

‘The Synod of bishops convened at Antioch out of various provinces, to the most pious and beloved of God, our lord Jovian Victor Augustus.

‘That your piety has above all things aimed at establishing the peace and harmony of the church, we ourselves, most devout emperor, are fully aware. Nor are we insensible that you have wisely judged an acknowledgment of the orthodox faith to be the sum and substance of this unity. Wherefore lest we should be included in the number of those who adulterate the doctrine of the truth, we hereby declare to your piety that we embrace and steadfastly hold the faith of the holy Synod formerly convened at Nicæa. Especially since the term homoousios, which to some seems novel and inappropriate, has been judiciously explained by the fathers to denote that the Son was begotten of the Father’s substance, and that he is 561 The mss. and all the Greek texts read Ζήνων, making the name ‘Pasinicus Zenon, or Zeno.’ The translation here given assumes the alteration in the process of transcription of a single letter making the original Ζηλῶν, which probably means the city of Zeleia, on the southeastern coast of the Euxine, famous for a victory of Mithridates over Triarius, the lieutenant of Lucullus, in 67 b.c.

562 This word, whose original is ξένον, is inserted by Valesius. If it were omitted, the translation would be, ‘which to some seems acceptable.’
like the Father as to substance. Not indeed that any passion is to be understood in relation to that ineffable generation. Nor is the term ousia, “substance,” taken by the fathers in any usual signification of it among the Greeks; but it has been employed for the subversion of what Arius impiously dared to assert concerning Christ, viz.—that he was made of things “not existing.” Which heresy the Anomœans, who have lately sprung up, still more auda-ciously maintain, to the utter destruction of ecclesiastical unity. We have therefore annexed to this our declaration, a copy of the faith set forth by the bishops assembled at Nicæa, with which also we are fully satisfied. It is this: “We believe in one God the Father Almighty,” and all the rest of the Creed in full. We, the undersigned, in presenting this statement, most cordially assent to its contents. Melitius bishop of Antioch, Eusebius of Samosata, Evagrius of Sicily, Uranius of Apamæa, Zoilus of Larissa, Acacius of Cæsarea, Antipater of Rhosus, Abramius of Urimi, 563 Aristonicus of Seleucia-upon-Belus, Barlamenus of Pergamus, Uranius of Melitina, Magnus of Chalcedon, Eutychius of Eleutheropolis, Isacocis of Armenia Major, Titus of Bostra, Peter of Sippi, 564 Pelagius of Laodicea, Arabian of Antros, Piso of Adana through Lamydron a presbyter, Sabinian bishop of Zeugma, Athanasius of Anycra through Orphitus and Aëtius presbyters, Irenion bishop of Gaza, Piso of Augusta, Patricius of Paltus through Lamyrion a presbyter, Anatolius bishop of Beroea, Theotimus of the Arabs, and Lucian of Arca. 565

This declaration we found recorded in that work of Sabinus, entitled A Collection of the Acts of Synods. Now the emperor had resolved to allay if possible the contentious spirit of the parties at variance, by bland manners and persuasive language toward them all; declaring that he ‘would not molest any one on account of his religious sentiments, and that he should love and highly esteem such as would zealously promote the unity of the church.’ The philosopher Themistius attests that such was his conduct, in the oration he composed on his ‘consulate.’ For he extols the emperor for his overcoming the wiles of flatterers by freely permitting every one to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. And in allusion to the check which the sycophants received, he facetiously observes 566 that experience has made it evident that such persons ‘worship the purple and not God; and resemble the changepul Euripus, 567 which sometimes rolls its waves in one direction, and at others the very opposite way.’

563 On the present borders of Turkey and Persia.
564 According to Valesius Hippi.
565 The name of this city is variously given as Archis, Arca, Arcae, Arcæa, Arcæa, Arcena. It lies at the foot of 566 Themist. Orat. V. (p. 80, ed. Harduin).
567 Straits between Euboea and the mainland.
Chapter XXVI.—Death of the Emperor Jovian.

Thus did the emperor repress at that time the impetuosity of those who were disposed to cavil: and immediately departing from Antioch, he went to Tarsus in Cilicia, where he duly performed the funeral obsequies of Julian, after which he was declared consul. Proceeding thence directly to Constantinople, he arrived at a place named Dadastana, situated on the frontiers of Galatia and Bithynia. There Themistius the philosopher, with others of the senatorial order, met him, and pronounced the consular oration before him, which he afterwards recited before the people at Constantinople. And indeed the Roman empire, blest with so excellent a sovereign, would doubtless have flourished exceedingly, as it is likely that both the civil and ecclesiastical departments would have been happily administered, had not his sudden death bereft the state of so eminent a personage. For disease caused by some obstruction, having attacked him at the place above mentioned during the winter season, he died there on the 17th day of February, in his own and his son Varronian’s consulate,568 in the thirty-third year of his age, after having reigned seven months.

This book contains an account of the events which took place in the space of two years and five months.

568 364 a.d.
Chapter I.—After Jovian’s Death, Valentinian is proclaimed Emperor, and takes his Brother Valens as Colleague in the Empire; Valentinian holds the Orthodox Faith, but Valens is an Arian.

The Emperor Jovian having died, as we have said, at Dadastana, in his own consulate and that of Varronian his son on the 17th of February, the army leaving Galatia arrived at Nicæa in Bithynia in seven days’ march, and there unanimously proclaimed Valentinian emperor, on the 25th of February, in the same consulate. He was a Pannonian by race, a native of the city of Cibalis, and being entrusted with a military command, had displayed great skill in tactics. He was moreover endowed with such greatness of mind, that he always appeared superior to any degree of honor he might have attained. As soon as they had created him emperor, he proceeded forthwith to Constantinople; and thirty days after his own possession of the imperial dignity, he made his brother Valens his colleague in the empire. They both professed Christianity, but did not hold the same Christian creed: for Valentinian respected the Nicene Creed; but Valens was prepossessed in favor of the Arian opinions. And this prejudice was caused by his having been baptized by Eudoxius bishop of Constantinople. Each of them was zealous for the views of his own party; but when they had attained sovereign power, they manifested very different dispositions. For previously in the reign of Julian, when Valentinian was a military tribune, and Valens held a command in the emperor’s guards, they both proved their zeal for the faith; for being constrained to sacrifice, they chose rather to give up their military rank than to do so and renounce Christianity.

Julian, however, knowing the necessity of the men to the state, retained them in their respective places, as did also Jovian, his successor in the empire. Later on, being invested with imperial authority, they were in accord in the management of public affairs, but as regards Christianity, as I have said, they behaved themselves very differently: for Valentinian while he favored those who agreed with him in sentiment, offered no violence to the Arians; but Valens, in his anxiety to promote the Arian cause, grievously disturbed those who differed from them, as the course of our history will show. Now at that time Liberius presided over the Roman church; and at Alexandria Athanasius was bishop of the Homoousians, while Lucius had been constituted George’s successor by the Arians. At Antioch Euzoïus was at the head of the Arians: but the Homoousians were divided into two parties, of one of which Paulinus was chief, and Melitius of the other. Cyril was again constituted over the church at Jerusalem. The churches at Constantinople were under the government of Eudoxius, who openly taught the dogmas of Arianism, but the Homoousians had but one small edifice in the city wherein to hold their assemblies. Those of the Macedo-

569  Cf. III. 13.
nian heresy who had dissented from the Acacians at Seleucia, then retained their churches in every city. Such was the state of ecclesiastical affairs at that time.\textsuperscript{570}

\textsuperscript{570} Cf. V. 3.
Chapter II.—Valentinian goes into the West; Valens remains at Constantinople, and grants the Request of the Macedonians to hold a Synod, but persecutes the Adherents of the ‘Homoousion.’

Of the emperors one, i.e. Valentinian, speedily went to the western parts of the empire; for the exigencies of affairs required his presence thither: meanwhile Valens, residing at Constantinople, was addressed by most of the prelates of the Macedonion heresy, requesting that another Synod might be convened for the correction of the creed. The emperor supposing they agreed in sentiment with Eudoxius and Acacius, gave them permission to do so: they therefore made preparations for assembling in the city of Lampsacus. But Valens proceeded with the utmost despatch toward Antioch in Syria, fearing lest the Persians should violate the treaty into which they had entered for thirty years in the reign of Jovian, and invade the Roman territories. They however remained quiet; and Valens employed this season of external tranquillity to prosecute a war of extermination against all who acknowledged the homoousion. Paulinus their bishop, because of his eminent piety, he left unmolested. Melitius he punished with exile: and all the rest, as many as refused to communicate with Euzoïus, he drove out from the churches in Antioch, and subjected to various losses and punishments. It is even affirmed that he caused many to be drowned in the river Orontes, which flows by that city.
Chapter III.—While Valens persecutes the Orthodox Christians in the East, a Usurper arises at Constantinople named Procopius: and at the Same Time an Earthquake and Inundation take Place and injure Several Cities.

While Valens was thus occupied in Syria, there arose a usurper at Constantinople named Procopius; who having collected a large body of troops in a very short time, meditated an expedition against the emperor. This intelligence created extreme solicitude in the emperor’s mind and checked for a while the persecution he had commenced against all who dared to differ from him in opinion. And while the commotions of a civil war were painfully anticipated, an earthquake occurred which did much damage to many cities. The sea also changed its accustomed boundaries, and overflowed to such an extent in some places, that vessels might sail where roads had previously existed; and it retired so much from other places, that the ground became dry. These events happened in the first consulate of the two emperors. 571
Chapter IV.—The Macedonians hold a Synod at Lampsacus, during a Period of Both Secular and Ecclesiastical Agitation; and after confirming the Antiochian Creed, and anathematizing that promulgated at Ariminum, they again ratify the Deposition of Acacius and Eudoxius.

While these events were taking place there could be no peace either in the church or in the state. Now those who had been empowered by the emperor to hold a council assembled at Lampsacus in the consulate just mentioned: this was seven years after the council of Seleucia. There, after confirming the Antiochian Creed, to which they had subscribed at Seleucia, they anathematized that which had been set forth at Ariminum by their former associates in opinion. They moreover again condemned the party of Acacius and Eudoxius, and declared their deposition to have been just. The civil war which was then impending prevented Eudoxius bishop of Constantinople from either gainsaying or revenging these determinations. Wherefore Eleusius bishop of Cyzicus and his adherents became for a little while the stronger party; inasmuch as they supported the views of Macedonius, which although before but obscurely known, acquired great publicity through the Synod at Lampsacus. This Synod, I think, was the cause of the increase of the Macedonians in the Hellespont; for Lampsacus is situated in one of the narrow bays of the Hellespont. Such was the issue of this council.

572 Cf. II. 40.
573 Cf. II. 37. Six years previous to the point of time reached by the historian thus far; i.e. 359 a.d.
574 Cf. II. 40, end.
Chapter V.—Engagement between Valens and Procopius near Nacolia in Phrygia; after which the Usurper is betrayed by his Chief Officers, and with them put to Death.

Under the consulate\textsuperscript{575} of Gratian and Dagalaïfus in the following year, the war was begun. For as soon as the usurper Procopius, leaving Constantinople, began his march at the head of his army toward the emperor, Valens hastened from Antioch, and came to an engagement with him near a city of Phrygia, called Nacolia. In the first encounter he was defeated; but soon after he took Procopius alive, through the treachery of Agilo and Gomarius, two of his generals, whom he subjected to the most extraordinary punishments.\textsuperscript{576} The traitors he caused to be executed by being sawn asunder, disregarding the oaths he had sworn to them. Two trees standing near each other being forcibly bowed down, one of the usurper’s legs was fastened to each of them, after which the trees being suddenly permitted to recover their erect position, by their rise rent the tyrant into two parts; and thus torn apart the usurper perished.

\textsuperscript{575} 366 a.d.

\textsuperscript{576} Ammianus Marcellinus, \textit{Rerum Gestarum}, XXVI. ix. 8–10, says that Florentius and Barchalba, after the fight at Nacolia, delivered Procopius bound to Valens, and that Procopius was immediately beheaded, and Florentius and Barchalba soon underwent the same punishment. Philostorgius also (IX.) relates that Procopius was beheaded, and that Florentius, who delivered him to Valens, was burnt.
Chapter VI.—After the Death of Procopius Valens constrains those who composed the Synod, and All Christians, to profess Arianism.

The emperor having thus successfully terminated the conflict, immediately began to move against the Christians, with the design of converting every sect to Arianism. But he was especially incensed against those who had composed the Synod at Lampsacus, not only on account of their deposition of the Arian bishops, but because they had anathematized the creed published at Ariminum. On arriving therefore at Nicomedia in Bithynia, he sent for Eleusius bishop of Cyzicus, who, as I have before said, closely adhered to the opinions of Macedonius. Therefore the emperor having convened a council of Arian bishops, commanded Eleusius to give his assent to their faith. At first he refused to do so, but on being terrified with threats of banishment and confiscation of property, he was intimidated and assented to the Arian belief. Immediately afterwards, however, he repented; and returning to Cyzicus, bitterly complained in presence of all the people, asserting that his quiescence was due to violence, and not of his own choice. He then exhorted them to seek another bishop for themselves, since he had been compelled to renounce his own opinion. But the inhabitants of Cyzicus loved and venerated him too much to think of losing him; they therefore refused to be subject to any other bishop, nor would they permit him to retire from his own church: and thus continuing under his oversight, they remained steadfast in their own heresy.

\[577\] Cf. II. 38.
Chapter VII.—Eunomius supersedes Eleusius the Macedonian in the See of Cyzicus, His Origin and Imitation of Aëtius, whose Amanuensis he had been.

The bishop of Constantinople being informed of these circumstances, constituted Eunomius bishop of Cyzicus, inasmuch as he was a person able by his eloquence to win over the minds of the multitude to his own way of thinking. On his arrival at Cyzicus an imperial edict was published in which it was ordered that Eleusius should be ejected, and Eunomius installed in his place. This being carried into effect, those who attached themselves to Eleusius, after erecting a sacred edifice without the city, assembled there with him. But enough has been said of Eleusius: let us now give some account of Eunomius. He had been secretary to Aëtius, surnamed Atheus, of whom we have before spoken, and had learnt from conversing with him, to imitate his sophistical mode of reasoning; being little aware that while exercising himself in framing fallacious arguments, and in the use of certain insignificant terms, he was really deceiving himself. This habit however inflated him with pride, and he fell into blasphemous heresies, and so became an advocate of the dogmas of Arius, and in various ways an adversary to the doctrines of truth. And as he had but a very slender knowledge of the letter of Scripture, he was wholly unable to enter into the spirit of it. Yet he abounded in words, and was accustomed to repeat the same thoughts in different terms, without ever arriving at a clear explanation of what he had proposed to himself. Of this his seven books On the Apostle’s Epistle to the Romans, on which he bestowed a quantity of vain labor, is a remarkable proof: for although he has employed an immense number of words in the attempt to expound it, he has by no means succeeded in apprehending the scope and object of that epistle. All other works of his extant are of a similar character, in which he that would take the trouble to examine them, would find a great scarcity of sense, amidst a profusion of verbiage. This Eunomius Eudoxius promoted to the see of Cyzicus; who being come thither, astonished his auditors by the extraordinary display of his ‘dialectic’ art, and thus a great sensation was produced at Cyzicus. At length the people unable to endure any longer the empty and assumptions parade of his language, drove him out of their city. He therefore withdrew to Constantinople, and taking up his abode with Eudoxius, was regarded as a titular bishop. But lest we should seem to have said these things for the sake 578 II. 35, end.

579 Sozom. VI. 8, gives the same account; but Philostorgius (V. 3) and Theodoret (H. E. II. 37 and 39) say that Eunomius was made bishop of Cyzicus under the Emperor Constantius immediately after the Synod of Seleucia. He was banished by Valens because he favored the usurper Procopius.
580 σχολαίος, defined by Sophocles (Greek Lexicon of the Rom. and Byzantine Periods) as suspended. It appears, however, that among the civil and military officers in the Roman system there were some who bore the title without being concerned in the management of their offices, and that these were termed vacantes and therefore that Socrates is using the Greek equivalent of a Latin term and applying it in ecclesiastical matters as its original was applied in civil and military affairs. Cf., on the position of bishops without churches Bingham, Christ. Antiq.
of detraction, let us hear what Eunomius himself has the hardihood to utter in his sophist-ical discourses concerning the Deity himself, for he uses the following language: ‘God knows no more of his own substance than we do; nor is this more known to him, and less to us:
but whatever we know about the Divine substance, that precisely is known to God; and on the other hand, whatever he knows, the same also you will find without any difference in us.’ This and many other similar tedious and absurd fallacies Eunomius was accustomed to draw up in utter insensibility to his own folly. On what account he afterwards separated from the Arians, we shall state in its proper place.581

581 See chap. 3, and on the Eunomians with their subsequent fortunes, V. 24.
Chapter VIII.—Of the Oracle found inscribed on a Stone, when the Walls of Chalcedon were demolished by Order of the Emperor Valens.

An order was issued by the emperor that the walls of Chalcedon, a city opposite to Byzantium, should be demolished: for he had sworn to do this, after he should have conquered the usurper, because the Chalcedonians had sided with the usurper, and had used insulting language toward Valens, and shut their gates against him as he passed by their city. In consequence of the imperial decree, therefore, the walls were razed and the stones were conveyed to Constantinople to serve for the formation of the public baths which are called Constantinæ. On one of these stones an oracle was found engraven, which had lain concealed for a long time, in which it was predicted that when the city should be supplied with abundance of water, then should the wall serve for a bath; and that innumerable hordes of barbarous nations having overrun the provinces of the Roman empire, and done a great deal of mischief, should themselves at length be destroyed. We shall here insert this oracle for the gratification of the studious:

‘When nymphs their mystic dance with wat’ry feet
Shall tread through proud Byzantium’s stately street;
When rage the city wall shall overthrow,
Whose stones to fence a bathing-place shall go:
Then savage lands shall send forth myriad swarms,
Adorned with golden locks and burnished arms,
That having Ister’s silver streams o’erpast,
Shall Scythian fields and Mœsia’s meadows waste.
But when with conquest flushed they enter Thrace,
Fate shall assign them there a burial-place.’

Such was the prophecy. And indeed it afterwards happened, that when Valens by building an aqueduct supplied Constantinople with abundance of water, the barbarous nations made various irruptions, as we shall hereafter see. But it happened that some explained the prediction otherwise. For when that aqueduct was completed, Clearchus the prefect of 582 Ammianus Marcellinus (Rerum Gestarum XXVI. viii. 2 seq.) says, ‘From the walls of Chalcedon they uttered reproaches to him and insultingly reviled him as Sabaiarius. For, sabaia is a poor drink made of wheat or barley in Illyricum (whence Valens came).’ On the Pannonian or Illyrian origin of Valens, see IV. I. It appears also that the Pannonians were accustomed to live on poor diet in general.

583 Sozom. VIII. 21, mentions these baths. Am. Marcellinus (Rerum. Gestarum, XXXI. I. 4) relates that Valens built a bath out of the stones of the walls of Chalcedon. So also Themist. Orat. Decen. ad Valentinem, and Gregory Nazianzen, Orat. 25; the latter calls it a ‘subterraneous and aerial river.’ Zonaras and Cedrenus, however, affirm that the structure built was not a bath, but an aqueduct. Cf. Cedrenus, I. 543 (p. 310, B).

584 Cedrenus, I. 543 (p. 310, B).
the city built a stately bath, to which the name of ‘the Plentiful Water’ was given, in that which is now called the Forum of Theodosius: on which account the people celebrated a festival with great rejoicings, whereby there was, say they, an accomplishment of those words of the oracle,

‘their mystic dance with wat’ry feet
Shall tread through proud Byzantium’s stately street.’

But the completion of the prophecy took place afterwards. While the demolition was in progress the Constantinopolitans besought the emperor to suspend the destruction of the walls; and the inhabitants of Nicomedia and Nicæa sending from Bithynia to Constantinople, made the same request. But the emperor being exceedingly exasperated against the Chalcedonians, was with difficulty prevailed upon to listen to these petitions in their favor: but that he might perform his oath, he commanded that the walls should be pulled down, while at the same time the breaches should be repaired by being filled up with other small stones. Whence it is that in the present day one may see in certain parts of the wall very inferior materials laid upon prodigiously large stones, forming those unsightly patches which were made on that occasion. So much will be sufficient on the walls of Chalcedon.
Chapter IX.—Valens persecutes the Novatians, because they accepted the Orthodox Faith.

The emperor however did not cease his persecution of those who embraced the doctrine of the homoousion, but drove them away from Constantinople: and as the Novatians acknowledged the same faith, they also were subjected to similar treatment. He commanded that their churches should be shut up, also their bishop they sent into exile. His name was Agelius, a person that had presided over their churches from the time of Constantine, and had led an apostolic life: for he always walked barefoot, and used but one coat, observing the injunction of the gospel. But the emperor’s displeasure against this sect was moderated by the efforts of a pious and eloquent man named Marcian, who had formerly been in military service at the imperial palace, but was at that time a presbyter in the Novatian church, and taught Anastasia and Carosa, the emperor’s daughters, grammar; from the former of whom the public baths yet standing, which Valens erected at Constantinople, were named. From respect for this person therefore the Novatian churches which had been for some time closed, were again opened. The Arians however would not suffer this people to remain undisturbed, for they disliked them on account of the sympathy and love the Novatians manifested toward the Homoousians, with whom they agreed in sentiment. Such was the state of affairs at that time. We may here remark that the war against the usurper Procopius was terminated about the end of May, in the consulate of Gratian and Dagalaífus.

586 Matt. x. 10.

587 Am. Marcellinus (Rerum Gestarum, XXVI. 4. 14), in speaking of Procopius, the usurper, says: ‘Procopius…resorted to the Anastasian baths, named from the sister of Constantine’; from which it appears that either (1) there were two baths of the same name, or (2) the baths here alluded to were named after Constantine’s sister and renamed on the occasion of their being repaired or altered, or (3) that Socrates is in error. From the impossibilities connected with (1) and (2) we may infer that (3) is the right view.

588 366 a.d.
Chapter X.—Birth of Valentinian the Younger.

Soon after the conclusion of this war, and under the same consulate, a son was born to Valentinian, the emperor in the Western parts, to whom the same name as his father’s was given. For Gratian had been born previously to his becoming emperor.

589 Sozomen (VI. 10) says the same. There were two Valentinians in the second generation; one a son of Valens, and another the son of Valentinian the Elder. According to Idatius’ Fasti, it was the former that was born during the consulate of Gratian and Dagalaicus; so that Socrates was in error here, confusing perhaps the two younger Valentinians. Valesius adduces other reasons proving the same, which it is unnecessary to repeat here.
Chapter XI.—Hail of Extraordinary Size; and Earthquakes in Bithynia and the Hellespont.

On the 2d of June of the following year, in the consulate of Lupicin and Jovian, there fell at Constantinople hail of such a size as would fill a man’s hand. Many affirmed that this hail had fallen as a consequence of the Divine displeasure, because of the emperor’s having banished several persons engaged in the sacred ministry, those, that is to say, who refused to communicate with Eudoxius. During the same consulate, on the 24th of August, the emperor Valentinian proclaimed his son Gratian Augustus. In the next year, when Valentinian and Valens were a second time consuls, there happened on the 11th of October, an earthquake in Bithynia which destroyed the city of Nicæa on the eleventh day of October. This was about twelve years after Nicomedia had been visited by a similar catastrophe. Soon afterwards the largest portion of Germa in the Hellespont was reduced to ruins by another earthquake. Nevertheless no impression was made on the mind of either Eudoxius the Arian bishop, or the emperor Valens, by these occurrences; for they did not desist from their relentless persecution of those who dissented from them in matters of faith. Meanwhile these convulsions of the earth were regarded as typical of the disturbances which agitated the churches: for many of the clerical body were sent into exile, as we have stated; Basil and Gregory alone, by a special dispensation of Divine Providence, being on account of their eminent piety exempted from this punishment. The former of these individuals was bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia; while Gregory presided over Nazianzus, a little city in the vicinity of Cæsarea. But we shall have occasion to mention both Basil and Gregory again in the course of our history.
Chapter XII.—The Macedonians, pressed by the Emperor's Violence toward them, send a Deputation to Liberius Bishop of Rome, and subscribe the Nicene Creed.

When the maintainers of the 'homoousian' doctrine had been thus severely dealt with, and put to flight, the persecutors began afresh to harass the Macedonians; who impelled by fear rather than violence, send deputations to one another from city to city, declaring the necessity of appealing to the emperor's brother, and also to Liberius bishop of Rome: and that it was far better for them to embrace their faith, than to communicate with the party of Eudoxius. They sent for this purpose Eustathius bishop of Sebastia, who had been several times deposed, Silvanus of Tarsus in Cilicia, and Theophilus of Castabala in the same province; charging them to dissent in nothing from Liberius concerning the faith, but to enter into communion with the Roman church, and confirm the doctrine of the homoousian. These persons therefore proceeded to Old Rome, carrying with them the letters of those who had separated themselves from Acacius at Seleucia. To the emperor they could not have access, he being occupied in the Gauls with a war against the Sarmate; but they presented their letters to Liberius. He at first refused to admit them; saying they were of the Arian faction, and could not possibly be received into communion by the church, inasmuch as they had rejected the Nicene Creed. To this they replied that by change of sentiment they had acknowledged the truth, having long since renounced the Anomœan\textsuperscript{595} creed, and avowed the Son to be in every way 'like the Father': moreover that they considered the terms 'like' (\textit{homoios}) and \textit{homoousios} to have precisely the same import. When they had made this statement, Liberius demanded of them a written confession of their faith; and they accordingly presented him a document in which the substance of the Nicene Creed was inserted. I have not introduced here, because of their length, the letters from Smyrna, Asia, and from Pisidia, Isauria, Pamphylia, and Lycia, in all which places they had held Synods. The written profession which the deputies sent with Eustathius, delivered to Liberius, is as follows:

‘To our Lord, Brother, and fellow-Minister Liberius: Eustathius, Theophilus, and Silvanus, salutations in the Lord.

‘On account of the insane opinion of heretics, who cease not to introduce occasions of offense into the catholic churches, we being desirous of checking their career, come forward to express our approbation of the doctrines recognized the Synod of orthodox bishops which has been convened at Lampsacus, Smyrna, and various other places: from which Synod we being constituted a deputation, bring a letter to your benignity and to all the Italian and Western bishops, by which we declare that we hold and maintain the catholic faith which was established in the holy council at Nicæa under the reign of Constantine of blessed memory, by three hundred and eighteen bishops, and has hitherto continued entire and unshaken; in which creed the term \textit{homoousios} is holily and devoutly employed in opposition to the pernicious doctrine of Arius. We therefore, together with the aforesaid persons whom we represent, profess under our own hand, that we have held, do hold, and will maintain the same faith even unto the end. We condemn Arius, and his impious doctrine, with his disciples, and those who agree with his sentiments; as also the same heresy of Sabellius, the Patripassians, the Marcionites, the Photinians, the Marcellians, that of Paul of Samosata, and those who countenance such tenets; in short all the heresies which are opposed to the aforesaid sacred creed, which was piously and in a catholic spirit set forth by the holy fathers at Nicæa. But we especially anathematize that form of the creed which was recited at the Synod of Ariminum, as altogether contrary to the before-mentioned creed of the holy Synod of Nicæa, to which the bishops at Constantinople affixed their signatures, being deceived by artifice and perjury, by reason of its having been brought from Nice, a town of Thrace. Our own creed, and that of those whose delegates we are, is this:

\textsuperscript{595} See II. 35, and Hefele, \textit{Hist. of the Ch. Councils}, Vol. II. p. 218 seq.

"We believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Maker of all things visible and invisible: and in one only-begotten God, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God; begotten of the Father; that is of the substance of the Father; God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God; begotten not made, of the same substance with the Father, through whom all things were made which are in heaven, and which are upon the earth: who for us men, and for our salvation, descended, became incarnate, and was made man; suffered, and rose again the third day; ascended into the heavens, and will come to judge the living and the dead. [We believe] also in the Holy Spirit. But the Catholic and Apostolic Church of God anathematizes those who assert that 'there was a time when he was not,' and 'that he was not before he was begotten,' and that 'he was made of things which are not'; or those that say 'the Son of God is of another hypostasis' or 'substance than the Father,' or that 'he is mutable, or susceptible of change.'

---

596 See I. 5, and note.
597 The Patripassians were a sect of the early Church (end of second century), who asserted the identity of the Son with the Father. And, as on being confronted with the question whether it was the Father that suffered on the cross they answered in the affirmative, they were called Patripassians. Their leader was Praxeas. See Tertull. Adv. Praxeam (the whole treatise is meant to be a refutation of this heresy).
598 Followers of the well-known Gnostic leader of the second century. For his peculiar views, see Tertull. Adv. Marcionem; Epiph. Haer. XLI.; also Smith and Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog., under Marcion, and ecclesiastical histories.
599 Cf. II. 18 and 29.
600 Cf. I. 36; II. 20.
601 See note, I. 36.
602 See II. 37.
603 See II. 37. As it appears from V. 4, Liberius was actually deceived by the artifice.
The Macedonians, pressed by the Emperor’s Violence toward them, send a Deputation...

“I, Eustathius, bishop of the city of Sebastia, with Theophilus and Silvanus, delegates of the Synod of Lampsacus, Smyrna, and other places, have voluntarily subscribed this confession of faith with our own hands. And if, after the publication of this creed, any one shall presume to calumniate either us, or those who sent us, let him come with the letters of your holiness before such orthodox bishops as your sanctity shall approve of, and bring the matter to an issue with us before them; and if any charge shall be substantiated, let the guilty be punished.”

Liberius having securely pledged the delegates by this document, received them into communion, and afterwards dismissed them with this letter:

The Letter of Liberius Bishop of Rome, to the Bishops of the Macedonians.

To our beloved brethren and fellow-ministers, Evethius, Cyril, Hyperechius, Uranius, Heron, Elpidius, Maximus, Eusebius, Eucarpius, Heortasius, Neon, Eumathius, Faustinus, Proclinus, Pasinicus, Arsenius, Severus, Didymion, Britannius, Callicrates, Dalmatius, Ædesius, Eustochius, Ambrose, Gelonius, Pardalius, Macedonius, Paul, Marcellus, Heraclius, Alexander, Adolius, Marcian, Sthenelus, John, Macer, Charisius, Silvanus, Photinus, Anthony, Aythus, Celsus, Euphranon, Milesius, Patricius, Severian, Eusebius, Eumolpius, Athanasius, Diophantus, Menodorus, Diocles, Chrysampelus, Neon, Eugenius, Eustathius, Callicrates, Arsenius, Eugenius, Martyrius, Hieracius, Leontius, Philagrius, Lucius, and to all the orthodox bishops in the East, Liberius bishop of Italy, and the bishops throughout the West, salutations always in the Lord.

Your letters, beloved brethren, resplendent with the light of faith, delivered to us by our highly esteemed brethren, the bishops Eustathius, Silvanus, and Theophilus, brought to us the much longed-for joy of peace and concord: and this chiefly because they have demonstrated and assured us that your opinion and sentiments are in perfect harmony with those both of our insignificance, and also with those of all the bishops in Italy and the Western parts. We knowledge this to be the Catholic and Apostolic faith, which until the time of the Synod at Nicæa had continued unadulterated and unshaken. This creed your legates have professed that they themselves hold, and to our great joy have obliterated every vestige and impression of an injurious suspicion, by attesting it not only in word, but also in writing. We have deemed it proper to subjoin to these letters a copy of this their declaration, lest we should leave any pretext to the heretics for entering into a fresh conspiracy, by which they might stir up the smouldering embers of their own malice, and according to their custom, rekindle the flames of discord. Moreover our most esteemed brethren, Eustathius, Silvanus, and Theophilus, have professed this also, both that they themselves, and also your love, have always held, and will maintain unto the last, the creed approved of at Nicæa by 318 Orthodox Bishops; which contains the perfect truth, and both confutes and overthrows the whole swarm of heretics. For it was not of their own will, but by Divine appointment that so great a number of bishops was collected against the madness of Arius, as equaled that of those by whose assistance blessed Abraham through faith destroyed so many thousand of his enemies. This faith being comprehended in the terms hypostasis and homoousios, like a strong and impregnable fortress checks and repels all the assaults and vain machinations of Arian perverseness. Wherefore when all the Western bishops were assembled at Ariminum, whither the craft of the Arians had drawn them, in order that either by deceptive persuasions, or to speak more truly, by the coercion of the secular power, they might erase, or indirectly revoke what had been introduced into the creed with so much prudence, their subtlety was not of the least avail. For almost all those who at Ariminum were either allured into error, or at that time deceived, have since taken a right view of the matter; and after anathematizing the exposition of faith set forth by those who were convened at Ariminum, have subscribed the Catholic and Apostolic Creed which was promulgated at Nicaæa. They have entered into communion with us, and regard the dogma of Arius and his disciples with increased aversion, and are even indignant against it. Of which fact when the legates of your love saw the indubitable evidences, they annexed yourselves to their own subscription; anathematizing Arius, and what was transacted at Ariminum against the creed ratified at Nicaæa, to which even you yourselves, beguiled by perjury, were induced to subscribe. Whence it appeared suitable to us to write to your love, and to accede to your just request, especially since we are assured by the profession of your legates that the Eastern bishops have recovered their senses, and now concur in opinion with the orthodox of the West. We further give you to understand, lest ye should be ignorant of it, that the blasphemies of the Synod of Ariminum have been anathematized by those who seem to have been at that time deceived by fraud, and that all have acknowledged the Nicene Creed. It is fit therefore that it should be made generally known by you that such as have had their faith vitiated by violence or guile, may now emerge from heretical darkness into the Divine light of catholic liberty. Moreover whosoever of them, after this council, shall not disgorge the poison of corrupt doctrine, by abjuring all the blasphemies of Arius, and anathematizing them, let them know that they are themselves, together with Arius and his disciples and the rest of the serpents, whether Sabellians, Patripassians, or the followers of any other heresy, disseedered and excommunicated from the assemblies of the Church, which does not admit of illegitimate children. May God preserve you steadfast, beloved brethren.

When the adherents of Eustathius had received this letter, they proceeded to Sicily, where they caused a Synod of Sicilian bishops to be convened, and in their presence avowed the homoousian faith, and professed their adherence to the Nicene Creed: then having received from them also a letter to the same effect as the preceding, they returned to those who had sent them. They on their part, on the receipt of the letters of Liberius, sent delegates from city to city to the prominent supporters of the doctrine of the homoousion, exhorting them to assemble simultaneously at Tarsus in Cilicia, in order to confirm the Nicene Creed, and terminate all the contentions which had subsequently arisen. And indeed this would probably have been accomplished had not the Arian bishop, Eudoxius, who at that time possessed great influence with the emperor, thwarted their purpose; for on learning of the Synod that had been summoned to meet [at Tarsus], he became so exasperated that he redoubled his persecution against them. That the Macedonians by sending legates to Liberius were admitted to communion with him, and professed the Nicene Creed, is attested by Sabinus himself, in his Collection of Synodical Transactions.

Chapter XIII.—Eunomius separates from Eudoxius; a Disturbance is raised at Alexandria by Eudoxius, and Athanasius flees into Voluntary Exile again, but in Consequence of the Clamors of the People the Emperor recalls and re-establishes him in his See.

About the same time Eunomius separated himself from Eudoxius, and held assemblies apart, because after he had repeatedly entreated that his preceptor Aëtius might be received into communion, Eudoxius continued to oppose it. Now Eudoxius did this against his preference, for he did not reject the opinion with Aëtius since it was the same as his own; but he yielded to the prevailing sentiment of his own party, who objected to Aëtius as heterodox. This was the cause of the division between Eunomius and Eudoxius, and such was the state of things at Constantinople. But the church at Alexandria was disturbed by an edict of the prætorian prefects, sent hither by means of Eudoxius. Whereupon Athanasius, dreading the irrational impetuosity of the multitude, and fearing lest he should be regarded as the author of the excesses that might be committed, concealed himself for four entire months in an ancestral tomb. Inasmuch however as the people, on account of their affection for him, became seditious in impatience of his absence, the emperor, on ascertaining that on this account agitation prevailed at Alexandria, ordered by his letters that Athanasius should be suffered to preside over the churches without molestation; and this was the reason why the Alexandrian church enjoyed tranquillity until the death of Athanasius. How the Arian faction became possessed of the churches after his decease, we shall unfold in the course of our history.

605 Eunomius adopted the standpoint and also the views of Aëtius and gave them his own name. Briefly his fundamental principle was that the Son is absolutely unlike the Father in substance, and hence a creature among other creatures, a mere man.

606 See II. 35.

607 Cf. chap. 21.
Chapter XIV.—The Arians ordain Demophilus after the Death of Eudoxius at Constantinople; but the Orthodox Party constitute Evagrius his Successor.

The Emperor Valens leaving Constantinople again set out towards Antioch; but on his arrival at Nicomedia, a city of Bithynia, his progress was arrested by the following circumstances. Eudoxius the bishop of the Arian church who has been in possession of the seat of the Constantinopolitan church for nineteen years, died soon after the emperor’s departure from that city, in the third consulate of Valentinian and Valens. The Arians therefore appointed Demophilus to succeed him; but the Homoousians considering that an opportunity was afforded them, elected a certain Evagrius, a person who maintained their own principles; and Eustathius, who had been bishop of Antioch, formally ordained him. He had been recalled from exile by Jovian, and had at this time privately come to Constantinople, for the purpose of confirming the adherents to the doctrine of the homoousion.

---

608 Epiphanius Scholasticus reads δεκαένα for δεκαεννέα; if he be followed, the incumbency of the bishopric of Constantinople by Eudoxius lasted seven years.

609 370 a.d.
Chapter XV.—The Emperor banishes Evagrius and Eustathius. The Arians persecute the Orthodox.

When this had been accomplished the Arians renewed their persecution of the Homoousians: and the emperor was very soon informed of what had taken place, and apprehending the subversion of the city in consequence of some popular tumult, immediately sent troops from Nicomedia to Constantinople; ordering that both he who had been ordained, and the one who had ordained him, should be apprehended and sent into exile in different regions. Eustathius therefore was banished to Bizya a city of Thrace; and Evagrius was conveyed to another place. After this the Arians, becoming bolder, grievously harassed the orthodox party, frequently beating them, reviling them, causing them to be imprisoned, and fined; in short they practiced distressing and intolerable annoyances against them. The sufferers were induced to appeal to the emperor for protection against their adversaries if haply they might obtain some relief from this oppression. But whatever hope of redress they might have cherished from this quarter, was altogether frustrated, inasmuch as they thus merely spread their grievances before him who was the very author of them.
Chapter XVI.—Certain Presbyters burnt in a Ship by Order of Valens. Famine in Phrygia.

Certain pious men of the clerical order, eighty in number, among whom Urbanus, Theodore, and Menedemus were the leaders, proceeded to Nicomedia, and there presented to the emperor a supplicatory petition, informing him and complaining of the ill-usage to which they had been subjected. The emperor was filled with wrath; but dissembled his displeasure in their presence, and gave Modestus the prefect a secret order to apprehend these persons, and put them to death. The manner in which they were destroyed being unusual, deserves to be recorded. The prefect fearing that he should excite the populace to a seditious movement against himself, if he attempted the public execution of so many, pretended to send the men away into exile. Accordingly as they received the intelligence of their destiny with great firmness of mind the prefect ordered that they should be embarked as if to be conveyed to their several places of banishment, having meanwhile enjoined on the sailors to set the vessel on fire, as soon as they reached the mid sea, that their victims being so destroyed, might even be deprived of burial. This injunction was obeyed; for when they arrived at the middle of the Astacian Gulf, the crew set fire to the ship, and then took refuge in a small barque which followed them, and so escaped. Meanwhile it came to pass that a strong easterly wind blew, and the burning ship was roughly driven but moved faster and was preserved until it reached a port named Dacidizus, where it was utterly consumed together with the men who were shut up in it. Many have asserted that this impious deed was not suffered to go unpunished: for there immediately after arose so great a famine throughout all Phrygia, that a large proportion of the inhabitants were obliged to abandon their country for a time, and betake themselves some to Constantinople and some to other provinces. For Constantinople, notwithstanding the vast population it supplies, yet always abounds with the necessaries of life, all manner of provisions being imported into it by sea from various regions; and the Euxine which lies near it, furnishes it with wheat to any extent it may require.

610 Cf. Herodot. VII. 147.
Chapter XVII.—The Emperor Valens, while at Antioch, again persecutes the Adherents of the 'Homoousion.'

The Emperor Valens, little affected by the calamities resulting from the famine, went to Antioch in Syria, and during his residence there cruelly persecuted such as would not embrace Arianism. For not content with ejecting out of almost all the churches of the East those who maintained the 'homoousian' opinion, he inflicted on them various punishments besides. He destroyed a greater number even than before, delivering them up to many different kinds of death, but especially drowning in the river.

But we must here mention certain circumstances that occurred at Edessa in Mesopotamia. There is in that city a magnificent church dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, wherein, on account of the sanctity of the place, religious assemblies are incessantly held. The Emperor Valens wishing to inspect this edifice, and having learnt that all who usually congregated there were opposed to the heresy which he favored, he is said to have struck the prefect with his own hand, because he had neglected to expel them thence also. As the prefect after submitting to this ignominy, was most unwillingly constrained to subserve the emperor’s indignation against them,—for he did not desire to effect the slaughter of so great a number of persons,—he privately suggested that no one should be found there. But no one gave heed either to his admonitions or to his menaces; for on the following day they all crowded to the church. And when the prefect was going towards it with a large military force in order to satisfy the emperor’s rage, a poor woman leading her own little child by the hand hurried hastily by, on her way to the church, breaking through the ranks of the prefect’s company of soldiers. The prefect irritated at this, ordered her to be brought to him, and thus addressed her: ‘Wretched woman! whither are you running in so disorderly a manner?’ She replied, ‘To the same place that others are hastening.’ ‘Have you not heard,’ said he, ‘that the prefect is about to put to death all that shall be found there?’ ‘Yes,’ said the woman, ‘and therefore I hasten that I may be found there.’ ‘And whither are you dragging that little child?’ said the prefect: the woman answered, ‘That he also may be made worthy of martyrdom.’

The prefect on hearing these things, conjecturing that a similar resolution actuated the others who were assembled there, immediately went back to the emperor, and informed him that all were ready to die in behalf of their own faith. He added that it would be preposterous to destroy so many persons at one time, and thus persuaded the emperor to control his wrath. In this way were the Edessenes preserved from being massacred by order of their sovereign.

---

611 The kind of church here meant was a memorial structure to a martyr, erected where his relics were deposited, and was called Μαρτύριον. See Bingham, Christ. Antiq. VIII. 1.

612 The same church which above was called a μαρτύριον from its origin, is here called εὐκτήριος τόπος, from its use (‘a place of prayer’).

613 Gibbon, in his Decline and Fall, chap. 16, quotes a number of extracts from Sulpicius Severus and Ignatius, showing the honor in which martyrdom was held in the early church, and the eagerness with which it was sought. To check the excess of zeal which was thus manifested, the Council of Elvira, in 306 a.d., passed a canon (its sixtieth) to the following intent: ‘that if any one should overthrow idols, and should therefore be put to death, inasmuch as this is not written in the Gospel nor found done among the apostles at any time, such a one should not be received among the martyrs.’

263
Events at Edessa: Constancy of the Devout Citizens, and Courage of a Pious...
Chapter XIX.—Slaughter of Many Persons by Valens an Account of their Names, in Consequence of a Heathen Prediction.

The cruel disposition of the emperor was at this time abused by an execrable demon, who induced certain curious persons to institute an inquiry by means of necromancy as to who should succeed Valens on the throne. To their magical incantations the demon gave responses not distinct and unequivocal, but as the general practice is, full of ambiguity; for displaying the four letters q, e, o, and d, he declared that the name of the successor of Valens began with these; and that it was a compound name. When the emperor was apprised of this oracle, instead of committing to God, who alone can penetrate futurity, the decision of this matter, in contravention of those Christian principles to which he pretended the most zealous adherence, he put to death very many persons of whom he had the suspicion that they aimed at the sovereign power: thus such as were named ‘Theodore,’ ‘Theodotus,’ ‘Theodosius,’ ‘Theodulus,’ and the like, were sacrificed to the emperor’s fears; and among the rest was Theodosiolus, a very brave man, descended from a noble family in Spain. Many persons therefore, to avoid the danger to which they were exposed, changed their names, giving up those which they had received from their parents in infancy as dangerous. This will be enough on that subject.

614 Amm. Marcellinus, Rerum Gertarum, XXIX. I. 29 seq.
Chapter XX.—Death of Athanasius, and Elevation of Peter to His See.\footnote{Sozomen, VI. 19; Theodoret, \textit{H. E.} IV. 20.}

It must be said that as long as Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, was alive, the emperor, restrained by the Providence of God, abstained from molesting Alexandria and Egypt: indeed he knew very well that the multitude of those who were attached to Athanasius was very great; and on that account he was careful lest the public affairs should be hazarded, by the Alexandrians, who are an irritable race, being excited to sedition. But Athanasius, after being engaged in so many and such severe conflicts on behalf of the church, departed this life in the second consulate\footnote{371 a.d. But Jerome \textit{Chronic.} II. (ninth year of Valens), makes the consecration of Athanasius’ successor in 373 a.d., and hence also the death of Athanasius himself in the same year. The later date is now universally accepted.} of Gratian and Probus, having governed that church amidst the greatest perils forty-six years. He left as his successor Peter, a devout and eloquent man.
Chapter XXI.—The Arians are allowed by the Emperor to imprison Peter and to set Lucius over the See of Alexandria.

Upon this the Arians, emboldened by their knowledge of the emperor’s religious sentiments, again took courage, and without delay informed him of the circumstance. He was then residing at Antioch. Then indeed Euzoïus who presided over the Arians of that city, eagerly embracing the favorable opportunity thus presented, begged permission to go to Alexandria, for the purpose of putting Lucius the Arian in possession of the churches there. The emperor acceded to this request, and as speedily as possible Euzoïus proceeded forthwith to Alexandria, attended by the imperial troops. Magnus, also, the emperor’s treasurer, went with him. Moreover an imperial mandate had been issued to Palladius, the governor of Egypt, enjoining him to aid them with a military force. Wherefore having apprehended Peter, they cast him into prison; and after dispersing the rest of the clergy, they placed Lucius in the episcopal chair.
Chapter XXII.—Silence of Sabinus on the Misdeeds of the Arians; Flight of Peter to Rome; Massacre of the Solitaries at the Instigation of the Arians.

Of the outrages perpetrated upon the installation of Lucius, and the treatment of those who were ejected, both in the courts and outside of the courts, and how some were subjected to a variety of tortures, and others sent into exile even after this excruciating process, Sabinus takes not the slightest notice. In fact, being half disposed to Arianism himself, he purposely veils the atrocities of his friends. Peter, however, has exposed them, in the letters he addressed to all the churches, when he had escaped from prison. For this [bishop] having managed to escape from prison, fled to Damasus, bishop of Rome. The Arians though not very numerous, becoming thus possessed of the Alexandrian churches soon after obtained an imperial edict directing the governor of Egypt to expel not only from Alexandria but even out of the country, the favorers of the ‘homoousian’ doctrine, and all such as were obnoxious to Lucius. After this they assailed and disturbed and terribly harassed the monastic institutions in the desert; armed men rushed in the most ferocious manner upon those who were utterly defenceless, and who would not lift an arm to repel their violence: so that numbers of unresisting victims were in this manner slaughtered with a degree of wanton cruelty beyond description.
Chapter XXIII.—The Deeds of Some Holy Persons who devoted themselves to a Solitary Life.

Since I have referred to the monasteries of Egypt, it may be proper here to give a brief account of them. They were founded probably at a very early period, but were greatly enlarged and augmented by a devout man whose name was Ammoun. In his youth this person had an aversion to matrimony; but when some of his relatives urged him not to contemn marriage, but to take a wife to himself, he was prevailed upon and was married. On leading the bride with the customary ceremonies from the banquet-room to the nuptial couch, after their mutual friends had withdrawn, he took a book containing the epistles of the apostles and read to his wife Paul’s Epistle to the Corinthians, explaining to her the apostle’s admonitions to married persons. Adducing many external considerations besides, he descanted on the inconveniences and discomforts attending matrimonial intercourse, the pangs of child-bearing, and the trouble and anxiety connected with rearing a family. He contrasted with all this the advantages of chastity; described the liberty, and immaculate purity of a life of continence; and affirmed that virginity places persons in the nearest relation to the Deity. By these and other arguments of a similar kind, he persuaded his virgin bride to renounce with him a secular life, prior to their having any conjugal knowledge of each other. Having taken this resolution, they retired together to the mountain of Nitria, and in a hut there inhabited for a short time one common ascetic apartment, without regarding their difference of sex, being according to the apostles, ‘one in Christ.’ But not long after, the recent and unpolluted bride thus addressed Ammoun: ‘It is unsuitable,’ said she, ‘for you who practice chastity, to look upon a woman in so confined a dwelling; let us therefore, if it is agreeable to you, perform our exercise apart.’ This agreement again was satisfactory to both, and so they separated, and spent the rest of their lives in abstinence from wine and oil, eating dry bread alone, sometimes passing over one day, at others fasting two, and sometimes more.

Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, asserts in his Life of Anthony, that the subject of his memoir who was contemporary with this Ammoun, saw his soul taken up by angels after his decease. Accordingly, a great number of persons emulated Ammoun’s manner of life,

---

617 On the growth of the monastic system, see Bingham, Eccl. Antiq. VII.; on its philosophy, briefly, Bennett, Christian Archæol. p. 468. Socrates uses Palladius’ Historia Lausiaca copiously in this chapter.

619 1 Cor. vii. 10 seq.

620 Gal. iii. 28. What Socrates here says of Ammoun is attributed by Theodoret (H. E. IV. 12) to Pelagius, who afterwards became bishop of Laodicea.

621 Athanas. Vit. Anton. 60.
so that by degrees the mountains of Nitria and Scitis were filled with monks, an account of whose lives would require an express work. As, however, there were among them persons of eminent piety, distinguished for their strict discipline and apostolic lives, who said and did many things worthy of being recorded, I deem it useful to interweave with my history a few particulars selected out of the great number for the information of my readers. It is said that Ammoun never saw himself naked, being accustomed to say that ‘it became not a monk to see even his own person exposed.’ And when once he wanted to pass a river, but was unwilling to undress, he besought God to enable him to cross without his being obliged to break his resolution; and immediately an angel transported him to the other side of the river. Another monk named Didymus\textsuperscript{622} lived entirely alone to the day of his death, although he had reached the age of ninety years. Arsenius, another of them, would not separate young delinquents from communion, but only those that were advanced in age: ‘for,’ said he, ‘when a young person is excommunicated he becomes hardened; but an elderly one is soon sensible of the misery of excommunication.’ Pior was accustomed to take his food as he walked along. As a certain one asked him, ‘Why do you eat thus?’ ‘That I may not seem,’ said he, ‘to make eating serious business but rather a thing done by the way.’ To another putting the same question he replied, ‘Lest even in eating my mind should be sensible of corporeal enjoyment.’ Isidore affirmed that he had not been conscious of sin even in thought for forty years; and that he had never consented either to lust or anger. Pambos being an illiterate man went to some one for the purpose of being taught a psalm; and having heard the first verse of the thirty-eighth psalm, ‘I said I will take heed to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue,’\textsuperscript{623} he departed without staying to hear the second verse, saying, ‘this one will suffice, if I can practically acquire it.’ And when the person who had given him the verse reproved him because he had not seen him for the space of six months, he answered that he had not yet learnt to practice the verse of the psalm. After a considerable lapse of time, being asked by one of his friends whether he had made himself master of the verse, his answer was, ‘I have scarcely succeeded in accomplishing it during nineteen years.’ A certain individual having placed gold in his hands for distribution to the poor, requested him to reckon what he had given him. ‘There is no need of counting,’ said he, ‘but of integrity of mind.’ This same Pambos, at the desire of Athanasius the bishop, came out of the desert to Alexandria and on beholding an actress there, he wept. When those present asked him why he wept, he replied, ‘Two causes have affected me: one is the destruction of this woman; the other is that I exert myself less to please my God than she does to please obscene characters.’ Another said that ‘a monk who did not work ought to be regarded as on a level with the covetous man.’ Piterus was well-informed in many branches of natural philosophy, and was \textsuperscript{622} Cf. chap. 25.

\textsuperscript{623} According to the LXX. accustomed frequently to enter into expositions of the principles sometimes of one and sometimes of another department of science, but he always commenced his expositions with prayer. There were also among the monks of that period, two of the same name, of great sanctity, each being called Macarius; one of whom was from Upper Egypt, the other from the city of Alexandria. Both were celebrated for their ascetic discipline, the purity of their life and conversation, and the miracles which were wrought by their hands. The Egyptian Macarius performed so many cures, and cast out so many devils, that it would require a distinct treatise to record all that the grace of God enabled him to do. His manner toward those who resorted to him was austere, yet at the same time calculated to inspire veneration. The Alexandrian Macarius, while in all respects resembling his Egyptian namesake, differed from him in this, that he was always cheerful to his visitors; and by the affability of his manners led many young men to asceticism. Evagrius\(^624\) became a disciple of these men, acquired from them the philosophy of deeds, whereas he had previously known that which consisted in words only. He was ordained deacon at Constantinople by Gregory of Nazianzus, and afterwards went with him into Egypt, where he became acquainted with these eminent persons, and emulated their course of conduct, and miracles were done by his hands as numerous and important as those of his preceptors. Books were also composed by him of very valuable nature, one of which is entitled \textit{The Monk, or, On Active Virtue}; another \textit{The Gnostic},\(^625\) or, \textit{To him who is deemed worthy of Knowledge}: this book is divided into fifty chapters. A third is designated \textit{Antirrheticus}, and contains selections from the Holy Scriptures against tempting spirits, distributed into eight parts, according to the number of the arguments. He wrote moreover \textit{Six Hundred Prognostic Problems}, and also two compositions in verse, one addressed \textit{To the Monks living in Communities}, and the other \textit{To the Virgin}. Whoever shall read these productions will be convinced of their excellence. It will not be out of place here, I conceive, to subjoin to what has been before stated, a few things mentioned by him respecting the monks. These are his words:\(^626\)

\begin{quote}
It becomes us to enquire into the habits of the pious monks who have preceded us, in order that we may correct ourselves by their example: for undoubtedly very many excellent things have been said and done by them. One of them was accustomed to say, that ‘a drier and not irregular diet combined with love, would quickly conduct a monk into the haven of tranquillity.’ The same individual freed one of his brethren from being troubled by appartitions at night, by enjoining him to minister while fasting to the sick. And being asked why he prescribed this: ‘Such affections,’ said he, ‘are by nothing so effectually dissipated as by \footnotesize{\(^{624}\) Cf. Palladius, \textit{Hist. Lausiaca}, chap. 86. But Palladius says that Evagrius was ordained by Gregory of Nyssa, not of Nazianzus. Cf. Sozomen, VI. 30.}

\footnotesize{\(^{625}\) Palladius calls this work ‘ἱερά [Sacred matter].’ \textit{Hist. Lausiaca}, 86.}

\footnotesize{\(^{626}\) Cf. Coteler. \textit{Eccl. Gr. Mon.} 3. 59, containing also other fragments of Evagrius.}
the exercise of compassion.’ A certain philosopher of those times coming to Anthony the Just, said to him, ‘How can you endure, father, being deprived of the comfort of books?’ ‘My book, O philosopher,’ replied Anthony, ‘is the nature of things that are made, and it is present whenever I wish to read the words of God.’ That ‘chosen vessel,’\textsuperscript{627} the aged Egyptian Macarius, asked me, why the strength of the faculty of memory is impaired by cherishing the remembrance of injury received from men; while by remembering those done us by devils it remains uninjured? And when I hesitated, scarcely knowing what answer to make, and begged him to account for it: ‘Because,’ said he, ‘the former is an affection contrary to nature, and the latter is conformable to the nature of the mind.’ Going on one occasion to the holy father Macarius about mid-day, and being overcome with the heat and thirst, I begged for some water to drink: ‘Content yourself with the shade,’ was his reply, ‘for many who are now journeying by land, or sailing on the deep, are deprived even of this.’ Discussing with him afterwards the subject of abstinence, ‘Take courage, my son,’ said he: ‘for twenty years I have neither eaten, drunk, nor slept to satiety; my bread has always been weighed, my water measured, and what little sleep I have had has been stolen by reclining myself against a wall.’\textsuperscript{628} The death of his father was announced to one of the monks: ‘Cease your blasphemy,’ said he to the person that told him; ‘my father is immortal.’ One of the brethren who possessed nothing but a copy of the Gospels, sold it, and distributed the price in food to the hungry, uttering this memorable saying—‘I have sold the book which says, “Sell that thou hast and give to the poor.”’\textsuperscript{629}

\textit{There is an island about the northern part of the city of Alexandria, beyond the lake called Maria, where a monk from Parembole\textsuperscript{630} dwells, in high repute among the Gnostics. This person was accustomed to say, that all the deeds of the monks were done for one of these five reasons;—on account of God, nature, custom, necessity, or manual labor. The same also said that there was only one virtue in nature, but that it assumes various characteristics according to the dispositions of the soul: just as the light of the sun is itself without form, but accommodates itself to the figure of that which receives it. Another of the monks said, ‘I withdraw myself from pleasures, in order to cut off the occasions of anger: for I know that it always contends for pleasures, disturbing my tranquillity of mind, and unfitting me for the attainment of knowledge.’ One of the aged monks said that ‘Love knows not how to keep a deposit either of provisions or money.’ He added, ‘I never remember to have been twice deceived by the devil in the same thing.’ Thus wrote Evagrius in his book entitled \textit{Practice}.\textsuperscript{631} And in that which he called \textit{The Gnostic} he says,} \textsuperscript{627} Acts ix. 15.

\textsuperscript{628} Cf. Ezra iv. 10, 11.
\textsuperscript{629} Matt. xix. 21.
\textsuperscript{630} Parembole is a village near Alexandria, mentioned by Athanasius in his second Apol. against the Arians, who names Macarius as its presbyter.
\textsuperscript{631} See above, III. 7.
'We have learned from Gregory the Just, that there are four virtues, having distinct characteristics:—prudence and fortitude, temperance and justice. That it is the province of prudence to contemplate the sacred and intelligent powers apart from expression, because these are unfolded by wisdom: of fortitude to adhere to truth against all opposition, and never to turn aside to that which is unreal: of temperance to receive seed from the chief husbandman, but to repel him who would sow over it seed of another kind: and finally, of justice to adapt discourse to every one, according to their condition and capacity; stating some things obscurely, others in a figurative manner, and explaining others clearly for the instruction of the less intelligent.' That pillar of truth, Basil of Cappadocia, used to say that 'the knowledge which men teach is perfected by constant study and exercise; but that which proceeds from the grace of God, by the practice of justice, patience, and mercy.' That the former indeed is often developed in persons who are still subject to the passions; whereas the latter is the portion of those only who are superior to their influence, and who during the season of devotion, contemplate that peculiar light of the mind which illumines them. That luminary of the Egyptians, holy Athanasius, assures us 'that Moses was commanded to place the table on the north side. Let the Gnostics therefore understand what wind is contrary to them, and so nobly endure every temptation, and minister nourishment with a willing mind to those who apply to them.' Serapion, the angel of the church of the Thmuïtae, declared that 'the mind is completely purified by drinking in spiritual knowledge': that 'charity cures the inflammatory tendencies of the soul'; and that 'the depraved lusts which spring up in it are restrained by abstinence.' ‘Exercise thyself continually,’ said the great and enlightened teacher Didymus, ‘in reflecting on providence and judgment; and endeavor to bear in memory the material of whatever discourses thou mayst have heard on these topics, for almost all fail in this respect. Thou wilt find reasonings concerning judgment in the difference of created forms, and the constitution of the universe: sermons on providence comprehended in those means by which we are led from vice and ignorance to virtue and knowledge.’

These few extracts from Evagrius we thought it would be appropriate to insert here. There was another excellent man among the monks, named Ammonius, who had so little interest in secular matters, that when he went to Rome with Athanasius, he chose to investigate none of the magnificent works of that city, contenting himself with examining the Cathedral of Peter and Paul only. This same Ammonius on being urged to enter upon the episcopal office, cut off his own right ear, that by mutilation of his person he might disqualify himself for ordination. But when long afterwards Evagrius, whom Theophilus, bishop of Alexandria, wished to make a bishop, having effected his escape without maiming himself in any way, afterwards happened to meet Ammonius, and told him jocosely, that he had

---

633 Ex. xxvi. 35.
done wrong in cutting off his own ear, as he had by that means rendered himself criminal in the sight of God. To which Ammonius replied, ‘And do you think, Evagrius, that you will not be punished, who from self-love have cut out your own tongue, to avoid the exercise of that gift of utterance which has been committed to you?’ There were at the same time in the monasteries very many other admirable and devout characters whom it would be too tedious to enumerate in this place, and besides if we should attempt to describe the life of each, and the miracles they did by means of that sanctity with which they were endowed, we should necessarily digress too far from the object we have in view. Should any one desire to become acquainted with their history, in reference both to their deeds and experiences and discourses for the edification of their auditors, as well as how wild beasts became subject to their authority, there is a specific treatise\textsuperscript{634} as on the subject, composed by the monk Palladius, who was a disciple of Evagrius, and gives all these particulars in minute detail. In that work he also mentions several women, who practiced the same kind of austerities as the men that have been referred to. Both Evagrius and Palladius flourished a short time after the death of Valens. We must now return to the point whence we diverged.

\textsuperscript{634} Hist. Lausiaca (Vol. XXXIV. in Migné’s Patrologia Graeca).
Chapter XXIV.—Assault upon the Monks, and Banishment of their Superiors, who exhibit Miraculous Power.

The emperor Valens having issued an edict commanding that the orthodox should be persecuted both in Alexandria and in the rest of Egypt, depopulation and ruin to an immense extent immediately followed: some were dragged before the tribunals, others cast into prison, and many tortured in various ways, and in fact all sorts of punishments were inflicted upon persons who aimed only at peace and quiet. When these outrages had been perpetrated at Alexandria just as Lucius thought proper, Euzoïus returned to Antioch, and Lucian the Arian, attended by the commander-in-chief of the army with a considerable body of troops, immediately proceeded to the monasteries of Egypt, where the general in person assailed the assemblage of holy men with greater fury even than the ruthless soldiery. On reaching these solitudes they found the monks engaged in their customary exercises, praying, healing diseases, and casting out devils. Yet they, regardless of these extraordinary evidences of Divine power, suffered them not to continue their solemn devotions, but drove them out of the oratories by force. Rufinus declares that he was not only a witness of these cruelties, but also one of the sufferers. Thus in them were renewed those things which are spoken of by the apostle: for they were mocked, and had trial of scourgings, were stripped naked, put in bonds, stoned, slain with the sword, went about in the wilderness clad in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy, wandering in deserts, in mountains, in dens and caves of the earth. In all these things they obtained a good report for their faith and their works, and the cures which the grace of Christ wrought by their hands. But as it appears Divine Providence permitted them to endure these evils, having for them provided something better, that through their sufferings others might obtain the salvation of God, and this subsequent events seem to prove. When therefore these wonderful men proved superior to all the violence which was exercised toward them, Lucius in despair advised the military chief to send the fathers of the monks into exile: these were the Egyptian Macarius, and his namesake of Alexandria, both of whom were accordingly banished to an island where there was no Christian inhabitant, and in this island there was an idolatrous temple, and a priest whom the inhabitants worshiped as a god. On the arrival of these holy men at the island, the demons of that place were filled with fear and trepidation. Now it happened at the same time that the priest’s daughter became suddenly possessed by a demon, and began to act with great fury, and to overturn everything that came in her way; nor was any force sufficient to restrain her, but she cried with a loud voice to these saints of God, saying:—‘Why are ye come here to cast us out from hence also?’ Then did the 635 Heb. xi. 36–38.

636 Heb. xi. 40.
637 Matt. viii. 29.
men there also display the peculiar power which they had received through Divine grace: for having cast out the demon from the maid, and presented her cured to her father, they led the priest himself, and also all the inhabitants of the island to the Christian faith. Whereupon they immediately brake their images in pieces, and changed the form of their temple into that of a church; and having been baptized, they joyfully received instruction in the doctrines of Christianity. Thus these marvelous individuals, after enduring persecution on account of the 'homoousian' faith, were themselves more approved, became the means of salvation to others, and confirmed the truth.
Chapter XXV.—Of Didymus the Blind Man. 638

About the same period God brought into observation another faithful person, deeming it worthy that through him faith might be witnessed unto: this was Didymus, a most admirable and eloquent man, instructed in all the learning of the age in which he flourished. At a very early age, when he had scarcely acquired the first elements of learning, he was attacked by disease in the eyes which deprived him of sight. But God compensated to him the loss of corporeal vision, by bestowing increased intellectual acumen. For what he could not learn by seeing, he was enabled to acquire through the sense of hearing; so that being from his childhood endowed with excellent abilities, he soon far surpassed his youthful companions who possessed the keenest sight. He made himself master of the principles of grammar and rhetoric with astonishing facility; and proceeded thence to philosophical studies, dialectics, arithmetic, music, and the various other departments of knowledge to which his attention was directed; and he so treasured up in his mind these branches of science, that he was prepared with the utmost readiness to enter into a discussion of these subjects with those who had become conversant therewith by reading books. Not only this, but he was so well acquainted with the Divine oracles contained in the Old and New Testament that he composed several treatises in exposition of them, besides three books on the Trinity. He published also commentaries 639 on Origen's book Of Principles, in which he commends these writings, saying that they are excellent, and that those who calumniate their author, and speak slightingly of his works, are mere cavilers. 'For,' says he, 'they are destitute of sufficient penetration to comprehend the profound wisdom of that extraordinary man.' Those who may desire to form a just idea of the extensive erudition of Didymus, and the intense ardor of his mind, must peruse with attention his diversified and elaborate works. It is said that after Anthony had conversed for some time with this Didymus, long before the reign of Valens, when he came from the desert to Alexandria on account of the Arians, perceiving the learning and intelligence of the man, he said to him, 'Didymus, let not the loss of your bodily eyes distress you: for you are deprived of such eyes merely as are the common possession of gnats and flies; rather rejoice that you have eyes such as angels see with, by which the Deity himself is discerned, and his light comprehended.' This address of the pious Anthony to Didymus was made long before the times we are describing: in fact Didymus was then regarded as the great bulwark of the true faith, answering the Arians, whose sophistic cavilings he fully exposed, triumphantly refuting all their vain subtleties and deceptive reasonings.

639 Mentioned by Jerome, adv. Rufinum, 1.
Chapter XXVI.—Of Basil of Cæsarea, and Gregory of Nazianzus.

Now Providence opposed Didymus to the Arians at Alexandria. But for the purpose of confuting them in other cities, it raised up Basil of Cæsarea and Gregory of Nazianzus; concerning these it will be reasonable to give a brief account in this place. Indeed the universally prevalent memory of the men would be enough as a token of their fame; and the extent of their knowledge is sufficiently perceptible in their writings. Since, however, the exercise of their talents was of great service to the Church, tending in a high degree to the maintenance of the catholic faith, the nature of my history obliges me to take particular notice of these two persons. If any one should compare Basil and Gregory with one another, and consider the life, morals, and virtues of each, he would find it difficult to decide to which of them he ought to assign the pre-eminence: so equally did they both appear to excel, whether you regard the rectitude of their conduct, or their deep acquaintance with Greek literature and the sacred Scriptures. In their youth they were pupils at Athens of Himerius, Prohæresius, the most celebrated sophists of that age: subsequently they frequented the school of Libanius at Antioch in Syria, where they cultivated rhetoric to the utmost. Having been deemed worthy of the profession of sophistry, they were urged by many of their friends to enter the profession of teaching eloquence; others would have persuaded them to practice law: but despising both these pursuits, they abandoned their former studies, and embraced the monastic life. Having had some slight taste of philosophical science from him who then taught it at Antioch, they procured Origen’s works, and drew from them the right interpretation of the sacred Scriptures; for the fame of Origen was very great and widespread throughout the whole world at that time; after a careful perusal of the writings of that great man, they contended against the Arians with manifest advantage. And when the defenders of Arianism quoted the same author in confirmation, as they imagined, of their own views, these two confuted them, and clearly proved that their opponents did not at all understand the reasoning of Origen. Indeed, although Eunomius, who was then 640 For full accounts of the lives of these eminent men, see Smith and Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog., and the sources and literature therein referred to.

641 Himerius, a native of Prusias (mod. Broussa) in Bithynia, flourished about 360 a.d. as a sophist under Julian the Apostate. He published various discourses, which, according to Photius, contained insidious attacks on Christianity. Cf. Eunapius, p. 153, under title Prohæresius; Photius, Bibl. Cod. 165.

642 Prohæresius was a native of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and taught in Athens a short time before Libanius. Cf. Eunapius, Prohæresius, par. 129–162.

643 This is doubted by Valesius on the ground that Gregory in his autobiography (in verse) says that he was thirty years of age when he left Athens, where his friends wished him to stay and teach rhetoric; but if he stayed at Athens until the thirtieth year of his age, it is not likely that he could have studied with Libanius after that time. So also Rufinus, H. E. II. 9.

644 Cf. chap. 7 of the present book.
their champion, and many others on the side of the Arians were considered men of great eloquence, yet whenever they attempted to enter into controversy with Gregory and Basil, they appeared in comparison with them ignorant and illiterate. Basil being ordained to the office of deacon, was by Meletius, bishop of Antioch, from that rank elevated to the bishopric of Caesarea in Cappadocia, which was his native country. Thither he therefore hastened, fearing lest these Arian dogmas should have infected the provinces of Pontus; and in order to counteract them, he founded several monasteries, diligently instructed the people in his own doctrines, and confirmed the faith of those whose minds were wavering. Gregory being constituted bishop of Nazianzus, a small city of Cappadocia over which his own father had before presided, pursued a course similar to that which Basil took; for he went through the various cities, and strengthened the weak in faith. To Constantinople in particular he made frequent visits, and by his ministrations there, comforted and assured the orthodox believers, wherefore a short time after, by the suffrage of many bishops, he was made bishop of the church at Constantinople. When intelligence of the proceedings of these two zealous and devoted men reached the ears of the emperor Valens, he immediately ordered Basil to be brought from Caesarea to Antioch; where being arraigned before the tribunal of the prefect, that functionary asked him ‘why he would not embrace the emperor’s faith?’ Basil with much boldness condemned the errors of that creed which his sovereign countenanced, and vindicated the doctrine of the homoousion: and when the prefect threatened him with death, ‘Would,’ said Basil, ‘that I might be released from the bonds of the body for the truth’s sake.’ The prefect having exhorted him to reconsider the matter more seriously, Basil is reported to have said, ‘I am the same to-day that I shall be to-morrow: but I wish that you had not changed yourself.’ At that time, therefore, Basil remained in custody throughout the day. It happened, however, not long afterwards that Galates, the emperor’s infant son, was attacked with a dangerous malady, so that the physicians despaired of his recovery; when the empress Dominica, his mother, assured the emperor that she had been greatly disquieted in her dreams by fearful visions, which led her to believe that the child’s illness was a chastisement on account of the ill treatment of the bishop. The emperor after a little reflection sent for Basil, and in order to prove his faith said to him, ‘If the doctrine you maintain is 645 Rufinus (H. E. II. 9) says this. But from Gregory’s own works (Orat. VIII.) it appears that he was not made bishop of Nazianzus but assistant to his father, and on the express condition that he should not succeed his father. He was first consecrated bishop of Sasimi by Basil the Great, from thence transferred to Constantinople, but resigned that bishopric (V. 7) and retired to Nazianzus, where he remained bishop until he chose his successor there.

646 Sozomen (VI. 16) says that Valens came from Antioch to Caesarea and ordered Basil to be brought before the prefect of the praetorium. This account agrees better with what both Gregory of Nazianzus and Gregory of Nyssa say of this experience of Basil.
the truth, pray that my son may not die.’ ‘If your majesty should believe as I do,’ replied Basil, ‘and the church should be unified, the child shall live.’ To these conditions the emperor would not agree: ‘God’s will concerning the child will be done then,’ said Basil; as Basil said this the emperor ordered him to be dismissed; the child, however, died shortly after. Such is an epitome of the history of these distinguished ecclesiastics, both of whom have left us many admirable works, some of which Rufinus says he has translated into Latin. Basil had two brothers, Peter and Gregory; the former of whom adopted Basil’s monastic mode of life; while the latter emulated his eloquence in teaching, and completed after his death Basil’s treatise on the Six Days’ Work, which had been left unfinished. He also pronounced at Constantinople the funeral oration of Meletius, bishop of Antioch; and many other orations of his are still extant.
Chapter XXVII.—Of Gregory Thaumaturgus (the Wonder-Worker).

But since from the likeness of the name, and the title of the books attributed to Gregory, persons are liable to confound very different parties, it is important to notice that Gregory of Pontus is a different person. He was a native of Neocaesarea in Pontus, of greater antiquity than the one above referred to, inasmuch as he was a disciple of Origen. This Gregory’s fame was celebrated at Athens, at Berytus, throughout the entire diocese of Pontus, and I might almost add in the whole world. When he had finished his education in the schools of Athens, he went to Berytus to study civil law, where hearing that Origen expounded the Holy Scriptures at Caesarea, he quickly proceeded thither; and after his understanding had been opened to perceive the grandeur of these Divine books, bidding adieu to all further cultivation of the Roman laws, he became thenceforth inseparable from Origen, from whom having acquired a knowledge of the true philosophy, he was recalled soon after by his parents and returned to his own country; and there, while still a layman, he performed many miracles, healing the sick, and casting out devils even by his letters, insomuch that the pagans were no less attracted to the faith by his acts, than by his discourses. Pamphilus Martyr mentions this person in the books which he wrote in defence of Origen; to which there is added a commendatory oration of Gregory’s, composed in praise of Origen, when he was under the necessity of leaving him. There were then, to be brief, several Gregories: the first and most ancient was the disciple of Origen; the second was the bishop of Nazianzus; the third was Basil’s brother; and there was another Gregory whom the Arians constituted bishop during the exile of Athanasius. But enough has been said respecting them.

647 On Gregory Thaumaturgus in general, see Euseb. H. E. VI. 30.
648 Cf. II. 11.
Chapter XXVIII.—Of Novatus and his Followers. The Novatians of Phrygia alter the Time of keeping Easter, following Jewish Usage.

About this time the Novatians inhabiting Phrygia changed the day for celebrating the Feast of Easter. How this happened I shall state, after first explaining the reason of the strict discipline which is maintained in their church, even to the present day, in the provinces of Phrygia and Paphlagonia. Novatus, a presbyter of the Roman Church, separated from it, because Cornelius the bishop received into communion believers who had sacrificed during the persecution which the Emperor Decius had raised against the Church. Having seceded on this account, on being afterwards elevated to the episcopacy by such bishops as entertained similar sentiments, he wrote to all the churches that 'they should not admit to the sacred mysteries those who had sacrificed; but exhorting them to repentance, leave the pardoning of their offense to God, who has the power to forgive all sin.' Receiving such letters, the parties in the various provinces, to whom they were addressed, acted according to their several dispositions and judgments. As he asked that they should not receive to the sacraments those who after baptism had committed any deadly sin this appeared to some a cruel and merciless course: but others received the rule as just and conducive to the maintenance of discipline, and the promotion of greater devotedness of life. In the midst of the agitation of this question, letters arrived from Cornelius the bishop, promising indulgence to delinquents after baptism. Thus as these two persons wrote contrary to one another, and each confirmed his own procedure by the testimony of the Divine word, as it usually happens, every one identified himself with that view which favored his previous habits and inclinations. Those who had pleasure in sin, encouraged by the license then granted them, took occasion from it to revel in every species of criminality. Now the Phrygians appear to be more temperate than other nations, and are seldom guilty of swearing. The Scythians, on the other hand, and the Thracians, are naturally of a very irritable disposition: while the 650 His right name was Novatian, although the Greek writers call him uniformly Navatus, ignoring or confusing him with another person whose name is strictly Novatus. Cf. Jerome, Scriptor. Eccles. LXX.; also Smith and Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog.

---

651 This was the great Seventh Persecution, and the first which historians agree in calling strictly 'general.' It took place in 249–251 a.d., and consisted in a systematic effort to uproot Christianity throughout the empire. Many eminent Christians were put to death during its course, and others, among whom was Origen, were tortured. Cf. Origen, Contra Celsum, III.; Gregory of Nyssa, Vita Gregori Thaumaturg. III.; Euseb. H. E. VI. 40–42.

652 Cf. I. 10.

653 1 John v. 16, 17.
inhabitants of the East are addicted to sensual pleasures. But the Paphlagonians and Phrygians are prone to neither of these vices; nor are the sports of the circus and theatrical exhibitions in much estimation among them even to the present day. And for this reason, it seems to me, these people, as well as others of the same character, so readily assented to the letters then written by Novatus. Fornication and adultery are regarded among them as the grossest enormities: and it is well known that there is no race of men on the face of the earth who more rigidly govern their passions in this respect than the Phrygians and Paphlagonians. The same reason I think had force with those who dwelt in the West and followed Novatus. Yet although for the sake of stricter discipline Novatus became a separatist, he made no change in the time of keeping Easter, but invariably observed the practice that obtained in the Western churches. For they celebrate this feast after the equinox, according to the usage which had of old been delivered to them when first they embraced Christianity. He himself indeed afterwards suffered martyrdom in the reign of Valerian, during the persecution which was then raised against the Christians. But those in Phrygia who are named after him Novatians, about this period changed the day of celebrating Easter, being averse to communion with other Christians even on this occasion. This was effected by means of a few obscure bishops of that sect convening a Synod at the village of Pazum, which is situated near the sources of the river Sangarius; for there they framed a canon appointing its observance on the same day as that on which the Jews annually keep the feast of Unleavened Bread. An aged man, who was the son of a presbyter, and had been present with his father at this Synod, gave us our information on this matter. But both Agelius, bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople, and Maximus of Nicæa, as also the bishops of Nicomedia and Cotyæum, were absent, although the ecclesiastical affairs of the Novatians were for the most part under the control of these bishops. How the church of the Novatians soon after was divided into two parties in consequence of this Synod, shall be related in its proper course: but we must now notice what took place about the same time in the Western parts.

---

654 Cf. I. 8 and note.
655 The accuracy of this statement is disputed by Valesius, who asserts that the Novatians wrote a book entitled The Martyrdom of Novatian, but that this book was full of false statements and fables, and had been disproved by Eulogius, bishop of Alexandria in the sixth book of his treatise Against the Novatians. Besides, in this Martyrdom of Novatian the founder of the sect was not represented as suffering martyrdom, but simply as being a ‘confessor.’ Cf. I. 8, note 12.
656 Let it be noted that Novatian was a native of Phrygia and naturally had many followers in that province.
657 V. 21.

While the emperor Valentinian governed in peace, and interfered with no sect, Damasus after Liberius undertook the administration of the bishopric at Rome, whereupon a great disturbance was caused on the following account. A certain Ursinus, a deacon of that church, had been nominated among others when the election of a bishop took place; as Damasus was preferred, this Ursinus, unable to bear the disappointment of his hopes, held schismatic assemblies apart from the church, and even induced certain bishops of little distinction to ordain him in secret. This ordination was made, not in a church, but in a retired place called the Palace of Sicine, whereupon dissension arose among the people; their disagreement being not about any article of faith or heresy, but simply as to who should be bishop. Hence frequent conflicts arose, insomuch that many lives were sacrificed in this contention; and many of the clergy as well as laity were punished on that account by Maximin, the prefect of the city. Thus was Ursinus obliged to desist from his pretensions at that time, and those who were minded to follow him were reduced to order.

658 Socrates follows Rufinus here (cf. Rufin. H. E. II. 10; but Jerome, Chronicon, puts the consecration of Damasus as bishop of Rome in the third year of Valentinian’s reign, i.e. in 367. Cf. also Clinton, Fasti Rom. Ann. 367.

659 Am. Marcellinus (Rerum Gestarum, XXVII. 3. 12, 13) says that during the disturbance one hundred and thirty-seven citizens were killed in the course of a single day.

660 Damasus was a Spaniard by race, native of Mantua, patron of Jerome in his biblical researches. Cf. Jerome, ad Damas. Smith & Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog.

Chapter XXX.—Dissension about a Successor to Auxentius, Bishop of Milan. Ambrose, Governor of the Province, going to appease the Tumult, is by General Consent and with the Approval of the Emperor Valentinian elected to the Bishopric of that Church.

About the same time it happened that another event took place at Milan well worthy of being recorded. On the death of Auxentius, who had been ordained bishop of that church by the Arians, the people again were disturbed respecting the election of a successor; for as some proposed one person, and others favored another, the city was full of contention and uproar. In this state of things the governor of the province, Ambrose by name, who was also of consular dignity, dreading some catastrophe from the popular excitement, ran into the church in order to quell the disturbance. As he arrived there and the people became quiet, he repressed the irrational fury of the multitude by a long and appropriate address, by urging such motives as they felt to be right, and all present suddenly came to an unanimous agreement, crying out 'that Ambrose was worthy of the bishopric,' and demanding his ordination: 'for by that means only,' it was alleged, 'would the peace of the church be secured, and all be reunited in the same faith and judgment.' And inasmuch as such unanimity among the people appeared to the bishops then present to proceed from some Divine appointment, immediately they laid hands on Ambrose; and having baptized him—for he was then but a catechumen—they were about to invest him with the episcopal office. But although Ambrose willingly received baptism, he with great earnestness refused to be ordained: upon which the bishops referred the matter to the Emperor Valentinian. This prince regarding the universal consent of the people as the work of God, sent word to the bishops to do the will of God by ordaining him; declaring that 'his choice was by the voice of God rather than by the votes of men.' Ambrose was therefore ordained; and thus the inhabitants of Milan who were divided among themselves, were once more restored to unity.

662 Synchronization of the events attending the accession of Damasus and Ambrose, the former in Rome, the latter at Milan, is dependent on Rufinus. Cf. H. E. II. 11. The events of this chapter more properly fall within the time reached by Socrates, i.e. 374 a.d. (see chap. 29, note 1). Hence rightly seven years later than the events of the preceding chapter.

663 A Roman by race, born in 333 a.d., turned to ecclesiastical and literary pursuits in the manner described in this chapter. Cf. Sozom. VI. 24; Theodoret, H. E. IV. 6; Rufinus, H. E. II. 11.
Chapter XXXI.—Death of Valentinian.

The Sarmatæ after this having made incursions into the Roman territories, the emperor marched against them with a numerous army but when the barbarians understood the formidable nature of this expedition, they sent an embassy to him to sue for peace on certain conditions. As the ambassadors were introduced to the emperor’s presence, and appeared to him to be not very dignified fellows, he enquired whether all the Sarmatæ were such as these? As they replied that the noblest personages of their whole nation had come to him, Valentinian became excessively enraged, and exclaimed with great vehemence, that ‘the Roman empire was indeed most wretched in devolving upon him at a time when a nation of such despicable barbarians, not content with being permitted to exist in safety within their own limits, dared to take up arms, invade the Roman territories, and break forth into open war.’ The violence of his manner and utterance of these words was so great, that all his veins were opened by the effort, and all the arteries ruptured; and from the quantity of blood which thereupon gushed forth he died. This occurred at Bergition Castle, after Gratian’s third consulate\(^\text{664}\) in conjunction with Equitius, on the seventeenth day of November, Valentinian having lived fifty-four years and reigned thirteen. Upon the decease of Valentinian, six days after his death the army in Italy proclaimed his son Valentinian, then a young child, emperor, at Acincum, a city of Italy.\(^\text{665}\) When this was announced to the other two emperors, they were displeased, not because the brother of the one and the nephew of the other had been declared emperor, but because the military presumed to proclaim him without consulting them, whom they themselves wished to have proclaimed. They both, however, ratified the transaction, and thus was Valentinian the younger seated on his father’s throne. Now this Valentinian was born of Justina, whom Valentinian the elder married while Severa his former wife was alive, under the following circumstances. Justus the father of Justina, who had been governor of Picenum under the reign of Constantius, had a dream in which he seemed to himself to bring forth the imperial purple out of his right side. When this dream had been told to many persons, it at length came to the knowledge of Constantius, who conjecturing it to be a presage that a descendant of Justus would become emperor, caused him to be assassinated. Justina being thus bereft of her father, still continued a virgin. Some time after she became known to Severa, wife of the emperor Valentinian, and had frequent intercourse with the empress, until their intimacy at length grew to such an extent that they were accustomed to bathe together. When Severa saw Justina in the bath she was greatly struck with the beauty of the virgin, and spoke of her to the emperor; saying that the daughter of Justus was so lovely a creature, and possessed of such symmetry of form, that she herself, though a woman, was altogether charmed with

\(^{664}\) 375 a.d.

\(^{665}\) Rather Pannonia.
The emperor, treasuring this description by his wife in his own mind, considered with himself how he could espouse Justina, without repudiating Severa, as she had borne him Gratian, whom he had created Augustus a little while before. He accordingly framed a law, and caused it to be published throughout all the cities, by which any man was permitted to have two lawful wives. The law was promulgated and he married Justina, by whom he had Valentinian the younger, and three daughters, Justa, Grata, and Galla; the two former of these remained virgins: but Calla was afterwards married to the emperor Theodosius the Great, who had by her a daughter named Placidia. For that prince had Arcadius and Honorius by Flaccilla his former wife: we shall however enter into particulars respecting Theodosius and his sons in the proper place.

666 Baronius (Am. IV. 272) and Valesius in this passage agree in looking upon this whole story as a groundless fiction which some pretended eyewitness palmed off on Socrates. The law mentioned here is never mentioned by any other historian; no vestige of it is found in any of the codes; on the contrary, according to Bingham (Christ. Antiq. XVI. 11), bigamy and polygamy were treated with the utmost severity in the ancient Church, and the Roman law was very much against them; furthermore, Am. Marcellinus (XXX.) says that Valentinian was remarkable for his chastity, both at home and abroad, and Zosimus (IV. 19) that his second wife had been married to Magnentius previously [and hence was not a virgin as here stated] and that he married her after the death of his first wife; all of which considerations taken together render it historically certain that the story is not true.

667 Cf. V. 2; VI. 1.
Chapter XXXII.—The Emperor Valens, appeased by the Oration of Themistius the Philosopher, abates his Persecution of the Christians.

In the meanwhile Valens, making his residence at Antioch, was wholly undisturbed by foreign wars; for the barbarians on every side restrained themselves within their own boundaries. Nevertheless, he himself waged a most cruel war against those who maintained the ‘homoousian’ doctrine, inflicting on them more grievous punishments every day; until the philosopher Themistius by his Appealing Oration somewhat moderated his severity. In this speech he tells the emperor, ‘That he ought not to be surprised at the difference of judgment on religious questions existing among Christians; inasmuch as that discrepancy was trifling when compared with the multitude of conflicting opinions current among the heathen; for these amount to above three hundred; that dissension indeed was an inevitable consequence of this disagreement; but that God would be the more glorified by a diversity of sentiment, and the greatness of his majesty be more venerated, from the fact of its not being easy to have a knowledge of Him.’ The philosopher having said these and similar things, the emperor became milder, but did not completely give up his wrath; for although he ceased to put ecclesiastics to death, he continued to send them into exile, until this fury of his also was repressed by the following event.

668 This oration of Themistius is extant in a Latin translation by Dudithius appended to G. Remo’s Themistii Phil. orationes sex augustales, and entitled, ad Valentem, pro Libertate religionis. The passage alluded to by Socrates is found in Dudithius as follows: ‘Wherefore, in regard God has removed himself at the greatest distance from our knowledge, and does not humble to the capacity of our understanding; it is a sufficient argument that he does not require one and the same law and rule of religion from all persons, but leaves every man a license and faculty concerning himself, according to his own, not another man’s, liberty and choice. Whence it also happens that a greater admiration of the Deity, and a more religious veneration of his eternal majesty, is engendered in the minds of men. For it usually comes to pass that we loathe and disregard those things which are readily apparent and prostrated to every understanding.’

288
Chapter XXXIII.—The Goths, under the Reign of Valens, embrace Christianity.

The barbarians, dwelling beyond the Danube, called the Goths, having engaged in a civil war among themselves, were divided into two parties, one of which was headed by Fritigernes, the other by Athanaric. When the latter had obtained an evident advantage over his rival, Fritigernes had recourse to the Romans, and implored their assistance against his adversary. This was reported to the Emperor Valens, and he ordered the troops which were garrisoned in Thrace to assist those barbarians who had appealed to him against their more powerful countrymen; and by means of this subsidy they won a complete victory over Athanaric beyond the Danube, totally routing the enemy. This became the occasion for the conversion of many of the barbarians to the Christian religion: for Fritigernes, to express his sense of the obligation the emperor had conferred upon him, embraced the religion of his benefactor, and urged those who were under his authority to do the same. Therefore it is that so many of the Goths are even to the present time infected with the errors of Arianism, they having on the occasion preferred to become adherents to that heresy on the emperor’s account. Ulfilas, their bishop at that time, invented the Gothic letters and translating the Sacred Scriptures into their own language, undertook to instruct these barbarians in the Divine oracles. And as Ulfilas did not restrict his labors to the subjects of Fritigernes, but extended them to those who acknowledged the sway of Athanaric also, Athanaric regarding this as a violation of the privileges of the religion of his ancestors, subjected those who professed Christianity to severe punishments; so that many of the Arian Goths of that period became martyrs. Arius indeed, failing in his attempt to refute the opinion of Sabellius the Libyan, fell from the true faith, and asserted the Son of God to be ‘a new God’: but the barbarians embracing Christianity with greater simplicity of mind despised the present life for the faith of Christ. With these remarks we shall close our notice of the Christianized Goths.

670 For a slightly differing account of the conversion of the Goths and the labors of Ulfilas, see Philostorgius, II. 5.

671 By selecting from the Greek and Latin alphabets such characters as appeared to him to best suit the sounds of his native language. For a similar invention of an alphabet as a consequence of the introduction of Christianity, compare the Slavonic invented by Cyril and Methodius and a great number of instances in the history of modern missions.

672 Cf. Deut. xxxii. 7.
Chapter XXXIV.—Admission of the Fugitive Goths into the Roman Territories, which caused the Emperor’s Overthrow, and eventually the Ruin of the Roman Empire.

Not long after the barbarians had entered into a friendly alliance with one another, they were again vanquished by other barbarians, their neighbors, called the Huns; and being driven out of their own country, they fled into the territory of the Romans, offering to be subject to the emperor, and to execute whatever he should command them. When Valens was made acquainted with this, not having the least presentiment of the consequences, he ordered that the suppliants should be received with kindness; in this one instance alone showing himself compassionate. He therefore assigned them certain parts of Thrace for their habitation, deeming himself peculiarly fortunate in this matter: for he calculated that in future he should possess a ready and well-equipped army against all assailants; and hoped that the barbarians would be a more formidable guard to the frontiers of the empire even than the Romans themselves. For this reason he in the future neglected to recruit his army by Roman levies; and despising those veterans who had bravely straggled and subdued his enemies in former wars, he put a pecuniary value on the militia which the inhabitants of the provinces, village by village, had been accustomed to furnish, ordering the collectors of his tribute to demand eighty pieces of gold for every soldier, although he had never before lightened the public burdens. This change was the origin of many disasters to the Roman empire subsequently.
Chapter XXXV.—Abatement of Persecution against the Christians because of the War with the Goths.

The barbarians having been put into possession of Thrace, and securely enjoying that Roman province, were unable to bear their good fortune with moderation; but committing hostile aggressions upon their benefactors, devastated all Thrace and the adjacent countries. When these proceedings came to the knowledge of Valens, he desisted from sending the adherents of the homoousion into banishment; and in great alarm left Antioch, and came to Constantinople, where also the persecution of the orthodox Christians was for the same reason come to an end. At the same time Euzoïus, bishop of the Arians at Antioch, departed this life, in the fifth consulate \(^{673}\) of Valens, and the first of Valentinian the younger; and Dorotheus was appointed in his place.

\(^{673}\) 376 a.d.
Chapter XXXVI.—The Saracens, under Mavia their Queen, embrace Christianity; and Moses, a Pious Monk, is consecrated their Bishop.

No sooner had the emperor departed from Antioch, than the Saracens, who had before been in alliance with the Romans, revolted from them, being led by Mavia their queen, whose husband was then dead. All the regions of the East therefore were at that time ravaged by the Saracens: but a certain divine Providence repressed their fury in the manner I am about to describe. A person named Moses, a Saracen by birth, who led a monastic life in the desert, became exceedingly eminent for his piety, faith, and miracles. Mavia the queen of the Saracens was therefore desirous that this person should be constituted bishop over her nation, and promised on the condition to terminate the war. The Roman generals considering that a peace founded on such terms would be extremely advantageous, gave immediate directions for its ratification. Moses was accordingly seized, and brought from the desert to Alexandria, in order that he might there be invested with the bishopric: but on his presentation for that purpose to Lucius, who at that time presided over the churches in that city, he refused to be ordained by him, protesting against it in these words: ‘I account myself indeed unworthy of the sacred office; but if the exigencies of the state require my bearing it, it shall not be by Lucius laying his hand on me, for it has been filled with blood.’ When Lucius told him that it was his duty to learn from him the principles of religion, and not to utter reproachful language, Moses replied, ‘Matters of faith are not now in question: but your infamous practices against the brethren sufficiently prove that your doctrines are not Christian. For a Christian is “no striker, reviles not, does not fight”; for “it becomes not a servant of the Lord to fight.” But your deeds cry out against you by those who have been sent into exile, who have been exposed to the wild beasts, and who had been delivered up to the flames. Those things which our own eyes have beheld are far more convincing than what we receive from the report of another.’ As Moses expressed these and other similar sentiments his friends took him to the mountains, that he might receive ordination from those bishops who lived in exile there. Moses having thus been consecrated, the Saracen war was terminated; and so scrupulously did Mavia observe the peace thus entered into with the Romans that she gave her daughter in marriage to Victor the commander-in-chief of the Roman army. Such were the transactions in relation to the Saracens.

---

674 The name Saracen (Σαρακηνός, perhaps from the Arabic Sharkeen ‘Orientals’) was used vaguely at first; the Greek writers of the first centuries gave it to the Bedouin Arabs of Eastern Arabia, while others used it to designate the Arab races of Syria and Palestine, and others the Berber of North Eastern Africa, who later conquered Spain and Sicily and invaded France. The name became very familiar in Europe during the period of the Crusades. On Saracens, consult the interesting fiftieth chapter of Gibbon’s Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.

675 2 Tim. ii. 24.
Chapter XXXVII.—After the Departure of Valens from Antioch, the Alexandrians expel Lucius, and restore Peter, who had come with Letters from Damasus Bishop of Rome.

About the same time, as soon as the Emperor Valens left Antioch, all those who had anywhere been suffering persecution began again to take courage, and especially those of Alexandria. Peter returned to that city from Rome, with letters from Damasus the Roman bishop, in which he confirmed the ‘homoousian’ faith, and sanctioned Peter’s ordination. The people therefore resuming confidence, expelled Lucius, who immediately embarked for Constantinople: but Peter survived his re-establishment a very short time, and at his death appointed his brother Timothy to succeed him.
Chapter XXXVIII.—The Emperor Valens is ridiculed by the People on Account of the Goths; undertakes an Expedition against them and is slain in an Engagement near Adrianople.

The Emperor Valens arrived at Constantinople on the 30th of May, in the sixth year of his own consulate, and the second of Valentinian the Younger, and found the people in a very dejected state of mind: for the barbarians, who had already desolated Thrace, were now laying waste the very suburbs of Constantinople, there being no adequate force at hand to resist them. But when they undertook to make near approaches, even to the walls of the city, the people became exceedingly troubled, and began to murmur against the emperor; accusing him of having brought on the enemy thither, and then indolently prolonging the struggle there, instead of at once marching out against the barbarians. Moreover at the exhibition of the sports of the Hippodrome, all with one voice clamored against the emperor’s negligence of the public affairs, crying out with great earnestness, ‘Give us arms, and we ourselves will fight.’ The emperor provoked at these seditious clamors, marched out of the city, on the 11th of June; threatening that if he returned, he would punish the citizens not only for their insolent reproaches, but for having previously favored the pretensions of the usurper Procopius; declaring also that he would utterly demolish their city, and cause the plough to pass over its ruins, he advanced against the barbarians, whom he routed with great slaughter, and pursued as far as Adrianople, a city of Thrace, situated on the frontiers of Macedonia. Having at that place again engaged the enemy, who had by this time rallied, he lost his life on the 9th of August, under the consulate just mentioned, and in the fourth year of the 289th Olympiad. Some have asserted that he was burnt to death in a village whither he had retired, which the barbarians assaulted and set on fire. But others affirm that having put off his imperial robe he ran into the midst of the main body of infantry; and that when the cavalry revolted and refused to engage, the infantry were surrounded by the barbarians, and completely destroyed in a body. Among these it is said the emperor fell, but could not be distinguished, in consequence of his not having on his imperial habit. He died in the fiftieth year of his age, having reigned in conjunction with his brother thirteen years, and three years after the death of the brother. This book therefore contains [the course of events during] the space of sixteen years.

676 378 a.d.
Book V.

Introduction.

Before we begin the fifth book of our history, we must beg those who may peruse this treatise, not to censure us too hastily because having set out to write a church history we still intermingle with ecclesiastical matters, such an account of the wars which took place during the period under consideration, as could be duly authenticated. For this we have done for several reasons: first, in order to lay before our readers an exact statement of facts; but secondly, in order that the minds of the readers might not become satiated with the repetition of the contentious disputes of bishops, and their insidious designs against one another; but more especially that it might be made apparent, that whenever the affairs of the state were disturbed, those of the Church, as if by some vital sympathy, became disordered also. Indeed whoever shall attentively examine the subject will find, that the mischiefs of the state, and the troubles of the church have been inseparably connected; for he will perceive that they have either arisen together, or immediately succeeded one another. Sometimes the affairs of the Church come first in order; then commotions in the state follow, and sometimes the reverse, so that I cannot believe this invariable interchange is merely fortuitous, but am persuaded that it proceeds from our iniquities; and that these evils are inflicted upon us as merited chastisements, if indeed as the apostle truly says, ‘Some men’s sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after.’

For this reason we have interwoven many affairs of the state with our ecclesiastical history. Of the wars carried on during the reign of Constantine we have made no mention, having found no account of them that could be depended upon because of their iniquity: but of subsequent events, as much information as we could gather from those still living in the order of their occurrence, we have passed in rapid review. We have continually included the emperors in these historical details; because from the time they began to profess the Christian religion, the affairs of the Church have depended on them, so that even the greatest Synods have been, and still are convened by their appointment. Finally, we have particularly noticed the Arian heresy, because it has so greatly disquieted the churches. Let these remarks be considered sufficient in the way of preface: we shall now proceed with our history.

677 The views here expressed show a crude conception of the vital relation between church and state. The very tone of apology which tinges their expression is based on a misconception of the idea of history. But Socrates was not below his age in this respect. See Introd., p. xiii.

678 1 Tim. v. 24.

679 For the risks of this method, see IV. 31 and note.
Chapter I.—After the Death of Valens the Goths again attack Constantinople, and are repulsed by the Citizens, aided by Some Saracen Auxiliaries.

After the Emperor Valens had thus lost his life, in a manner which has never been satisfactorily ascertained, the barbarians again approached the very walls of Constantinople, and laid waste the suburbs on every side of it. Whereat the people becoming indignant armed themselves with whatever weapons they could severally lay hands on, and sallied forth of their own accord against the enemy. The empress Dominica caused the same pay to be distributed out of the imperial treasury to such as volunteered to go out on this service, as was usually allowed to soldiers. A few Saracens also assisted the citizens, being confederates, who had been sent by Mavia their queen: the latter we have already mentioned. In this way the people having fought at this time, the barbarians retired to a great distance from the city.

---

680 See Gibbon, Decline and Fall, chap. 26.
681 Cf. IV. 36.
Chapter II.—The Emperor Gratian recalls the Orthodox Bishops, and expels the Heretics from the Churches. He takes Theodosius as his Colleague in the Empire.

Gratian being now in possession of the empire, together with Valentinian the younger, and condemning the cruel policy of his uncle Valens towards the [orthodox] Christians, recalled those whom he had sent into exile. He moreover enacted that persons of all sects, without distinction, might securely assemble together in their churches; and that only the Eunomians, Photinians, and Manichæans should be excluded from the churches. Being also sensible of the languishing condition of the Roman empire, and of the growing power of the barbarians and perceiving that the state was in need of a brave and prudent man, he took Theodosius as his colleague in the sovereign power. This [Theodosius] was descended from a noble family in Spain, and had acquired so distinguished a celebrity for his prowess in the wars, that he was universally considered worthy of imperial dignity, even before Gratian’s election of him. Having therefore proclaimed him emperor at Sirmium a city of Illyricum in the consulate of Ausonius and Olybrius, on the 16th of January, he divided with him the care of managing the war against the barbarians.

682 Cf. IV. 7.
683 Cf. II. 18.
684 Cf. I. 22.
685 379 a.d.
Chapter III.—The Principal Bishops who flourished at that Time.

Now at this time Damasus who had succeeded Liberius then presided over the church at Rome. Cyril was still in possession of that at Jerusalem. The Antiochian church, as we have stated, was divided into three parts: for the Arians had chosen Dorotheus as the successor of their bishop Euzoïus; while one portion of the rest was under the government of Paulinus, and the others ranged themselves with Melitius, who had been recalled from exile. Lucius, although absent, having been compelled to leave Alexandria, yet maintained the episcopal authority among the Arians of that city; the Homoousians there being headed by Timothy, who succeeded Peter. At Constantinople Demophilus the successor of Eudoxius presided over the Arian faction, and was in possession of the churches; but those who were averse to communion with him held their assemblies apart.\textsuperscript{686}
Chapter IV.—The Macedonians, who had subscribed the 'Homoousian' Doctrine, return to their Former Error.

After the deputation from the Macedonians to Liberius, that sect was admitted to entire communion with the churches in every city, intermixing themselves indiscriminately with those who from the beginning had embraced the form of faith published at Nicæa. But when the law of the Emperor Gratian permitted the several sects to reunite without restraint in the public services of religion, they again resolved to separate themselves; and having met at Antioch in Syria, they decided to avoid the word homoousios again, and in no way to hold communion with the supporters of the Nicene Creed. They however derived no advantage from this attempt; for the majority of their own party being disgusted at the fickleness with which they sometimes maintained one opinion, and then another, withdrew from them, and thenceforward became firm adherents of those who professed the doctrine of the homoousion.\textsuperscript{687}

\footnote{For an account of this deputation and their feigned subscription to the Nicene Creed, through which they prevailed upon Liberius to receive them into the communion of the church, see IV. 12.}
Chapter V.—Events at Antioch in Connection with Paulinus and Meletius.

About this time a serious contest was excited at Antioch in Syria, on account of Melitius. We have already observed that Paulinus, bishop of that city, because of his eminent piety was not sent into exile: and that Melitius after being restored by Julian, was again banished by Valens, and at length recalled in Gratian’s reign. On his return to Antioch, he found Paulinus greatly enfeebled by old age; his partisans therefore immediately used their utmost endeavors to get him associated with that bishop in the episcopal office. And when Paulinus declared that ‘it was contrary to the canons to take as a coadjutor one who had been ordained by the Arians,’ the people had recourse to violence, and caused him to be consecrated in one of the churches without the city. When this was done, a great disturbance arose; but afterwards the people were brought to unite on the following stipulations. Having assembled such of the clergy as might be considered worthy candidates for the bishopric, they found them six in number, of whom Flavian was one. All these they bound by an oath, not to use any effort to get themselves ordained, when either of the two bishops should die, but to permit the survivor to retain undisturbed possession of the see of the deceased. Thus pledges were given, and the people had peace and so no longer quarreled with one another. The Luciferians, however, separated themselves from the rest, because Melitius who had been ordained by the Arians was admitted to the episcopate. In this state of the Antiochian church, Melitius was under the necessity of going to Constantinople.

688 Cf. III. 9, and IV. 2.
689 See above, chap. 3.
690 In its eighth canon the Council of Nicæa, looking forward to the reconciliation of such Novatians or Cathari as might desire to return to the Catholic Church, enjoins that ‘when in villages or in cities there are found only clergy of their own sect (Cathari), the oldest of these clerics shall remain among the clergy, and in their position; but if a Catholic priest or bishop be found among them, it is evident that the bishop of the Catholic Church should preserve the episcopal dignity whilst any one who has received the title of bishop from the so-called Cathari would only have a right to the honors accorded to priests, unless the bishop thinks it right to let him enjoy the honor of the title. If he does not desire to do so let him give him the place of rural bishop (chorepiscopus) or priest, in order that he may appear to be altogether a part of the clergy, and that there may not be two bishops in the same city.’ Cf. Hefele, Hist. of the Councils, Vol. I. p. 410; Bingham, Christ. Antiq. II. 13. 1 and 2.
691 Theodoret (H. E. V. 3) gives a different account of the way in which the dispute between Melitius and Paulinus came to an end, giving the glory to Melitius for the eirenic overture above described, and representing Paulinus as constrained to accept it against his will by the political head of the community.
692 Cf. III. 9; Sozom. III. 15, and V. 12.
Chapter VI.—Gregory of Nazianzus is transferred to the See of Constantinople. The Emperor Theodosius falling Sick at Thessalonica, after his Victory over the Barbarians, is there baptized by Ascholius the Bishop.

By the common suffrage of many bishops, Gregory was at this time translated from the see of Nazianzus to that of Constantinople, and this happened in the manner before described. About the same time the emperors Gratian and Theodosius each obtained a victory over the barbarians. And Gratian immediately set out for Gaul, because the Alemanni were ravaging those provinces: but Theodosius, after erecting a trophy, hastened towards Constantinople, and arrived at Thessalonica. There he was taken dangerously ill, and expressed a desire to receive Christian baptism. Now he had been instructed in Christian principles by his ancestors, and professed the ‘homoousian’ faith. Becoming increasingly anxious to be baptized therefore, as his malady grew worse, he sent for the bishop of Thessalonica, and first asked him what doctrinal views he held? The bishop having replied, ‘that the opinion of Arius had not yet invaded the provinces of Illyricum, nor had the novelty to which that heretic had given birth begun to prey upon the churches in those countries; but they continued to preserve unshaken that faith which from the beginning was delivered by the apostles, and had been confirmed in the Nicene Synod,’ the emperor was most gladly baptized by the bishop Ascholius; and having recovered from his disease not many days after, he came to Constantinople on the twenty-fourth of November, in the fifth consulate of Gratian, and the first of his own.
Chapter VII.—Gregory, finding Some Dissatisfaction about his Appointment, abdicates the Episcopate of Constantinople. The Emperor orders Demophilus the Arian Bishop either to assent to the 'Homoousion,' or leave the City. He chooses the Latter.

Now at that time Gregory of Nazianzus, after his translation to Constantinople, held his assemblies within the city in a small oratory, adjoining to which the emperors afterwards built a magnificent church, and named it Anastasia. But Gregory, who far excelled in eloquence and piety all those of the age in which he lived, understanding that some murmured at his preferment because he was a stranger, after expressing his joy at the emperor’s arrival, resigned the bishopric of Constantinople. When the emperor found the church in this state, he began to consider by what means he could make peace, effect a union, and enlarge the churches. Immediately, therefore, he intimated his desire to Demophilus, who presided over the Arian party; and enquired whether he was willing to assent to the Nicene Creed, and thus reunite the people, and establish peace. Upon Demophilus’ declining to accede to this proposal, the emperor said to him, ‘Since you reject peace and harmony, I order you to quit the churches.’ When Demophilus heard this, weighing with himself the difficulty of contending against superior power, he convoked his followers in the church, and standing in the midst of them, thus spoke: ‘Brethren, it is written in the Gospel, “If they persecute you in one city, flee ye into another.” Since therefore the emperor needs the churches, take notice that we will henceforth hold our assemblies without the city.’ Having said this he departed; not however as rightly apprehending the meaning of that expression in the Evangelist, for the real import of the sacred oracle is that such as would avoid the course of this world must seek the heavenly Jerusalem. He therefore went outside the city gates, and there in future held his assemblies. With him also Lucius went out, who being ejected 697 It appears from several places in Gregory’s writings (cf. Somn. de Anastasia, Ad Popul. Anast. and Carmen de Vita Sua, 1709) that he himself had used the name of Anastasia in speaking of the church, so that Socrates’ statement that it was so called afterwards must be taken as inaccurate. It also appears that Gregory gave the name Anastasia to the house which he used as a church, and meant to signify by the name (Anastation = Resurrection) the resurrection of the orthodox community of Constantinople. It is possible, of course, that Socrates here means that the emperors later adopted the name given by Gregory on the occasion of building a large church in place of the original chapel. See also on Gregory’s stay at Constantinople Sozom. VII. 5; Philostorgius, IX. 19; Theodoret, V. 8.

698 Cf. Philostorgius, IX. 10 and 14, whence it appears that Demophilus was the Arian bishop who succeeded Eudoxius in Constantinople.

699 Matt. x. 23.

700 A specimen of allegorical interpretation due to the influence of Origen. See Farrar, Hist. of Interpretation, p. 183 seq. For similar cases of allegorizing, see Huet, Origeniana passim, and De la Rue, Origenis Opera, App. 240–244.
from Alexandria, as we have before related, had made his escape to Constantinople, and there abode. Thus the Arians, after having been in possession of the churches for forty years, were in consequence of their opposition to the peace proposed by the emperor Theodosius, driven out of the city, in Gratian’s fifth consulate, and the first of Theodosius Augustus, on the 26th of November. The adherents of the ‘homoousian’ faith in this manner regained possession of the churches.

Gregory, finding Some Dissatisfaction about his Appointment, abdicates the…

701 IV. 37.

702 The same consulate as at the end of chap. 6; i.e. 380 a.d.
Chapter VIII.—A Synod consisting of One Hundred and Fifty Bishops meets at Constantinople. The Decrees passed. Ordination of Nectarius.

The emperor making no delay summoned a Synod of the prelates of his own faith, in order that he might establish the Nicene Creed, and appoint a bishop of Constantinople: and inasmuch as he was not without hope that he might win the Macedonians over to his own views, he invited those who presided over that sect to be present also. There met therefore on this occasion of the Homoousian party, Timothy from Alexandria, Cyril from Jerusalem, who at that time recognized the doctrine of homoousion, having retracted his former opinion; Melitius from Antioch, he having arrived there previously to assist at the installation of Gregory; Ascholius also from Thessalonica, and many others, amounting in all to one hundred and fifty. Of the Macedonians, the leaders were Eleusius of Cyzicus, and Marcian of Lampsacus; these with the rest, most of whom came from the cities of the Hellespont, were thirty-six in number. Accordingly they were assembled in the month of May, under the consulate of Eucharius and Evagrius, and the emperor used his utmost exertions, in conjunction with the bishops who entertained similar sentiments to his own, to bring over Eleusius and his adherents to his own side. They were reminded of the deputation they had sent by Eustathius to Liberius then bishop of Rome; that they had of their own accord not long before entered into promiscuous communion with the orthodox; and the inconsistency and fickleness of their conduct was represented to them, in now attempting to subvert the faith which they once acknowledged, and professed agreement with the catholics in. But they paying little heed alike to admonitions and reproofs, chose rather to maintain the Arian dogma, than to assent to the ‘homoousian’ doctrine. Having made this declaration, they departed from Constantinople; moreover they wrote to their partisans in every city, and charged them by no means to harmonize with the creed of the Nicene Synod. The bishops of the other party remaining at Constantinople, entered into a consultation about the ordination of a bishop; for Gregory, as we have before said, had resigned that see, and was preparing to return to Nazianzus. Now there was a person named Nectarius, 703 Cf. parallel account in Sozom. VII. 7–9; Theodoret, H. E. V. 8. The Synod of Constantinople was the second great ecumenical or general council. Its title as an ecumenical council has not been disputed, although no Western bishop attended. Baronius, however (Annal. 381, notes 19, 20), attempts to prove, but unsuccessfully, that Pope Damasus summoned the council. For a full account of the council, see Hefele, History of the Councils, Vol. II. p. 340–374.

704 Sozomen adds that Cyril was previously a follower of Macedonius, and had changed his mind at this time. Cf. Sozom. VII. 7.

705 381 a.d.

706 Cf. IV. 12.

707 See above, chap. 7.
of a senatorial family, mild and gentle in his manners, and admirable in his whole course of life, although he at that time bore the office of proctor. This man was seized upon by the people, and elected\textsuperscript{708} to the episcopate, and was ordained accordingly by one hundred and fifty bishops then present. The same prelates moreover published a decree,\textsuperscript{709} prescribing ‘that the bishop of Constantinople should have the next prerogative of honor after the bishop of Rome, because that city was New Rome.’ They also again confirmed the Nicene Creed. Then too patriarchs were constituted, and the provinces distributed, so that no bishop might exercise any jurisdiction over other churches\textsuperscript{710} out of his own diocese: for this had been often indiscriminately done before, in consequence of the persecutions. To Nectarius therefore was allotted the great city and Thrace. Helladius, the successor of Basil in the bishopric of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, obtained the patriarchate of the diocese of Pontus in conjunction with Gregory Basil’s brother, bishop of Nyssa\textsuperscript{711} in Cappadocia, and Otreïus bishop of Melitina in Armenia. To Amphilochius of Iconium and Optimus of Antioch in Pisidia, was the Asiatic diocese assigned. The superintendence of the churches throughout Egypt was committed to Timothy of Alexandria. On Pelagius of Laodicea, and Diodorus of Tarsus, devolved the administration of the churches of the East; without infringement however on the prerogatives of honor reserved to the Antiochian church, and conferred on Melitius then present. They further decreed that as necessity required it, the ecclesiastical \textsuperscript{708} See Bingham, \textit{Christ. Antiq.}, IV. 2. 8 for other examples illustrating this method of electing bishops.

\textsuperscript{709} Canon 3 of the Synod; see Hefele, \textit{History of the Councils}, Vol. II. p. 357. The canon is given by Socrates entire and in the original words. Valesius holds that the primacy conferred by this canon on the Constantinopolitan see was one of honor merely, and involved no prerogatives of patriarchal or metropolitan jurisdiction. For a full discussion of its significance, see Hefele, as above. The Council of Chalcedon in 451 confirmed the above action in the following words: ‘We following in all things the decision of the Holy Fathers, and acknowledging the canon of the one hundred and fifty bishops…do also determine and decree the same things respecting the privileges of the most holy city of Constantinople, New Rome. For the Fathers properly gave the primacy to the throne of the elder Rome.’ Canon 28.

\textsuperscript{710} Canon 2. The words ‘patriarch,’ however, and ‘patriarchate’ are not used in the canon. According to Sophocles (\textit{Greek Lexicon}) the modern sense of these words was introduced at the close of the fourth century. Valesius holds that the sixth canon of the Nicene Council had given sanction to the principle of patriarchal authority; but Beveridge is of opinion that patriarchs were first constituted by the second general council. Hefele takes substantially the same position as Valesius. See discussion of the subject in Hefele, \textit{Hist. of the Councils}, Vol. I. p. 389 \textit{seq.}

\textsuperscript{711} Cf. IV. 27. On Gregory of Nyssa, one of the most prominent of the ancient Fathers, see Smith & Wace, \textit{Dict. of Christ. Biog.}; Schaff, \textit{Hist. of the Christ. Church}, Vol. III. p. 903 \textit{et seq.}, and sources mentioned in the work.
affairs of each province should be managed by a Synod of the province. These arrangements were confirmed by the emperor’s approbation. Such was the result of this Synod.
Chapter IX.—The Body of Paul, Bishop of Constantinople, is honorably transferred from his Place of Exile. Death of Meletius.

The emperor at that time caused to be removed from the city of Ancyra, the body of the bishop Paul, whom Philip the prefect of the Prætorium had banished at the instigation of Macedonius, and ordered to be strangled at Cucusus a town of Armenia, as I have already mentioned. He therefore received the remains with great reverence and honor, and deposited in the church which now takes its name from him; which the Macedonian party were formerly in possession of while they remained separate from the Arians, but were expelled at that time by the emperor, because they refused to adopt his sentiments. About this period Melitius, bishop of Antioch, fell sick and died: in whose praise Gregory, the brother of Basil, pronounced a funeral oration. The body of the deceased bishop was by his friends conveyed to Antioch; where those who had identified themselves with his interests again refused subjection to Paulinus, but caused Flavian to be substituted in the place of Melitius, and the people began to quarrel anew. Thus again the Antiochian church was divided into rival factions, not grounded on any difference of faith, but simply on a preference of bishops.

712 Constantine made an advance on his predecessors by dividing the management of the empire among four prefects of the prætorium, which they had committed to two officers of that name. These four were apportioned as follows: one to the East, a second to Illyricum, a third to Italy, and a fourth to Gaul. Each of these prefects had a number of dioceses under him, and each diocese was a combination of several provinces into one territory. In conformity with this model of civil government the church abandoned gradually and naturally its metropolitan administration of the provinces and adopted the diocesan. The exact time of the change is, of course, uncertain, it having come about gradually. It is safe, however, to put it between the Nicene and Constantinopolitan councils. The Fathers in the latter of those councils seem to find it in practical operation and confirm it (Cf. Canon 2 of the councils), decreeing explicitly that it should be unlawful for clerics to perform any office or transact any business in their official character outside of the bounds of the diocese wherein they were placed, just as it was unlawful for the civil officer to intermeddle in any affair outside the limits of his civil diocese.

713 II. 26.
Chapter X.—The Emperor orders a Convention composed of All the Various Sects. Arcadius is proclaimed Augustus. The Novatians permitted to hold their Assemblies in the City of Constantinople: Other Heretics driven out.

Great disturbances occurred in other cities also, as the Arians were ejected from the churches. But I cannot sufficiently admire the emperor’s prudence in this contingency. For he was unwilling to fill the cities with disturbance, as far as this was dependent on him, and so after a very short time he called together a general conference of the sects, thinking that by a discussion among their bishops, their mutual differences might be adjusted, and unanimity established. And this purpose of the emperor’s I am persuaded was the reason that his affairs were so prosperous at that time. In fact by a special dispensation of Divine Providence the barbarous nations were reduced to subjection under him: and among others, Athanaric king of the Goths made a voluntary surrender of himself to him, with all his people, and died soon after at Constantinople. At this juncture the emperor proclaimed his son Arcadius Augustus, on the sixteenth of January, in the second consulate of Merobaudes and Saturnilus. Not long afterwards in the month of June, under the same consulate, the bishops of every sect arrived from all places: the emperor, therefore, sent for Nectarius the bishop, and consulted with him on the best means of freeing the Christian religion from dissensions, and reducing the church to a state of unity. 'The subjects of controversy,' said he, 'ought to be fairly discussed, that by the detection and removal of the sources of discord, a universal agreement may be effected.' Hearing this proposition Nectarius fell into uneasiness, and communicated it to Agelius bishop of the Novatians, inasmuch as he entertained the same sentiments as himself in matters of faith. This man, though eminently pious, was by no means competent to maintain a dispute on doctrinal points; he therefore proposed to refer the subject to Sisinnius his reader, as a fit person to manage a conference. Sisinnius, who was not only learned, but possessed of great experience, and was well informed both in the expositions of the sacred Scriptures and the principles of philosophy, being convinced that disputations, far from healing divisions usually create heresies of a more inveterate character, gave the following advice to Nectarius, knowing well that the ancients have nowhere attributed a beginning of existence to the Son of God, conceiving him to be co-eternal with the Father, he advised that they should avoid dialectic warfare and bring forward as evidences of the truth the testimonies of the ancients. 'Let the 714 Socrates according to his custom omits all mention of events in the Western Church. Some of them are quite important; e.g. the council of Aquileia called by the Emperor Gratian. See Hefele, Hist. of Church Councils, Vol. II. p. 375 seq.

715 This was in 382 a.d. as appears from the Fasti of Idatius. Cf. also Zosimus, IV. 34, and Jerome, Chronicon.
716 383 a.d.
717 For a further account of Sisinnius, see VI. 22.
emperor,’ said he, ‘demand of the heads of each sect, whether they would pay any deference to the ancients who flourished before schism distracted the church; or whether they would repudiate them, as alienated from the Christian faith? If they reject their authority, then let them also anathematize them: and should they presume to take such a step, they would themselves be instantly thrust out by the people, and so the truth will be manifestly victorious.
But if, on the other hand, they are not willing to set aside the fathers, it will then be our business to produce their books, by which our views will be fully attested.’ Nectarius having heard these words of Sisinnius, hastened to the palace, and acquainted the emperor with the plan which had been suggested to him; who at once perceiving its wisdom and propriety, carrying it into execution with consummate prudence. For without discovering his object, he simply asked the chiefs of the heretics whether they had any respect for and would accept the teachings of those teachers who lived previous to the dissension in the church? As they did not repudiate them, but replied that they highly revered them as their masters; the emperor enquired of them again whether they would defer to them as accredited witnesses of Christian doctrine? At this question, the leaders of the several parties, with their logical champions,—for many had come prepared for sophistical debate,—found themselves extremely embarrassed. For a division was caused among them as some acquiesced in the reasonableness of the emperor’s proposition while others shrank from it, conscious that it was by no means favorable to their interests: so that all being variously affected towards the writings of the ancients, they could no longer agree among themselves, dissenting not only from other sects, but those of the same sect differing from one another. Accordant malice therefore, like the tongue of the giants of old, was confounded, and their tower of mischief overturned. The emperor perceiving by their confusion that their sole confidence was in subtle arguments, and that they feared to appeal to the expositions of the fathers, had recourse to another method: he commanded every sect to set forth in writing their own peculiar tenets. Accordingly those who were accounted the most skillful among them, drew up a statement of their respective creeds, couched in terms the most circumspect they could devises; a day was appointed, and the bishops selected for this purpose presented themselves at the palace. Nectarius and Agelius appeared as the defenders of the ‘homoousian’ faith; Demophilus supported the Arian dogma; Eunomius himself undertook the cause of the Eunomians; and Eleusius, bishop of Cyzicus, represented the opinions of those who were denominated Macedonians. The emperor gave them all a courteous reception; and receiving from each their written avowal of faith, he shut himself up alone, and prayed very earnestly that God would assist him in his endeavors to ascertain the truth. Then perusing with great care the statement which each had submitted to him, he condemned all the rest, inasmuch as they introduced a separation of the Trinity, and approved of that only which contained

Referring no doubt to the Tower of Babel and the dispersion of its builders, Gen. xi. 8.
the doctrine of the homoousion. This decision caused the Novatians to flourish again, and hold their meetings within the city: for the emperor delighted with the agreement of their profession with that which he embraced, promulgated a law securing to them the peaceful possession of their own church buildings, and assigned to their churches equal privileges with those to which he gave his more especial sanction. But the bishops of the other sects, on account of their disagreement among themselves, were despised and censured even by their own followers: so that overwhelmed with perplexity and vexation they departed, addressing consolatory letters to their adherents, whom they exhorted not to be troubled because many had deserted them and gone over to the homoousian party; for they said, ‘Many are called, but few chosen’—an expression which they never used when on account of force and terror the majority of the people was on their side. Nevertheless the orthodox believers were not wholly exempt from inquietude; for the affairs of the Antiochian church caused divisions among those who were present at the Synod. The bishops of Egypt, Arabia and Cyprus, combined against Flavian, and insisted on his expulsion from Antioch: but those of Palestine, Phœnicia, and Syria, contended with equal zeal in his favor. What result issued from this contest I shall describe in its proper place.

719 Matt. xx. 16.
720 Below, chap. 15.
Chapter XI.—The Emperor Gratian is slain by the Treachery of the Usurper Maximus. From Fear of him Justina ceases persecuting Ambrose.

Nearly at the same time with the holding of these Synods at Constantinople, the following events occurred in the Western parts. Maximus, from the island of Britain, rebelled against the Roman empire, and attacked Gratian, who was then wearied and exhausted in a war with the Alemanni. In Italy, Valentinian being still a minor, Probus, a man of consular dignity, had the chief administration of affairs, and was at that time prefect of the Prætorium. Justina, the mother of the young prince, who entertained Arian sentiments, as long as her husband lived had been unable to molest the Homoousians; but going to Milan while her son was still young, she manifested great hostility to Ambrose the bishop, and commanded that he should be banished. While the people from their excessive attachment to Ambrose, were offering resistance to those who were charged with taking him into exile, intelligence was brought that Gratian had been assassinated by the treachery of the usurper Maximus. In fact Andragathius, a general under Maximus, having concealed himself in a litter resembling a couch, which was carried by mules, ordered his guards to spread a report before him that the litter contained the Emperor Gratian’s wife. They met the emperor near the city of Lyons in France just as he had crossed the river: who believing it to be his wife, and not suspecting any treachery, fell into the hands of his enemy as a blind man into the ditch; for Andragathius, suddenly springing forth from the litter, slew him. Gratian thus perished in the consulate of Merogaudes and Saturninus, in the twenty-fourth year of his age, and the fifteenth of his reign. When this happened the Empress Justina’s indignation against Ambrose was repressed. Afterwards Valentinian most unwillingly, but constrained by the necessity of the time, admitted Maximus as his colleague in the empire. Probus alarmed at the power of Maximus, resolved to retreat into the regions of the East: leaving Italy therefore, he proceeded to Illyricum, and fixed his residence at Thessalonica a city of Macedonia.

721 Cf. Zosimus, IV. 35 seq.
722 Cf. IV. 30.
723 The account of Gratian’s death given by Zosimus, though not inconsistent with that of Socrates, does not contain the details given by Socrates. Andragathius is simply said to have pursued Gratian, and overtaking him near the bridge to have slain him. Cf. Zosimus, IV. 35 end.
724 383 a.d.
Chapter XII.—While the Emperor Theodosius is engaged in Military Preparations against Maximus, his Son Honorius is born. He then proceeds to Milan in Order to encounter the Usurper.

But the Emperor Theodosius was filled with great solicitude, and levied a powerful army against the usurper, fearing lest he should meditate the assassination of the young Valentinian also. While engaged in this preparation, an embassy arrived from the Persians, requesting peace from the emperor. Then also the empress Flaccilla bore him a son named Honorius, on the 9th of September, in the consulate of Richomelius and Clearchus. Under the same consulate, and a little previously, Agelius bishop of the Novatians died. In the year following, wherein Arcadius Augustus bore his first consulate in conjunction with Baudon, Timothy bishop of Alexandria died, and was succeeded in the episcopate by Theophilus. About a year after this, Demophilus the Arian prelate having departed this life, the Arians sent for Marinus a leader of their own heresy out of Thrace, to whom they entrusted the bishopric: but Marinus did not long occupy that position, for under him that sect was divided into two parties, as we shall hereafter explain; for they invited Dorotheus to come to them from Antioch in Syria, and constituted him their bishop. Meanwhile the emperor Theodosius proceeded to the war against Maximus, leaving his son Arcadius with imperial authority at Constantinople. Accordingly arriving at Thessalonica he found Valentinian and those about him in great anxiety, because through compulsion they had acknowledged the usurper as emperor. Theodosius, however, gave no expression to his sentiments in public; he neither rejected nor admitted the embassy of Maximus: but unable to endure tyrannical domination over the Roman empire, under the assumption of an imperial name, he hastily mustered his forces and advanced to Milan, whither the usurper had already gone.

---

725 384 a.d. Honorius afterwards shared the empire with Arcadius, reigning in the West from 398 to 423 a.d. But although the whole of this period comes within the time of Socrates' history, he does not mention Honorius but once again before his death.
726 Having been bishop of the Novatians for forty years; see chap. 21.
727 385 a.d.
728 Chap. 23.
729 Being in the ninety-eighth year of his age as appears from VII. 6.
730 Zosimus, however, says (IV. 37) that the embassy of Maximus was received by Theodosius.
731 Rather Aquileja as appears from Zosimus and other historians.
Chapter XIII.—The Arians excite a Tumult at Constantinople.

At the time when the emperor was thus occupied on his military expedition, the Arians excited a great tumult at Constantinople by such devices as these. Men are fond of fabricating statements respecting matters about which they are in ignorance; and if at any time they are given occasion they swell to a prodigious extent rumors concerning what they wish, being ever fond of change. This was strongly exemplified at Constantinople on the present occasion: for each invented news concerning the war which was carrying on at a distance, according to his own caprice, always presuming upon the most disastrous results; and before the contest had yet commenced, they spoke of transactions in reference to it, of which they knew nothing, with as much assurance as if they had been spectators on the very scene of action. Thus it was confidently affirmed that ‘the usurper had defeated the emperor’s army,’ even the number of men slain on both sides being specified; and that ‘the emperor himself had nearly fallen into the usurper’s hands.’ Then the Arians, who had been excessively exasperated by those being put in possession of the churches within the city who had previously been the objects of their persecution, began to augment these rumors by additions of their own. But since the currency of such stories with increasing exaggeration, in time made even the farmers themselves believe them—for those who had circulated them from hearsay, affirmed to the authors of these falsehoods, that the accounts they had received from them had been fully corroborated elsewhere; then indeed the Arians were emboldened to commit acts of violence, and among other outrages, to set fire to the house of Nectarius the bishop. This was done in the second consulate of Theodosius Augustus, which he bore with Cynegius.

732 388 a.d.
Chapter XIV.—Overthrow and Death of the Usurper Maximus.

As the emperor marched against the usurper the intelligence of the formidable preparations made by him so alarmed the troops under Maximus, that instead of fighting for him, they delivered him bound to the emperor, who caused him to be put to death, on the twenty-seventh of August, under the same consulate. 733 Andragathius, who with his own hand had slain Gratian, understanding the fate of Maximus, precipitated himself into the adjacent river, and was drowned. Then the victorious emperors made their public entry into Rome, accompanied by Honorius the son of Theodosius, still a mere boy, whom his father had sent for from Constantinople immediately after Maximus had been vanquished. They continued therefore at Rome celebrating their triumphal festivals: during which time the Emperor Theodosius exhibited a remarkable instance of clemency toward Symmachus, a man who had borne the consular office, and was at the head of the senate at Rome. For this Symmachus was distinguished for his eloquence, and many of his orations are still extant composed in the Latin tongue: but inasmuch as he had written a panegyric on Maximus, and pronounced it before him publicly, he was afterwards impeached for high treason; wherefore to escape capital punishment he took sanctuary in a church. 734 The emperor’s veneration for religion led him not only to honor the bishops of his own communion, but to treat with consideration those of the Novatians also, who embraced the ‘homoousian’ creed: to gratify therefore Leontius the bishop of the Novatian church at Rome, who interceded in behalf of Symmachus, he graciously pardoned him for that crime. Symmachus, after he had obtained his pardon, wrote an apologetic address to the Emperor Theodosius. Thus the war, which at its commencement threatened so seriously, was brought to a speedy termination.

733 The same account is given in substance by Zosimus, IV. 46, who also confirms the statements of Socrates concerning the end of Andragathius. Valesius, however, relying on Idatius’ Fasti, asserts that Maximus was put to death on the 28th of July, not on the 27th of August.

734 The churches were considered recognized places of asylum. Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. VIII. 10 and 11.
Chapter XV.—Of Flavian Bishop of Antioch.

About the same period, the following events took place at Antioch in Syria. After the death of Paulinus, the people who had been under his superintendence refused to submit to the authority of Flavian, but caused Evagrius to be ordained bishop of their own party.\textsuperscript{735} As he did not survive his ordination long, no other was constituted in his place, Flavian having brought this about: nevertheless those who disliked Flavian on account of his having violated his oath, held their assemblies apart.\textsuperscript{736} Meanwhile Flavian ‘left no stone unturned,’ as the phrase is, to bring these also under his control; and this he soon after effected, when he appeased the anger of Theophilus, then bishop of Alexandria, by whose mediation he conciliated, Damasus bishop of Rome also. For both these had been greatly displeased with Flavian, as well for the perjury of which he had been guilty, as for the schism he had occasioned among the previously united people. Theophilus therefore being pacified, sent Isidore a presbyter to Rome, and thus reconciled Damasus, who was still offended; representing to him the propriety of overlooking Flavian’s past misconduct, for the sake of producing concord among the people. Communion being in this way restored to Flavian, the people of Antioch were in the course of a little while induced to acquiesce in the union secured. Such was the conclusion of this affair at Antioch. But the Arians of that city being ejected from the churches, were accustomed to hold their meetings in the suburbs. Meanwhile Cyril bishop of Jerusalem having died about this time,\textsuperscript{737} was succeeded by John.

\textsuperscript{735} Theodoret (\textit{H. E.} V. 23) says that there was a double violation of order in the ordination of Evagrius; first in that he was ordained by his predecessor, and secondly in that he was ordained by one bishop, whereas the canon required that not less than three should take part in an episcopal ordination.

\textsuperscript{736} Cf. VI. 9; also chaps. 5 and 11 of this book.

\textsuperscript{737} In 386 a.d.
Chapter XVI.—Demolition of the Idolatrous Temples at Alexandria, and the Consequent Conflict between the Pagans and Christians.

At the solicitation of Theophilus bishop of Alexandria the emperor issued an order at this time for the demolition of the heathen temples in that city; commanding also that it should be put in execution under the direction of Theophilus. Seizing this opportunity, Theophilus exerted himself to the utmost to expose the pagan mysteries to contempt. And to begin with, he caused the Mithreum\(^{738}\) to be cleaned out, and exhibited to public view the tokens of its bloody mysteries. Then he destroyed the Serapeum, and the bloody rights of the Mithreum he publicly caricatured; the Serapeum also he showed full of extravagant superstitions, and he had the phalli of Priapus carried through the midst of the forum. The pagans of Alexandria, and especially the professors of philosophy, were unable to repress their rage at this exposure, and exceeded in revengeful ferocity their outrages on a former occasion: for with one accord, at a preconcerted signal, they rushed impetuously upon the Christians, and murdered every one they could lay hands on. The Christians also made an attempt to resist the assailants, and so the mischief was the more augmented. This desperate affray was prolonged until satiety of bloodshed put an end to it. Then it was discovered that very few of the heathens had been killed, but a great number of Christians; while the number of wounded on each side was almost innumerable. Fear then possessed the pagans on account of what was done, as they considered the emperor’s displeasure. For having done what seemed good in their own eyes, and by their bloodshed having quenched their courage, some fled in one direction, some in another, and many quitting Alexandria, dispersed themselves in various cities. Among these were the two grammarians Helladius and Ammonius, whose pupil I was in my youth at Constantinople.\(^{739}\) Helladius was said to be the priest of Jupiter, and Ammonius of Simius.\(^{740}\) Thus this disturbance having been terminated, the governor of Alexandria, and the commander-in-chief of the troops in Egypt, assisted Theophilus in demolishing the heathen temples. These were therefore razed to the ground, and the images of their gods molten into pots and other convenient utensils for the use of the Alexandrian church; for the emperor had instructed Theophilus to distribute them for the relief of the poor. All the images were accordingly broken to pieces, except one statue of the god before mentioned, which Theophilus preserved and set up in a public place; ‘Lest,’ said he, ‘at a future time the heathens should deny that they had ever worshiped such gods.’ This action gave great umbrage to Ammonius the grammarian in particular, who to my knowledge was accustomed to say that ‘the religion of the Gentiles was grossly abused in that that single statue was not also molten, but preserved, in order to render that religion

---

738 See III. 2.
739 Cf Introd. p. 8.
740 πιθήκου, ‘the ape-god.’
ridiculous.' Helladius however boasted in the presence of some that he had slain in that desperate onset nine men with his own hand. Such were the doings at Alexandria at that time.

Demolition of the Idolatrous Temples at Alexandria, and the Consequent Conflict...
Chapter XVII.—Of the Hieroglyphics found in the Temple of Serapis.

When the Temple of Serapis was torn down and laid bare, there were found in it, engraven on stones, certain characters which they call hieroglyphics, having the forms of crosses. Both the Christians and pagans on seeing them, appropriated and applied them to their respective religions: for the Christians who affirm that the cross is the sign of Christ’s saving passion, claimed this character as peculiarly theirs; but the pagans alleged that it might appertain to Christ and Serapis in common; ‘for,’ said they, ‘it symbolizes one thing to Christians and another to heathens.’ Whilst this point was controverted amongst them, some of the heathen converts to Christianity, who were conversant with these hieroglyphic characters, interpreted the form of a cross and said that it signifies ‘Life to come.’ This the Christians exultingly laid hold of, as decidedly favorable to their religion. But after other hieroglyphics had been deciphered containing a prediction that ‘When the cross should appear,’—for this was ‘life to come,’—‘the Temple of Serapis would be destroyed,’ a very great number of the pagans embraced Christianity, and confessing their sins, were baptized. Such are the reports I have heard respecting the discovery of this symbol in form of a cross. But I cannot imagine that the Egyptian priests foreknew the things concerning Christ, when they engraved the figure of a cross. For if ‘the advent’ of our Saviour into the world ‘was a mystery hid from ages and from generations,’ as the apostle declares; and if the devil himself, the prince of wickedness, knew nothing of it, his ministers, the Egyptian priests, are likely to have been still more ignorant of the matter; but Providence doubtless purposed that in the enquiry concerning this character, there should something take place analogous to what happened heretofore at the preaching of Paul. For he, made wise by the Divine Spirit, employed a similar method in relation to the Athenians, and brought over many of them to the faith, when on reading the inscription on one of their altars, he accommodated and applied it to his own discourse. Unless indeed any one should say, that the Word of 741 There are several cruciform signs among the Egyptian hieroglyphics, as e.g. the simple determinative 5, meaning ‘to cross,’ ‘to multiply,’ ‘to mix’ (see Birch, Egyptian Texts, p. 99); or the syllabic *, phonetically equivalent to am (see Birch, ibid. p. 101); or the cross with a ring at the head *; or the still more elaborate * (see Brugsh, Thesaurus Inscript. Egyptiacarum, p. 20; also Champollion, Grammaire Egyptienne, XII. p. 365, 440). To which of these Socrates refers it is impossible to say from their mere form. They occur commonly and we must infer that the discovery described in this passage is not the first bringing into light of the sign mentioned, but its occurrence in the Serapeum. The third of the above signs is usually interpreted as ‘life’ either ‘happy’ or ‘immortal,’ which agrees with the meaning given to the cruciform sign here mentioned.

---

742 1 Cor. ii. 7, 8; Eph. iii. 5, 6; Col. i. 26.

743 Acts xvii. 23.
God wrought in the Egyptian priests, as it did on Balaam\textsuperscript{744} and Caiaphas,\textsuperscript{745} for these men uttered prophecies of good things in spite of themselves. This will suffice on the subject.

\textsuperscript{744} Num. xxiv.
\textsuperscript{745} John xi. 51.
Chapter XVIII.—Reformation of Abuses at Rome by the Emperor Theodosius.

The emperor Theodosius during his short stay in Italy, conferred the greatest benefit on the city of Rome, by grants on the one hand, and abrogations on the other. His largesses were indeed very munificent; and he removed two most infamous abuses which existed in the city. One of them was the following: there were buildings of immense magnitude, erected in ancient Rome in former times, in which bread was made for distribution among the people. Those who had the charge of these edifices, who Mancipes were called in the Latin language, in process of time converted them into receptacles for thieves. Now as the bake-houses in these structures were placed underneath, they build taverns at the side of each, where they kept prostitutes; by which means they entrapped many of those who went thither either for the sake of refreshment, or to gratify their lusts, for by a certain mechanical contrivance they precipitated them from the tavern into the bake-house below. This was practiced chiefly upon strangers; and such as were in this way kidnapped were compelled to work in the bake-houses, where many of them were immured until old age, not being allowed to go out, and giving the impression to their friends that they were dead. It happened that one of the soldiers of the emperor Theodosius fell into this snare; who being shut up in the bake-house, and hindered from going out, drew a dagger which he wore and killed those who stood in his way: the rest being terrified, suffered him to escape. When the emperor was made acquainted with the circumstance he punished the Mancipes, and ordered these haunts of lawless and abandoned characters to be pulled down. This was one of the disgraceful nuisances of which the emperor purged the imperial city: the other was of this nature. When a woman was detected in adultery, they punished the delinquent not in the way of correction but rather of aggravation of her crime. For shutting her up in a narrow brothel, they obliged her to prostitute herself in a most disgusting manner; causing little bells to be rung at the time of the unclean deed that those who passed might not be ignorant of what was doing within. This was doubtless intended to brand the crime with greater ignominy in public opinion. As soon as the emperor was apprised of this indecent usage, he would by no means tolerate it; but having ordered the Sistra—for so these places of 746 In the earlier periods of Roman history the government undertook to regulate the price of corn, so as to protect the poorer classes; in time of scarcity the government was to purchase the grain and sell it at a moderate price. This provision was gradually changed into a dispensation of public charity, at first by the sale of the grain below cost, and afterwards by the gratuitous distribution of the same. Some time before the reign of Aurelian, 270–275 a.d., the distribution of grain seems to have given place to the distribution of bread. Such distribution was made after the reign of Constantine at Constantinople as well as at Rome. See Smith, Dict. of the Greek and Rom. Antiq., art. Leges Frumentariae.

747 Originally this name was applied to all farmers-general of the public revenues. See Smith, Dict. of Greek and Rom. Antiq., art. Manceps.

320
penal prostitution were denominated—to be pulled down, he appointed other laws for the punishment of adulteresses. Thus did the emperor Theodosius free the city from two of its most discreditable abuses: and when he had arranged all other affairs to his satisfaction, he left the emperor Valentinian at Rome, and returned himself with his son Honorius to Constantinople, and entered that city of the 10th of November, in the consulate of Tatian and Symmachus.

749 From a law of Constantine’s (Cod. 9. 30) whose genuineness is, however, disputed, the punishment of adultery was death. The same punishment appears to have been inflicted in specific cases mentioned by Am. Marcellinus. Rerum Gestarum, XXVII. 1. 28. Whence it appears that Socrates must have been misinformed concerning the facts mentioned here.

750 391 a.d.
Chapter XIX.—Of the Office of Penitentiary Presbyters and its Abolition.

At this time it was deemed requisite to abolish the office of those presbyters in the churches who had charge of the penitences: this was done on the following account. When the Novatians separated themselves from the Church because they would not communicate with those who had lapsed during the persecution under Decius, the bishops added to the ecclesiastical canon a presbyter of penitence in order that those who had sinned after baptism might confess their sins in the presence of the presbyter thus appointed. And this mode of discipline is still maintained among other heretical institutions by all the rest of the sects; the Homoousians only, together with the Novatians who hold the same doctrinal views, have abandoned it. The latter indeed would never admit of its establishment, and the Homoousians who are now in possession of the churches, after retaining this function for a considerable period, abrogated it in the time of Nectarius, in consequence of an event which occurred in the Constantinopolitan church, which is as follows: A woman of noble family coming to the penitentiary, made a general confession of those sins she had committed since her baptism: and the presbyter enjoined fasting and prayer continually, that together with the acknowledgment of error, she might have to show works also meet for repentance. Some time after this, the same lady again presented herself, and confessed that she had been guilty of another crime, a deacon of the church having slept with her. When this was proved the deacon was ejected from the church: but the people were very indignant, being not only offended at what had taken place, but also because the deed had brought scandal and degradation upon the Church. When in consequence of this, ecclesiastics were subjected to taunting and reproach, Eudæmon a presbyter of the church, by birth an Alexandrian, persuaded Nectarius the bishop to abolish the office of penitentiary presbyter, and to leave every one to his own conscience with regard to the participation of the sacred mysteries: for thus only, in his judgment, could the Church be preserved from obloquy. Having heard this explanation of the matter from Eudæmon I have ventured to 751 On account of which he was called the Penitentiary. Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. XVIII. 3.

752 'The sacerdotal catalogue or order, clerical order, the clergy in general.' See Sophocles, Greek Lex. of the Rom. and Byzant. Periods.
753 On the discipline of the ancient church, see Bennett, Christ. Archæl. p. 380 seq.
754 See Euseb. H. E. VI. 43.
755 The regulation of the earliest church was expressed as follows: 'If any bishop, presbyter, or deacon be found guilty of fornication...let him be deposed.' Apostol. Can. 25.
756 Although the plural is used here, the reference is, no doubt, to the sacrament of the Lord’s supper only. The mysteries recognized by Theodorus Studites, Epist. II. 165, are six; i.e. baptism, eucharist, unction, orders, monastic tonsure, and the mystery of death or funeral ceremonies. The Greek Church of modern times enumerates seven: baptism, unction, eucharist, orders, penitence, marriage, and extreme unction.
put in the present treatise: for as I have often remarked,\textsuperscript{757} I have spared no pains to procure an authentic account of affairs from those who were best acquainted with them, and to scrutinize every report, lest I should advance what might be untrue. My observation to Eudæmon, when he first related the circumstance, was this: ‘Whether, O presbyter, your counsel has been profitable for the Church or otherwise, God knows; but I see that it takes away the means of rebuking one another’s faults, and prevents our acting upon that precept of the apostle,\textsuperscript{758} “Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.”’ Concerning this affair let this suffice.

\textsuperscript{757} Cf. I. 1; II. 1.

\textsuperscript{758} Eph. v. 11. Valesius rightly infers from this answer of Socrates to Eudæmon that the former was not a Novatian. For he disapproves of the abolition of the penitentiary bishop’s office, whereas as a Novatian he would have been against its institution before it was established, and in favor of its abolition afterwards. The Novatians never admitted either of penitence or of the penitentiary bishop.
Chapter XX.—Divisions among the Arians and Other Heretics.

I conceive it right moreover not to leave unnoticed the proceedings of the other religious bodies, viz. the Arians, Novatians, and those who received their denominations from Macedonius and Eunomius. For the Church once being divided, rested not in that schism, but the separatists taking occasion from the slightest and most frivolous pretences, disagreed among themselves. The manner and time, as well as the causes for which they raised mutual dissensions, we will state as we proceed. But let it be observed here, that the emperor Theodosius persecuted none of them except Eunomius; but inasmuch as the latter, by holding meetings in private houses at Constantinople, where he read the works he had composed, corrupted many with his doctrines, he ordered him to be sent into exile. Of the other heretics he interfered with no one; nor did he constrain them to hold communion with himself; but he allowed them all to assemble in their own conventicles, and to entertain their own opinions on points of Christian faith. Permission to build themselves churches without the cities was granted to the rest: but inasmuch as the Novatians held sentiments precisely identical with his own as to faith, he ordered that they should be suffered to continue unmolested in their churches within the cities, as I have before noticed. Concerning these I think it opportune, however, to give in this place some farther account, and shall therefore retrace a few circumstances in their history.

759 See chap. 23 of this book.
760 See chap. 10, above.
Chapter XXI.—Peculiar Schism among the Novatians. 761

Of the Novatian church at Constantinople Agelius was the bishop for the space of forty years, viz. from the reign of Constantine until the sixth year of that of the emperor Theodosius, as I have stated somewhere previously. 762 He perceiving his end approaching, ordained Sisinnius to succeed him in the bishopric. 763 This person was a presbyter of the church over which Agelius presided, remarkably eloquent, and had been instructed in philosophy by Maximus, at the same time as the emperor Julian. Now as the Novatian laity were dissatisfied with this election, and wished rather that he had ordained Marcian, a man of eminent piety, on account of whose influence their sect had been left unmolested during the reign of Valens, Agelius therefore to allay his people’s discontent, laid his hands on Marcian also. Having recovered a little from his illness, he went to the church and thus of his own accord addressed the congregation: ‘After my decease let Marcian be your bishop; and after Marcian, Sisinnius.’ He survived these words but a short time; Marcian accordingly having been constituted bishop of the Novatians, a division arose in their church also, from this cause. Marcian had promoted to the rank of presbyter a converted Jew named Sabbatius, who nevertheless continued to retain many of his Jewish prejudices; and moreover he was very ambitious of being made a bishop. Having therefore confidentially attached to his interest two presbyters, Theoctistus and Macarius, who were cognizant of his designs, he resolved to defend that innovation made by the Novatians in the time of Valens, at Pazum a village of Phrygia, concerning the festival of Easter, to which I have already adverted. 764

And in the first place, under pretext of more ascetic austerity, he privately withdrew from the church, saying that ‘he was grieved on account of certain persons whom he suspected of being unworthy of participation in the sacrament.’ It was however soon discovered that his object was to hold assemblies apart. When Marcian understood this, he bitterly censured his own error, in ordaining to the presbyterate persons so intent on vain-glory; and frequently said, ‘That it had been better for him to have laid his hands on thorns, than to have imposed them on Sabbatius.’ To check his proceedings, he procured a Synod of Novatian bishops to be convened at Angarum, 765 a commercial town near Helenopolis in Bithynia. On assembling 761 The main reason adduced for considering Socrates a Novatian is his peculiarly detailed account of the Novatian heresy, and the nearness in which he puts it to the orthodox faith. See Introd. p. ix and chap. 19 of this book, note 8; also II. 38 and VI. 21.

762 See above, chap. 12, note 2. This was in 384 a.d.
763 IV. 9 and 12 of this book.
764 On the irregularity of this action, see chap. 15 above, note 1. Sisinnius is again mentioned in VI. 1. 31; VII. 6 and 12.
765 Cf. IV. 28.
766 Probably the modern Angora. Valesius however, had conjecturally substituted the word Sangarum in this place, supposing that the place named was a town on the banks of the river Sangarius.
here they summoned Sabbatius, and desired him to explain the cause of his discontent. Upon his affirming that he was troubled about the disagreement that existed respecting the Feast of Easter, and that it ought to be kept according to the custom of the Jews, and agreeable to that sanction which those convened at Pazum had appointed, the bishops present at the Synod perceiving that this assertion was a mere subterfuge to disguise his desire after the episcopal chair, obliged him to pledge himself on oath that he would never accept a bishopric. When he had so sworn, they passed a canon respecting this feast, which they entitled 'indifferent,' declaring that 'a disagreement on such a point was not a sufficient reason for separation from the church; and that the council of Pazum had done nothing prejudicial to the catholic canon. That although the ancients who lived nearest to the times of the apostles differed about the observance of this festival, it did not prevent their communion with one another, nor create any dissension. Besides that the Novatians at imperial Rome had never followed the Jewish usage, but always kept Easter after the equinox; and yet they did not separate from those of their own faith, who celebrated it on a different day.' From these and many such considerations, they made the 'Indifferent' Canon, above-mentioned, concerning Easter, whereby every one was at liberty to keep the custom which he had by predilection in this matter, if he so pleased; and that it should make no difference as regards communion, but even though celebrating differently they should be in accord in the church. After this rule had been thus established, Sabbatius being bound by his oath, anticipated the fast by keeping it in private, whenever any discrepancy existed in the time of the Paschal solemnity, and having watched all night, he celebrated the sabbath of the passover; then on the next day he went to church, and with the rest of the congregation partook of the sacraments. He pursued this course for many years, so that it could not be concealed from the people; in imitation of which some of the more ignorant, and chiefly the Phrygians and Galatians, supposing they should be justified by this conduct imitated him, and kept the passover in secret after his manner. But Sabbatius afterwards disregarding the oath by which he had renounced the episcopal dignity, held schismatic meetings, and was constituted bishop of his followers, as we shall show hereafter.767

767 Cf. VII. 5 and 12.
Chapter XXII.—The Author’s Views respecting the Celebration of Easter, Baptism, Fasting, Marriage, the Eucharist, and Other Ecclesiastical Rites.

As we have touched the subject I deem it not unreasonable to say a few words concerning Easter. It appears to me that neither the ancients nor moderns who have affected to follow the Jews, have had any rational foundation for contending so obstinately about it. For they have not taken into consideration the fact that when Judaism was changed into Christianity, the obligation to observe the Mosaic law and the ceremonial types ceased. And the proof of the matter is plain; for no law of Christ permits Christians to imitate the Jews. On the contrary the apostle expressly forbids it; not only rejecting circumcision, but also deprecating contention about festival days. In his epistle to the Galatians \(^{768}\) he writes, ‘Tell me ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?’ And continuing his train of argument, he demonstrates that the Jews were in bondage as servants, but that those who have come to Christ are ‘called into the liberty of sons.’\(^{769}\) Moreover he exhorts them in no way to regard ‘days, and months, and years.’\(^{770}\) Again in his epistle to the Colossians\(^{771}\) he distinctly declares, that such observances are merely shadows: wherefore he says, ‘Let no man judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of any holy-day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath-days; which are a shadow of things to come.’ The same truths are also confirmed by him in the epistle to the Hebrews\(^{772}\) in these words: ‘For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law.’ Neither the apostles, therefore, nor the Gospels,\(^{773}\) have anywhere imposed the ‘yoke of servitude’\(^{774}\) on those who have embraced the truth; but have left Easter and every other feast to be honored by the gratitude of the recipients of grace. Wherefore, inasmuch as men love festivals, because they afford them cessation from labor: each individual in every place, according to his own pleasure, has by a prevalent custom celebrated the memory of the saving passion. The Saviour and his apostles have enjoined us by no law to keep this feast: nor do the Gospels and apostles threaten us with any penalty, punishment, or curse for the neglect of it, as the Mosaic law does the Jews. It is merely for the sake of historical accuracy, and for the reproach of the Jews, because they polluted themselves with blood on their very feasts, that it is recorded in the Gospels that our Saviour suffered in the days of ‘unleavened bread.’\(^{775}\) The aim of the apostles was not to appoint

\(^{768}\) Gal. iv. 21. \\
^{769}\) Gal. v. 13. \\
^{770}\) Gal. iv. 10. \\
^{771}\) Col. ii. 16, 17. \\
^{772}\) Heb. vii. 12. \\
^{773}\) ὁ ἀπόστολος…τὰ ἐυαγγέλια, the two parts of the New Testament, speaking generally. See Sophocles’ Greek Lex. of the Rom. and Byzant. Periods under ἀπόστολος and εὐαγγέλιον. \\
^{774}\) Gal. v. 1. \\
^{775}\) Matt. xxvi. 2; Mark xiv. 1; Luke xxii. 1.
festival days, but to teach a righteous life and piety. And it seems to me that just as many other customs have been established in individual localities according to usage. So also the feast of Easter came to be observed in each place according to the individual peculiarities of the peoples inasmuch as none of the apostles legislated on the matter. And that the observance originated not by legislation, but as a custom the facts themselves indicate. In Asia Minor most people kept the fourteenth day of the moon, disregarding the sabbath: yet they never separated from those who did otherwise, until Victor, bishop of Rome, influenced by too ardent a zeal, fulminated a sentence of excommunication against the Quartodecimans in Asia. Wherefore also Irenæus, bishop of Lyons in France, severely censured Victor by letter for his immoderate heat, telling him that although the ancients differed in their celebration of Easter, they did not desist from intercommunion. Also that Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, who afterwards suffered martyrdom under Gordian, continued to communicate with Anicetus bishop of Rome, although he himself, according to the usage of his native Smyrna, kept Easter on the fourteenth day of the moon, as Eusebius attests in the fifth book of his Ecclesiastical History. While therefore some in Asia Minor observed the day above-mentioned, others in the East kept that feast on the sabbath indeed, but differed as regards the month. The former thought the Jews should be followed, though they were not exact: the latter kept Easter after the equinox, refusing to celebrate with the Jews; ‘for,’ said they, ‘it ought to be celebrated when the sun is in Aries, in the month called Xanthicus by the Antiochians, and April by the Romans.’ In this practice, they averred, they conformed not to the modern Jews, who are mistaken in almost everything, but to the ancients, and to Josephus according to what he has written in the third book of his Jewish Antiquities.

777 Irenæus, Hær. III. 3, 4.

778 Polycarp suffered martyrdom in 156 a.d. (see Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers, Part II. Vol. I. p. 629–702, containing conclusive proof of this, as well as a history of the question); whence it appears that it was under Antoninus Pius that he died. Valesius therefore infers that Socrates meant to speak of Irenæus as suffering martyrdom under Gordian, and not of Polycarp. If this be the case, we must assume a serious corruption of the text, or an unparalleled confusion in Socrates.

779 Euseb. V. 24.

780 Josephus, Antiq. III. 10. The passage is worth quoting entire, running as follows: ‘In the month Xanthicus, which is called Nisan by us, and is the beginning of the year, on the fourteenth day of the moon, while the sun is in the sign of Aries (the Ram), for during this month we were freed from bondage under the Egyptians, he has also appointed that we should sacrifice each year the sacrifice which, as we went out of Egypt, they commanded us to offer, it being called the Passover.’
Thus these people were at issue among themselves. But all other Christians in the Western parts, and as far as the ocean itself, are found to have celebrated Easter after the equinox, from a very ancient tradition. And in fact these acting in this manner have never disagreed on this subject. It is not true, as some have pretended, that the Synod under Constantine altered this festival: for Constantine himself, writing to those who differed respecting it, recommended that as they were few in number, they could agree with the majority of their brethren. His letter will be found at length in the third book of the Life of Constantine by Eusebius; but the passage in it relative to Easter runs thus:

'It is a becoming order which all the churches in the Western, Southern, and Northern parts of the world observe, and some places in the East also. Wherefore all on the present occasion have judged it right, and I have pledged myself that it will have the acquiescence of your prudence, that what is unanimously observed in the city of Rome, throughout Italy, Africa, and the whole of Egypt, in Spain, France, Britain, Libya, and all Greece, the diocese of Asia and Pontus, and Cilicia, your wisdom also will readily embrace; considering not only that the number of churches in the aforesaid places is greater, but also that while there should be a universal concurrence in what is most reasonable, it becomes us to have nothing in common with the perfidious Jews.'

Such is the tenor of the emperor's letter. Moreover the Quartodecimans affirm that the observance of the fourteenth day was delivered to them by the apostle John: while the Romans and those in the Western parts assure us that their usage originated with the apostles Peter and Paul. Neither of these parties however can produce any written testimony in confirmation of what they assert. But that the time of keeping Easter in various places is dependent on usage, I infer from this, that those who agree in faith, differ among themselves on questions of usage. And it will not perhaps be unseasonable to notice here the diversity of customs in the churches.

The fasts before Easter will be found to be differently observed among different people. Those at Rome fast three successive weeks before Easter, excepting Saturdays and Sundays. Those in Illyrica and all over Greece and Alexandria observe a fast of six weeks, which they term 'The forty days' fast.' Others commencing their fast from the 781 The Audiani, who averred that the Synod of Nicæa first fixed the time of Easter.

---

782 Euseb. Life of Constant. III. 19.
784 Baronius (Ann. 57 and 391 a.d.) finds two mistakes here: first, in the assertion that the Romans fasted three weeks only before Easter, and second, in the assertion that during those three weeks Saturdays were excepted. Cf. also Cælinier, Hist. des Auteurs Sacrés et Ecclesiast. Vol. VIII. p. 523, 524. Valesius, however, quotes Pope Leo (fourth sermon on the Lent Fast) and Venerable Beda to prove that Socrates' assertion concerning the exception of Saturday may be defended. See Quesn. de Jejunio Sabbati; Bingham, Orig. Eccl. XXI. I. 14; also Beveridge, de Jejunio Quadragesimali.
785 Τεσσαρακοστή = Lent; the Latin equivalent is, of course, Quadragesima.
seventh week before Easter, and fasting three five days only, and that at intervals, yet call that time ‘The forty days’ fast.’ It is indeed surprising to me that thus differing in the number of days, they should both give it one common appellation; but some assign one reason for it, and others another, according to their several fancies. One can see also a disagreement about the manner of abstinence from food, as well as about the number of days. Some wholly abstain from things that have life: others feed on fish only of all living creatures: many together with fish, eat fowl also, saying that according to Moses, these were likewise made out of the waters. Some abstain from eggs, and all kinds of fruits: others partake of dry bread only; still others eat not even this: while others having fasted till the ninth hour, afterwards take any sort of food without distinction. And among various nations there are other usages, for which innumerable reasons are assigned. Since however no one can produce a written command as an authority, it is evident that the apostles left each one to his own free will in the matter, to the end that each might perform what is good not by constraint or necessity.
Such is the difference in the churches on the subject of fasts. Nor is there less variation in regard to religious assemblies. For although almost all churches throughout the world celebrate the sacred mysteries on the sabbath of every week, yet the Christians of Alexandria and at Rome, on account of some ancient tradition, have ceased to do this. The Egyptians in the neighborhood of Alexandria, and the inhabitants of Thebaïs, hold their religious as-semblies on the sabbath, but do not participate of the mysteries in the manner usual among Christians in general: for after having eaten and satisfied themselves with food of all kinds, in the evening making their offerings they partake of the mysteries. At Alexandria again, 786 Gen. i. 20.

787 Valesius rightly conjectures that very few observed this mode of fasting during Lent, basing his opinion on the order of worship and various deprecatory expressions in ancient authors with respect to it. It may be noted that the Mohammedan Fast of Ramadan is observed on the same principle and in a similar manner. The fast begins with the dawn of the sun and continues until sunset, being complete for that space of time. With the setting of the sun, however, every person is at liberty to eat as he may please.
788 οὐνάξεων. Sophocles (Greek Lex. of the Rom. and Byzant. Period) gives the following senses to the word:
1. ‘Religious meeting’; 2. ‘Religious service’; 3. ‘Place of meeting’; 4. ‘Congregation.’ To these we may add on the authority of Casaubon (Exercit. XVI, ad Annal. Baronii, No. 42) 5. ‘The celebration of the Eucharist.’ It is in the second sense given by Sophocles that it is used here.
789 i.e. Saturday. Sunday is never called ‘the Sabbath’ by the ancient Fathers and historians, but ‘the Lord’s day’ (κυριακή). Sophocles (Greek Lex. of the Rom. and Byzant. Period) gives three senses to the word; viz., 1.
‘The Sabbath’ [of the Jews] (so in the LXX and Jewish writers). 2. ‘The week.’ 3. ‘Saturday.’ Many early Christians, however, continued to observe the Jewish Sabbath along with the first day of the week. Cf. Bingham, Christ.
Antiq. XX. 3.
790 προσφέροντες, freely = ‘celebrating the Eucharist.’ Irenæus, Contra Hæres. XVIII. 3; Euseb. Demonstr. on the Wednesday\textsuperscript{791} in Passion week and on Good Friday, the scriptures are read, and the doctors expound them; and all the usual services are performed in their assemblies, except the celebration of the mysteries. This practice in Alexandria is of great antiquity, for it appears that Origen most commonly taught in the church on those days. He being a very learned teacher in the Sacred Books, and perceiving that the ‘impotence of the law’\textsuperscript{792} of Moses was weakened by literal explanation, gave it a spiritual interpretation; declaring that there has never been but one true Passover, which the Saviour celebrated when he hung upon the cross: for that he then vanquished the adverse powers, and erected this as a trophy against the devil. In the same city of Alexandria, readers and chanters\textsuperscript{793} are chosen indifferently from the catechumens and the faithful; whereas in all other churches the faithful only are promoted to these offices. I myself, also, learned of another custom in Thessaly. If a clergyman in that country, after taking orders, should sleep with his wife, whom he had legally married before his ordination, he would be degraded.\textsuperscript{794} In the East, indeed, all clergymen, and even the bishops themselves, abstain from their wives: but this they do of their own accord, and not by the necessity of any law; for there have been among them many bishops, who have had children by their lawful wives, during their episcopate. It is said that the author of the usage which obtains in Thessaly was Heliodorus bishop of Tricca in that country; under whose name there are love books extant, entitled \textit{Ethiopica},\textsuperscript{795} which he composed in his youth. The same custom prevails at Thessalonica, and in Macedonia, and in Greece. I have also known of another peculiarity in Thessaly, which is, that they baptize there on the days of Easter only; in consequence of which a very great number of them die without having received baptism. At Antioch in Syria the site of the church is inverted; so that the altar does not face toward the east, but toward the west.\textsuperscript{796} In Greece, however, and at Jerusalem and in Thessaly they go to prayers as soon as the candles are lighted, in the same manner as the Novatians do at Constantinople. At Cæsarea likewise, and in Cappadocia, and in Cyprus, the presbyters and bishops expound the Scriptures in the evening, after the candles are \textsuperscript{791} ‘If any bishop...does not fast on Wednesday or Friday let him be deposed.’ So \textit{Apost. Can.} 69. These two days are universally joined together by the Greek and Roman Catholic Churches.

\textsuperscript{792} Cf. \textit{Rom.} viii. 3.

\textsuperscript{793} ὑποβολεῖς, lit. = ‘prompters,’ whose duty it was to read the Psalms which the people chanted.

\textsuperscript{794} On the celibacy of the clergy and its gradual growth, see Bingham, \textit{Christ. Antiq.} IV. 5; \textit{Apost. Can.} 51, \textsuperscript{795} A novel on the adventures of Theagenes and Chariclea. The Heliodorus who wrote the \textit{Ethiopica} was, according to Photius, \textit{Biblioth.} chap. 94, a native of Phoenicia, hence not the same as the bishop of Tricca. Others ascribe the \textit{Ethiopica} to Heliodorus the Sophist, who flourished under the Emperor Hadrian.

\textsuperscript{796} According to the \textit{Apost. Consti.} (II. 57) a church should be built so as to face the east. This regulation was generally followed, but there were exceptions. Cf. Bingham, \textit{Christ. Antiq.} VIII. 3. 2. lighted. The Novatians of the Hellespont do not perform their prayers altogether in the same manner as those of Constantinople; in most things, however, their usage is similar to that of the prevailing \textsuperscript{797} church. In short, it is impossible to find anywhere, among all the sects, two churches which agree exactly in their ritual respecting prayers. At Alexandria no presbyter is allowed to address the public: a regulation which was made after Arius had raised a disturbance in that church. At Rome they fast every Saturday.\textsuperscript{798} At Cæsarea of Cappadocia they exclude from communion those who have sinned after baptism as the Novatians do. The same discipline was practiced by the Macedonians in the Hellespont, and by the Quartodecimans in Asia. The Novatians in Phrygia do not admit such as have twice married;\textsuperscript{799} but those of Constantinople neither admit nor reject them openly, while in the Western parts they are openly received. This diversity was occasioned, as I imagine, by the bishops who in their respective eras governed the churches; and those who received these several rites and usages, transmitted them as laws to their posterity. However, to give a complete catalogue of all the various customs and ceremonial observances in use throughout every city and country would be difficult—rather impossible; but the instances we have adduced are sufficient to show that the Easter Festival was from some remote precedent differently celebrated in every particular province. They talk at random therefore who assert that the time of keeping Easter was altered in the Nicene Synod; for the bishops there convened earnestly labored to reduce the first dissenting minority to uniformity of practice with the rest of the people. Now that many differences existed even in the apostolic age of the church occasioned by such subjects, was not unknown even to the apostles themselves, as the book of \textit{The Acts} testifies. For when they understood that a disturbance occurred among believers on account of a dissension of the Gentiles, having all met together, they promulgated a Divine law, giving it the form of a letter. By this sanction they liberated Christians from the bondage of formal observances, and all vain contention about these things; and they taught them the path of true piety, prescribing such things only as were \textsuperscript{797} i.e. the catholic or orthodox church; used perhaps in the same way as the expression 'established church' in modern times.

\textsuperscript{798} \textit{Apost. Can.} 64, provides that no cleric or layman shall fast on the Sabbath day (Saturday, see note 22, above), the former on pain of being deposed, the latter, of being excommunicated. It appears, however, that the Roman church observed the day as a fast, while the Greek church held it to be a feast. Socrates, however, seems to contradict the statement he had made above (see note 17) that at Rome Saturdays and Sundays were excepted from the list of fasting days in Lent. From Augustinian's \textit{Epistles}, 36. 31 \textit{et al.}, it appears that he fasted on Saturday and regarded this the regular and proper course to be pursued, and actually pursued by members of the church.
Hence the present statement of Socrates must be taken as correct to the exclusion of the former.

\textsuperscript{799} \textit{Apost. Can.} 17. 'He who has been twice married after baptism…cannot become bishop, presbyter, or deacon, or any other [cleric] included in the sacerdotal list.'
The epistle itself, which I shall here transcribe, is recorded in The Acts of the Apostles.

“The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia. Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law; to whom we gave no such commandment: it seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you, with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same thing by mouth. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.’

These things indeed pleased God: for the letter expressly says, ‘It seemed good to the Holy Ghost to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things.’ There are nevertheless some persons who, disregarding these precepts, suppose all fornication to be an indifferent matter; but contend about holy-days as if their lives were at stake, thus contravening the commands of God, and legislating for themselves, and making of none effect the decree of the apostles: neither do they perceive that they are themselves practicing the contrary to those things which God approved. It is possible easily to extend our discourse respecting Easter, and demonstrate that the Jews observe no exact rule either in the time or manner of celebrating the paschal solemnity: and that the Samaritans, who are an offshoot from the Jews, always celebrate this festival after the equinox. But this subject would require a distinct and copious treatise: I shall therefore merely add, that those who affect so much to imitate the Jews, and are so very anxious about an accurate observance of types, ought not only observe days and months, but all other things also, which Christ (who was ‘made

---

800 Acts xvi. 23–39. The quotation is here from the Authorized Version. The Revised has it slightly altered. We subjoin it for comparison. ’The apostles and the elder brethren unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia, greeting: Forasmuch as we have heard that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls; to whom we gave no commandment; it seemed good unto us, having come to one accord, to choose out men and send them unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who themselves also shall tell you the same things by word of mouth. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from things sacrificed to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which if ye keep yourselves, it shall be well with you. Fare ye well.’

333
under the law)\textsuperscript{801} did in the manner of the Jews; or which he unjustly suffered from them; or wrought typically for the good of all men. He entered into a ship and taught. He ordered the Passover to be made ready in an upper room. He commanded an ass that was tied to be loosed. He proposed a man bearing a pitcher of water as a sign to them for hastening their preparations for the Passover. \([\text{He did}]\) an infinite number of other things of this nature which are recorded in the gospels. And yet those who suppose themselves to be justified by keeping this feast, would think it absurd to observe any of these things in a bodily manner. For no doctor ever dreams of going to preach from a ship—no person imagines it necessary to go up into an upper room to celebrate the Passover there—they never tie, and then loose an ass again—and finally no one enjoins another to carry a pitcher of water, in order that the symbols might be fulfilled. They have justly regarded such things as savoring rather of Judaism: for the Jews are more solicitous about outward solemnities than the obedience of the heart; and therefore are they under the curse, because they do not discern the spiritual bearing of the Mosaic law, but rest in its types and shadows. Those who favor the Jews admit the allegorical meaning of these things; and yet they wage a deadly warfare against the observance of days and months, without applying to them a similar sense: thus do they necessarily involve themselves in a common condemnation with the Jews.

But enough I think has been said concerning these things. Let us now return to the subject we were previously treating of, the fact that the Church once divided did not stay with that division, but that those separated were again divided among themselves, taking occasion from the most trivial grounds. The Novatians, as I have stated, were divided among themselves on account of the feast of Easter, the controversy not being restricted to one point only. For in the different provinces some took one view of the question, and some another, disagreeing not only about the month, but the days of the week also, and other unimportant matters; in some places they hold separate assemblies because of it, in others they unite in mutual communion.

\textsuperscript{801} Gal. iv. 4.
Further Dissensions among the Arians at Constantinople. The Psathyrians.

But dissensions arose among the Arians also on this account. The contentious questions which were daily agitated among them, led them to start the most absurd propositions. For whereas it has been always believed in the church that God is the Father of the Son, the Word, it was asked whether God could be called ‘Father’ before the Son had subsistence? Thus in asserting that the Word of God was not begotten of the Father, but was created out ‘of nothing,’ and thus falling into error on the chief and main point, they deservedly fell into absurd cavilings about a mere name. Dorotheus therefore being sent for by them from Antioch maintained that God neither was nor could be called Father before the Son existed. But Marinus whom they had summoned out of Thrace before Dorotheus, piqued at the superior deference which was paid to his rival, undertook to defend the contrary opinion. In consequence of these things there arose a schism among them, and being thus divided respecting this term, each party held separate meetings. Those under Dorotheus retained their original places of assembly: but the followers of Marinus built distinct oratories for themselves, and asserted that the Father had always been Father, even when the Son was not. This section of the Arians was denominated Psathyrians, because one of the most zealous defenders of this opinion was Theoctistus, a Syrian by birth, and a cake-seller [Psathyropola] by trade. Selenas bishop of the Goths adopted the views of this party, a man of mixed descent; he was a Goth by his father’s side, but by his mother’s a Phrygian, by which means he taught in the church with great readiness in both these languages. This faction however soon quarreled among themselves, Marinus disagreeing with Agapius, whom he himself had preferred to the bishopric of Ephesus. They disputed, however, not about any point of religion, but in narrow-mindedness about precedence, in which the Goths sided with Agapius. Wherefore many of the ecclesiastics under their jurisdiction, abominating the vain-glorious contest between these two, abandoned them both, and became adherents to the ‘homoousian’ faith. The Arians having continued thus divided among themselves during the space of thirty-five years, were reunited in the reign of Theodosius the Younger, under the consulate of Plintha the commander-in-chief of the army, he being a member of the sect of Psathyrians; these were prevailed on to desist from contention. They afterwards passed a resolution, giving it all the cogency of law, that the question which had led to their separation, should never be mooted again. But this reconciliation extended

802 See above, chap. 20.
803 Cf. Theodoret, Hæret. Fabal. IV. 4; also Sozomen (probably dependent on Socrates), VII. 17.
804 ψαθύριον, a species of cake; hence ψαθυροπώλης, ‟cake-seller.’
805 Sozomen (VII. 17) adds that Selenas was a secretary of Ulfilas and had been promoted to be his successor.
806 419 a.d.
no farther than Constantinople; for in other cities where any of these two parties were found, they persisted in their former separation. So much respecting the division among the Arians.
Chapter XXIV.— The Eunomians divide into Several Factions.

But neither did the followers of Eunomius remain without dissensions: for Eunomius himself had long before this separated from Eudoxius who ordained him bishop of Cyzicus, taking occasion from that bishop’s refusal to restore to communion his master Aëtius who had been ejected. But those who derived their name from him were subsequently divided into several factions. For first Theophronius a Cappadocian, who had been instructed in the art of disputation by Eunomius, and had acquired a smattering of Aristotle’s Categories, and his Book of Interpretation, composed some treatises which he entitled, On the Exercise of the Mind. Having, however, drawn down upon himself the reprobation of his own sect, he was ejected as an apostate. He afterwards held assemblies apart from them, and left behind him a heresy which bore his own name. Furthermore at Constantinople a certain Eutychius from some absurd dispute, withdrew from the Eunomians, and still continues to hold separate meetings. The followers of Theophronius are denominated ‘Eunomiotheophronians’; and those of Eutychius have the appellation of ‘Eunomieutychians.’ What those nonsensical terms were about which they differed I consider unworthy of being recorded in this history, lest I should go into matters foreign to my purpose. I shall merely observe that they adulterated baptism: for they do not baptize in the name of the Trinity, but into the death of Christ. Among the Macedonians also there was for some time a division, when Eutropius a presbyter held separate assemblies, and Carterius did not agree with him. There are possibly in other cities sects which have emanated from these: but living at Constantinople, where I was born and educated, I describe more particularly what has taken place in that city; both because I have myself witnessed some of these transactions, and also because the events which have there occurred are of pre-eminent importance, and are therefore more worth of commemoration. Let it however be understood that what I have here related happened at different periods, and not at the same time. But if any one should be desirous of knowing the names of the various sects, he may easily satisfy himself, by reading a book entitled Ancoratus, composed by Epiphanius, bishop of Cyprus: but I shall content myself with 807 Cf. IV. 7 and 13.

808 Apost. Can. 50 reads: ‘If any bishop or presbyter does not perform the one initiation with three immersions, but with one immersion only into the death of the Lord, let him be deposed.’ Also the Second General Synod (that of Constantinople, 381) in its 7th Canon passed the following: ‘But the Eunomians, who only baptize with one immersion, and the Montanists, who are here called Phrygians, and the Sabellians, who teach the doctrine of the Fatherhood of the Son…(if they wish to be joined to the Orthodox faith) we receive as heathen; on the first day we make them Christians, on the second, catechumens, &c.’ See Hefele, Hist. of the Church Councils, Vol. II. p. 367, 368.

809 Epiphan. Ancoratus, 13. Photius calls the Ancoratus a synopsis of the treatise of Epiphanius on Heresies (Biblioth. 123). The subject here referred to was treated by Epiphanius in Haer. LXVI. and LXVIII.
The Eunomians divide into Several Factions.

what I have already stated. The public affairs were again thrown into agitation from a cause I shall now refer to.
Chapter XXV.—The Usurper Eugenius compasses the Death of Valentinian the Younger. Theodosius obtains a Victory over him.

There was in the Western regions a grammarian named Eugenius, who after having for some time taught the Latin language, left his school, and was appointed to service at the palace, being constituted chief secretary to the emperor. Possessing a considerable degree of eloquence, and being on that account treated with greater distinction than others, he was unable to bear his good fortune with moderation. For associating with himself Arbogastes, a native of Galatia Minor, who then had the command of a division of the army, a man harsh in manner and very bloodthirsty, he determined to usurp the sovereignty. These two therefore agreed to murder the Emperor Valentinian, having corrupted the eunuchs of the imperial bed-chamber. These, on receiving tempting promises of promotion, strangled the emperor in his sleep. Eugenius immediately assuming the supreme authority in the Western parts of the empire, conducted himself in such a manner as might be expected from a usurper. When the Emperor Theodosius was made acquainted with these things, he was exceedingly distressed, because his defeat of Maximus had only prepared the way for fresh troubles. He accordingly assembled his military forces, and having proclaimed his son Honorius Augustus, on the 10th of January, in his own third consulate which he bore with Abundantius, he again set out in great haste toward the Western parts, leaving both his sons invested with imperial authority at Constantinople. As he marched against Eugenius a very great number of the barbarians beyond the Danube volunteered their services, and followed him in this expedition. After a rapid march he arrived in the Gauls with a numerous army, where Eugenius awaited him, also at the head of an immense body of troops. Accordingly an engagement took place near the river Frigidus, which is [about thirty-six miles] distant [from Aquileia]. In that part of the battle where the Romans fought against their own countrymen, the conflict was doubtful: but where the barbarian auxiliaries of the Emperor Theodosius were engaged, the forces of Eugenius had greatly the advantage. When the emperor saw the barbarians perishing, he cast himself in great agony upon the ground, and invoked the help of God in this emergency: nor was his request unheeded; for Bacurius his principal officer, inspired with sudden and extraordinary ardor, rushed with his vanguard to the part where the barbarians were hardest pressed, broke through the ranks of the enemy, and put to flight those who a little before were themselves engaged in pursuit. Another

---

810 This account of Arbogastes and Eugenius is also given by Zosimus (IV. 53–58), who adds that Arbogastes was a Frank; and also by Philostorgius (XI. 1), who says that Eugenius was a pagan.
811 393 a.d.
812 Cf. Zosimus, IV. 57.
marvelous circumstance also occurred. A violent wind suddenly arose, which retorted upon themselves the darts cast by the soldiers of Eugenius, and at the same time drove those hurled by the imperial forces with increased impetus against their adversaries. So prevalent was the emperor’s prayer. The success of the struggle being in this way turned, the usurper threw himself at the emperor’s feet, and begged that his life might be spared: but as he lay a prostrate suppliant at the feet [of the emperor] he was beheaded by the soldiers, on the 6th of September, in the third consulate of Arcadius, and the second of Honorius. Arbo-gastes, who had been the chief cause of so much mischief, having continued his flight for two days after the battle, and seeing no chance of escape, despatched himself with his own sword.

Cf. Zosimus, IV. 58, who gives the additional item that the sun was eclipsed during this battle.

394 a.d.
Chapter XXVI.—Illness and Death of Theodosius the Elder.

The Emperor Theodosius was in consequence of the anxiety and fatigues connected with this war thrown into bodily illness; and believing the disease which had attacked him would be fatal, he became more concerned about the public affairs than his own life, considering how great calamities often overtook the people after the death of their sovereign. He therefore hastily summoned his son Honorius from Constantinople, being principally desirous of setting in order the state of things in the western parts of the empire. After his son’s arrival at Milan, he seemed to recover a little, and gave directions for the celebration of the games of the hippodrome on account of his victory. Before dinner he was pretty well, and a spectator of the sports; but after he had dined he became suddenly too ill to return to them, and sent his son to preside in his stead; when the night came on he died, it being the seventeenth of January, during consulate of Olybrius and Probus. This was in the first year of the two hundred and ninety-fourth Olympiad. The emperor Theodosius lived sixty years, and reigned sixteen. This book therefore comprehends the transactions of sixteen years and eight months.

815 395 a.d.

816 There is some doubt as to the length of Theodosius’ life; most of the ancient historians (Sozomen, Theophanes, Cedrenus) agree with Socrates in giving it as sixty years. Am. Marcellinus Rerum Gestarum, XXIX. 6. 15, and Victor, Epit. XLVII., leave the impression that he was fifty.
Book VI.

Introduction.

The commission with which you charged us, O holy man of God, Theodore, we have executed in the five foregoing books; in which to the best of our ability, we have comprised the history of the Church from the time of Constantine. Notice, however, that we have been by no means studious of style; for we considered that had we showed too great fastidiousness about elegance of expression we might have defeated the object in view. But even supposing our purpose could still have been accomplished, we were wholly precluded from the exercise of that discretionary power of which ancient historians seem to have so largely availed themselves, whereby any one of them imagined himself quite at liberty to amplify or curtail matters of fact. Moreover, refined composition would by no means be edifying to the masses and illiterate men, who are intent merely on knowing the facts, and not on admiring beauty of diction. In order therefore not to render my production unprofitable to both classes of readers,—to the learned on the one hand, because no elaboration of language could satisfy them to rank it with the magniloquence of the writers of antiquity, and to the unlearned on the other, because they could not understand the facts, should they be clouded by a parade of words,—we have purposely adopted a style, divested indeed of all affectation of sublimity, but at the same time clear and perspicuous.

As we begin, however, our sixth book, we must premise this, that in undertaking to detail the events of our own age, we are apprehensive of advancing such things as may be unpalatable to many: either because, according to the proverb, ‘Truth is bitter;’ on account of our not mentioning with encomium the names of those whom some may love; or from our not magnifying their actions. The zealots of our churches will condemn us for not calling the bishops ‘Most dear to God,’ ‘Most holy,’ and such like. Others will be litigious because we do not bestow the appellations ‘Most divine,’ and ‘Lords’ on the emperors, nor apply to them such other epithets as they are commonly assigned. But since I could easily prove from the testimony of ancient authors, that among them the servant was accustomed to address his master simply by name, without reference to his dignity or titles, on account of the pressure of business, I shall in like manner obey the laws of history, which demand a simple and faithful narration, unobscured by a veil of any kind. I shall proceed to record accurately what I have either myself seen, or have been able to ascertain from actual observers; having tested the truth by the unanimity of the witnesses that spoke of the same affairs, and by every means I could possibly command. The process of ascertaining the truth was indeed laborious, inasmuch as many and different persons gave different accounts and some claimed 817 Cf. V. Int.

818 The comic poets, e.g. Menander, Plautus, Terence.
to be eyewitnesses, while others professed to be more intimately acquainted with these things than any others.
Chapter I.—On the Death of Theodosius his Two Sons divide the Empire. Rufinus is slain at the Feet of Arcadius.

After the death of the Emperor Theodosius, in the consulate of Olybrius and Probinus or the seventeenth of January, his two sons undertook the administration of the Roman empire. Thus Arcadius assumed the government of the East, and Honorius of the West. At that time Damasus was bishop of the church at Imperial Rome, and Theophilus of that of Alexandria, John of Jerusalem, and Flavian of Antioch; while the episcopal chair at Constantinople or New Rome was filled by Nectarius, as we mentioned in the foregoing book. The body of the Emperor Theodosius was taken to Constantinople on the 8th of November in the same consulate, and was honorably interred by his son Arcadius with the usual funeral solemnities. Not long afterwards on the 28th day of the same month the army also arrived, which had served under the Emperor Theodosius in the war against the usurper. When therefore according to custom the Emperor Arcadius met the army without the gates, the soldiery slew Rufinus the Praetorian prefect. For he was suspected of aspiring to the sovereignty, and had the reputation of having invited into the Roman territories the Huns, a barbarous nation, who had already ravaged Armenia, and were then making predatory incursions into other provinces of the East. On the very day on which Rufinus was killed, Marcian bishop of the Novatians died, and was succeeded in the episcopate by Sisinnius, of whom we have already made mention.

820 V. 8.
821 See Bennett, Christian Archaeology, p. 210 seq., and Bingham, Christ. Antiq. XXII. 1 and 2, for details on the burial of the dead in the early Church.
822 Zosimus (V. 5) says Rufinus invited Alaric and the Goths to invade the Roman territories; Valesius reconciles Socrates’ and Zosimus’ statements by assuming that they are partial and supplementary to one another; Rufinus, according to him, invited both the Huns and the Goths.
823 V. 10, 21, et al.
Chapter II.—Death of Nectarius and Ordination of John.

A short time after Nectarius, also, bishop of Constantinople died, during the consulate of Caesarius and Atticus, on the 27th of September. A contest thereupon immediately arose respecting the appointment of a successor, some proposing one person, and some another: at length however it was determined to send for John, a presbyter of the church at Antioch, for there was a report that he was very instructive, and at the same time eloquent. By the general consent therefore of both the clergy and laity, he was summoned very soon afterwards to Constantinople by the Emperor Arcadius: and to render the ordination more authoritative and imposing, several prelates were requested to be present, among whom also was Theophilus bishop of Alexandria. This person did everything he could to detract from John’s reputation, being desirous of promoting to that see, Isidore, a presbyter of his own church, to whom he was greatly attached, on account of a very delicate and perilous affair which Isidore had undertaken to serve his interests. What this was I must now unfold. While the Emperor Theodosius was preparing to attack the usurper Maximus, Theodosius sent Isidore with gifts giving twofold letters, and enjoining him to present both the gifts and the proper letters to him who should become the victor. In accordance with these injunctions Isidore on his arrival at Rome awaited there the event of the war. But this business did not long remain a secret: for a reader who accompanied him privately sequestered the letters; upon which Isidore in great alarm returned to Alexandria. This was the reason why Theophilus so warmly favored Isidore. The court however gave the preference to John: and inasmuch as many had revived the accusations against Theophilus, and prepared for presentation to the bishops then convened memorials of various charges, Eutropius the chief officer of the imperial bed-chamber collected these documents, and showed them to Theophilus, bidding him ‘choose between ordaining John, and undergoing a trial on the 824 Cf. V. 8.

---

825 397 a.d.
827 Cf. Theodoret, V. 22, under this Theophilus the pagan temples of Mithras and Serapis were attacked, as related above in V. 16 and 17. For a fuller notice of Theophilus, see Smith & Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog.
828 Cf. chap. 9 of this book.
829 Cf. Zosimus, V. 3, 8, 10, 17, 18, and Eunapius, Fragm. 53, 56.
charges made against him.’ Theophilus terrified at this alternative, consented to ordain John. Accordingly John was invested with the episcopal dignity on the 26th of February, under the following consulate,\(^830\) which the Emperor Honorius celebrated with public games at Rome, and Eutychian, then Prætorian prefect, at Constantinople. But since the man is famous, both for the writings he has left, and the many troubles he fell into, it is proper that I should not pass over his affairs in silence, but to relate as compendiously as possible whence he was, and from what ancestry; also the particulars of his elevation to the episcopate, and the means by which he was subsequently degraded; and finally how he was more honored after his death, than he had been during his life.

\(^{346}\)

\(^830\) 398 a.d.
Chapter III.—Birth and Education of John Bishop of Constantinople.

John was a native of Antioch in Syria-Cœle, son of Secundus and Anthusa, and scion of a noble family in that country. He studied rhetoric under Libanius the sophist, and philosophy under Andragathius the philosopher. 831 Being on the point of entering the practice of civil law, and reflecting on the restless and unjust course of those who devote themselves to the practice of the forensic courts, he was turned to the more tranquil mode of life, which he adopted, following the example of Evagrius. 832 Evagrius himself had been educated under the same masters, and had some time before retired to a private mode of life. Accordingly he laid aside his legal habit, and applied his mind to the reading of the sacred scriptures, frequenting the church with great assiduity. He moreover induced Theodore and Maximus, who had been his fellow-students under Libanius the sophist, to forsake a profession whose primary object was gain, and embrace a life of greater simplicity. Of these two persons, Theodore afterwards became bishop of Mopsuestia 833 in Cilicia, and Maximus of Seleucia in Isauria. At that time being ardent aspirants after perfection, they entered upon the ascetic life, under the guidance of Diodorus 834 and Carterius, who then presided over a monastic institution. The former of these was subsequently elevated to the bishopric of Tarsus, and wrote many treatises, in which he limited his attention to the literal sense of scripture, avoiding that which was mystical. 835 But enough respecting these persons. Now John was then living on the most intimate terms with Basil, 836 at that time constituted 831 Sozomen (VIII. 2) also says that Chrysostom went from the school of Libanius to a private life instead of the legal profession as was expected of him, but from some utterances of Libanius, as well as from Chrysostom’s own representation, de Sacerdot. I. 1. 4, it appears that he had spent some time in the practice of the law.

832 It is not certain who this Evagrius was. Valesius thinks he was the presbyter of that name mentioned by Jerome, de Scriptor. Eccl.

833 It has been supposed by some that this was the Theodore addressed in II. 1, VI. Int. and VII. 47; but not with good reason. Cf. note 4, p. xii. of Int. On Theodore of Mopsuestia, the great ‘Exegete’ and theologian, see Smith & Wace; also Sieffert, Theodor. Mopsuestenus Vet. Test. Sobrie Interpret. Vindex and H. B. Swete, Theodori Episc. Mopsuestiæ in Epp. B. Pauli. Commentarii.

834 Sozomen also attests the simplicity of Diodorus’ interpretations of the Old Testament. The principle which he adopted, of seeking for a literal and historical meaning in preference to the allegorical and mystical interpretations attached to the Old Testament by Origen and the Alexandrians, became the corner-stone of the Antiochian system of interpretation as elaborated by his pupils Theodore of Mopsuestia and Theodoret.

835 θεωρίας lit. ‘speculations’ by which are evidently meant the allegorical and subjective or contemplative explanations of the Alexandrians.

836 ‘Socrates and Kurtz (in the tenth edition of his Kirchengeschichte, I. 223) confound this Basil with Basil the Great of Cappadocia, who was eighteen years older than Chrysostom, and died in 379. Chrysostom’s friend was probably (as Baronius and Montfaucon conjecture) identical with Basil, bishop of Raphanea in Syria, near Antioch, who attended the Council of Constantinople in 381.’ Comp. Venables in Smith and Wace; Schaff in a deacon by Meletius, but afterwards ordained bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. Accordingly Zeno\textsuperscript{837} the bishop on his return from Jerusalem, appointed him a reader in the church at Antioch. While he continued in the capacity of a reader he composed the book Against the Jews. Meletius having not long after conferred on him the rank of deacon, he produced his work On the Priesthood,\textsuperscript{838} and those Against Stagirius; and moreover those also On the Incomprehensibility of the Divine Nature, and On the Women\textsuperscript{839} who lived with the Ecclesiastics. Afterwards, upon the death of Meletius at Constantinople,—for there he had gone on account of Gregory Nazianzen’s ordination,—John separated himself from the Meletians, without entering into communion with Paulinus, and spent three whole years in retirement. Later, when Paulinus was dead, he was ordained a presbyter by Evagrius the successor of Paulinus. Such is a brief outline of John’s career previous to his call to the episcopal office. It is said that on account of his zeal for temperance he was stern and severe; and one of his early friends has said ‘that in his youth he manifested a proneness to irritability, rather than to modesty.’ Because of the rectitude of his life, he was free from anxiety about the future, and his simplicity of character rendered him open and ingenuous; nevertheless the liberty of speech he allowed himself was offensive to very many. In public teaching he was powerful in reforming the morals of his auditors; but in private conversation he was frequently thought haughty and assuming by those who did not know him.

---

Prolegomena to Vol. IX. of The Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, p. 6, note 2. The conjecture of Baronius is as- sented to also by Valesius.

837 According to Baronius, this Zeno was bishop of Tyre, but Valesius makes an ingenious objection to this view, and asserts that some other city must have been the real see of Zeno.

838 This treatise, commonly termed de Sacerdotio, and the Homilies are the most famous of Chrysostom’s works; for a full account, as well as translation, of these works, see Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, Vol. IX.

839 These were women who lived in the houses of the clergy as sisters, and exercised themselves in works of piety and charity. At a very early period, however, scandal seems to have arisen from this practice, and strong measures were repeatedly adopted by the Church for their suppression. Paul of Samosata was, according to Eusebius (H. E. VII. 30), deposed partly for keeping these sisters in his house. They were called Synesiaçı (Συνείσακτοι ). Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. XVII. 5. 20, and Council of Nicæa, Can. 3. Hefele, Hist. of Ch. Councils, Vol. I. p. 379.

348
Chapter IV.—Of Serapion the Deacon on whose Account John becomes Odious to his Clergy.

Being such in disposition and manners, and promoted to the episcopacy, John was led to conduct himself toward his clergy with more than proper superciliousness, designing to correct the morals of the clergy under him. Having thus chafed the temper of the ecclesiastics, he was disliked by them; and so many of them stood aloof from him as a passionate man, and others became his bitter enemies. Serapion, a deacon of his retinue, led him to alienate their minds still more from him; and once in presence of the whole assembled clergy he cried out with a loud voice to the bishop—‘You will never be able to govern these men, my lord, unless you drive them all with a rod.’ This speech of his excited a general feeling of animosity against the bishop; the bishop also not long after expelled many of them from the church, some for one cause, and some for another. And, as it usually happens when persons in office adopt such violent measures, those who were thus expelled by him formed combinations and inveighed against him to the people. What contributed greatly to gain credence for these complaints was the fact that the bishop was not willing to eat with any one else, and never accepted an invitation to a feast. On account of this the plot against him became widespread. His reasons for not eating with others no one knew with any certainty, but some persons in justification of his conduct state that he had a very delicate stomach, and weak digestion, which obliged him to be careful in his diet, and therefore he ate alone; while others thought this was due to his rigid and habitual abstinence. Whatever the real motive may have been, the circumstance itself contributed not a little to the grounds of accusation by his calumniators. The people nevertheless continued to regard him with love and veneration, on account of his valuable discourses in the church, and therefore those who sought to traduce him, only brought themselves into contempt. How eloquent, convincing, and persuasive his sermons were, both those which were published by himself, and such as were noted down by short-hand writers as he delivered them, why should we stay to declare? Those who desire to form an adequate idea of them, must read for themselves, and will thereby derive both pleasure and profit.

840 These reasons are given by Palladius as follows: ‘He was accustomed to eat alone, as I partially know, for these reasons: first, he drank no wine...secondly, his stomach was, on account of certain infirmities, irregular, so that often the food prepared for him was repugnant, and other food not put before him was desired. Again he at times neglected to eat, lengthening out his meal until evening, sometimes being absorbed in ecclesiastical cares and sometimes in contemplation;...but it is a custom with table companions if we do not relish the same articles of food which they do, or laugh at insignificant witticisms...to make this an occasion of ill-speech.’ Palladius, de Vita S. Joannis, 12.

349
Chapter V.—John draws down upon Himself the Displeasure of Many Persons of Rank and Power. Of the Eunuch Eutropius.

As long as John was in conflict with the clergy only, machinations against him were utterly powerless; but when he proceeded to rebuke many of those in public office also with immoderate vehemence, the tide of unpopularity began to set against him with far greater impetus. Hence many stories were told to his disparagement. And most of these found attentive and believing listeners. This growing prejudice was not a little increased by an oration which he pronounced at that time against Eutropius. For Eutropius was the chief eunuch of the imperial bed-chamber, and the first of all eunuchs that was admitted to the dignity of consul. He, desiring to inflict vengeance on certain persons who had taken refuge in the churches, induced the emperors to make a law excluding delinquents from the privilege of sanctuary, and authorizing the seizure of those who had sought the shelter of the sacred edifices. But its author was punished for this almost immediately; for scarcely had the law been promulgated, before Eutropius himself, having incurred the displeasure of the emperor, fled for protection to the church.

The bishop therefore, while Eutropius trembling with fear lay under the table of the altar, mounting the pulpit from which he was accustomed to address the people in order to be the more distinctly heard, uttered an invective against him: wherefore he seemed to create greater displeasure in some, as he not only denied compassion to the unfortunate, but added insult to cruelty. By the emperor’s order however, for certain offences committed by him, Eutropius, though bearing the consulate, was decapitated, and his name effaced from the list of consuls, that of Theodore his colleague being alone suffered to remain as in office for that year. It is said that John afterwards used the same license towards Gaïnas also, who was then commander-in-chief of the army; treating him with characteristic rudeness, because he had presumed to request the emperor to assign the Arians, with whom he agreed in sentiment, one of the churches within the city. Many others also of the higher orders, for a variety of causes, he censured with the same uncivilized freedom, so that by these means he created many powerful adversaries. Wherefore 841 Sozomen (VIII. 7) says that this law was rescinded very soon afterwards.

---

842 See also Chrysostom, Orat. in Eutropium, 1. 3 (Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, Vol. IX. p. 251). From these statements it appears that Zosimus is in error when he says (V. 18) that Eutropius was seized in violation of the law of sanctuary and taken out of the church. Chrysostom assigns his seizure to a time when he had left the church for some purpose or other.
843 ἀμβών, high reading-desk from which the Scriptures were recited, situated toward the middle of the church and distinguished from the altar, where the main service of worship was chanted. Bishops were accustomed to preach from the steps of the altar (cf. Bingham Christ. Antiq. VIII. 4. 5); but Chrysostom, on account of his little stature, as some say, used the ‘ambón’ as a pulpit.
844 399 a.d.
John draws down upon Himself the Displeasure of Many Persons of Rank and…

Theophilus bishop of Alexandria, immediately after his ordination, was plotting his over-throw; and concerted measures for this purpose in secret, both with the friends who were around him, and by letter with such as were at a distance. For it was not so much the boldness with which John lashed whatever was obnoxious to him, that affected Theophilus, as his own failure to place his favorite presbyter Isidore in the episcopal chair of Constantinople. In such a state were the affairs of John the bishop at that time; mischief thus threatened him at the very commencement of his episcopate. But we shall enter into these things more at large as we proceed.
Chapter VI.—Gaïnas the Goth attempts to usurp the Sovereign Power; after filling Constantinople with Disorder, he is slain.

I shall now narrate some memorable circumstances that occurred at that period, in which it will be seen how Divine Providence interposed by extraordinary agencies for the preservation of the city and Roman empire from the utmost peril. Gaïnas was a barbarian by extraction but after becoming a Roman subject, and having engaged in military service, and risen by degrees from one rank to another, he was at length appointed general-in-chief both of the Roman horse and foot. When he had obtained this lofty position, he forgot his position and relations, and was unable to restrain himself and on the other hand according to the common saying 'left no stone unturned' in order to gain control of the Roman government. To accomplish this he sent for the Goths out of their own country, and gave the principal commissions in the army to his relations. Then when Tribigildus, one of his kinsmen who had the command of the forces in Phrygia, had at the instigation of Gaïnas broken out into open revolt, and was filling the people of Phrygia with confusion and dismay, he managed to have deputed to him the oversight of matters in the disturbed province. Now the Emperor Arcadius not suspecting [any harm] committed the charge of these affairs to him. Gaïnas therefore immediately set out at the head of an immense number of the barbarous Goths, apparently on an expedition against Tribigildus, but with the real intention of establishing his own unjust domination. On reaching Phrygia he began to subvert everything. Consequently the affairs of the Romans were immediately thrown into great consternation, not only on account of the vast barbarian force which Gaïnas had at his command, but also because the most fertile and opulent regions of the East were threatened with desolation. In this emergency the emperor, acting with much prudence, sought to arrest the course of the barbarian by address: he accordingly sent him an embassy with instructions to appease him for the present by every kind of concession. Gaïnas having demanded that Saturninus and Aurelian, two of the most distinguished of the senatorial order, and men of consular dignity, whom he knew to be unfavorable to his pretensions, should be delivered up to him, the emperor most unwillingly yielded to the exigency of the crisis; and these two persons, prepared to die for the public good, nobly submitted themselves to the emperor's disposal. They therefore proceeded to meet the barbarian, at a place used for horse-racing some distance from Chalcedon, being resolved to endure whatever he might be disposed to inflict; but however they suffered no harm. The usurper simulating dissatisfaction, advanced to Chalcedon, whither the emperor Arcadius also went to meet him. Both then entered the church where the body of the martyr Euphemia is deposited, and there entered into a mutual pledge on oath that neither would plot against the other. The emperor indeed kept his engagement, having a religious regard to an oath, and being on that account beloved of God. But Gainas soon violated it, and did not swerve from his original purpose; on the contrary he was intent on carnage, plunder, and conflagration, not only against Constantinople, but also against the whole extent of the Roman empire, if he could by any means carry it into effect. The city was accordingly quite inundated by the barbarians, and its residents were reduced to a condition equivalent to that of captives. Moreover so great was the danger of the city that a comet of prodigious magnitude, reaching from heaven even to the earth, such as was never before seen, gave forewarning of it. Gaïnas first most shamelessly attempted to make a seizure of the silver publicly exposed for sale in the shops: but when the proprietors, advised beforehand by report of his intention, abstained from exposing it on their counters, his thoughts were diverted to another object, which was to send an immense body of barbarians at night for the purpose of burning down the palace. Then indeed it appeared distinctly that God had providential care over the city: for a multitude of angels appeared to the rebels, in the form of armed men of gigantic stature, before whom the barbarians, imagining them to be a large army of brave troops, turned away with terror and departed. When this was reported to Gaïnas, it seemed to him quite incredible—for he knew that the greatest part of the Roman army was at a distance, dispersed as a garrison over the Eastern cities—and he sent others on the following night and repeatedly afterwards. Now as they constantly returned with the same statement—for the angels of God always presented themselves in the same form—he came with a great multitude, and at length became himself a spectator of the prodigy. Then supposing that what he saw was really a body of soldiers, and that they concealed themselves by day, and baffled his designs by night, he desisted from his attempt, and took another resolution which he conceived would be detrimental to the Romans; but the event proved it to be greatly to their advantage. Pretending to be under demoniacal possession, he went forth as if for prayer to the church of St. John the Apostle, which is seven miles distant from the city. Together with him went barbarians who carried out arms, having concealed them in casks and other specious coverings. And when the soldiers who guarded the city gates detected these, and would not suffer them to pass, the barbarians drew their swords and put them to death. A fearful tumult thence arose in the city, and death seemed to threaten every one; nevertheless the city continued secure at that time, its gates being every where well defended. The emperor with timely wisdom proclaimed Gaïnas a public enemy, and ordered that all the barbarians who remained shut up in the city should be slain. Thus one day after the guards of the gates had been killed, the Romans attacked the barbarians within the walls near the church of the Goths—for thither such of them as had been left in the city had betaken themselves—and after destroying a great number of them they set the church on fire, and burnt it to the ground. Gaïnas being informed of the slaughter of those of his party who did not manage to get out of the city, and perceiving the failure of all his artifices, left St. John’s church, and advanced rapidly towards Thrace. On reaching the Chersonnese he endeavored to pass over from thence and take Lampsacus, in order that from that place he might make himself master of the Eastern parts. As the emperor had immediately dispatched forces in pursuit both by land and by sea, another wonderful interposition of Divine Providence occurred. For while the barbarians, destitute of ships, hastily put together rafts and were attempting to cross on them, suddenly the Roman fleet appeared, and the west wind began to blow hard. This afforded an easy passage to the Romans; but the barbarians with their horses, tossed up and down in their frail barks by the violence of the gale, were at length overwhelmed by the waves; many of them also were destroyed by the Romans. In this manner during the passage a vast number of the barbarians perished; but Gaïnas departing thence fled into Thrace, where he fell in with another body of the Roman forces and was slain by them together with the barbarians that attended him. 846 Let this cursory notice of Gaïnas suffice here.

Those who may desire more minute details of the circumstances of that war, should read The Gaïnea of Eusebius Scholasticus, 847 who was at that time a pupil of Troïlus the sophist; and having been a spectator of the war, related the events of it in an heroic poem consisting of four books; and inasmuch as the events alluded to had but recently taken place, he acquired for himself great celebrity. The poet Ammonius has also very lately composed another description in verse of the same transactions, which he recited before the emperor in the sixteenth consulate 848 of Theodosius the younger, which he bore with Faustus.

This war was terminated under the consulate of Stilicho and Aurelian. 849 The year following, 850 the consulate was celebrated by Fravitus also a Goth by extraction, who was honored by the Romans, and showed great fidelity and attachment to them, rendering important services in this very war. For this reason he attained to the dignity of consul. In that year on the tenth of April there was born a son to the Emperor Arcadius, the good Theodosius.

But while the affairs of the state were thus troubled, the dignitaries of the Church refrained not in the least from their disgraceful cabals against each other, to the great reproach of the Christian religion; for during this time the ecclesiastics incited tumults against each other. The source of the mischief originated in Egypt in the following manner.

846 Cf. an account of Gaïnas and his rebellion in Zosimus, V. 18–22.
848 438 a.d.
849 400 a.d.
850 401 a.d.

The question had been started a little before, whether God is a corporeal existence, and has the form of man; or whether he is incorporeal, and without human or, generally speaking, any other bodily shape? From this question arose strifes and contentions among a very great number of persons, some favoring one opinion on the subject, and others patronizing the opposite. Very many of the more simple ascetics asserted that God is corporeal, and has a human figure: but most others condemn their judgment, and contended that God is incorporeal, and free of all form whatever. With these latter Theophilus bishop of Alexandria agreed so thoroughly that in the church before all the people he inveighed against those who attributed to God a human form, expressly teaching that the Divine Being is wholly incorporeal. When the Egyptian ascetics were apprised of this, they left their monasteries and came to Alexandria; where they excited a tumult against the bishop, accusing him of impiety, and threatening to put him to death. Theophilus becoming aware of his danger, after some consideration had recourse to this expedient to extricate himself from the threatened death. Going to the monks, he in a conciliatory tone thus addressed them: ‘In seeing you, I behold the face of God.’ The utterance of this saying moderated the fury of these men and they replied: ‘If you really admit that God’s countenance is such as ours, anathematize Origen’s book; for some drawing arguments from them oppose themselves to our opinion. If you will not do this, expect to be treated by us as an impious person, and the enemy of God.’ ‘But as far as I am concerned,’ said Theophilus, ‘I will readily do what you require: and be ye not angry with me, for I myself also disapprove of Origen’s works, and consider those who countenance them deserving of censure.’ Thus he succeeded in appeasing and sending away the monks at that time; and probably the whole dispute respecting this subject would have been set at rest, had it not been for another circumstance which happened immediately after. Over the monasteries in Egypt there were four devout persons as superintendents named Dioscorus, Ammonius, Eusebius, and Euthymius: these men were brothers, and had the appellation of ‘the Tall Monks’ given them on account of their stature. They were moreover distinguished both for the sanctity of their lives, and the extent of their erudition, and for these reasons their reputation was very high at Alexandria. Theophilus in particular, the prelate of that city, loved and honored them exceedingly: in-851 By Audius or Audæus, the founder of the Audian heresy. Cf. Epiphan. Hær. LXX.; Walch, Histor. der Ketzereien, Vol. III. p. 300; also Iselin, Audios und die Audianer, in Jahrbücher für Protestant. Theologie, April, 1890; p. 298 seq.

852 On the dispute concerning Origen’s views, see below, chap. 13.
somuch that he constituted one of them, Dioscorus, bishop of Hermopolis\textsuperscript{853} against his will, having forcibly drawn him from his retreat. Two of the others he entreated to continue with him, and with difficulty prevailed upon them to do so; still by the exercise of his authority as bishop he accomplished his purpose: when therefore he had invested them with the clerical office, he committed to their charge the management of ecclesiastical affairs. They, constrained by necessity, performed the duties thus imposed on them successfully; nevertheless they were dissatisfied because they were unable to follow philosophical pursuits and ascetic exercises. And as in process of time, they thought they were being spiritually injured, observing the bishop to be devoted to gain, and greedily intent on the acquisition of wealth, and according to the common saying ‘leaving no stone unturned’ for the sake of gain, they refused to remain with him any longer, declaring that they loved solitude, and greatly preferred it to living in the city. As long as he was ignorant of the true motive for their departure, he earnestly begged them to abide with him; but when he perceived that they were dissatisfied with his conduct, he became excessively irritated, and threatened to do them all kinds of mischief. But they making little account of his menaces retired into the desert; upon which Theophilus, who was evidently of a hasty and malignant temperament, raised not a small clamor against them, and by every contrivance earnestly sought to do them injury. He also conceived a dislike against their brother Dioscorus, bishop of Hermopolis. He was moreover extremely annoyed at the esteem and veneration in which he was held by the ascetics. Being aware, however, that he would be able to do no harm to these persons unless he could stir up hostility in the minds of the monks against them, he used this artifice to effect it. He well knew that these men in their frequent theological discussions with him, had maintained that the Deity was incorporeal, and by no means had a human form; because [they argued] such a constitution would involve the necessary accompaniment of human passions. Now this has been demonstrated by the ancient writers and especially Origen. Theophilus, however though entertaining the very same opinion respecting the Divine nature, yet to gratify his vindictive feelings, did not hesitate to pervert what he and they had rightly taught: but imposed upon the majority of the monks, men who were sincere but ‘rude in speech,’\textsuperscript{854} the greater part of whom were quite illiterate. Sending letters to the monasteries in the desert, he advised them not to give heed either to Dioscorus or to his brothers, inasmuch as they affirmed that God had not a body. ‘Whereas,’ said he, ‘according to the sacred Scripture God has eyes, ears, hands, and feet, as men have; but the partisans of Dioscorus, being followers of Origen, introduce the blasphemous dogma that God has neither eyes, ears, feet, nor hands.’ By this sophism he took advantage of the simplicity of these monks and thus a hot dissension was stirred up among them. Such as had a cultivated mind indeed were not beguiled by this plausibility, and therefore still adhere to Dioscorus and Origen; but the more ignorant who greatly exceeded the others in number, inflamed by an ardent zeal without knowledge, immediately raised an outcry against their brethren. A division being thus made, both parties branded each other as impious; and some listening to Theophilus called their brethren ‘Origenists,’ and ‘impious’ and the others termed those who were convinced by Theophilus ‘Anthropomorphitæ.’ On this account violent altercation arose, and an inextinguishable war between the monks. Theophilus on receiving intimation of the success of his device, went to Nitria where the monasteries are, accompanied by a multitude of persons, and armed the monks against Dioscorus and his brethren; who being in danger of losing their lives, made their escape with great difficulty.

While these things were in progress in Egypt John bishop of Constantinople was ignorant of them, but flourished in eloquence and became increasingly celebrated for his discourses. Moreover he first enlarged the prayers contained in the nocturnal hymns, for the reason I am about to assign.
Chapter VIII.—The Arians and the Supporters of the 'Homoousion' hold Nocturnal Assemblies and sing Antiphonal Hymns, a Species of Composition ascribed to Ignatius, surnamed Theophorus. Conflict between the Two Parties.

The Arians, as we have said, held their meetings without the city. As often therefore as the festal days occurred—I mean Saturday and Lord’s day—in each week, on which assemblies are usually held in the churches, they congregated within the city gates about the public squares, and sang responsive verses adapted to the Arian heresy. This they did during the greater part of the night: and again in the morning, chanting the same songs which they called responsive, they paraded through the midst of the city, and so passed out of the gates to go to their places of assembly. But since they did not desist from making use of insulting expressions in relation to the Homoousians, often singing such words as these: ‘Where are they that say three things are but one power?’—John fearing lest any of the more simple should be drawn away from the church by such kind of hymns, opposed to them some of his own people, that they also employing themselves in chanting nocturnal hymns, might obscure the effort of the Arians, and confirm his own party in the profession of their faith. John’s design indeed seemed to be good, but it issued in tumult and dangers. For as the Homoousians performed their nocturnal hymns with greater display,—for there were invented by John silver crosses for them on which lighted wax-tapers were carried, provided at the expense of the empress Eudoxia,—the Arians who were very numerous, and fired with envy, resolved to revenge themselves by a desperate and riotous attack upon their rivals. For from the remembrance of their own recent domination, they were full of confidence in their ability to overcome, and of contempt for their adversaries. Without delay therefore, on one of these nights, they engaged in a conflict; and Briso, one of the eunuchs of the empress, who was at that time leading the chanters of these hymns, was wounded by a stone in the forehead, and also some of the people on both sides were killed. Whereupon the emperor being angered, forbade the Arians to chant their hymns any more in public. Such were the events of this occasion.

We must now however make some allusion to the origin of this custom in the church of responsive singing. Ignatius, third bishop of Antioch in Syria from the apostle Peter, who also had held intercourse with the apostles themselves, saw a vision of angels hymning in alternate chants the Holy Trinity. Accordingly he introduced the mode of singing he had observed in the vision into the Antiochian church; whence it was transmitted by tradition to all the other churches. Such is the account [we have received] in relation to these responsive hymns.

view that Ignatius did introduce these chants, and Flavian and Diodorus, during the reign of Constantine, to whom Valesius ascribes their origin, simply developed them. Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. XIV. 1.
Chapter IX.—Dispute between Theophilus and Peter leading to an Attempt on the Part of the Former to depose John Bishop of Constantinople.

Not long after this, the monks of the desert, together with Dioscorus and his brothers, came to Constantinople. There was also with them Isidore, formerly the most intimate friend of the bishop Theophilus, but then become his bitterest enemy, on account of the following circumstance: A certain man named Peter was at that time the archpresbyter of the Alexandrian church; Theophilus being irritated against this person, determined to eject him from the church; and as the ground of expulsion, he brought the charge against him of having admitted to a participation of the sacred mysteries, a woman of the Manichæan sect, without first compelling her to renounce her Manichæan heresy. As Peter in his defence declared, that not only had the errors of this woman been previously abjured, but that Theophilus himself had sanctioned her admission to the eucharist, Theophilus became indignant, as if he had been grievously calumniated; whereupon he affirmed that he was altogether unacquainted with the circumstance. Peter therefore summoned Isidore to bear witness to the bishop’s knowledge of the facts concerning the woman. Now Isidore happened to be then at Rome, on a mission from Theophilus to Damasus the prelate of the imperial city, for the purpose of affecting a reconciliation between him and Flavian bishop of Antioch; for the adherents of Meletius had separated from Flavian in detestation of his perjury, as we have already observed. When Isidore had returned from Rome, and was cited as a witness by Peter, he deposed that the woman was received by consent of the bishop; and that he himself had administered the sacrament to her. Upon this Theophilus became enraged and in anger ejected them both. This furnished the reason for Isidore’s going to Constantinople with Dioscorus and his brethren, in order to submit to the cognizance of the emperor, and John the bishop, the injustice and violence with which Theophilus had treated them. John, on being informed of the facts, gave the men an honorable reception, and did not exclude them from communion at prayers, but postponed their communion of the sacred mysteries, until their affairs should be examined into. Whilst matters were in this posture, a false report was brought to Theophilus’ ears, that John had both admitted them to a participation of the mysteries, and was also ready to give them assistance; wherefore he resolved not only to be revenged on Isidore and Dioscorus, but also if possible to cast John out of his episcopal chair. With this design he wrote to all the bishops of the various cities, and concealing his real motive, ostensibly condemned therein the books of Origen merely: which Athanasius, his predecessor, had used in confirmation of his own faith, frequently

For an account of Theophilus’ outrageous treatment of Isidore, see Palladius, Vita S. Joannis Chrysost. chap. 6.

See Bingham, Christ. Antiq. II. 19–18, for a statement of the functions of this office.

See above, V. 15.

appealing to the testimony and authority of Origen’s writings, in his orations against the Arians.
Chapter X.—Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus convenes a Synod to condemn the Books of Origen.

He moreover renewed his friendship with Epiphanius bishop of Constantia in Cyprus, with whom he had formerly been at variance. For Theophilus accused Epiphanius of entertaining low thoughts of God, by supposing him to have a human form. Now although Theophilus was really unchanged in sentiment, and had denounced those who thought that the divinity was human in form, yet on account of his hatred of others, he openly denied his own convictions; and he now professed to be friendly with Epiphanius, as if he had altered his mind and agreed with him in his views of God. He then managed it so that Epiphanius by letter should convene a Synod of the bishops in Cyprus, in order to condemn the writings of Origen. Epiphanius being on account of his extraordinary piety a man of simple mind and manners was easily influenced by the letters of Theophilus: having therefore assembled a council of bishops in that island, he caused a prohibition to be therein made of the reading of Origen’s works. He also wrote to John, exhorting him to abstain from the study of Origen’s books, and to convoke a Synod for decreeing the same thing as he had done. Accordingly when Theophilus had in this way deluded Epiphanius, who was famous for his piety, seeing his design prosper according to his wish, he became more confident, and himself also assembled a great number of bishops. In that convention, pursuing the same course as Epiphanius, he caused a like sentence of condemnation to be pronounced on the writings of Origen, who had been dead nearly two hundred years: not having this as his first object, but rather his purpose of revenge on Dioscorus and his brethren. John paying but little attention to the communications of Epiphanius and Theophilus, was intent on instructing the churches; and he flourished more and more as a preacher, but made no account of the plots which were laid against him. As soon, however, as it became apparent to every body that Theophilus was endeavoring to divest John of his bishopric, then all those who had any ill-will against John, combined in calumniating him. And thus many of the clergy, and many of those in office, and of those who had great influence at the court, believing that they had found an opportunity now of avenging themselves upon John, exerted 862 There were thirty-five bishops, besides several presbyters and laymen of some distinction in the ancient church, who bore the name of Epiphanius. The bishop here mentioned is the most illustrious of them all, being the author of the well-known treatise de Hæres. His see—that of Constantia in Cyprus—was the old ‘Salamis’ of Acts xiii. 5.

863 It seems strange that Epiphanius should be classed with the Anthropomorphitæ as Epiphanius himself repudiates their views according to the testimony of Jerome. Cf. Jerome, ad Pammachium, 2 et seq. Socrates must have been imposed upon by some Origenist, as the Origenists were accustomed to call all who condemned their views Anthropomorphitæ. Cf. above, chap. 7. themselves to procure the convocation of a Grand Synod at Constantinople, partly by sending letters and partly by dispatching messengers in all directions for that purpose.
Chapter XI.—Of Severian and Antiochus: their Disagreement from John.

The odium against John Chrysostom was considerably increased by another additional event as follows: two bishops flourished at that time, Syrians by birth, named Severian and Antiochus; Severian presided over the church at Gabala, a city of Syria, and Antiochus over that of Ptolemais in Phœnicia. They were both renowned for their eloquence; but although Severian was a very learned man, he did not succeed in using the Greek language perfectly; and so while speaking Greek he betrayed his Syrian origin. Antiochus came first to Constantinople, and having preached in the churches for some time with great zeal and ability, and having thus amassed a large sum of money, \(^{864}\) he returned to his own church. Severian hearing that Antiochus had collected a fortune by his visit to Constantinople, determined to follow his example. He therefore exercised himself for the occasion, and having composed a number of sermons, set out for Constantinople. Being most kindly received by John, to a certain point, he soothed and flattered the man, and was himself no less beloved and honored by him: meanwhile his discourses gained him great celebrity, so that he attracted the notice of many persons of rank, and even of the emperor himself. And as it happened at that time that the bishop of Ephesus died, John was obliged to go to Ephesus for the purpose of ordaining a successor. On his arrival at that city, as the people were divided in their choice, some proposing one person, and some another, John perceiving that both parties were in a contentious mood, and that they did not wish to adopt his counsel, he resolved without much ado to end their dispute by preferring to the bishopric a certain Heraclides, a deacon of his own, and a Cypriot by descent. And thus both parties desisting from their strife with each other had peace. \(^{865}\) Now as this detention [at Ephesus] was lengthened, Severian continued to preach at Constantinople, and daily grew in favor with his hearers. Of this John was not left ignorant, for he was promptly made acquainted with whatever occurred, Sera- pion, of whom we have before spoken, \(^{866}\) communicating the news to him and asserting that the church was being troubled by Severian; thus the bishop was aroused to a feeling of 864 The offerings of the congregations seem to have been divided usually among the officiating clergymen. Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. V. 4. 1.

---

865 In another version of this eleventh chapter of the sixth book, appended at the end of the sixth book in the Greek text of Bright, instead of the sentence beginning 'And thus both parties,' &c. is found the following more consistent statement: 'Inasmuch, however, as on this account a tumult arose at Ephesus, on the ground that Heraclides was not worthy of the bishopric, it became necessary for John to remain in Ephesus for a long time.'

866 The alternative version inserts here the following sentence: 'And who was very much beloved by John and had been intrusted with the whole care of the episcopal administration, on account of his piety and faithfulness and watchfulness in respect to details of every sort, and diligence in matters pertaining to the interests of the bishop.'
jealousy. Having therefore among other matters deprived many of the Novatians and Quartodecimans of their churches, he returned to Constantinople. Here he resumed himself the care of the churches under his own especial jurisdiction. But Serapion's arrogance no one could bear; for thus having won John's unbounded confidence and regard, he was so puffed up by it that he treated every one with contempt. And on this account also animosity was inflamed the more against the bishop. On one occasion when Severian passed by him, Serapion neglected to pay him the homage due to a bishop, but continued seated [instead of rising], indicating plainly how little he cared for his presence. Severian, unable to endure _867_ From this point to within one or two sentences of the end of the chapter the parallel version is so different at times that it will be well to insert it entire here for the purpose of comparison. It runs thus: 'Not long afterward John came to Constantinople and assumed himself the churches which belonged to his jurisdiction. But between Serapion, the deacon, and Severian there had arisen a certain coolness; Serapion was opposed to Severian because the latter seemed desirous of excelling John in public speaking, and Severian was jealous of Serapion because the bishop John favored him, and the care of the bishopric had been intrusted to him. They being thus disposed toward one another, it happened that the evil of hatred was increased from the following cause. As Severian was passing by on one occasion Serapion did not render him the homage due to a bishop, but he continued sitting; whether because he had not noticed him, as he afterwards affirmed upon oath before a council, or because he cared little for him, being himself the vicegerent of a bishop, as Severian asserted, I am unable to say; God only knows. At the time, however, Severian did not tolerate the contempt; but immediately, and in anticipation of a public investigation before a council, he condemned Serapion upon oath, and not only declared him deposed from the dignity of the diaconate, but also put him out of the church. John upon learning this was very much grieved. As the matter afterwards was investigated by a council and Serapion defended himself declaring that he had not perceived [the approach of the bishop], and summoned witnesses to the fact, the common verdict of the assembled bishops was in favor of acquitting him and urging Severian to accept the apology of Serapion. The Bishop John, for his part, to satisfy Severian, suspended Serapion from the diaconate for a week; although he used him in all his affairs as his right hand, because he was very keen and diligent in ecclesiastical disputation. Severian however was not satisfied with these measures, but used all means to effect the permanent deposition of Serapion from the diaconate and his excommunication. John was extremely grieved at these words and arose from the council, leaving the adjudication of the case to the bishops present, saying to them, "Do you examine the matter in hand and render judgment according to your own conclusions; as for me I resign my part in the arbitration between them." These things having been said by John as he arose, the council likewise arose and left the case, as it stood, blaming Severian the more for not yielding to the request of the Bishop John. After this John never received Severian into a private interview; but advised him to return to his own country, communicating to him the following message: "It is not expedient, Severian," said he, "that the parish intrusted to you should remain for so long without care and bereft of a bishop; wherefore hasten and take charge of your churches, and do not neglect the gift which is in you." As he now prepared for his journey and started, the Empress Eudoxia, on being informed of the facts, &c. From this point the variations are few, verbal, and unimportant._ patiently this [supposed] rudeness and contempt, said with a loud voice to those present, ‘If Serapion should die a Christian, Christ has not become incarnate.’ Serapion, taking occasion from this remark, publicly incited Chrysostom to enmity against Severian: for suppressing the conditional clause of the sentence, ‘If Serapion die a Christian,’ and saying that he had made the assertion that ‘Christ has not become incarnate,’ he brought several witnesses of his own party to sustain this charge. But on being informed of this the Empress Eudoxia severely reprimanded John, and ordered that Severian should be immediately recalled from Chalcedon in Bithynia. He returned forthwith; but John would hold no intercourse whatever with him, nor did he listen to any one urging him to do so, until at length the Empress Eudoxia herself, in the church called The Apostles, placed her son Theodosius, who now so happily reigns, but was then quite an infant, before John’s knees, and adjuring him repeatedly by the young prince her son, with difficulty prevailed upon him to be reconciled to Severian. In this manner then these men were outwardly reconciled; but they nevertheless continued cherishing a rancorous feeling toward each other. Such was the origin of the animosity [of John] against Severian.

---

868 The ancients often swore by their children, especially when they wished to entreat others most earnestly. Cf. Vergil, Aeneid, VI. 364, Per caput hoc juro, per spem surgentis Juli. The form of abjuration used by Eudoxia was probably this: ‘By this little child of mine, and your spiritual son, whom I brought forth and whom you received out of the sacred font, be reconciled to Severian.’ Valesius, however, doubts the reality of this affair.
Ch. XII.—Epiphanius, in order to gratify Theophilus, performs Ordinations at Constantinople without John’s Permission.

Not long after this, at the suggestion of Theophilus, the bishop Epiphanius again came from Cyprus to Constantinople; he brought also with him a copy of the synodical decree in which they did not excommunicate Origen himself but condemned his books. On reaching St. John’s church, which is seven miles distant from the city, he disembarked, and there celebrated a service; then after having ordained a deacon,869 he again entered the city. In complaisance to Theophilus he declined John’s courtesy, and engaged apartments in a private house. He afterwards assembled those of the bishops who were then in the capital, and producing his copy of the synodical decree condemnatory of Origen’s works, recited it before them; not being able to assign any reason for this judgment, than that it seemed fit to Theophilus and himself to reject them. Some indeed from a reverential respect for Epiphanius subscribed the decree; but many refused to do so among whom was Theotimus bishop of Scythia, who thus addressed Epiphanius:—‘I neither choose, Epiphanius,’ said he, ‘to insult the memory of one who ended his life piously long ago; nor dare I be guilty of so impious an act, as that of condemning what our predecessors did not reject: and especially when I know of no evil doctrine contained in Origen’s books.’ Having said this, he brought forward one of that author’s works, and reading a few passages therefrom, showed that the sentiments propounded were in perfect accordance with the orthodox faith. He then added, ‘Those who speak evil of these writings are unconsciously casting dishonor upon the sacred volume whence their principles are drawn.’ Such was the reply which Theotimus, a bishop celebrated for his piety and rectitude of life, made to Epiphanius.

869 It was contrary to the canons of the church for a bishop to ordain a presbyter or a deacon in another’s diocese. Cf. Apostol. Can. 35. ‘Let not a bishop dare to ordain beyond his own limits in cities and places not subject to him. But if he be convicted of doing so without the consent of those persons who have authority over such cities and places, let him be deposed, and those also whom he has ordained.’ Also Can. 16 of the Council of Nicæa; ‘If any one should dare to steal, as it were, a person who belongs to another [bishop], and to ordain him for his own church, without permission of the bishop from whom he was withdrawn, the ordination shall be void.’
Chapter XIII.—The Author’s Defence of Origen.\textsuperscript{870}

But since carping detractors have imposed upon many persons and have succeeded in deterring them from reading Origen, as though he were a blasphemous writer, I deem it not unseasonable to make a few observations respecting him. Worthless characters, and such as are destitute of ability to attain eminence themselves, often seek to get into notice by decrying those who excel them. And first Methodius, bishop of a city in Lycia named Olympus, labored under this malady; next Eustathius, who for a short time presided over the church at Antioch; after him Apollinaris; and lastly Theophilus. This quaternion of revilers has traduced Origen, but not on the same grounds, one having found one cause of accusation against him, and another another; and thus each has demonstrated that what he has taken no objection to, he has fully accepted. For since one has attacked one opinion in particular, and another has found fault with another, it is evident that each has admitted as true what he has not assailed, giving a tacit approbation to what he has not attacked. Methodius indeed, when he had in various places railed against Origen, afterwards as if retracting all he had previously said, expresses his admiration of the man, in a dialogue which he entitled Xenon.\textsuperscript{871} But I affirm that from the censure of these men, greater commendation accrues to Origen. For those who have sought out whatever they deemed worthy of reprobation in him, and yet have never charged him with holding unsound views respecting the holy Trinity, are in this way most distinctly shown to bear witness to his orthodox piety: and by not reproaching him on this point, they commend him by their own testimony. But Athanasius the defender of the doctrine of consubstantiality, in his Discourses against the Arians\textsuperscript{872} continually cites this author as a witness of his own faith, interweaving his words with his own, and saying, ‘The most admirable and assiduous Origen,’ says he, ‘by his own testimony confirms our doctrine concerning the Son of God, affirming him to be co-eternal with the Father.’ Those therefore who load Origen with opprobrium, overlook the fact that their maledictions fall at the same time on Athanasius, the eulogist of Origen. So much will be enough for the vindication of Origen; we shall now return to the course of our history.

\textsuperscript{870} The views of Origen met with opposition from the very outset. During his own lifetime he was condemned at Alexandria, and after his death repeatedly until 541 a.d., and perhaps also by the fifth general council held at Constantinople in 553. For a full account of the Origenistic Controversy, see Smith and Wace, Dict. of Christ. Biog. and Antiq., art. Origenistic Controversies.

\textsuperscript{871} ’The house of entertainment for strangers.’ Methodius’ works were in the literary form of the dialogue. Cf. his Convivum decem Virginum in Migne’s Patrologia Græca, Vol. XVIII.

\textsuperscript{872} Athan. de Decr. Nic. 27.
Chapter XIV.—Epiphanius is asked to meet John; on refusing he is admonished concerning his Anticanonical Proceedings; alarmed at this he leaves Constantinople.

John was not offended because Epiphanius, contrary to the ecclesiastical canon, had made an ordination in his church, but invited him to remain with him at the episcopal palace. He, however, replied that he would neither stay nor pray with him, unless he would expel Dioscorus and his brethren from the city, and with his own hand subscribe the condemnation of Origen's books. Now as John deferred the performance of these things, saying that nothing ought to be done rashly before investigation by a general council, John's adversaries led Epiphanius to adopt another course. For they contrived it so that as a meeting was in the church named The Apostles, Epiphanius came forth and before all the people condemned the books of Origen, excommunicated Dioscorus with his followers, and charged John with countenancing them. These things were reported to John; whereupon on the following day he sent the appended message to Epiphanius just as he entered the church:

‘You do many things contrary to the canons, Epiphanius. In the first place you have made an ordination in the churches under my jurisdiction: then without my appointment, you have on your own authority officiated in them. Moreover, when heretofore I invited you hither, you refused to come, and now you take that liberty yourself. Beware therefore, lest a tumult being excited among the people, you yourself should also incur danger therefrom.’

Epiphanius becoming alarmed on hearing these admonitions, left the church; and after accusing John of many things, he set out on his return to Cyprus. Some say that when he was about to depart, he said to John, ‘I hope that you will not die a bishop’: to which John replied, ‘Expect not to arrive at your own country.’ I cannot be sure that those who reported these things to me spoke the truth; but nevertheless the event was in the case of both as prophesied above. For Epiphanius did not reach Cyprus, having died on board the ship during his voyage; and John a short time afterwards was driven from his see, as we shall show in proceeding.

873 See above, chap. 12 and note 1.
Chapter XV.—John is expelled from his Church by a Synod held at Chalcedon on account of his Dispraise of Women.

When Epiphanius was gone, John was informed by some person that the Empress Eu-doxia had stimulated Epiphanius against him. And being of a fiery temperament, and of a ready utterance, he soon after pronounced a public invective against women in general. The people readily took this as uttered indirectly against the empress and so the speech was laid hold of by evil-disposed persons, and reported to those in authority. At length on being informed of it the empress immediately complained to her husband, telling him that the insult offered to herself was equally an insult against him. The emperor therefore authorized Theophilus to convocate a Synod without delay against John; Severian also co-operated in promoting this, for he still retained his grudge against Chrysostom. Not long time accordingly intervened before Theophilus arrived, having induced several bishops from different cities to accompany him; these however had been summoned by the emperor’s orders also. Many of the bishops in Asia John had deposed when he went to Ephesus and ordained Heraclides.
Accordingly they all by previous agreement assembled at Chalcedon in Bithynia. Cyrinus was at that time bishop of Chalcedon, an Egyptian by birth, who said many things to the bishops in disparagement of John, denouncing him as ‘the impious,’ ‘the haughty,’ ‘the in-exorable.’ They indeed were very much satisfied at these denunciations. But Maruthas bishop of Mesopotamia having involuntarily trod on Cyrinus’ foot, he was severely hurt by it and was unable to embark with the rest for Constantinople, but remained behind at Chalcedon. The rest crossed over. Now Theophilus had so openly avowed his hostility to John, that none of the clergy would go forth to meet him, or pay him the least honor; but some Alexandrian sailors happening to be on the spot— for at that time the grain transporting vessels were there—greeted him with joyful acclamations. He excused himself from entering the church, and took up his abode at one of the imperial mansions called ‘The Placidian.’
Then on this account a torrent of accusations began to be poured forth against John; for no mention was now made of Origen, but all were intent on urging a variety of criminations, many of which were ridiculous. Preliminary matters being thus settled, the bishops were convened in one of the suburbs of Chalcedon, a place called ‘The Oak,’ and immediately cited John to answer the charges which were brought against him. He also summoned Serapion the deacon; Tigris the eunuch presbyter, and Paul the reader, were likewise summoned to appear there with him, for these men were included in the impeachments, as participators in his guilt. And since John taking exception to those who had cited him, on the ground of their being his enemies, refused to attend, and demanded a general council, without delay

874 Hence this is called the Synod at ‘the Oak’ (Synodus ad Quercum). See Hefele, History of the Church Councils, Vol. II. p. 430.
875 For a similar action of Athanasius based on the same reason, see I. 31.
they repeated their citation four times in succession; and as he persisted in his refusal to meet them as his judges, always giving the same answer, they condemned him, and deposed him without assigning any other cause for his deposition but that he refused to obey the summons. This decision on being announced towards evening, incited the people to a most alarming sedition; insomuch that they kept watch all night, and would by no means suffer him to be removed from the church, but cried out that his cause ought to be determined in a larger assembly. A decree of the emperor, however, commanded that he should be immediately expelled, and sent into exile; which as soon as John was apprised of, he voluntarily surrendered himself about noon unknown to the populace, on the third day after his condemnation: for he dreaded any insurrectionary movement on his account, and was accordingly led away.
Chapter XVI.—Sedition on Account of John Chrysostom’s Banishment. He is recalled.

The people then became intolerably tumultuous; and as it frequently happens in such cases, many who before were adversely disposed against him, now changed their hostility into compassion, and said of him whom they had so recently desired to see deposed, that he had been traduced. By this means therefore they became very numerous who exclaimed against both the emperor and the Synod of bishops; but the origin of the intrigue they more particularly referred to Theophilus. For his fraudulent conduct could no longer be concealed, being exposed by many other indications, and especially by the fact of his having held communion with Dioscorus, and those termed ‘the Tall Monks,’ immediately after John’s deposition. But Severian preaching in the church, and thinking it a suitable occasion to demur against John, said: ‘If John had been condemned for nothing else, yet the haughtiness of his demeanor was a crime sufficient to justify his deposition. Men indeed are forgiven all other sins: but “God resisteth the proud,” as the Divine Scriptures teach us.’ These reproaches made the people still more inclined to opposition; so that the emperor gave orders for his immediate recall. Accordingly Briso a eunuch in the service of the empress was sent after him, who finding him at Prænetum—a commercial town situated over against Nicomedia—brought him back toward Constantinople. And as he had been recalled, John refused to enter the city, declaring he would not do so until his innocence had been admitted by a higher tribunal. Thus he remained at a suburb called Marianæ. Now as he delayed at that place the commotion increased, and caused the people to break forth into very indignant and opprobrious language against their rulers, wherefore to check their fury John was constrained to proceed. On his way a vast multitude, with veneration and honor, conducted him immediately to the church; there they entreated him to seat himself in the episcopal chair, and give them his accustomed benediction. When he sought to excuse himself, saying that ‘this ought to be brought about by an order from his judges, and that those who condemned him must first revoke their sentence,’ they were only the more inflamed with the desire of seeing him reinstated, and of hearing him address them again. The people finally prevailed on him to resume his seat, and pray as usual for peace upon them; after which, acting under the same constraint, he preached to them. This compliance on John’s part afforded his adversaries another ground of crimination; but respecting this they took no action at that time.

876  See above, chap. 7.
877  1 Pet. v. 5; James iv. 6.
878  Chap. 8.
Chapter XVII.—Conflict between the Constantinopolitans and Alexandrians on Account of Heraclides; Flight of Theophilus and the Bishops of his Party.

In the first place, then, Theophilus attempted to investigate the case of the ordination of Heraclides, that thereby he might if possible find occasion of again deposing John. Heraclides was not present at this scrutiny. He was nevertheless judged in his absence, on the charge of having unjustly beaten some persons, and afterwards dragged them in chains through the midst of the city of Ephesus. As John and his adherents remonstrated against the injustice of passing sentence upon an absent person, the Alexandrians contended that they ought to hear the accusers of Heraclides, although he was not present. A sharp contest therefore ensued between the Alexandrians and the Constantinopolitans, and a riot arose whereby many persons were wounded, and some were killed. Theophilus, seeing what was done, fled to Alexandria without ceremony; and the other bishops, except the few who supported John, followed his example, and returned to their respective sees. After these transactions, Theophilus was degraded, in every one’s estimation: but the odium attached to him was exceedingly increased by the shameless way in which he continued to read Origen’s works. And when he was asked why he thus countenanced what he had publicly condemned, he replied, ‘Origen’s books are like a meadow enameled with flowers of every kind. If, therefore, I chance to find a beautiful one among them, I cull it: but whatever appears to me to be thorny, I step over, as that which would prick.’ But Theophilus gave this answer without reflecting on the saying of the wise Solomon, that ‘the words of the wise are as goads; and those who are pricked by the precepts they contain, ought not to kick against them. For these reasons then Theophilus was held in contempt by all men. Dioscorus bishop of Hermopolis, one of those termed ‘the Tall Monks,’ died a short time after the flight of Theophilus, and was honored with a magnificent funeral, being interred in the church at ‘The Oak,’ where the Synod was convened on John’s account. John meanwhile was sedulously employed in preaching. He ordained Serapion bishop of Heraclea in Thrace, on whose account the odium against himself had been raised. Not long after the following events occurred.

879 See above, chap. 11.

880 Eccl. xii. 11.
Chapter XVIII.—Of Eudoxia’s Silver Statue. On account of it John is exiled a Second Time.

At this time a silver statue of the Empress Eudoxia covered with a long robe was erected upon a column of porphyry supported by a lofty base. And this stood neither near nor far from the church named Sophia, but one-half the breadth of the street separated them. At this statue public games were accustomed to be performed; these John regarded as an insult offered to the church, and having regained his ordinary freedom and keenness of tongue, he employed his tongue against those who tolerated them. Now while it would have been proper to induce the authorities by a supplicatory petition to discontinue the games, he did not do this, but employing abusive language he ridiculed those who had enjoined such practices. The empress once more applied his expressions to herself as indicating marked contempt toward her own person: she therefore endeavored to procure the convocation of another council of bishops against him. When John became aware of this, he delivered in the church that celebrated oration commencing with these words: ‘Again Herodias raves; again she is troubled; she dances again; and again desires to receive John’s head in a charger.’ This, of course, exasperated the empress still more. Not long after the following bishops arrived: Leontius bishop of Ancyra in Asia, Ammonius of Laodicea in Pisidia, Briso of Philippi in Thrace, Acacius of Beroea in Syria, and some others. John presented himself fearlessly before them, and demanded an investigation of the charges which were made against him. But the anniversary of the birth of our Saviour having recurred, the emperor would not attend church as usual, but sent Chrysostom a message to the effect that he should not partake of the communion with him until he had cleared himself of the crimes with which he stood impeached. Now as John maintained a bold and ardent bearing, and his accusers seemed to grow faint-hearted, the bishops present, setting aside all other matters, said they would confine themselves to this sole consideration, that he had on his own responsibility, after his deposition, again seated himself in the episcopal chair, without being authorized by an ecclesiastical council. As he alleged that sixty-five bishops who had held communion with him had reinstated him, the partisans of Leontius objected, saying: ‘A larger number voted against you, John, in the Synod.’ But although John then contended that this was a canon of the Arians, and not of the catholic church, and therefore it was inoperative against him—for it had been framed in the council convened against Athanasius 881 From Prosper Aquitamus and Marcellinus’ Chronicon, we learn that this was done in 403 a.d., or rather the consulship of Theodosius the younger and Rumoridius.

882 This discourse entitled ‘In decollationem Præcursoris et baptistæ Joannis’ is to be found in Migne’s Patrologia Græcia, Vol. LIV. p. 485, and in Savile’s edition of Chrysostom’s works, Vol. VII. 545. Savile, however, places it among the spurious pieces, and considers it unworthy of the genius of Chrysostom.
at Antioch, for the subversion of the doctrine of consubstantiality — the bishops would not listen to his defence, but immediately condemned him, without considering that by using this canon they were sanctioning the deposition of Athanasius himself. This sentence was pronounced a little before Easter; the emperor therefore sent to tell John that he could not go to the church, because two Synods had condemned him. Accordingly Chrysostom was silenced, and went no more to the church; but those who were of his party celebrated Easter in the public baths which are called Constantianæ, and thenceforth left the church. Among them were many bishops and presbyters, with others of the clerical order, who from that time held their assemblies apart in various places, and were from him denominated 'Johannites.' For the space of two months, John refrained from appearing in public; after which a decree of the emperor sent him into exile. Thus he was led into exile by force, and on the very day of his departure, some of the Johannites set fire to the church, which by means of a strong easterly wind, communicated with the senate-house. This conflagration happened on the 20th of June, under the sixth consulate of Honorius, which he bore in conjunction with Aristænetus. The severities which Optatus, the prefect of Constantinople, a pagan in religion, and a hater of the Christians, inflicted on John’s friends, and how he put many of them to death on account of this act of incendiarism, I ought, I believe, to pass by in silence.

---

883  Cf. II. 8.
884  404 a.d.
885  Some of these details presumably are given by Sozomen in VIII. 23 and 24.
Chapter XIX.—Ordination of Arsacius as John’s Successor. Indisposition of Cyrinus Bishop of Chalcedon.

After the lapse of a few days, Arsacius was ordained bishop of Constantinople; he was a brother of Nectarius who so ably administered the see before John, although he was then very aged, being upwards of eighty years old. While he very mildly and peacefully administered the episcopate, Cyrinus bishop of Chalcedon, upon whose foot Maruthas bishop of Mesopotamia had inadvertently trodden, became so seriously affected by the accident, that mortification ensued, and it became necessary to amputate his foot. Nor was this amputation performed once only, but was required to be often repeated: for after the injured limb was cut off, the evil so permeated his whole system, that the other foot also having become affected by the disease had to submit to the same operation.

I have alluded to this circumstance, because many have affirmed that what he suffered was a judgment upon him for his calumnious aspersions of John, whom he so often designated as arrogant and inexorable, as I have already said. Furthermore as on the 30th of September, in the last-mentioned consulate, there was an extraordinary fall of hail of immense size at Constantinople and its suburbs, it also was declared to be an expression of Divine indignation on account of Chrysostom’s unjust deposition: and the death of the empress tended to give increased credibility to these reports, for it took place four days after the hail-storm. Others, however, asserted that John had been deservedly deposed, because of the violence he had exercised in Asia and Lydia, in depriving the Novatians and Quartodecimans of many of their churches, when he went to Ephesus and ordained Heraclides. But whether John’s deposition was just, as his enemies declare, or Cyrinus suffered in chastisement for his slanderous revilings; whether the hail fell, or the empress died on John’s account, or whether these things happened for other reasons, or for these in connection with others, God only knows, who is the discrediter of secrets, and the just judge of truth itself. I have simply recorded the reports which were current at that time.

886 Palladius makes mention of this case without, however, naming Cyrinus. Cf. Vit. S. Joan. Chrysostom, chap. 17 (Vol. XIII. p. 63 A. of Benedictine ed. of Chrysostom).
887 ἀνόνατον, lit. = ‘kneeless.’
888 Cf. chap. 15, above.
889 404 a.d.
Chapter XX.—Death of Arsacius, and Ordination of Atticus.

But Arsacius did not long survive his accession to the bishopric; for he died on the 11th of November under the following consulate, which was Stilicho’s second, and the first of Anthemius. In consequence of the fact that the bishopric became desirable and many aspired to the vacant see, much time elapsed before the election of a successor: but at length in the following consulate, which was the sixth of Arcadius, and the first of Probus, a devout man named Atticus was promoted to the episcopate. He was a native of Sebastia in Armenia, and had followed an ascetic life from an early age: moreover in addition to a moderate share of learning, he possessed a large amount of natural prudence. But I shall speak of him more particularly a little later.
Chapter XXI.—John dies in Exile.

John taken into exile died in Comana on the Euxine, on the 14th of September, in the following consulate, which was the seventh of Honorius, and the second of Theodosius.\(^893\)

A man, as we have before observed,\(^894\) who on account of zeal for temperance was inclined rather to anger than forbearance: and his personal sanctity of character led him to indulge in a latitude of speech which to others was intolerable. Indeed, it is most inexplicable to me, how with a zeal so ardent for the practice of self-control and blamelessness of life, he should in his sermons appear to teach a loose view of temperance. For whereas by the Synod of bishops repentance was accepted but once from those who had sinned after baptism; he did not scruple to say, ‘Approach, although you may have repented a thousand times.’\(^895\) For this doctrine, many even of his friends censured him, but especially Sisinnius bishop of the Novatian; who wrote a book condemnatory of the above quoted expression of Chrysostom’s, and severely rebuked him for it. But this occurred long before.\(^896\)

---

\(^893\) 407 a.d.

\(^894\) Cf. above, chap. 3.

\(^895\) These words are not found in any of Chrysostom’s extant homilies. There is no reason, however, for thinking that they were not uttered by him in a sermon now not in existence. Socrates’ remarks on Chrysostom’s attitude made here are among the considerations which have led some to think that he was a Novatian. Cf. Introd. p. x.

\(^896\) For further particulars on Chrysostom’s life and the circumstances of his death, see authorities mentioned in chap. 2, note 3.
Chapter XXII.—Of Sisinnius Bishop of the Novatians. His Readiness at Repartee.

It will not be out of place here, I conceive, to give some account of Sisinnius. He was, as I have often said, a remarkably eloquent man, and well-instructed in philosophy. But he had particularly cultivated logic, and was profoundly skilled in the interpretation of the holy Scriptures; insomuch that the heretic Eunomius often shrank from the acumen which his reasoning displayed. As regards his diet he was not simple; for although he practised the strictest moderation, yet his table was always sumptuously furnished. He was also accustomed to indulge himself by wearing white garments, and bathing twice a day in the public baths. And when some one asked him 'why he, a bishop, bathed himself twice a day?' he replied, 'Because it is inconvenient to bathe thrice.' Going one day from courtesy to visit the bishop Arsacius, he was asked by one of the friends of that bishop, 'why he wore a garment so unsuitable for a bishop? and where it was written that an ecclesiastic should be clothed in white?' 'Do you tell me first,' said he, 'where it is written that a bishop should wear black?' When he that made the inquiry knew not what to reply to this counter-question: 'You cannot show,' rejoined Sisinnius, 'that a priest should be clothed in black. But Solomon is my authority, whose exhortation is, “Let thy garments be white.”' And our Saviour in the Gospels appears clothed in white raiment: moreover he showed Moses and Elias to the apostles, clad in white garments.' His prompt reply to these and other questions called forth the admiration of those present. Again when Leontius bishop of Ancyra in Galatia Minor, who had taken away a church from the Novatians, was on a visit to Constantinople, Sisinnius went to him, and begged him to restore the church. But he received him rudely, saying, 'Ye Novatians ought not to have churches; for ye take away repentance, and shut out Divine mercy.' As Leontius gave utterance to these and many other such revilings against the Novatians, Sisinnius replied: 'No one repents more heartily than I do.' And when Leontius asked him ‘Why do you repent?’ ‘That I came to see you,’ said he. On one occasion John the bishop having a contest with him, said, 'The city cannot have two bishops.' 'Nor has it,' said Sisinnius. John being irritated at this response, said, 'You see you pretend that you 897 Cf. V. 10 and 21.

898 Eccl. ix. 8.
899 Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 3; Luke ix. 29. On the clothing of the clergy, see Bingham, Christ. Antiq. VI. 4. 18.
900 The canons forbade the existence of two authoritative bishops in one city. Cf. V. 5, note 3. It was supposed to be an apostolic tradition that prescribed this practice, and the faithful always resisted and condemned any attempts to consecrate a second bishop in a city. Thus 'when Constantius proposed that Liberius and Felix should sit as co-partners in the Roman see and govern the church in common, the people with one accord rejected the proposal, crying out "One God, one Christ, one bishop." The rule, however, did not apply to the case of co-adjutors, where the bishop was too old or infirm to discharge his episcopal duties.' See Bingham, Christ. Antiq. II. 13.
alone are the bishop.’ ‘I do not say that,’ rejoined Sisinnius; ‘but that I am not bishop in your estimation only, who am such to others.’ John being still more chafed at this reply, said, ‘I will stop your preaching; for you are a heretic.’ To which Sisinnius good-humoredly replied, ‘I will give you a reward, if you will relieve me from so arduous a duty.’ John being softened a little by this answer, said, ‘I will not make you cease to preach, if you find speaking so troublesome.’ So facetious was Sisinnius, and so ready at repartee: but it would be tedious to dwell further on his witticisms. Wherefore by means of a few specimens we have illustrated what sort of a person he was, deeming these as sufficient. I will merely add that he was celebrated for erudition, and on account of it all the bishops who succeeded him loved and honored him; and not only they but all the leading members of the senate also esteemed and admired him. He is the author of many works: but they are characterized by too great an affectation of elegance of diction, and a lavish intermingling of poetic expressions. On which account he was more admired as a speaker than as a writer; for there was dignity in his countenance and voice, as well as in his form and aspect, and every movement of his person was graceful. On account of these features he was loved by all the sects, and he was in especial favor with Atticus the bishop. But I must conclude this brief notice of Sisinnius.
Chapter XXIII.—Death of the Emperor Arcadius.

Not long after the death of John, the Emperor Arcadius died also. This prince was of a mild and gentle disposition, and toward the close of his life was esteemed to be greatly beloved of God, from the following circumstance. There was at Constantinople an immense mansion called Carya; for in the court of it there is a walnut tree on which it is said Acacius suffered martyrdom by hanging; on which account a chapel was built near it, which the Emperor Arcadius one day thought fit to visit, and after having prayed there, left again. All who lived near this chapel ran in a crowd to see the emperor; and some going out of the mansion referred to, endeavored to preoccupy the streets in order to get a better view of their sovereign and his suite, while others followed in his train, until all who inhabited it, including the women and children, had wholly gone out of it. No sooner was this vast pile emptied of its occupants, the buildings of which completely enironed the church, than the entire building fell. On which there was a great outcry, followed by shouts of admiration, because it was believed the emperor’s prayer had rescued so great a number of persons from destruction. This event occurred in that manner. On the 1st of May, Arcadius died, leaving his son Theodosius only eight years old, under the consulate of Bassus and Philip, in the second year of the 297th Olympiad.\footnote{408 a.d.} He had reigned thirteen years with Theodosius his father, and fourteen years after his death, and had then attained the thirty-first year of his age. This book includes the space of twelve years and six months.\footnote{The Greek editions [of Stephens, Valesius, Hussey, Bright, &c.] add the alternate form of chap. 11 at this place. For purposes of convenience in comparing the two versions we have given the variants with chapter 11.}
Book VII.

Chapter I.—Anthemius the Prætorian Prefect administers the Government of the East in Behalf of Young Theodosius.

After the death of Arcadius on the first of May, during the consulate of Bassus and Philip, his brother Honorius still governed the Western parts of the empire; but the administration of the East devolved on his son Theodosius the Younger, then only eight years old. The management of public affairs was therefore intrusted to Anthemius the Prætorian prefect, grandson of that Philip who in the reign of Constantius ejected Paul from the see of Constantinople, and established Macedonius in his place. By his directions Constantinople was surrounded with high walls. He was esteemed and actually was the most prudent man of his time, and seldom did anything unadvisedly, but consulted with the most judicious of his friends respecting all practical matters, and especially with Troïlus the sophist, who while excelling in philosophical attainments, was equal to Anthemius himself in political wisdom. Wherefore almost all things were done with the concurrence of Troïlus.

903 408 a.d. Cf. VI. 23. See Gibbon’s Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. 32.
904 This was done, according to Cedrenus, several years later by another prefect. For this reason and because of the grammatical construction in the original, Valesius rightly conjectures that the phrase is a gloss introduced from the margin, and should be expunged from the text.
905 Troïlus was a sophist of distinction who taught at Constantinople under Arcadius and Honorius at the beginning of the fifth century a.d., a native of Side and author of a treatise entitled Λόγοι πολιτικοί. See Suidas s.v. Τρό& 187-λος.
Chapter II.—Character and Conduct of Atticus Bishop of Constantinople.

When Theodosius the emperor was in the eighth year of his age, Atticus was in the third year of his presidency over the church at Constantinople, a man as we have by anticipation said\textsuperscript{906} distinguished alike for his learning, piety, and discretion, wherefore it came about that the churches under his episcopate attained a very flourishing condition. For he not only united those of ‘the household of faith,’\textsuperscript{907} but also by his prudence called forth the admiration of the heretics, whom indeed he by no means desired to harass; but if he sometimes was obliged to impress them with the fear of himself, he soon afterward showed himself mild and clement toward them. But indeed he did not neglect his studies; for he assiduously labored in perusing the writings of the ancients, and often spent whole nights in the task; and thus he could not be confused by the reasonings of the philosophers, and the fallacious subtleties of the sophists. Besides this he was affable and entertaining in conversation, and ever ready to sympathize with the afflicted: and in a word, to sum up his excellences in the apostle’s saying, ‘He was made all things to all men.’\textsuperscript{908} Formerly while a presbyter, he had been accustomed, after composing his sermons, to commit them to memory, and then recite them in the church: but by diligent application he acquired confidence and made his instruction extemporaneous and eloquent. His discourses however were not such as to be received with much applause by his auditors, nor to deserve to be committed to writing. Let these particulars respecting his talents, erudition, and manners suffice. We must now proceed to relate such things as are worthy of record, that happened in his time.

\textsuperscript{906} Cf. VI. 20.
\textsuperscript{907} Gal. vi. 10.
\textsuperscript{908} 1 Cor. ix. 22.
Chapter III.—Of Theodosius and Agapetus Bishops of Synada.

A certain Theodosius was bishop of Synada in Phrygia Pacata; he violently persecuted the heretics in that province—and there was a great number of them—and especially those of the Macedonian sect; he drove them out not only from the city, but also out of the country. This course he pursued not from any precedent in the orthodox church, nor from the desire of propagating the true faith; but being enslaved by the love of filthy lucre, he was impelled by the avaricious motive of amassing money, by extorting it from the heretics. To this end he made all sorts of attempts upon the Macedonians, putting arms into the hands of his clergy; and employing innumerable stratagems against them; nor did he refrain from delivering them up to the secular tribunals. But he especially annoyed their bishop whose name was Agapetus: and finding the governors of the province were not invested with sufficient authority to punish heretics according to his wish, he went to Constantinople and petitioned for edicts of a more stringent nature from the Prætorian prefect. While Theodosius was absent on this business, Agapetus who, as I have said, presided over the Macedonian sect, came to a wise and prudent conclusion. Communicating with his clergy, he called all the people under his guidance together, and persuaded them to embrace the ‘homoousian’ faith. On their acquiescing in this proposition, he proceeded immediately to the church attended not merely by his own adherents, but by the whole body of the people. There having offered prayer, he took possession of the episcopal chair in which Theodosius was accustomed to seat himself; and preaching thenceforth the doctrine of consubstantiality, he reunited the people, and made himself master of the churches in the diocese of Synada. Soon after these transactions, Theodosius returned to Synada, bringing with him extended powers from the prefect, and knowing nothing of what had taken place, he proceeded to the church just as he was. Being forthwith unanimously expelled, he again betook himself to Constantinople; upon his arrival at that place he complained to Atticus, the bishop, of the treatment he had met with, and the manner in which he had been deprived of his episcopal dignity. Atticus perceiving that this movement had resulted advantageously to the church, consoled Theodosius as well as he could; recommending him to embrace with a contented mind a retired life, and thus sacrifice his own private interests to the public good. He then wrote to Agapetus authorizing him to retain the episcopate, and bidding him be under no apprehension of being molested in consequence of Theodosius’ grievance.

909 On the limits of the secular power over ecclesiastical dignitaries, and the cases in which the clergy were amenable to the civil law as well as those in which they were not, see Bingham, Christ. Antiq. V. 2.
Chapter IV.—A Paralytic Jew healed by Atticus in Baptism.

This was one important improvement in the circumstances of the Church, which happened during the administration of Atticus. Nor were these times without the attestation of miracles and healings. For a certain Jew being a paralytic had been confined to his bed for many years; and as every sort of medical skill, and the prayers of his Jewish brethren had been resorted to but had availed nothing, he had recourse at length to Christian baptism, trusting in it as the only true remedy to be used. 910 When Atticus the bishop was informed of his wishes, he instructed him in the first principles of Christian truth, and having preached to him to hope in Christ, directed that he should be brought in his bed to the font. The paralytic Jew receiving baptism with a sincere faith, as soon as he was taken out of the baptismal font found himself perfectly cured of his disease, and continued to enjoy sound health afterwards. This miraculous power Christ vouchsafed to be manifested even in our times; and the fame of it caused many heathens to believe and be baptized. But the Jews although zealously 'seeking after signs,' 911 not even the signs which actually took place induced to embrace the faith. Such blessings were thus conferred by Christ upon men.

910 On the supposed miraculous effects of baptism, see Tertullian, de baptismo, passim.
911 1 Cor. i. 22.
Chapter V.—The Presbyter Sabbatius, formerly a Jew, separates from the Novatians.

Many, however, making no account of these events yielded to their own depravity; for not only did the Jews continue in unbelief after this miracle, but others also who love to follow them were shown to hold views similar to theirs. Among these was Sabbatius, of whom mention has before been made; who not being content with the dignity of presbyter to which he had attained, but aiming at a bishopric from the beginning, separated himself from the church of the Novatians, making a pretext of observing the Jewish Passover. Holding therefore schismatic assemblies apart from his own bishop Sisinnius, in a place named Xerolophus, where the forum of Arcadius now is, he ventured on the performance of an act deserving the severest punishments. Reading one day at one of these meetings that passage in the Gospel where it is said, ‘Now it was the Feast of the Jews called the Passover,’ he added what was never written nor heard of before: ‘Cursed be he that celebrates the Passover out of the days of unleavened bread.’ When these words were reported among the people, the more simple of the Novatian laity, deceived by this artifice, flocked to him. But his fraudulent fabrication was of no avail to him; for his forgery issued in most disastrous consequences. For shortly afterwards he kept this feast in anticipation of the Christian Easter; and many according to their custom flocked to him. While they were passing the night in the accustomed vigils, a panic as if caused by evil spirits fell upon them, as if Sisinnius their bishop were coming with a multitude of persons to attack them. From the perturbation that might be expected in such a case, and their being shut up at night in a confined place, they trod upon one another, insomuch that above seventy of them were crushed to death. On this account many deserted Sabbatius: some however, holding his ignorant prejudice, remained with him. In what way Sabbatius, by a violation of his oath, afterwards managed to get himself ordained a bishop, we shall relate hereafter.

912 V. 21.
913 Cf. I. 8, note 2, and V. 22 and notes.
914 Not an exact quotation. Luke xxii. 1, resembles it more than any other of the parallels.
915 Cf. chap. 12 below.
Chapter VI.—The Leaders of Arianism at this Time.

Dorotheus bishop of the Arians, who, as we have said, was translated by that sect from Antioch to Constantinople, having attained the age of one hundred and nineteen years, died on the 6th of November, in the seventh consulate of Honorius, and the second of Theodosius Augustus. After him Barbas presided over the Arian sect, in whose time the Arian faction was favored by possessing two very eloquent members, both having the rank of presbyter, one of whom was named Timothy, and the other George. Now George excelled in Grecian literature; Timothy, on the other hand, was proficient in the sacred Scriptures. George indeed constantly had the writings of Aristotle and Plato in his hands: Timothy found his inspiration in Origen; he also evinced in his public expositions of the holy Scriptures no inconsiderable acquaintance with the Hebrew language. Now Timothy had formerly identified himself with the sect of the Psathyrians; but George had been ordained by Barbas. I have myself conversed with Timothy, and was exceedingly struck by the readiness with which he would answer the most difficult questions, and clear up the most obscure passages in the Divine oracles; he also invariably quoted Origen as an unquestionable authority in confirmation of his own utterances. But it is astonishing to me that these two men should continue to uphold the heresy of the Arians; the one being so conversant with Plato, and the other having Origen so frequently on his lips. For Plato does not say that the second and third cause, as he usually terms them, had a beginning of existence: and Origen everywhere acknowledges the Son to be co-eternal with the Father. Nevertheless although they remained connected with their own church, still they unconsciously changed the Arian sect for the better, and displaced many of the blasphemies of Arius by their own teachings. But enough of these persons. Sisinnius bishop of the Novatians dying under the same consulate, Chrysanthus was ordained in his place, of whom we shall have to speak by and by.

916 Cf. V. 3, 12 and 23.
917 407 a.d.
918 Cf. V. 23, note 2.
919 The special views of Plato which are here alluded to are probably those found in the Timæus. Cf. Jowett, The Dialogues of Plato translated into English, Vol. II. p. 451 et seq.
920 Cf. VI. 13.
Chapter VII.—Cyril succeeds Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria.

Shortly afterwards Theophilus bishop of Alexandria having fallen into a lethargic state, died on the 15th of October,\textsuperscript{921} in the ninth consulate of Honorius, and the fifth of Theodosius. A great contest immediately arose about the appointment of a successor, some seeking to place Timothy the archdeacon in the episcopal chair; and others desiring Cyril, who was a nephew of Theophilus. A tumult having arisen on this account among the people, Abundantius, the commander of the troops in Egypt, took sides with Timothy. [Yet the partisans of Cyril triumphed.]\textsuperscript{922} Whereupon on the third day after the death of Theophilus, Cyril came into possession of the episcopate, with greater power than Theophilus had ever exercised. For from that time the bishopric of Alexandria went beyond the limits of its sacerdotal functions, and assumed the administration of secular matters.\textsuperscript{923} Cyril immediately therefore shut up the churches of the Novatians at Alexandria, and took possession of all their consecrated vessels and ornaments; and then stripped their bishop Theopemptus of all that he had.

\textsuperscript{921} 412 a.d. This chapter is out of chronological sequence, as appears from the fact that Alaric took Rome in 410 a.d. See chap. 10 below.

\textsuperscript{922} The words included in brackets are not found in the Greek; they were probably inserted into the English translation as necessary to explain the context.

\textsuperscript{923} Cf. chap. 11.
Chapter VIII.—Propagation of Christianity among the Persians by Maruthas Bishop of Mesopotamia.

About this same time it happened that Christianity was disseminated in Persia, by reason of the following causes. Frequent embassies were sent to and fro between the sovereigns of Persia and the Roman empire, for which there were continual occasions. Necessity brought it about at that time that the Roman emperor thought proper to send Maruthas bishop of Mesopotamia, who has been before mentioned, on a mission to the king of the Persians. The king discovering great piety in the man treated him with great honor, and gave heed to him as one who was indeed beloved of God. This excited the jealousy of the magi, whose influence is considerable over the Persian monarch, for they feared lest he should persuade the king to embrace Christianity. For Maruthas had by his prayers cured the king of a violent headache to which he had been long subject, and which the magi had been unable to relieve. The magicians therefore had recourse to this deception. As the Persians worship fire, and the king was accustomed to pay his adorations in a certain edifice to the fire which was kept perpetually burning, they concealed a man underneath the sacred hearth, ordering him to make this exclamation at the time of day when the king was accustomed to perform his devotion! ‘The king should be thrust out because he is guilty of impiety, in imagining a Christian priest to be loved by the Deity.’ When Isdigerdes—for that was the king’s name—heard these words, he determined to dismiss Maruthas, notwithstanding the reverence with which he regarded him. But Maruthas being truly a God-loving man, by the earnestness of his prayers, detected the imposition of the magi. Going to the king therefore he addressed him thus: ‘Be not deluded, O king,’ said he, ‘but when you again enter that edifice and hear the same voice, explore the ground below, and you will discover the fraud. For it is not the fire that speaks, but human contrivance does this.’ The king received the suggestion of Maruthas and went as usual to the little house where the ever-burning fire was. When he again heard the same voice, he ordered the hearth to be dug up; whereupon the impostor, who uttered the supposed words of the Deity, was discovered. Becoming indignant at the deception thus attempted the king commanded that the tribe of the magi should be decimated. When this was effected he permitted Maruthas to erect churches wherever he wished; and from that time the Christian religion was diffused among the Persians. Then Maruthas being recalled went to Constantinople; not long afterwards however, he was again sent as ambassador to the Persian court. Again the magi devised contrivances so as by all possible means to prevent the king from giving him audience. One of their devices was to cause a most disgusting smell where the king was accustomed to go, and then accuse 924 Cf. VI. 15.

the Christians of being the authors of it. The king however having already had occasion to suspect the magi, very diligently and closely scrutinized the matter; and again the authors of the nuisance were detected. Wherefore he punished several of them, and held Maruthas in still higher honor. For the Romans as a nation he had much regard, and prized good feeling on their part very highly. Nay, he almost embraced the Christian faith himself, as Maruthas in conjunction with Abdas bishop of Persia gave another experimental proof of its power: for these two by giving themselves to much fasting and prayer, had cast out a demon with which the king’s son was possessed. But the death of Isdigerdes\footnote{926} prevented his making an open profession of Christianity. The kingdom then devolved on Vararanes his son, in whose time the treaty between the Romans and Persians was broken as we shall have occasion to narrate a little later.\footnote{927}
Chapter IX.—The Bishops of Antioch and Rome.

During this period upon the death of Flavian\textsuperscript{928} Porphyry received the episcopate of Antioch, and after him Alexander\textsuperscript{929} was set over that church. But at Rome, Damasus having held that bishopric eighteen years Siricius succeeded him,\textsuperscript{930} and Siricius having presided there fifteen years, Anastasius held sway over the church for three years; after Anastasius Innocent [was promoted to the same see]. He was the first persecutor of the Novatians at Rome, and many of their churches he took away.
Chapter X.—Rome taken and sacked by Alaric.

About this same time\textsuperscript{931} it happened that Rome was taken by the barbarians; for a certain Alaric, a barbarian who had been an ally of the Romans, and had served as an ally with the emperor Theodosius in the war against the usurper Eugenius, having on that account been honored with Roman dignities, was unable to bear his good fortune. He did not choose to assume imperial authority, but retiring from Constantinople went into the Western parts, and arriving at Illyricum immediately laid waste the whole country. As he marched, however, the Thessalians opposed him at the mouths of the river Peneus, whence there is a pass over Mount Pindus to Nicopolis in Epirus; and coming to an engagement, the Thessalians killed about three thousand of his men. After this the barbarians that were with him destroying everything in their way, at last took Rome itself, which they pillaged, burning the greatest number of the magnificent structures and other admirable works of art it contained. The money and valuable articles they plundered and divided among themselves. Many of the principal senators they put to death on a variety of pretexts. Moreover, Alaric in mockery of the imperial dignity, proclaimed one Attalus\textsuperscript{932} emperor, whom he ordered to be attended with all the insignia of sovereignty on one day, and to be exhibited in the habit of a slave on the next. After these achievements he made a precipitate retreat, a report having reached him that the emperor Theodosius had sent an army to fight him. Nor was this report a fictitious one; for the imperial forces were actually on their way; but Alaric, not waiting for the materialization of the rumor, decamped and escaped. It is said that as he was advancing towards Rome, a pious monk exhorted him not to delight in the perpetuation of such atrocities, and no longer to rejoice in slaughter and blood. To whom Alaric replied, ’I am not going on in this course of my own will; but there is a something that irresistibly impels me daily, saying, ’Proceed to Rome, and desolate that city.’ Such was the career of this person.

\textsuperscript{931} On Alaric’s career, see Zosimus, V. 5, 6; 28–51 and V. 1–13. Cf. also parallel accounts in Sozomen, IX. 4, 6–9; and Philostorgius, XII. 2, 3; and Gibbon’s \textit{Decline and Fall}, chap. 31.

\textsuperscript{932} This incident is also given by Procopius of Cæsarea in \textit{Hist. Vandal}. I. p. 8.
Chapter XI.—The Bishops of Rome.

After Innocent, Zosimus governed the Roman church for two years: and after him Boniface\textsuperscript{933} presided over it for three years. He was succeeded by Celestinus. And this Celestinus took away the churches from the Novatians at Rome also, and obliged Rusticula their bishop to hold his meetings secretly in private houses. Until this time the Novatians had flourished exceedingly in Rome, possessing many churches there, which were attended by large congregations. But envy attacked them also, as soon as the Roman episcopate, like that of Alexandria, extended itself beyond the limits of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and degenerated into its present state of secular domination. For thenceforth the bishops would not suffer even those who agreed with them in matters of faith to enjoy the privilege of assembling in peace, but stripped them of all they possessed, praising them merely for these agreements in faith. The bishops of Constantinople kept themselves free from this [sort of conduct]; inasmuch as in addition to tolerating them and permitting them to hold their assemblies within the city, as I have already stated,\textsuperscript{934} they treated them with every mark of Christian regard.

\textsuperscript{933} 418 a.d.

\textsuperscript{934} Cf. V. 10.
Chapter XII.—Of Chrysanthus Bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople.

After the death of Sisinnius, Chrysanthus was constrained to take upon him the episcopal office. He was the son of Marcian the predecessor of Sisinnius, and having had a military appointment in the palace at an early age, he was subsequently under Theodosius the Great made governor of Italy, and after that lord-lieutenant of the British Isles, in both which capacities he elicited for himself the highest admiration. Returning to Constantinople at an advanced age, earnestly desiring to be constituted prefect of that city, he was made bishop of the Novatians against his will. For as Sisinnius, when at the point of death, had referred to him as a most suitable person to occupy the see, the people regarding this declaration as law, sought to have him ordained forthwith. Now as Chrysanthus attempted to avoid having this dignity forced upon him, Sabbatius imagining that a seasonable opportunity was now afforded him of making himself master of the churches, and making no account of the oath by which he had bound himself, procured his own ordination at the hands of a few insignificant bishops. Among these was Hermogenes, who had been excommunicated with curses by [Sabbatius] himself on account of his blasphemous writings. But this perjured procedure of Sabbatius was of no avail to him: for the people disgusted with his obstreperousness, used every effort to discover the retreat of Chrysanthus; and having found him secluded in Bithynia, they brought him back by force, and invested him with the bishopric. He was a man of unsurpassed modesty and prudence; and thus he established and enlarged the churches of the Novatians at Constantinople. Moreover he was the first to distribute gold among the poor out of his own private property. Furthermore he would receive nothing from the churches but two loaves of the consecrated bread every Lord’s day. So anxious was he to promote the advantage of his own church, that he drew Ablabius, the most eminent orator of that time from the school of Troilus, and ordained him a presbyter; whose sermons are in circulation being remarkably elegant and full of point. But Ablabius was afterwards promoted to the bishopric of the church of the Novatians at Nicæa, where he also taught rhetoric at the same time.

935 ὑπατικὸς = consularis, consul honorarius; the title was, during the period of the republic, given to ex-consuls, but later it became a common custom, especially under the emperors, for the governors of the imperial provinces to be called consuls, and the title consularis became the established designation of those intrusted with the administration of imperial provinces. See Smith, Dict. of Greek and Rom. Antiq.

936 Βικάριος [οὐικάριος ] transliterated from the Lat. vicarius, of which the Eng. ‘lieutenant’ is an exact equivalent.

937 Cf. V. 21.

939 The loaves which were offered by the faithful as a sacrifice were called 'loaves of benediction,' and were used partly for the Eucharist and partly as food by the bishop and clergy.
Of Chrysanthus Bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople.
Chapter XIII.—Conflict between the Christians and Jews at Alexandria: and breach between the Bishop Cyril and the Prefect Orestes.

About this same time it happened that the Jewish inhabitants were driven out of Alexandria by Cyril the bishop on the following account. The Alexandrian public is more delighted with tumult than any other people: and if at any time it should find a pretext, breaks forth into the most intolerable excesses; for it never ceases from its turbulence without bloodshed. It happened on the present occasion that a disturbance arose among the populace, not from a cause of any serious importance, but out of an evil that has become very popular in almost all cities, viz. a fondness for dancing exhibitions. In consequence of the Jews being disengaged from business on the Sabbath, and spending their time, not in hearing the Law, but in theatrical amusements, dancers usually collect great crowds on that day, and disorder is almost invariably produced. And although this was in some degree controlled by the governor of Alexandria, nevertheless the Jews continued opposing these measures. And although they are always hostile toward the Christians they were roused to still greater opposition against them on account of the dancers. When therefore Orestes the prefect was publishing an edict—for so they are accustomed to call public notices—in the theatre for the regulation of the shows, some of the bishop Cyril’s party were present to learn the nature of the orders about to be issued. There was among them a certain Hierax, a teacher of the rudimental branches of literature, and one who was a very enthusiastic listener of the bishop Cyril’s sermons, and made himself conspicuous by his forwardness in applauding. When the Jews observed this person in the theatre, they immediately cried out that he had come there for no other purpose than to excite sedition among the people. Now Orestes had long regarded with jealousy the growing power of the bishops, because they encroached on the jurisdiction of the authorities appointed by the emperor, especially as Cyril wished to set spies over his proceedings; he therefore ordered Hierax to be seized, and publicly subjected him to the torture in the theatre. Cyril, on being informed of this, sent for the principal Jews, and threatened them with the utmost severities unless they desisted from their molestation of the Christians. The Jewish populace on hearing these menaces, instead of suppressing their violence, only became more furious, and were led to form conspiracies for the destruction of the Christians; one of these was of so desperate a character as to cause their entire expulsion from Alexandria; this I shall now describe. Having agreed that each one of them should wear a ring on his finger made of the bark of a palm branch, for the sake of mutual recognition, they determined to make a nightly attack on the Christians. They therefore sent persons into the streets to raise an outcry that the church named after Alexander was on fire. Thus many Christians on hearing this ran out, some from one direction and some 940 As to how the ancient Church looked upon theatrical shows, see Bingham, Christ. Antiq. XVI. 11. 15, and passages there referred to.

from another, in great anxiety to save their church. The Jews immediately fell upon and slew them; readily distinguishing each other by their rings. At daybreak the authors of this atrocity could not be concealed: and Cyril, accompanied by an immense crowd of people, going to their synagogues—for so they call their house of prayer—took them away from them, and drove the Jews out of the city, permitting the multitude to plunder their goods. Thus the Jews who had inhabited the city from the time of Alexander the Macedonian were expelled from it, stripped of all they possessed, and dispersed some in one direction and some in another. One of them, a physician named Adamantius, fled to Atticus bishop of Constantinople, and professing Christianity, some time afterwards returned to Alexandria and fixed his residence there. But Orestes the governor of Alexandria was filled with great indignation at these transactions, and was excessively grieved that a city of such magnitude should have been suddenly bereft of so large a portion of its population; he therefore at once communicated the whole affair to the emperor. Cyril also wrote to him, describing the outrageous conduct of the Jews; and in the meanwhile sent persons to Orestes who should mediate concerning a reconciliation: for this the people had urged him to do. And when Orestes refused to listen to friendly advances, Cyril extended toward him the book of gospels, believing that respect for religion would induce him to lay aside his resentment. When, however, even this had no pacific effect on the prefect, but he persisted in implacable hostility against the bishop, the following event afterwards occurred.

941 ἰατρικῶν λόγων σοφιστής, also called by other writers of the period ἰατροσοφιστής; see Sophocles, Greek Lex. of the Rom. and Byzant. Periods.

942 As a mode of abjuration, see VI. 11, note 5. In this case the sacred volume takes the place of the child.
Chapter XIV.—The Monks of Nitria come down and raise a Sedition against the Prefect of Alexandria.

Some of the monks inhabiting the mountains of Nitria, of a very fiery disposition, whom Theophilus some time before had unjustly armed against Dioscorus and his brethren, being again transported with an ardent zeal, resolved to fight in behalf of Cyril. About five hundred of them therefore quitting their monasteries, came into the city; and meeting the prefect in his chariot, they called him a pagan idolater, and applied to him many other abusive epithets. He supposing this to be a snare laid for him by Cyril, exclaimed that he was a Christian, and had been baptized by Atticus the bishop at Constantinople. As they gave but little heed to his protestations, and a certain one of them named Ammonius threw a stone at Orestes which struck him on the head and covered him with the blood that flowed from the wound, all the guards with a few exceptions fled, plunging into the crowd, some in one direction and some in another, fearing to be stoned to death. Meanwhile the populace of Alexandria ran to the rescue of the governor, and put the rest of the monks to flight; but having secured Ammonius they delivered him up to the prefect. He immediately put him publicly to the torture, which was inflicted with such severity that he died under the effects of it: and not long after he gave an account to the emperors of what had taken place. Cyril also on the other hand forwarded his statement of the matter to the emperor: and causing the body of Ammonius to be deposited in a certain church, he gave him the new appellation of Thaumasis,943 ordering him to be enrolled among the martyrs, and eulogizing his magnanimity in church as that of one who had fallen in a conflict in defence of piety. But the more sober-minded, although Christians, did not accept Cyril’s prejudiced estimate of him; for they well knew that he had suffered the punishment due to his rashness, and that he had not lost his life under the torture because he would not deny Christ. And Cyril himself being conscious of this, suffered the recollection of the circumstance to be gradually obliterated by silence. But the animosity between Cyril and Orestes did not by any means subside at this point, but was kindled944 afresh by an occurrence similar to the preceding.

943 Θαυμάσιος, ‘wonderful,’ ‘admirable.’
944 The original here has ἀπέσβεσε, ‘quenched,’ ‘extinguished,’ but the context demands the very opposite meaning, unless indeed the outrage on Hypatia was considered the last in the series of occasions of quarrel between Orestes and Cyril, after which the difference gradually died out.
Chapter XV.—Of Hypatia the Female Philosopher.

There was a woman at Alexandria named Hypatia, daughter of the philosopher Theon, who made such attainments in literature and science, as to far surpass all the philosophers of her own time. Having succeeded to the school of Plato and Plotinus, she explained the principles of philosophy to her auditors, many of whom came from a distance to receive her instructions. On account of the self-possession and ease of manner, which she had acquired in consequence of the cultivation of her mind, she not unfrequently appeared in public in presence of the magistrates. Neither did she feel abashed in coming to an assembly of men. For all men on account of her extraordinary dignity and virtue admired her the more. Yet even she fell a victim to the political jealousy which at that time prevailed. For as she had frequent interviews with Orestes, it was calumniously reported among the Christian populace, that it was she who prevented Orestes from being reconciled to the bishop. Some of them therefore, hurried away by a fierce and bigoted zeal, whose ringleader was a reader named Peter, waylaid her returning home, and dragging her from her carriage, they took her to the church called Casareum, where they completely stripped her, and then murdered her with tiles. After tearing her body in pieces, they took her mangled limbs to a place called Cinaron, and there burnt them. This affair brought not the least opprobrium, not only upon Cyril, but also upon the whole Alexandrian church. And surely nothing can be farther from the spirit of Christianity than the allowance of massacres, fights, and transactions of that sort. This happened in the month of March during Lent, in the fourth year of Cyril’s episcopate, under the tenth consulate of Honorius, and the sixth of Theodosius.

945 The following incident has been popularized by Charles Kingsley in his well-known novel of Hypatia, which has, however, the accessory aim of antagonizing the over-estimation of early Christianity by Dr. Pusey and his followers. The original sources for the history of Hypatia, besides the present chapter, are the letters of her pupil Synesius, and Philostorgius, VIII. 9. Cf. also Wernsdoff, de Hypatia, philosopha Alex. diss. 4, Viteb. 1748.

946 ὀστράκοις, lit. ‘oystershells,’ but the word was also applied to brick tiles used on the roofs of houses.

947 The responsibility of Cyril in this affair has been variously estimated by different historians. Walch, Gibbon, and Milman incline to hold him guilty. J. C. Robertson ascribes him indirect responsibility, asserting that the perpetrators of the crime ‘were mostly officers of his church, and had unquestionably drawn encouragement from his earlier proceedings.’ Hist. of the Christ. Ch. Vol. I. p. 401. W. Bright says, ‘Cyril was no party to this hideous deed, but it was the work of men whose passions he had originally called out. Had there been no onslaught on the synagogues, there would doubtless have been no murder of Hypatia.’ Hist. of the Church from 313 to 451, pp. 274, 275. See also Schaff, Hist. of the Christ. Ch. Vol. III. p. 943.

948 415 a.d.
Chapter XVI.—The Jews commit Another Outrage upon the Christians and are punished.

Soon afterwards the Jews renewed their malevolent and impious practices against the Christians, and drew down upon themselves deserved punishment. At a place named Inme-star, situated between Chalcis and Antioch in Syria, the Jews were amusing themselves in their usual way with a variety of sports. In this way they indulged in many absurdities, and at length impelled by drunkenness they were guilty of scoffing at Christians and even Christ himself; and in derision of the cross and those who put their trust in the Crucified One, they seized a Christian boy, and having bound him to a cross, began to laugh and sneer at him. But in a little while becoming so transported with fury, they scourged the child until he died under their hands. This conduct occasioned a sharp conflict between them and the Christians; and as soon as the emperors were informed of the circumstance, they issued orders to the governor of the province to find out and punish the delinquents. And thus the Jewish inhabitants of this place paid the penalty for the wickedness they had committed in their impious sport.
Chapter XVII.—Miracle performed by Paul Bishop of the Novatians at the Baptism of a Jewish Impostor.

About this time Chrysanthus bishop of the Novatians, after presiding over the churches of his own sect seven years, died on the 26th of August, under the consulate of Monaxius and Plintha.\(^\text{949}\) He was succeeded in the bishopric by Paul, who had formerly been a teacher of the Latin language: but afterwards, setting aside the Latin language, had devoted himself to an ascetic course of life; and having founded a monastery of religious men, he adopted a mode of living not very different from that pursued by the monks in the desert. In fact I myself found him just such a person as Evagrius\(^\text{950}\) says the monks dwelling in the deserts ought to be; imitating them in continued fastings, silence, abstinence from animal food, and for the most part abstaining also from the use of oil and wine. He was, moreover, solicitous about the wants of the poor to as great an extent as any other man; he untiringly visited those who were in prison, and in behalf of many criminals interceded with the judges, who readily attended to him on account of his eminent piety. But why should I lengthen my account of him? For I am about to mention a deed done by him which is well worthy of being recorded in writing. A certain Jewish impostor, pretending to be a convert to Christianity, was in the habit of being baptized often\(^\text{951}\) and by that artifice he amassed a good deal of money. After having deceived many of the Christian sects by this fraud—for he received baptism from the Arians and Macedonians—as there remained no others to practise his hypocrisy upon, he at length came to Paul bishop of the Novatians, and declaring that he earnestly desired baptism, requested that he might obtain it at his hand. Paul commended the determination of the Jew, but told him he could not perform that rite for him, until he had been instructed in the fundamental principles of the faith, and given himself to fasting and prayer for many days.\(^\text{952}\) The Jew compelled to fast against his will became the more importunate in his request for baptism; now as Paul did not wish to discourage him by longer delays, since he was so urgent, consented to grant his request, and made all the necessary preparations for the baptism. Having purchased a white vestment for him, he ordered the font to be filled with water, and then led the Jew to it in order to baptize him. But a certain invisible power of God caused the water suddenly to disappear. The bishop, of course, and those present, had not the least suspicion of the real cause, but imagined that the water had escaped by the channels underneath, by means of which they are accustomed

\(^{949}\) 419 a.d.

\(^{950}\) On Evagrius, see IV. 23. On the passage in his works alluded, see Evagrius, Ecclesiastical History, IV. 35, 36.

\(^{951}\) The repetition of baptism, except in cases in which there was doubt as to the validity of a first baptism, was considered a sacrilege. See Smith and Cheetham, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. art. Iteration Baptism.

\(^{952}\) Cf. I. 8.
to empty the font; these passages were therefore very carefully closed, and the font filled again. Again, however, as the Jew was taken there a second time, the water vanished as before. Then Paul addressing the Jew, said, ‘Either you are an evil-doer, wretched man, or an ignorant person who has already been baptized.’ The people having crowded together to witness this miracle, one among them recognized the Jew, and identified him as having been baptized by Atticus, the bishop, a little while before. Such was the portent wrought by the hands of Paul bishop of the Novatians.
Chapter XVIII.—Renewal of Hostilities between the Romans and Persians after the Death of Isdigerdes King of the Persians.

Isdigerdes king of the Persians, who had in no way molested the Christians in his dominions, having died, his son Vararanes by name succeeded him in the kingdom. This prince yielding to the influence of the magi, persecuted the Christians there with rigor, by inflicting on them a variety of Persian punishments and tortures. They were therefore on account of the oppression obliged to desert their country and seek refuge among the Romans, entreatiing them not to suffer them to be completely extirpated. Atticus the bishop received these suppliants with great benignity, and did his utmost to help them in whatsoever way it was possible; accordingly he made the emperor Theodosius acquainted with the facts. It happened at the same time that another grievance of the Romans against Persians came to light. The Persians, that is to say, would not send back the laborers in the gold mines who had been hired from among the Romans; and they also plundered the Roman merchants. The bad feeling which these things produced was greatly increased by the flight of the Persian Christians into the Roman territories. For the Persian king immediately sent an embassy to demand the fugitives. But the Romans were by no means disposed to deliver them up; not only as desirous of defending their suppliants, but also because they were ready to do anything for the sake of the Christian religion. For which reason they chose rather to renew the war with the Persians, than to suffer the Christians to be miserably destroyed. The league was accordingly broken, and a fierce war followed. Of which war I deem it not unseasonable to give some brief account. The Roman emperor first sent a body of troops under the command of the general Ardaburius, who making an irruption through Armenia into Persia, ravaged one of its provinces called Azazene. Narsæus the Persian general marched against him with the Persian army; but on coming to an engagement he was defeated, and obliged to retreat. Afterwards he judged it advantageous to make an unexpected irruption through Mesopotamia into the Roman territories there unguarded, thinking by this means to be revenged on the enemy. But this design of Narsæus did not escape the observation of the Roman general. Having therefore plundered Azazene, he then himself also hastily marched into Mesopotamia. Wherefore Narsæus, although furnished with a large army, was prevented from invading the Roman provinces; but arriving at Nisibis—a city in the possession of the Persians situated on the frontiers of both empires—he sent Ardaburius desiring that they might make mutual arrangements about carrying on the war, and appoint a time and place for an engagement. But he said to the messengers, ‘Tell Narsæus that the Roman emperors will not fight when it pleases him.’ The emperor perceiving that the Persian was mustering 954 There had been peace between the Persian and the Roman powers since 381. Cf. Pagi, Ant. 420, note 14.

955 Mentioned in Theophanes’ Chronographia, p. 74.
his whole force, made additional levies to his army, and put his whole trust in God for the victory: and that the king was not without immediate benefit from this pious confidence the following circumstance proves. As the Constantinopolitans were in great consternation, and apprehensive respecting the issue of the war, angels from God appeared to some persons in Bithynia who were travelling to Constantinople on their own affairs, and bade them tell the people not to be alarmed, but pray to God and be assured that the Romans would be conquerors. For they said that they themselves were appointed by God to defend them. When this message was circulated it not only comforted the residents of the city, but rendered the soldiers more courageous. The seat of war being transferred, as we have said, from Armenia to Mesopotamia, the Romans shut up the Persians in the city of Nisibis, which they besieged; and having constructed wooden towers which they advanced by means of machines to the walls, they slew great numbers of those who defended them, as well as of those who ran to their assistance. When Vararanes the Persian monarch learned that his province of Azazene on the one hand had been desolated, and that on the other his army was closely besieged in the city of Nisibis, he resolved to march in person with all his forces against the Romans: but dreading the Roman valor, he implored the aid of the Saracens, who were then governed by a warlike chief named Alamundarius. This prince accordingly brought with him a large reinforcement of Saracen auxiliaries, exhorted the king of the Persians to fear nothing, for that he would soon reduce the Romans under his power, and deliver Antioch in Syria into his hands. But the event did not realize these promises; for God infused into the minds of the Saracens a terrible panic; and imagining that the Roman army was falling upon them, and finding no other way of escape, they precipitated themselves, armed as they were, into the river Euphrates, wherein nearly one hundred thousand of them were drowned. Such was the nature of the panic.

The Romans besieging Nisibis, understanding that the king of Persia was bringing with him a great number of elephants, became alarmed in their turn, burnt all the machines they had used in carrying on the siege, and retired into their own country. What engagements afterwards took place, and how Areobindus another Roman general killed the bravest of the Persians in single combat, and by what means Ardaburius destroyed seven Persian commanders in an ambuscade, and in what manner Vitian another Roman general vanquished the remnant of the Saracen forces, I believe I ought to pass by, lest I should digress too far from my subject.
Chapter XIX.—Of Palladius the Courier.

How the Emperor Theodosius received intelligence of what was done in an incredibly short space of time, and how he was quickly informed of events taking place far away, I shall attempt to explain. For he had the good fortune to possess among his subjects a man endowed with extraordinary energy both of body and mind, named Palladius; who rode so vigorously that he would reach the frontiers of the Roman and Persian dominions in three days, and again return to Constantinople in as many more. The same individual traversed other parts of the world on missions from the emperor with equal celerity: so that an eloquent man once said not unaptly, ‘This man by his speed proves the vast expanse of the Roman Empire to be little.’ The king of the Persians himself was astonished at the expeditious feats which were related to him of this courier: but we must be content with the above details concerning him.

956 Much, of course, depends, in estimating the rate of speed here recorded, on the exact distance between Constantinople and the rather indefinite limits of the Persian empire. But even if the minimum of 500 miles be taken as a basis, the speed seems almost incredible.
Chapter XX.—A Second Overthrow of the Persians by the Romans.

Now the emperor of the Romans dwelling in Constantinople being fully aware that God had plainly given him the victory was so benevolent that although those under him had been successful in war nevertheless he desired to make peace; and to that end he dispatched Helion, a man in whom he placed the greatest confidence, with a commission to enter into a pacific treaty with the Persians. Helion having arrived in Mesopotamia, at the place where the Romans for their own security had formed a trench, sent before him as his deputy Maximin an eloquent man who was the associate of Ardaburius the commander-in-chief of the army, to make preliminary arrangements concerning the terms of peace. Maximin on coming into the presence of the Persian king, said he had been sent to him on this matter, not by the Roman emperor, but by his generals; for he said this war was not even known to the emperor, and if known would be considered insignificant by him. And as the sovereign of Persia had gladly decided to receive the embassy,—for his troops were suffering from want of provisions,—there came to him that corps among them which is distinguished by the name of ‘the Immortals.’

This is a body of brave men numbering about ten thousand—and counselled the king not to listen to any overtures for peace, until they should have made an attack upon the Romans, who, they said, were now become extremely incautious. The king approving their advice, ordered the ambassador to be imprisoned and a guard set over him, and permitted the Immortals to put their design upon the Romans into execution. They therefore, on arriving at the place appointed, divided themselves into two bands, with a view to surround some portion of the Roman army. The Romans observing but one body of Persians approaching them, prepared themselves to receive it, not having seen the other division, in consequence of their suddenly rushing forth to battle. But just as the engagement was about to commence, Divine Providence so ordered it, that another division of the Roman army under Procopius a general emerged from behind a certain hill and perceiving their comrades in danger, attacked the Persians in the rear. Thus were they, who but a little before had surrounded the Romans, themselves encompassed. Having utterly destroyed these in a short time, the Romans turned upon those who broke forth from their ambuscade and in like manner slew every one of them with darts. In this way those who by the Persians were termed ‘the Immortals’ were all of them shown to be mortal, Christ having executed this vengeance upon the Persians because they had shed the blood of so many of his pious worshippers. The king of the Persians on being informed of the disaster, pretended to be ignorant of what had taken place, and ordered the embassy to be admitted, he thus addressing the ambassador: ‘I agree to the peace, not as yielding to the Romans, but to...”

957 A Persian body-guard called Ἀθάνατος, ‘Immortals,’ existed during the period of the invasion of Greece by the Persians (cf. Herodotus, VII. 31). The organization and discipline of the later body must have been, of course, very different.
gratify you, whom I have found to be the most prudent of all the Romans.’ Thus was that war concluded which had been undertaken on account of the suffering Christians in Persia, under the consulate of the two Augusti, being the thirteenth of Honorius, and the tenth of Theodosius, in the fourth year of the 300th Olympiad: and with it terminated the persecution which had been excited in Persia against the Christians.
Chapter XXI.— Kind Treatment of the Persian Captives by Acacius Bishop of Amida.

A noble action of Acacius bishop of Amida, at that time greatly enhanced his reputation among all men. As the Roman soldiery would on no consideration restore to the Persian king the captives whom they had taken, these captives, about seven thousand in number, were being destroyed by famine in devastating Azazene, and this greatly distressed the king of the Persians. Then Acacius thought such a matter was by no means to be trifled with; having therefore assembled his clergy, he thus addressed them: ‘Our God, my brethren, needs neither dishes nor cups; for he neither eats nor drinks, nor is in want of anything. Since then, by the liberality of its faithful members the church possesses many vessels both of gold and silver, it behooves us to sell them, that by the money thus raised we may be able to redeem the prisoners and also supply them with food.’ Having said these things and many others similar to these, he ordered the vessels to be melted down, and from the proceeds paid the soldiers a ransom for their captives, whom he supported for some time; and then furnishing them with what was needful for their journey, sent them back to their sovereign. This benevolence on the part of the excellent Acacius, astonished the king of the Persians, as if the Romans were accustomed to conquer their enemies as well by their beneficence in peace as their prowess in war. They say also that the Persian king wished that Acacius should come into his presence, that he might have the pleasure of beholding such a man; a wish which by the emperor Theodosius’ order was soon gratified. So signal a victory having through Divine favor been achieved by the Romans, many who were illustrious for their eloquence, wrote panegyrics in honor of the emperor, and recited them in public. The empress herself also composed a poem in heroic verse: for she had excellent literary taste; being the daughter of Leontius the Athenian sophist, she had been instructed in every kind of learning by her father; Atticus the bishop had baptized her a little while previous to her marriage with the emperor, and had then given her the Christian name of Eudocia, instead of her pagan one of Athenais. Many, as I have said, produced eulogiums on this occasion.

959 Εὐδοκία, ‘Benevolence.’
960 The Chronicon Paschale gives a different account of Eudocia. It says that her father’s name was Heraclitus. When he died her brothers Gesius and Valerian refused to give her her share of the inheritance. She came to Constantinople to plead for her rights through Pulcheria, the sister of Theodosius, and impressed the latter so favorably that Pulcheria persuaded Theodosius to make her his wife (cf. Chronic. Pasch. year 420). Her brothers on hearing of her elevation to the throne fled to Greece, but she sent for them and persuaded Theodosius to appoint them to high offices, on the ground that she was indebted to them for her good fortune (cf. Chronic. Pasch. year 421). Besides her ode commemorating the victory of the imperial forces over the Persians, several other works of hers are mentioned, viz. paraphrases of the Pentateuch, Joshua, and Judges into Greek hexameters, a version of the prophecies of Zachariah and Daniel, and a poem in three books on St. Cyprian and St. Justina; to these Zonaras adds that she completed the Centones Homericci of Patricius. Her later years were clouded by Some, indeed, were stimulated by the desire of being noticed by the emperor; while others were anxious to display their talents to the masses, being unwilling that the attainments they had made by dint of great exertion should lie buried in obscurity.

Kind Treatment of the Persian Captives by Acacius Bishop of Amida.

a misunderstanding between her husband and herself, which is variously given by the contemporaneous historians and altogether passed over by Socrates. Cf. Evagrius, H. E. I. 20, 22, and Zonaras Ann. XIII.
Chapter XXII.—Virtues of the Emperor Theodosius the Younger.

But although I am neither eager for the notice of the emperor, nor wish to make an exhibition of my oratorical powers, yet have I felt it my duty to record plainly the singular virtues with which the emperor is endowed: for I am persuaded that silence concerning them, as they are so excellent, would be injustice to those who should come after us. In the first place then, this prince though born and nurtured to empire, was neither stuifaced nor effeminated by the circumstances of his birth and education. He evinced so much prudence, that he appeared to those who conversed with him to have acquired wisdom from experience. Such was his fortitude in undergoing hardships, that he would courageously endure both heat and cold; fasting very frequently, especially on Wednesdays and Fridays; and this he did from an earnest endeavor to observe with accuracy all the prescribed forms of the Christian religion. He rendered his palace little different from a monastery: for he, together with his sisters, rose early in the morning, and recited responsive hymns in praise of the Deity. By this training he learnt the holy Scriptures by heart; and he would often discourse with the bishops on scriptural subjects, as if he had been an ordained priest of long standing. He was a more indefatigable collector of the sacred books and of the expositions which had been written on them, than even Ptolemy Philadelphus had formerly been. In clemency and humanity he far surpassed all others. For the emperor Julian although he professed to be a philosopher, could not moderate his rage against the Antiochians who derided him, but inflicted upon Theodore the most agonizing tortures. Theodosius on the contrary, bidding farewell to Aristotle’s syllogisms, exercised philosophy in deeds, by getting the mastery over anger, grief, and pleasure. Never has he revenged himself on any one by whom he has been injured; nor has any one ever even seen him irritated. And when some of his most intimate friends once asked him, why he never inflicted capital punishment upon offenders, his answer was, ‘Would that it were even possible to restore to life those that have died.’ To another making a similar inquiry he replied, ‘It is neither a great nor a difficult thing for a mortal to be put to death but it is God only that can resuscitate by repentance a person that has once died.’ So habitually indeed did he practice mercy, that if any one were guilty and sentence of death was passed upon him, and he was conducted toward the place of execution, he was never suffered to reach the gates of the city before a pardon was issued.

961 On the observance of these two days of the week as fast days in the early Church see Bingham, Christ. Antiq. XXI. 3.

962 φιλάδελφος = ‘lover of his brothers,’ but applied to him by the rhetorical figure of antiphrasis because he killed his brothers. This Ptolemy Philadelphus reigned in Egypt from 285 to 247 b.c. and is famous for having the Old Testament translated from Hebrew into Greek, according to the common tradition, by seventy learned men, whence the translation has been known as the Septuagint.

963 Cf. III. 19.
commanding his immediate return. Having once exhibited a show of hunting wild beasts in the Amphitheatre at Constantinople, the people cried out, ‘Let one of the boldest bestiarii encounter the enraged animal.’ But he said to them, ‘Do ye not know that we are wont to view these spectacles with feelings of humanity?’ By this expression he instructed the people to be satisfied in future with shows of a less cruel description. His piety was such that he had a reverential regard for all who were consecrated to the service of God; and honored in an especial manner those whom he ascertained to be eminent for their sanctity of life. It is said that the bishop of Chebron having died at Constantinople, the emperor expressed a wish to have his cassock of sackcloth of hair; which, although it was excessively filthy, he wore as a cloak, hoping that thus he should become a partaker in some degree of the sanctity of the deceased. In a certain year, during which the weather had been very tempestuous, he was obliged by the eagerness of the people to exhibit the usual sports in the Hippodrome; and when the circus was filled with spectators, the violence of the storm increased, and there was a heavy fall of snow. Then the emperor made it very evident how his mind was affected towards God; for he caused the herald to make a proclamation to the people to this effect: ‘It is far better and fitter to desist from the show, and unite in common prayer to God, that we may be preserved unhurt from the impending storm.’ Scarcely had the herald executed his commission, when all the people, with the greatest joy, began with one accord to offer supplication and sing praises to God, so that the whole city became one vast congregation; and the emperor himself in official garments, went into the midst of the multitude and commenced the hymns. Nor was he disappointed in his expectation, for the atmosphere began to resume its wonted serenity: and Divine benevolence bestowed on all an abundant harvest, instead of an expected deficiency of corn. If at any time war was raised, like David he had recourse to God, knowing that he is the arbiter of battles, and by prayer brought them to a prosperous issue. At this point therefore, I shall relate, how a little after the war against the Persians, by placing his confidence in God he vanquished the usurper John, after Honorius had died on the 15th of August, in the consulate of Asclepiodotus and Marian. For I judge what then occurred worthy of mention, inasmuch as there happened to the emperor’s generals who were dispatched against the tyrant, something analogous to what took place when the Israelites crossed the Red Sea under the guidance of Moses. These things however, I shall set forth very briefly, leaving to others the numerous details which would require a special treatise.

964 Persons who fought with wild beasts in the games of the circus. They were of two classes: (1) professionals, those who fought for pay, and (2) criminals, allowed to use arms in defending themselves against the wild beasts to which they had been condemned. It is one of the first class that is here meant.
965 An altogether unknown and doubtful diocese.
966 423 a.d.
Virtues of the Emperor Theodosius the Younger.
Chapter XXIII.—After the Death of the Emperor Honorius John usurps the Sovereignty at Rome. He is destroyed through the Prayers of Theodosius the Younger.

When the Emperor Honorius died Theodosius—now sole ruler—having received the news concealed the truth as long as possible, misleading the people sometimes with one report, and then with another. But he privately dispatched a military force to Salone, a city of Dalmatia, that in the event of any revolutionary movement in the West there might be resources at hand to check it; and after making these provisional arrangements, he at length openly announced his uncle’s death. In the meantime John, the superintendent of the emperor’s secretaries,\(^\text{967}\) not content with the dignity to which he had already attained, seized upon the sovereign authority; and sent an embassy to the emperor Theodosius, requesting that he might be recognized as his colleague in the empire. But that prince first caused the ambassadors to be arrested, then sent off Ardaburius, the commander-in-chief of the army, who had greatly distinguished himself in the Persian war.\(^\text{968}\) He, on arriving at Salone, set sail from thence for Aquileia. And he was fortunate as was thought, but fortune was adverse to him as it afterwards appeared. For a contrary wind having arisen, he was driven into the usurper’s hand. The latter having seized him became more sanguine in his hope that the emperor would be induced by the urgency of the case to elect and proclaim him emperor, in order to preserve the life of his general-in-chief. And the emperor was in fact greatly distressed when he heard of it, as was also the army which had been sent against the usurper, lest Ardaburius should be subjected to evil treatment by the usurper. Aspar the son of Ardaburius, having learnt that his father was in the usurper’s power, and aware at the same time that the party of the rebels was strengthened by the accession of immense numbers of barbarians, knew not what course to pursue. Then again at this crisis the prayer of the pious emperor prevailed. For an angel of God, under the appearance of a shepherd, undertook the guidance of Aspar and the troops which were with him, and led him through the lake near Ravenna—for in that city the usurper was then residing—and there detained the military chief. Now, no one had ever been known to have forded that lake before; but God then rendered that passable, which had hitherto been impassable. Having therefore crossed the lake, as if going over dry ground, they found the gates of the city open, and overpowered the usurper. This event afforded that most devout emperor an opportunity of giving a fresh demonstration of his piety towards God. For the news of the usurper’s being destroyed, having arrived while he was engaged at the exhibition of the sports of the Hippodrome, he immediately said to the people: ‘Come now, if you please, let us leave these diversions, and proceed to the church to offer thanksgivings to God, whose hand has overthrown the usurper.’ Thus did he address them; and the spectacles were immediately forsaken and \(^{967}\) So also Zosimus, V. 40.

\(^{968}\) See above, chap. 18.
neglected, the people all passing out of the circus singing praises together with him, as with one heart and one voice. And arriving at the church, the whole city again became one congregation; and once in the church they passed the remainder of the day in these devotional exercises.

After the Death of the Emperor Honorius John usurps the Sovereignty at Rome….
Chapter XXIV.—Valentinian a Son of Constantius and Placidia, Aunt of Theodosius, is proclaimed Emperor.

After the usurper’s death, the emperor Theodosius became very anxious as to whom he should proclaim emperor of the West. He had a cousin then very young named Valentinian; the son of his aunt Placidia, daughter of Theodosius the Great, and sister of the two Augusti Arcadius and Honorius and of that Constantius who had been proclaimed emperor by Honorius, and had died after a short reign with him. This cousin he created Cæsar, and sent into the Western parts, committing the administration of affairs to his mother Placidia. He himself also hastened towards Italy, that he might in person both proclaim his cousin emperor, and also being present among them, endeavor to influence the natives and residents by his counsels not to submit to usurpers readily. But when he reached Thessalonica he was prevented from proceeding further by sickness; he therefore sent forward the imperial crown to his cousin by Helion the patrician, and he himself returned to Constantinople. But concerning these matters I deem the narrative here given sufficient.
Chapter XXV.—Christian Benevolence of Atticus Bishop of Constantinople. He registers John’s Name in the Diptychs. His Fore-knowledge of his Own Death.

Meanwhile Atticus the bishop caused the affairs of the church to flourish in an extraordinary manner; administering all things with prudence, and inciting the people to virtue by his instruction. Perceiving that the church was on the point of being divided inasmuch as the Johannites 970 assembled themselves apart, he ordered that mention of John should be made in the prayers, as was customary to be done of the other deceased 971 bishops; by which means he trusted that many would be induced to return to the Church. And he was so liberal that he not only provided for the poor of his own parishes, but transmitted contributions to supply the wants and promote the comfort of the indigent in the neighboring cities also. On one occasion as he sent to Calliopius a presbyter of the church at Nicaea, three hundred pieces 972 of gold he also dispatched the following letter.

‘Atticus to Calliopius—salutations in the Lord.

‘I have been informed that there are in your city ten thousand necessitous persons whose condition demands the compassion of the pious. And I say ten thousand, designating their multitude rather than using the number precisely. As therefore I have received a sum of money from him, who with a bountiful hand is wont to supply faithful stewards; and since it happens that some are pressed by want, that those who have may be proved, who yet do not minister to the needy—take, my friend, these three hundred pieces of gold, and dispose of them as you may think fit. It will be your care, I doubt not, to distribute to such as are ashamed to beg, and not to those who through life have sought to feed themselves at others’ expense. In bestowing these alms make no distinction on religious grounds; but feed the hungry whether they agree with us in sentiment, or not.’

Thus did Atticus consider even the poor who were at a distance from him. He labored also to abolish the superstitions of certain persons. For on being informed that those who had separated themselves from the Novatians, on account of the Jewish Passover, had transported the body of Sabbatius 973 from the island of Rhodes—for in that island he had died in exile—and having buried it, were accustomed to pray at his grave, he caused the body to be disinterred at night, and deposited in a private sepulchre; and those who had formerly paid their adorations at that place, on finding his tomb had been opened, ceased honoring that tomb thenceforth. Moreover he manifested a great deal of taste in the applic-

970 The adherents of Chrysostom. See VI. 3.
971 He effected this restoration by having the name John enrolled in the diptychs or registers of those whose names should be included in the prayers of the liturgy.
972 χρυσίνους , with στατῆρας probably to be supplied; if so the value of these gold pieces was about $5.00, or £1 s. 9d.
973 See above, chaps. 5 and 12.
oration of names to places. To a port in the mouth of the Euxine sea, ancienly called Pharmaceus, he gave the appellation of Therapeia, because he would not have a place where religious assemblies were held, dishonored by an inauspicious name. Another place, a suburb of Constantinople, he termed Argyropolis, for this reason. Chrysopolis is an ancient port situated at the head of the Bosphorus, and is mentioned by several of the early writers, especially Strabo, Nicolaus Damascenus, and the illustrious Xenophon in the sixth book of his Anabasis of Cyrus; and again in the first of his Hellenica he says concerning it, ‘that Alcibiades having walled it round, established a toll in it; for all who sailed out of Pontus were accustomed to pay tithes there.’ Atticus seeing the former place to be directly opposite to Chrysopolis, and very delightfully situated, declared that it was most fitting it should be called Argyropolis; and as soon as this was said it firmly established the name. Some persons having said to him that the Novatians ought not to be permitted to hold their assemblies within the cities: ‘Do you not know,’ he replied, ‘that they were fellow-sufferers with us in the persecution under Constantius and Valens? Besides,’ said he, ‘they are witnesses to our creed: for although they separated from the church a long while ago, they have never introduced any innovations concerning the faith.’ Being once at Nicea on account of the ordination of a bishop, and seeing there Asclepiades bishop of the Novatians, then very aged, he asked him, ‘How many years have you been a bishop?’ When he was answered fifty years: ‘You are a happy man,’ said he, ‘to have had charge of so “good a work” for such a length of time.’ To the same Asclepiades he observed: ‘I commend Novatus; but can by no means approve of the Novatians.’ And when Asclepiades, surprised at this strange remark, said, ‘What is the meaning of your remark, bishop?’ Atticus gave him this reason for the distinction. ‘I approve of Novatus for refusing to commune with those who had sacrificed, for I myself would have done the same: but I cannot praise the Novatians, inasmuch as they exclude laymen from communion for very trivial offenses.’ Asclepiades answered, ‘There 974 φαρμακέα = ‘poisoner.’

975 θεραπείας; the word occurs in three senses, viz. (1) healing, (2) service, (3) worship. Probably, and as the sentence following seems to indicate, the last of these was the one meant to be emphasized; this is also borne out by the plural number used. If the first sense were the one for which the word was chosen, it must have been because of its being in complete contrast to the previous name. The place retains the name thus given it to this day and constitutes one of the suburbs of Constantinople.
976 Silver City.
977 Golden City.
978 Cf. Xenophon, Anab. VI. 6. 38.
979 Cf. Xenophon, Hellenica, I. 1, 22. The event mentioned took place in 411 b.c.
980 Cf. IV. 1–6.
981 1 Tim. iii. 1.
are many other “sins unto death,” as the Scriptures term them, besides sacrificing to idols; on account of which even you excommunicate ecclesiastics only, but we laymen also, reserving to God alone the power of pardoning them. Atticus had moreover a presentiment of his own death; for at his departure from Nicæa, he said to Calliopius a presbyter of that place: ‘Hasten to Constantinople before autumn if you wish to see me again alive; for if you delay beyond that time, you will not find me surviving.’ Nor did he err in this prediction; for he died on the 10th of October, in the 21st year of his episcopate, under the eleventh consulate of Theodosius, and the first of Valentinian Cæsar. The Emperor Theodosius indeed, being then on his way from Thessalonica, did not reach Constantinople in time for his funeral, for Atticus had been consigned to the grave one day before the emperor’s arrival. Not long afterwards, on the 23d of the same month, October, the young Valentinian was proclaimed Augustus.

982 1 John v. 17.
983 The Catholic Church was more severe in its discipline regarding the clergy than the laity, but it does not appear that excommunication was in any case absolute and reinstatement impossible. See on this point the liberal views of Chrysostom, VI. 21. Cf. also Bennett, Christ. Archaeology, p. 383.
984 425 a.d.
985 This was Valentinian III. See chap. 24 above for his relationship to the reigning Theodosius.
Chapter XXVI.—Sisinnius is chosen to succeed Atticus.

After the decease of Atticus, there arose a strong contest about the election of a successor, some proposing one person, and some another. One party, they say, was urgent in favor of a presbyter named Philip; another wished to promote Proclus who was also a presbyter; but the general desire of the people was that the bishopric should be conferred on Sisinnius. This person was also a presbyter but held no ecclesiastical office within the city, having been appointed to the sacred ministry in a church at Elæa, a village in the suburbs of Constantinople. This village is situated across the harbor from the city, and in it from an ancient custom the whole population annually assembled for the celebration of our Saviour’s ascension. All of the laity were warmly attached to the man because he was famous for his piety, and especially because he was diligent in the care of the poor even "beyond his power." 986 The earnestness of the laity thus prevailed, and Sisinnius was ordained on the twenty-eighth day of February, under the following consulate, which was the twelfth of Theodosius, and the second of Valentinian. 987 The presbyter Philip was so chagrined at the preference of another to himself, that he even introduced the subject into his Christian History, 988 making some very censorious remarks, both about the person ordained and those who had ordained him, and much more severely on the laity. But he said such things as I cannot by any means commit to writing. Since I do not approve of his unadvised action in committing them to writing, I do not deem it unseasonable, however, to give some notice here of him and of his works.

---

986 2 Cor. viii. 3.
987 426 a.d.
988 See Introd. p. 12. Photius, Biblioth. chap. 35, mentions Philip’s attack on Sisinnius and assigns the reason for it as jealousy, because Philip and Sisinnius both being of the same rank in the clergy, the latter was made archbishop of Constantinople.
Chapter XXVII.—Voluminous Productions of Philip, a Presbyter of Side.

Philip was a native of Side; Side is a city of Pamphylia. From this place also Troilus the sophist came, to whom Philip boasted himself to be nearly related. He was a deacon and thus admitted to the privilege of familiar intercourse with John Chrysostom, the bishop. He labored assiduously in literature, and besides making very considerable literary attainments, formed an extensive collection of books in every branch of knowledge. Affecting the Asiatic style, he became the author of many treatises, attempting among others a refutation of the Emperor Julian’s treatises against the Christians, and compiled a Christian History, which he divided into thirty-six books; each of these books occupied several volumes, so that they amounted altogether to nearly one thousand, and the mere argument of each volume equalled in magnitude the volume itself. This composition he has entitled not an Ecclesiastical, but a Christian History, and has grouped together in it abundance of very heterogeneous materials, wishing to show that he is not ignorant of philosophical and scientific learning: for it contains a medley of geometrical theorems, astronomical speculations, arithmetical calculations, and musical principles, with geographical delineations of islands, mountains, forests, and various other matters of little moment. By forcing such irrelevant details into connection with his subject, he has rendered his work a very loose production, useless alike, in my opinion, to the ignorant and the learned; for the illiterate are incapable of appreciating the loftiness of his diction, and such as are really competent to form a just estimate, condemn his wearisome tautology. But let every one exercise his own judgment concerning these books according to his taste. All I have to add is, that he has confounded the chronological order of the transactions he describes: for after having related what took place in the reign of the Emperor Theodosius, he immediately goes back to the times of the bishop Athanasius; and this sort of thing he does frequently. But enough has been said of Philip: we must now mention what happened under the episcopate of Sisinnius.

989 This was a heavy, redundant, and turgid style deprecated by rhetoricians of the better class from the time of Cicero onwards. Cf. Cicero, Brut. XIII. 51; Quintilian, Instit. Orat. XII. 10, and Jerome, ad Rustic. (125. 6).

990 ὑπόθεσις = lit. ‘subject’ or ‘substance’; the contents, or as later, called the argument, or summary of contents.
Chapter XXVIII.—Proclus ordained Bishop of Cyzicus by Sisinnius, but rejected by the People.

The bishop of Cyzicus having died, Sisinnius ordained Proclus to the bishopric of that city. But while he was preparing to depart thither, the inhabitants anticipated him, by electing an ascetic named Dalmatius. This they did in disregard of a law which forbade their ordination of a bishop without the sanction of the bishop of Constantinople;\(^{991}\) but they pretended that this was a special privilege granted to Atticus personally. Proclus therefore continued destitute of the presidency over his own church, but acquired celebrity for his discourses in the churches of Constantinople. We shall however speak of him more particularly in an appropriate place. Sisinnius having survived his appointment to the bishopric by barely two entire years, was removed by death on the 24th of December, in the consulate of Hierius and Ardaburius.\(^{992}\) For his temperance, integrity of life, and benignity to the poor, he was deservedly eminent; he was moreover singularly affable and guileless in disposition, and this rendered him rather averse to business, so that by men of active habits he was accounted indolent.

\(^{991}\) The Council in its 6th Canon declared that no one should be ordained bishop without the consent of his metropolitan; but that the bishop of Constantinople was the metropolitan of the Cyzicenes does not appear unless the decree of the (Canon 3d) Council of Constantinople making the latter a patriarchate is to be understood as rendering the see of Cyzicus subordinate to that of Constantinople, as an individual church is to the metropolitan. Cf. Bingham, Christ. Antiq. II. 16. 12.

\(^{992}\) 427 a.d.
Chapter XXIX.—Nestorius of Antioch promoted to the See of Constantinople. His Persecution of the Heretics.

After the death of Sisinnius, on account of the spirit of ambitious rivalry displayed by the ecclesiastics of Constantinople, the emperors resolved that none of that church should fill the vacant bishopric, notwithstanding the fact that many eagerly desired to have Philip ordained, and no less a number were in favor of the election of Proclus. They therefore sent for a stranger from Antioch, whose name was Nestorius, a native of Germanicia, distinguished for his excellent voice and fluency of speech; qualifications which they judged important for the instruction of the people. After three months had elapsed therefore, Nestorius was brought from Antioch, being greatly lauded by some for his temperance: but what sort of a disposition he was of in other respects, those who possessed any discernment were able to perceive from his first sermon. Being ordained on the 10th of April, under the consulate of Felix and Taurus, he immediately uttered those famous words, before all the people, in addressing the emperor, 'Give me, my prince, the earth purged of heretics, and I will give you heaven as a recompense. Assist me in destroying heretics, and I will assist you in vanquishing the Persians.' Now although these utterances were extremely gratifying to some of the multitude, who cherished a senseless antipathy to the very name of heretic; yet those, as I have said, who were skillful in predicating a man’s character from his expressions, did not fail to detect his levity of mind, and violent and vainglorious temperament, inasmuch as he had burst forth into such vehemence without being able to contain himself for even the shortest space of time; and to use the proverbial phrase, 'before he had tasted the water of the city,' showed himself a furious persecutor. Accordingly on the fifth day after his ordination, having determined to demolish a chapel in which the Arians were accustomed to perform their devotions privately, he drove these people to desperation; for when they saw the work of destruction going forward in their chapel, they threw fire into it, and the fire spreading on all sides reduced many of the adjacent buildings also to ashes. A tumult accordingly arose on account of this throughout the city, and the Arians burning to revenge themselves, made preparations for that purpose: but God the Guardian of the city suffered not the mischief to gather to a climax. From that time, however, they branded Nestorius as an 'incendiary,' and it was not only the heretics who did this, but those also of his own faith. For he could not rest, but seeking every means of harassing those who embraced not his own sentiments, he continually disturbed the public tranquillity. He annoyed the Novatians also, being incited to jealousy because Paul their bishop was everywhere respected for his piety; but the emperor by his admonitions checked his fury. With what calamities he visited the Quartodecimans throughout Asia, Lydia, and Caria, and what multitudes perished in a popular tumult of which he was the cause at Miletus and Sardis, I think proper to pass by in silence. What punishment he suffered for all these enormities, and for that unbridled license of speech in which he indulged himself, I shall mention somewhat later. 998

---

998  Below, chap. 36.
Chapter XXX.—The Burgundians embrace Christianity under Theodosius the Younger.

I must now relate an event well worthy of being recorded, which happened about this time. There is a barbarous nation dwelling beyond the Rhine, denominated Burgundians; they lead a peaceful life; for being almost all artisans, they support themselves by the exercise of their trades. The Huns, by making continual irruptions on this people, devastated their country, and often destroyed great numbers of them. In this perplexity, therefore, the Burgundians resolved to have recourse not to any human being, but to commit themselves to the protection of some god: and having seriously considered that the God of the Romans mightily defended those that feared him, they all with common consent embraced the faith of Christ. Going therefore to one of the cities of Gaul, they requested the bishop to grant them Christian baptism: who ordering them to fast seven days, and having meanwhile instructed them in the elementary principles of the faith, on the eighth day baptized and dismissed them. Accordingly becoming confident thenceforth, they marched against their invaders; nor were they disappointed in their hope. For the king of the Huns, Uptar by name, having died in the night from the effects of a surfeit, the Burgundians attacked that people then without a commander-in-chief; and although they were few in numbers and their opponents very many, they obtained a complete victory; for the Burgundians were altogether but three thousand men, and destroyed no less than ten thousand of the enemy. From that period this nation became zealously attached to the Christian religion. About the same time Barbas bishop of the Arians died, on the 24th of June, under the thirteenth consulate of Theodosius, and the third of Valentinian, and Sabbatius was constituted his successor. Enough has been said of these matters.

999 Octar, mentioned as an uncle (father’s brother) of Attila by Jornandes, Historia Getarum, chap. 35.
1000 430 a.d.
Chapter XXXI.—Nestorius harasses the Macedonians.

Nestorius indeed acted contrary to the usage of the Church, and caused himself to be hated in other ways also, as is evident from what happened during his episcopate. For Anthony bishop of Germa, a city of the Hellespont, actuated by the example of Nestorius in his intolerance of heretics, began to persecute the Macedonians, under the pretext of carrying out the intentions of the patriarch. The Macedonians for some time endured his annoyance; but when Anthony proceeded to farther extremities, unable any longer to bear his harsh treatment, they were led to a sad desperation, and suborning two men, who put right in a secondary place and profit first, they assassinated their tormenter. When the Macedonians had perpetrated this crime, Nestorius took occasion from it to increase his violence of conduct against them, and prevailed on the emperor to take away their churches. They were therefore deprived of not only those which they possessed at Constantinople, before the old walls of the imperial city, but of those also which they had at Cyzicus, and many others that belonged to them in the rural districts of the Hellespont. Many of them therefore at that time came over to the Catholic church, and professed the ‘homoousian’ faith. But as the proverb says, ‘drunkards never want wine, nor the contentious strife’: and so it fell out with regard to Nestorius, who after having exerted himself to expel others from the church, was himself ejected on the following account.

1001 By a slight change in the Greek text Valesius renders this phrase ‘but caused others also to imitate him,’ alleging that the conduct of Anthony of Germa was in imitation of Nestorius; but the emendation seems unnecessary. Socrates means that Nestorius made himself odious in other ways, perhaps through other persons such as Anthony, &c.
Chapter XXXII.—Of the Presbyter Anastasius, by whom the Faith of Nestorius was perverted.

Nestorius had an associate whom he had brought from Antioch, a presbyter named Anastasius; for this man he had the highest esteem, and consulted him in the management of his most important affairs. This Anastasius preaching one day in the church said, 'Let no one call Mary Theotocos; for Mary was but a woman, and it is impossible that God should be born of a woman.' These words created a great sensation, and troubled many both of the clergy and laity; they having been heretofore taught to acknowledge Christ as God, and by no means to separate his humanity from his divinity on account of the economy of incarnation, heeding the voice of the apostle when he said, 'Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh; yet now henceforth know we him no more.' And again, 'Wherefore, leaving the word of the beginning of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.' While great offense was taken in the church, as we have said, at what was thus propounded, Nestorius, eager to establish Anastasius' proposition—for he did not wish to have the man who was esteemed by himself found guilty of blasphemy—delivered several public discourses on the subject, in which he assumed a controversial attitude, and totally rejected the epithet Theotocos. Wherefore the controversy on the subject being taken in one spirit by some and in another by others, the discussion which ensued divided the church, and resembled the struggle of combatants in the dark, all parties uttering the most confused and contradictory assertions. Nestorius thus acquired the reputation among the masses of asserting the blasphemous dogma that the Lord is a mere man, and attempting to foist on the Church the dogmas of Paul of Samosata and Photinus; and so great a clamor was raised by the contention that it was deemed requisite to convene a general council to take cognizance of the matter in dispute. Having myself perused the writings of Nestorius, I have found him an unlearned man and shall candidly express the conviction of my own mind concerning him: and as in entire freedom from personal antipathies, I have already alluded to his faults, I shall in like manner be unbiased by the criminations of his adversaries, to derogate from his merits. I cannot then concede that he was either a follower of Paul of Samosata or of Photinus, or that he denied the Divinity of Christ: but he seemed scared at the term Theotocos, as though it were some terrible phantom. The fact is, the causeless alarm he manifested on this subject just exposed his extreme ignorance: for being a man of natural fluency as a speaker, he was considered well educated, but in reality he was disgracefully illiterate. In fact he 1002 Θεοτόκον, i.e. 'Mother of God.' See Neander, Hist. of Christ. Church, Vol. II. p. 449.

1003 ἄνθρωπος, 'human being.'
1004 2 Cor. v. 16.
1005 Heb. vi. 1.
1006 μορμολύκιον, 'hobgoblin,' 'bugbear.'
contemned the drudgery of an accurate examination of the ancient expositors: and, puffed up with his readiness of expression, he did not give his attention to the ancients, but thought himself the greatest of all. Now he was evidently unacquainted with the fact that in the First Catholic epistle of John it was written in the ancient copies,\textsuperscript{1007} `Every spirit that separates Jesus, is not of God.' The mutilation of this passage\textsuperscript{1008} is attributable to those who desired to separate the Divine nature from the human economy: or to use the very language of the early interpreters, some persons have corrupted this epistle, aiming at `separating the manhood of Christ from his Deity.' But the humanity is united to the Divinity in the Saviour, so as to constitute not two persons but one only. Hence it was that the ancients, emboldened by this testimony, scrupled not to style Mary \textit{Theotocos}. For thus Eusebius Pamphilus in his third book of the \textit{Life of Constantine}\textsuperscript{1009} writes in these terms:

`And in fact “God with us” submitted to be born for our sake; and the place of his nativity is by the Hebrews called Bethlehem. Wherefore the devout empress Helena adorned the place of accouchement of the God-bearing virgin with the most splendid monuments, decorating that sacred spot with the richest ornaments.'

Origen also in the first volume of his \textit{Commentaries} on the apostle's epistle to the Romans,\textsuperscript{1010} gives an ample exposition of the sense in which the term \textit{Theotocos} is used. It is therefore obvious that Nestorius had very little acquaintance with the treatises of the ancients, and for that reason, as I observed, objected to the word only: for that he does not assert Christ to be a mere man, as Photinus did or Paul of Samosata, his own published homilies fully demonstrate. In these discourses he nowhere destroys the proper personality\textsuperscript{1011} of the Word of God; but on the contrary invariably maintains that he has an essential and distinct personality and existence. Nor does he ever deny his subsistence as Photinus and the Samosatan did, and as the Manichæans and followers of Montanus have also dared to do. Such in fact I find Nestorius, both from having myself read his own works, and from the assurances of his admirers. But this idle contention of his has produced no slight ferment in the religious world.

\textsuperscript{1007} 1 John iv. 2, 3. The findings of modern textual criticism are at variance with Socrates' opinion that the original in the epistle of John was λύει (separates). Westcott and Hort admit λύει into their margin, but evidently in order to have it translated as the Revised Version has it (also in the margin) 'annulleth,' taking away all the force of the passage as used here.

\textsuperscript{1008} Of what nature was this mutilation? Some authorities omitted it altogether (see Tischendorf, \textit{Novum. Test.} ed. Octav. Maj., on the passage); others changed λύει into μὴ ὁμολογῇ.

\textsuperscript{1009} Cf. Euseb. \textit{Life of Const.} III. 43.

\textsuperscript{1010} Cf. Origen, \textit{Com. in Rom.} I. 1. 5.

\textsuperscript{1011} ὑπόστασιν; see I. chap. 5, note 2.
Chapter XXXIII.—Desecration of the Altar of the Great Church by Runaway Slaves.

While matters were in this state it happened that an outrage was perpetrated in the church. For the domestics of a man of quality who were foreigners, having experienced harsh treatment from their master, fled from him to the church; and thus they ran up to the very altar with their swords drawn. Nor could they be prevailed upon by any entreaties to withdraw; so that they impeded the performance of the sacred services; but inasmuch as they obstinately maintained their position for several days, brandishing their weapons in defiance of any one who dared to approach them—and in fact killed one of the ecclesiastics, and wounded another—they were finally compelled to slay themselves. A person who was present at this desecration of the sanctuary, remarked that such a profanation was an ominous presage, and in support of his view of the matter, quoted the two following iambics of an ancient poet:

“For such prognostics happen at a time
When temples are defiled by impious crime.”

Nor was he who made the prediction disappointed in these inauspicious forebodings: for they signified as it seems a division among the people, and the deposition of the author of it.

Chapter XXXIV.—Synod at Ephesus Against Nestorius. His Deposition.

Not long time elapsed before a mandate from the emperor directed the bishops in all places to assemble at Ephesus. Immediately after the festival of Easter therefore Nestorius, escorted by a great crowd of his adherents, repaired to Ephesus, and found many of the bishops already there. Cyril bishop of Alexandria making some delay, did not arrive till near Pentecost. Five days after Pentecost, Juvenal bishop of Jerusalem arrived. While John of Antioch was still absent, those who were now congregated entered into the consideration of the question; and Cyril of Alexandria began a sharp skirmish of words, with the design of terrifying Nestorius, for he had a strong dislike for him. When many had declared that Christ was God, Nestorius said: ‘I cannot term him God who was two and three months old. I am therefore clear of your blood, and shall in future come no more among you.’ Having uttered these words he left the assembly, and afterwards held meetings with the other bishops who entertained sentiments similar to his own. Accordingly those present were divided into two factions. That section which supported Cyril, having constituted themselves a council, summoned Nestorius: but he refused to meet them, and put them off until the arrival of John of Antioch. The partisans of Cyril therefore proceeded to the examination of the public discourses of Nestorius which he had preached on the subject in dispute; and after deciding from a repeated perusal of them that they contained distinct blasphemy against the Son of God, they deposed him. This being done, the partisans of Nestorius constituted themselves another council apart, and therein deposed Cyril himself, and together with him Memnon bishop of Ephesus. Not long after these events, John bishop of Antioch made his appearance; and being informed of what had taken place, he pronounced unqualified censure on Cyril as the author of all this confusion, in having so precipitately proceeded to the deposition of Nestorius. Upon this Cyril combined with Juvenal to revenge themselves on John, and they deposed him also. When affairs reached this confused condition, Nestorius saw that the contention which had been raised was thus tending to the destruction of communion, in bitter regret he called Mary Theotocos, and cried out: ‘Let Mary be called Theotocos, if you will, and let all disputing cease.’ But although he made this recantation, no notice was taken of it; for his deposition was not revoked, and he was banished to the Oasis, where he still remains. Such was the conclusion of this Synod. These things were... done on the 28th of June, under the consulate of Bassus and Antiochus. John when he had returned to his bishopric, having convened several bishops, deposed Cyril, who had also returned to his see: but soon afterwards, having set aside their enmity and accepting each other as friends, they mutually reinstated each other in their episcopal chairs. But after the deposition of Nestorius a mighty agitation prevailed through the churches of Constantinople. For the people was divided on account of what we have already called his unfortunate utterances; and the clergy unanimously anathematized him. For such is the sentence which we Christians are accustomed to pronounce on those who have advanced any blasphemous doctrines, when we set up their impiety that it may be publicly exposed, as it were, on a pillar, to universal execration.

be less merciful than the barbarians, ordered some soldiers to convey him to Elephantine. The journey under such circumstances exhausted the old man; a fall severely hurt his hand and side; and before he could reach Elephantine, a mandate came for his return to Panopolis. Two more compulsory changes of abode were added to sufferings which remind us perforce of the last days of S. John Chrysostom; and then the unhappy Nestorius was no more. The exact year of his death cannot be ascertained.’—W. Bright, Hist. of the Church from a.d. 313 to 451, p. 371, 372.

1015  431 a.d.
Chapter XXXV.—Maximian elected to the Episcopate of Constantinople, though Some wished Proclus to take that Place.

After this there was another debate concerning the election of a bishop of Constantinople. Many were in favor of Philip, of whom we have already made mention; but a still greater number advocated the claims of Proclus. And the candidacy of Proclus would have succeeded, had not some of the most influential persons interfered, on the ground of its being forbidden by the ecclesiastical canon that a person nominated to one bishopric should be translated to that of another city. The people believing this assertion, were thereby restrained; and about four months after the deposition of Nestorius, a man named Maximian was promoted to the bishopric, who had lived an ascetic life, and was also ranked as a presbyter. He had acquired a high reputation for sanctity, on account of having at his own expense constructed sepulchral depositaries for the reception of the pious after their decease, but was ‘rude in speech’ and inclined to live a quiet life.

1016 The canon referred to is probably the fifteenth of Nicea, as follows: ‘On account of the numerous troubles and divisions which have taken place, it has been thought good that...no bishop, priest, or deacon should remove from one city to another. If any one should venture, even after this ordinance of the holy and great Synod, to act contrary to this present rule, and should follow the old custom, the translation shall be null, and he shall return to the church to which he had been ordained bishop or priest.’ Cf. also Apostol. Can. 14 and 15, and the twenty-first of the Council of Antioch given by Hefele, Hist. of the Ch. Councils, Vol. II. p. 72.

1017 2 Cor. xi. 6.
Chapter XXXVI.—The Author’s Opinion of the Validity of Translations from One See to Another.

But since some parties by appealing to a prohibition in the ecclesiastical canon, prevented the election of Proclus, because of his previous appointment to the see of Cyzicus, I wish to make a few remarks on this subject. Those who then presumed to interpose such a cause of exclusion do not appear to me to have stated the truth; but they were either influenced by prejudice against Proclus, or at least have been themselves completely ignorant both of the canons, and of the frequent and often advantageous precedents that had been established in the churches. Eusebius Pamphilus relates in the sixth book of his Ecclesiastical History,¹⁰¹⁸ that Alexander bishop of a certain city in Cappadocia, coming to Jerusalem for devotional purposes, was detained by the inhabitants of that city, and constituted bishop, as the successor of Narcissus; and that he continued to preside over the churches there during the remainder of his life. So indifferent a thing was it amongst our ancestors, to transfer a bishop from one city to another as often as it was deemed expedient. But if it is necessary to place beyond a doubt the falsehood of the statement of those who prevented the ordination of Proclus, I shall annex to this treatise the canon bearing on the subject. It runs thus:¹⁰¹⁹

‘If any one after having been ordained a bishop should not proceed to the church unto which he has been appointed, from no fault on his part, but either because the people are unwilling to receive him, or for some other reason arising from necessity, let him be partaker of the honor and functions of the rank with which he has been invested, provided he intermeddles not with the affairs of the church wherein he may minister. It is his duty however to submit to whatever the Synod of the province may see fit to determine, after it shall have taken cognizance of the matter.’

Such is the language of the canon. That many bishops have been transferred from one city to another to meet the exigencies of peculiar cases, I shall now prove by giving the names of those bishops who have been so translated.¹⁰²⁰ Perigenes was ordained bishop of Patræ: but inasmuch as the inhabitants of that city refused to admit him, the bishop of Rome directed that he should be assigned to the metropolitan see of Corinth, which had become vacant by the decease of its former bishop; here he presided during the rest of his days. Gregory was first made bishop of Sasima, one of the cities of Cappadocia, but was afterwards transferred to Nazianzus. Melitius after having presided over the church at Sebastia, subsequently

---

¹⁰¹⁹ The canon here quoted is the eighteenth of the Council of Antioch (see Hefele, Hist. of the Ch. Councils, Vol. II. p. 71); whereas the canon of that council bearing on that subject is the twenty-first, as noted in chap. 35, note 1.
¹⁰²⁰ In what way these canons against the translation of bishops were understood and observed by the early church is discussed by Bingham, Christ. Antiq. VI. 4. 6. governed that of Antioch. Alexander bishop of Antioch transferred Dositheus bishop of Seleucia, to Tarsus in Cilicia. Reverentius was removed from Arca in Phœnicia, and afterwards to Tyre. John was transferred from Gordum a city of Lydia, to Proconnesus, and presided over the church there. Palladius was transferred from Helenopolis to Aspuna; and Alexander from the same city to Adriani. Theophilus was removed from Apamea in Asia, to Eudoxiopolis anciently called Salambria. Polycarp was transferred from Sexantaprista a city of Mysia, to Nicopolis in Thrace. Hierophilus from Trapezopolis in Phrygia to Plotinopolis in Thrace. Optimus from Agdamia in Phrygia to Antioch in Pisidia; and Silvanus from Philippopolis in Thrace to Troas. This enumeration of bishops who have passed from one see to another is sufficient for the present; concerning Silvanus who was removed from Philippopolis in Thrace to Troas I deem it desirable here to give a concise account.
Chapter XXXVII.—Miracle performed by Silvanus Bishop of Troas formerly of Philippopolis.

Silvanus was formerly a rhetorician; but aiming at perfection in his Christian course, he entered on the ascetic mode of life, and set aside the rhetorician’s pallium. Atticus bishop of Constantinople having taken notice of him afterwards ordained him bishop of Philippopolis. Thus he resided three years in Thrace; but being unable to endure the cold of that region—for his constitution was delicate and sickly—he begged Atticus to appoint some one else in his place, alleging that it was for no other reason but the cold that he resigned residence in Thrace. This having been done, Silvanus resided at Constantinople, where he practiced so great austerities that, despising the luxurious refinements of the age, he often appeared in the crowded streets of that populous city shod with sandals made of hay. Some time having elapsed, the bishop of Troas died; on which account the inhabitants of that city came to Atticus concerning the appointment of a successor. While he was deliberating whom he should ordain for them, Silvanus happened to pay him a visit, which at once relieved him from further anxiety; for addressing Silvanus, he said: ‘You have now no longer any excuse for avoiding the pastoral administration of a church; for Troas is not a cold place: so that God has considered your infirmity of body, and provided you a suitable residence. Go thither then, my brother, without delay.’ Silvanus therefore removed to that city.

Here a miracle was performed by his instrumentality, which I shall now relate. An immense ship for carrying burdens, such as they term ‘float,’ intended for the conveyance of enormous pillars, had been recently constructed on the shore at Troas. This vessel it was necessary to launch. But although many strong ropes were attached to it, and the power of a vast number of persons was applied, the vessel was in no way moved. When these attempts had been repeated several days successively with the like result, the people began to think that a devil detained the ship; they therefore went to the bishop Silvanus, and entreated him to go and offer a prayer in that place. For thus only they thought it could be launched. He replied with his characteristic lowliness of mind that he was but a sinner, and that the work pertained to some one who was just and not to himself. Being at length prevailed on by their continued entreaties, he approached the shore, where after having prayed, he touched one 1021 Another indication that the patriarchal functions of the bishop of Constantinople were at this time exercised and recognized. The Council of Chalcedon somewhat later (in 451 a.d.) formally ordered in its twenty-eighth canon that the metropolitans of the Thracian Pontic, and Asian dioceses should be ordained by the bishop of Constantinople, their election being first secured by the clergy and laity of the dioceses, and referred to the patriarch afterwards.

---

1022 πλωτήν, a sort of raft; the word is incorrectly spelled πλατή according to Sophocles (Greek Lexic., &c.), and should be πλωτή.
of the ropes, and exhorting the rest to vigorous exertion, the ship was by the first pull instantly set in motion, and ran swiftly into the sea. This miracle wrought by the hands of Silvanus, stirred up the whole population of the province to piety. But the uncommon worth of Silvanus was manifested in various other ways. Perceiving that the ecclesiastics made a merchandise of the contentions of those engaged in law-suits, he would never nominate any one of the clergy as judge: but causing the documents of the litigants to be delivered to himself, he summoned to him some pious layman in whose integrity he had confidence; and committing to him the adjudication of the case, he soon equitably settled all the differences of the litigants; and by this procedure Silvanus acquired for himself great reputation from all classes of persons.

We have indeed digressed pretty much from the course of our history in giving this account of Silvanus; but yet it will not, we imagine, be unprofitable. Let us now however return to the place from which we departed. Maximian, having been ordained on the 25th of October, under the consulate of Bassus and Antiochus, the affairs of the church were reduced to a better ordered and more tranquil condition.
Chapter XXXVIII.—Many of the Jews in Crete embrace the Christian Faith.

About this period a great number of Jews who dwelt in Crete were convened to Christianity, through the following disastrous circumstance. A certain Jewish impostor pretended that he was Moses, and had been sent from heaven to lead out the Jews inhabiting that island, and conduct them through the sea: for he said that he was the same person who formerly preserved the Israelites by leading them through the Red Sea. During a whole year therefore he perambulated the several cities of the island, and persuaded the Jews to believe such assurances. He moreover bid them renounce their money and other property, pledging himself to guide them through a dry sea into the land of promise. Deluded by such expectations, they neglected business of every kind, despising what they possessed, and permitting any one who chose to take it. When the day appointed by this deceiver for their departure had arrived, he himself took the lead, and all followed with their wives and children. He led them therefore until they reached a promontory that overhung the sea, from which he ordered them to fling themselves headlong into it. Those who came first to the precipice did so, and were immediately destroyed, some of them being dashed in pieces against the rocks, and some drowned in the waters: and more would have perished, had not the Providence of God led some fishermen and merchants who were Christians to be present. These persons drew out and saved some that were almost drowned, who then in their perilous situation became sensible of the madness of their conduct. The rest they hindered from casting themselves down, by telling them of the destruction of those who had taken the first leap. When at length the Jews perceived how fearfully they had been duped, they blamed first of all their own indiscreet credulity, and then sought to lay hold of the pseudo-Moses in order to put him to death. But they were unable to seize him, for he suddenly disappeared which induced a general belief that it was some malignant fiend, who had assumed a human form for the destruction of their nation in that place. In consequence of this experience many of the Jews in Crete at that time abandoning Judaism attached themselves to the Christian faith.

---

1024 Nothing further is heard of this strange affair.

1025 ἀλάστωρ. Æschylus and Sophocles apply this word to the Furies.
Chapter XXXIX.—Preservation of the Church of the Novatians from Fire.

A little while after this, Paul bishop of the Novatians acquired the reputation of a man truly beloved of God in a greater measure than he had before. For a terrible conflagration having broken out at Constantinople, such as had never happened before,—for the fire destroyed the greater part of the city,—as the largest of the public granaries, the Achillean bath, and everything else in the way of the fire were being consumed, it at length approached the church of the Novatians situated near Pelargus. When the bishop Paul saw the church endangered, he ran upon the altar, where he commended to God the preservation of the church and all it contained; nor did he cease to pray not only for it, but also for the city. And God heard him, as the event clearly proved: for although the fire entered this oratory through all its doors and windows, it did no damage. And while many adjacent edifices fell a prey to the devouring element, the church itself was seen unscathed in the midst of the whole conflagration triumphing over its raging flames. This went on for two days and two nights, when the fire was extinguished, after it had burnt down a great part of the city: but the church remained entire, and what is more marvelous still, there was not the slightest trace even of smoke to be observed either on its timbers or its walls. This occurred on the 17th of August, in the fourteenth consulate of Theodosius, which he bore together with Maximus. Since that time the Novatians annually celebrate the preservation of their church, on the 17th of August, by special thanksgivings to God. And almost all men, Christians and most of the pagans from that time forth continue to regard that place with veneration as a peculiarly consecrated spot, because of the miracle which was wrought for its safeguard. So much concerning these affairs.

1026 Rebuilt and rededicated, according to the Chronicon of Marcellinus, under the consuls Maximus and Paterius, i.e. 443 a.d. and ten years after the fire.

1027 433 a.d.
Chapter XL.—Proclus succeeds Maximian Bishop of Constantinople.

Maximian, having peacefully governed the church during two years and five months, died on the 12th of April, in the consulate of Areobindus and Aspar. This happened to be on the fifth day of the week of fasts which immediately precedes Easter. The day of the week was Thursday. Then the Emperor Theodosius wishing to prevent the disturbances in the church which usually attend the election of a bishop, made a wise provision for this affair; for in order that there might be no dispute again about the choice of a bishop and tumult thus arise, without delaying, before the body of Maximian was interred, he directed the bishops who were then in the city to place Proclus in the episcopal chair. For he had received already letters from Cælestinus bishop of Rome approving of this election, which he had forwarded to Cyril of Alexandria, John of Antioch, and Rufus of Thessalonica; in which he assured them that there was no impediment to the translation to another see, of a person who had been nominated and really was the bishop of some one church. Proclus, being thus invested with the bishopric, performed the funeral obsequies of Maximian: but it is now time briefly to give some account of him also.

1028 434 a.d.

1028 434 a.d.
Chapter XLI.—Excellent Qualities of Proclus.

Proclus was a reader at a very early age, and assiduously frequenting the schools, became devoted to the study of rhetoric. On attaining manhood he was in the habit of constant intercourse with Atticus the bishop, having been constituted his secretary. When he had made great progress, his patron promoted him to the rank of deacon; subsequently being elevated to the presbyterate, as we have before stated, he was ordained by Sisinnius to be bishop of Cyzicus. But all these things were done long before. At this time he was allotted the episcopal chair of Constantinople. He was a man of moral excellence equal to any other; for having been trained by Atticus, he was a zealous imitator of all that bishop’s virtues. Patience, however, he exercised to a greater degree than his master, who occasionally practiced severities upon the heretics; for Proclus was gentle towards everybody, being convinced that kindness is far more effective than violence in advancing the cause of truth. Resolving therefore to vexatiously interfere with no heresy whatever, he restored in his own person to the church that mild and benign dignity of character, which had so often before been unhappily violated. In this respect he followed the example of the Emperor Theodosius; for as the latter had determined never to exercise his imperial authority against criminals, so had Proclus likewise purposed not to disquiet those who entertained other sentiments on divine subjects than those which he cherished himself.

---

1029 See above, chap. 28. This was about the year 427 a.d.
Chapter XLII.—Panegyric of the Emperor Theodosius Younger.\(^{1030}\)

For these reasons the emperor had the highest esteem for Proclus. For in fact he himself was a pattern to all true clergymen, and never approved of those who attempted to persecute others. Nay I may venture to affirm, that in meekness he surpassed all those who have ever faithfully borne the sacerdotal office. And what is recorded of Moses in the book of Numbers,\(^{1031}\) ‘Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth’—may most justly be applied at this day; for the Emperor Theodosius is ‘meek above all the men which are upon the face of the earth.’ It is because of this meekness that God subdued his enemies without martial conflicts, as the capture of the usurper John,\(^{1032}\) and the subsequent discomfiture of the barbarians clearly demonstrate. For the God of the universe has afforded this most devout emperor in our times supernatural aid of a similar kind to what was vouchsafed to the righteous heretofore. I write not these things from adulation, but truthfully narrate facts such as everybody can attest.

---

1030 See chap. 22, above.
1031 Num. xii. 3.
1032 See above, chap. 23.
Chapter XLIII.—Calamities of the Barbarians who had been the Usurper John’s Allies.

After the death of the usurper, the barbarians whom he had called to his assistance against the Romans, made preparations for ravaging the Roman provinces. The emperor being informed of this, immediately, as his custom was, committed the management of the matter to God; and continuing in earnest prayer, he speedily obtained what he sought; for it is worth while to give attention to disasters which befell the barbarians.\(^{1033}\) For their chief, whose name was Rougas, was struck dead with a thunderbolt. Then a plague followed which destroyed most of the men who were under him: and as if this was not sufficient, fire came down from heaven, and consumed many of the survivors. This filled the barbarians with the utmost terror; not so much because they had dared to take up arms against a nation of such valor as the Romans possessed, as that they perceived them to be assisted by a mighty God. On this occasion, Proclus the bishop preached a sermon in the church in which he applied a prophecy out of Ezekiel to the deliverance effected by God in the late emergency, and was in consequence much admired. This is the language of the prophecy:\(^{1034}\)

‘And thou, son of man, prophesy against Gog the prince of Rhos, Mosoch, and Thobel. For I will judge him with death, and with blood, and with overflowing rain, and with hailstones. I will also rain fire and brimstone upon him, and upon all his bands, and upon many nations that are with him. And I will be magnified, and glorified, and I will be known in the eyes of many nations: and they shall know that I am the Lord.’

This application of the prophecy was received with great applause, as I have said, and enhanced the estimation in which Proclus was held. Moreover the providence of God rewarded the meekness of the emperor in various other ways, one of which was the following.

\(^{1033}\) Who these barbarians were it is impossible to find out precisely, and that not because no mention is made of barbarian inroads on the imperial territories, but because so many are mentioned by the chronographers and the historians of the Goths (Jornandes, Prosper Aquitanus, Marcellinus, &c.) that it is impossible to identify this with any of them to the exclusion of the rest. Rougas also appears in these historians as Rouas (in Priscus), Roas (in Jornandes), Rugilas (in Prosper Aquitanus), and is said to be related to Attila; but nothing certain can be drawn from the accounts.

\(^{1034}\) Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 22, 23. Ambrose has also used this prophecy, applying it to the Goths, and exhorted Gratian to make war against them. Cf. Ambrose, de Fide, 2. 16. The quotation here is from the LXX.
Chapter XLIV.—Marriage of the Emperor Valentinian with Eudoxia the Daughter of Theodosius.

He had by the empress Eudocia, his wife, a daughter named Eudoxia. Her his cousin Valentinian, appointed by him emperor of the West, demanded for himself in marriage. When the emperor Theodosius had given his assent to this proposal, and they had consulted with each other as to the place on the frontiers of both empires, where it would be desirable that the marriage should be celebrated, it was decided that both parties should go to Thessalonica (which is about half-way) for this purpose. But Valentinian sent a message to the effect that he would not give him the trouble of coming, for that he himself would go to Constantinople. Accordingly, having secured the Western parts with a sufficient guard, he proceeded thither on account of his nuptials, which were celebrated in the consulate of Isidore and Sinator; after which he returned with his wife into the West. This auspicious event took place at that time.

1035 436 a.d.
Chapter XLV.—The Body of John Chrysostom transferred to Constantinople, and placed in the Church of the Apostles by the Emperor at the Instigation of Proclus.

Not long after this, Proclus the bishop brought back to the Church those who had separated themselves from it on account of Bishop John’s deposition, he having soothed the irritation by a prudent expedient. What this was we must now recount. Having obtained the emperor’s permission, he removed the body of John from Comana, where it was buried, to Constantinople, in the thirty-fifth year after his deposition. And when he had carried it in solemn procession through the city, he deposited it with much honor in the church termed The Apostles. By this means the admirers of that prelate were conciliated, and again associated in communion with the [catholic] Church. This happened on the 27th of January, in the sixteenth consulate of the Emperor Theodosius. But it astonishes me that envy, which has been vented against Origen since his death, has spared John. For the former was excommunicated by Theophilus about two hundred years after his decease; while the latter was restored to communion by Proclus in the thirty-fifth year after his death! So different was Proclus from Theophilus. And men of observation and intelligence cannot be deceived in reference to how these things were done and are continually being done.
Chapter XLVI.—Death of Paul Bishop of the Novatians, and Election of Marcian as his Successor.

A little while after the removal of John’s body, Paul bishop of the Novatians died, on the 21st of July, under the same consulate: who at his own funeral united, in a certain sense, all the different sects into one church. For all parties attended his body to the tomb, chanting psalms together, inasmuch as even during his lifetime by his rectitude he was in universal esteem by all. But as Paul just before his death performed a memorable act, I deem it advantageous to insert it in this history as it may be interesting to the readers of this work to be acquainted with it. And lest the brilliancy of that important deed should be obscured by dwelling on circumstantial details of minor consequence, I shall not stay to expatiate on the strictness with which he maintained his ascetic discipline as to diet even throughout his illness, without the least departure from the course he had prescribed for himself, or the omission of any of the ordinary exercises of devotion with his accustomed fervor. But what was this deed? Conscious that his departure was at hand, he sent for all the presbyters of the churches under his care, and thus addressed them: ‘Give your attention while I am alive to the election of a bishop to preside over you, lest the peace of your churches should hereafter be disturbed.’ They having answered that this affair had better not be left to them: ‘For inasmuch,’ said they, ‘as some of us have one judgment about the matter, and some another, we would by no means nominate the same individual. We wish therefore that you would yourself designate the person you would desire to succeed you.’ ‘Give me then,’ said Paul, ‘this declaration of yours in writing, that you will elect him whom I should appoint.’ When they had written this pledge, and ratified it by their signatures, Paul, rising in his bed and sitting up, wrote the name of Marcian in the paper, without informing any of those present what he had inserted. This person had been promoted to the rank of presbyter, and instructed in the ascetic discipline by him, but was then gone abroad. Having folded this document and put his own seal on it, he caused the principal presbyters to seal it also; after which he delivered it into the hands of Marcus a bishop of the Novatians in Scythia, who was at that time staying at Constantinople, to whom he thus spake, ‘If it shall please God that I should continue much longer in this life, restore me this deposit, now entrusted to your safe keeping. But should it seem fit to him to remove me, you will herein discover whom I have chosen as my successor in the bishopric.’ Soon after this he died; and on the third day after his death, the paper having been unfolded in the presence of a great number of persons, Marcian’s name was found within it, when they all cried out that he was worthy of the honor. Messengers were therefore sent off without delay to bring him to Constantinople. These, by a pious fraud, finding him residing at Tiberiopolis in Phrygia, brought him back with 1037 As above, 438 a.d.

them; whereupon he was ordained and placed in the episcopal chair on the 21st of the same month.¹⁰³⁸

¹⁰³⁸ This seems hardly probable when compared with the opening sentence of the chapter, and so Valesius with Christophorson and others change it into August. The emendation suggested in the Greek is not a difficult one; it simply adds between αὔ and τοῦ of the word αὐτοῦ (above translated 'the same'), the syllable γου- making it thus, αὐγούστοι μηνός, 'month of August.' The emendation, or something equivalent to it, must be accepted, otherwise we are compelled to place the death of Paul and the ordination of Marcian together with the intervening events on the same day.
Chapter XLVII.—The Empress Eudocia goes to Jerusalem; sent there by the Emperor Theodosius.

Moreover the Emperor Theodosius offered up thanksgivings to God for the blessings which had been conferred upon him; at the same time reverencing Christ with the most special honors. He also sent his wife Eudocia to Jerusalem, she having bound herself by a vow to go thither, should she live to see the marriage of her daughter. The empress therefore, on her visit to the sacred city, adorned its churches with the most costly gifts; and both then, and after her return, decorated all the churches in the other cities of the East with a variety of ornaments.

---

1039 On this visit of the empress to Jerusalem, see Evagrius, H. E. I. 20–23. During this visit for some reason or other—variously stated by the authors of the period—an alienation occurred between the emperor and Eudocia. See above, chap. 21, note 2.
Chapter XLVIII.—Thalassius is ordained Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia.

About this same time, under the seventeenth consulate of Theodosius,\(^{1040}\) Proclus the bishop undertook the performance of an act, such as no one among the ancients had done. Firmus bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia being dead, the inhabitants of that place came to Constantinople to consult Proclus about the appointment of a bishop. While Proclus was considering whom he should prefer to that see, it so happened that all the senators came to the church to visit him on the sabbath day; among whom was Thalassius also, a man who had administered the government of the nations and cities of Illyricum. And as it was reported that the emperor was about to entrust the government of the Eastern parts to him, Proclus laid his hands on him, and ordained him bishop of Cæsarea, instead of Prätorian Prefect.

In such a flourishing condition were the affairs of the Church at this time. But we shall here close our history, praying that the churches everywhere, with the cities and nations, may live in peace; for as long as peace continues, those who desire to write histories will find no materials for their purpose. And we ourselves, O holy man of God, Theodore, should have been unable to accomplish in seven books the task we undertook at your request, had the lovers of seditions chosen to be quiet.

This last book contains an account of the transactions of thirty-two years: and the whole history which is comprised in seven books, comprehends a period of 140 years.\(^{1041}\) It commences from the first year of the 271st Olympiad, in which Constantine was proclaimed emperor; and ends at the second year of the 305th Olympiad, in which the Emperor Theodosius bore his seventeenth consulate.\(^{1042}\)

---

1040  439 a.d.
1041  Evidently a round number, as he begun with the year 305 (cf. I. 1), and the exact number of years included in the history cannot be more than 135.
1042  439 a.d.
THE ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY
OF Sozomen, comprising a history of the church, from a.d. 323 to a.d. 425.
translated from the greek.
Revised by Chester d. Hartranft,
Hartford Theological Seminary.
Introduction.

Salaminius Hermias Sozomen

Part I.—The Life.

The name is an unusual and difficult one. It seems desirable to give preference to the order which Photius adopts, but to preserve the spelling in Nicephorus Callistus, and in the captions of the chief manuscripts, and therefore to call him Salaminius Hermias Sozomen. What the term Salaminius indicates, cannot yet be accurately determined. There are no data to show any official connection of Sozomen with Salamis opposite Athens, or Salamis (Constantia) in Cyprus; certainly there is no record of any naval service. In vi. 32, where he speaks of the greater lights of monasticism in Palestine, Hilarion, Hesychas, and Epiphanius, he remarks, “At the same period in the monasteries, Salamines, Phuscon, Malachion, Crispion, four brethren, were highly distinguished.” In the tart controversy between Epiphanius and the empress, the latter had said, “You have not power to revive the dead; otherwise your archdeacon would not have died.” Sozomen explains, “She alluded to Crispion, the archdeacon, who had died a short time previously; he was brother to Phuscon and Salamanus, monks whom I had occasion to mention when detailing the history of events under the reign of Valens” (viii. 15). The readings in the first citation fluctuate between the forms Salamines and Salamanes. Since these monks were of the family of Alaphion, intimate friends and neighbors of the grandfather of Sozomen (v. 15), it might be conjectured that Salamines stood in some relationship with Sozomen, such as sponsor or teacher, and that the cognomen might have its origin from such a connection. It seems strange in such a case that he would not have dwelt upon the bond, or at least have emphasized the life of this particular brother by a special note; but he simply avers, “Some good men belonging to this family have flourished even in our own days; and in my youth I saw some of them, but they were then very aged.” Nor in the other passages (vi. 32, viii. 15) is there any hint of intimacy. At the same time, this seems as yet the most warranted explanation of the epithet. Hermias was quite a common name even among Christians. It was originally connected with the household or local worship of Hermes, as the giver of an unexpected gift, or it may be as the utterance of a parental wish for the future success of the newcomer. Although it contained a heathen reminiscence, it was probably conferred in this case because it was ancestral. The name Sozomen itself is documentarily a very unusual one; and was probably bestowed upon the child by the father as a devout recognition of deliverance for himself and his boy, and in contrast with the family surname. A certain prefectus domestico, to whom Isidore of Pelusium addresses a letter (i. 300), was also so called; he must have been a cotemporary. It would be a pleasant surprise could he be identified with the historian; and it would not be at all impossible, for Evagrius, the advocate and historian, was so promoted (H. E. vi. 24).
biographical hints in Sozomen's surviving work are of the smallest; and outside tradition has preserved absolutely nothing. His ancestors were apparently from early times inhabitants of the village of Bethelia, in the territory of Gaza, and near to that important city. By race, they were probably of Philistine rather than Jewish descent; for they were pagans (Hellenists) up to the time of Hilarion, in the second quarter of the fourth century, and our historian contrasts them with the Hebrews. The family was one of distinction, belonging to a sort of village patricianate. That of Alaphion was of still greater dignity. The village of Bethelia was populous with a mixture of Gentiles and Jews; the former, however, largely predominating. Its name appears to have been derived from the Pantheon, erected on an artificial acropolis, and so overlooking the whole community, whose universalistic religious zeal was thus symbolized. The term Bethel was first given to the temple, and then was transferred to the town as Bethelia; and the use of such a form indicates that the prevailing dialect was a variation of Syriac or Aramaic. It is also spelled Bethelea (vi. 32). Hilarion was born in Thabatha, another village near Gaza, to the south, on a wady of the same name. He became a student in Alexandria, but adopted the monastic discipline, through the example of Antony; on returning to his home, he found his parents dead. He distributed his share of the patrimony to his family and the poor, and then withdrew to a desert by the sea, twenty stadia from his native village, and began his career of monastic activity as the founder of that ethical system in Palestine. Before his flight to other and distant seclusions, he came in contact with Alaphion, the head of a noble family in Bethelia, seemingly on very friendly footing with Sozomen's grandfather. Alaphion was possessed of a demon; neither pagan formularies nor Jewish exorcists could relieve him; Hilarion had but to invoke the name of Christ, and the malignant agent was expelled. The healed man became at once a Christian; the grandfather of Sozomen was won to the same profession by the care of his friend. The father, too, adopted the new faith; many other relatives joined the ranks of the believers, in this intensely pagan community and region; for Gaza, as the chief city, displayed a decided hostility to the Gospel. The grandfather was a man of native intelligence, and had moderate cultivation in general studies, and was not without some knowledge of arithmetic. His earlier social and intellectual position made him at once prominent among the converts, especially as an interpreter of the Scriptures. He won the affections of the Christians in Ascalon and Gaza and their outlying regions. In the estimation of his grandson, he was a necessary figure in the religious life of the Christian communities, and people carried doubtful points of holy writ to him for solution; yet it does not appear that he held any clerical function.

While the ancestor of Sozomen was conspicuous as the religious teacher of Southwestern Palestine, the old Philistine region, Alaphion and his family were distinguished for works of a practical quality: they founded churches and monasteries; they were active in the relief 1043 v. 15, and Hieron. de vita Hilarionis. of strangers and the poor; some adopted the new philosophy; and out of their ranks came martyrs and bishops. Sozomen says nothing of his father, excepting that he was originally a pagan, and therefore born before Hilarion’s mission. The edicts of Julian caused a sudden revival of the old state religion, and led to many local persecutions, where the pagans were the stronger party: Gaza and its dependencies were of this number, and some of the tragedies of that unhappy time are recorded by our historian. The families of Alaphion and of Sozomen were compelled to flee, to what place is not told us; probably the southernmost monastic retreats: the exiles certainly returned (v. 15), not unlikely after the accession of Jovian. We can only guess at the date of Sozomen’s birth, and somewhat in this wise. Hilarion’s activity in Palestine was after the council of Nice, and before the accession of Julian; we may say about a.d. 345. The grandfather at his conversion may have been about forty, since he had become a conspicuous local figure; the father, in all likelihood, was but a lad when this change came over the domestic worship. The exile under Julian took place very nearly in 362, and the return in 364, when the patrician of Bethelia was verging on sixty, and the lad had become a young man. We may place the date of Sozomen’s birth somewhere between 370 and 380. Hilarion passed away about 371: Ephraim Syrus, in 378; Gratian was emperor of the West; Theodosius the Great was just about to succeed Valens in the East. Ambrose was the most imposing ecclesiastic of the Occident; Gregory Nazianzen and Epiphanius were the leaders of orthodoxy in the Orient.

There are but few details concerning his education. That it was directed by the monks is sure; in fact, the only form of Christian life known in that region was of the ascetic type;
the very bishops and clerical functionaries were selected from the ranks of the practical philosophers. There was a succession of pious men in the line of Alaphion, and with the elders of the second generation, Sozomen, as a youth, was more or less acquainted. The names of some of them have already been mentioned: all had been pupils of Hilarion.
The fourth of the brothers, Melachion by name, must have already passed away, and legends had speedily transfigured his memory. The influence of Epiphanius throughout Palestine, and particularly in its southern slopes and shepheloth, was dominant in shaping the quality of devotional thought and feeling: its force was scarcely spent when Sozomen was a boy.

This accounts for the exaggerated value he puts upon the monastic discipline as the true philosophy, and why he desires not to appear ungrateful to its cultivators, in the writing of his history; for he purposes to keep in mind that tremendous movement, and to commemo-orate its eminent leaders under different reigns; in fact, he decides to make it a feature of his treatment of church life and history. There is no warrant, however, for stating that he himself became a monk. With all his admiration for their spiritual superiority, he does not lay claim to any direct fellowship, but rather denies his right or competency to invade their 1044 v. 15; vi. 32; viii. 15.

domain. We may be sure that he received the ordinary education imparted in the monastic schools of the time, approximating that of similar institutions near Alexandria. In a degree it was narrow, and growingly hostile to pagan literature; moreover, it was apt to be provincial, if patriotic in its tone. This will account for his desire to elevate the importance of Palestine over against the supercilious tendency which centralized all culture in Constantinople. The main body of his studies was conducted in the Greek language, of which he is no slight master; indeed, he became one of the best imitative stylists of his time, according to so good a judge as Photius. His familiarity with the Syriac and Aramaic names, the exactness of their transliteration, and his larger acquaintance with the history of the Syrian church, point to a likely knowledge of at least a dialect of that widely diffused speech; indeed, he could hardly have escaped the patois, which seems to have predominated over the Greek in Bethelia. In iii. 16, he allows for the loss of force and original grace in every translation, but states that in Ephraim’s works, the Greek rendition made in Ephraim’s own day, suffered nothing by the change, and he institutes such a comparison between the original and its version, that one is inclined to think he could read both. So his effort to keep a balance in writing between the central and border lands of the empire, and indeed outside of it, would indicate a broader linguistic sympathy. In vi. 34, he speaks familiarly of Syrian monks, who had survived to his own period; the wider range of his knowledge may have been due also to the practice of his profession, or to Syrian cases brought to Constantinople, each of which would involve a comprehension of the language; nor less his use of the records written by the Christians of Persia, Syria, and particularly Edessa, to preserve the story of the Persian church and its many martyrs, whose material he used so copiously (ii. 9–14). It is difficult to be sure of his proficiency in Latin; on the one hand, as an advocate it would be absolutely necessary for him to understand that language of jurisprudence; for all edicts, laws, rescripts, were written therein: the Theodosian code itself was so compiled in his own day. On the other hand, where he quotes Latin documents, he invariably does it from translations into Greek made by other hands; thus in iii. 2, of Constantine’s letter to the Alexandrians, he says, “I have met with a copy translated from the Latin into the Greek; I shall insert it precisely as I find it.” So in iv. 18, the letter of the Synod of Ariminum to Constantius; and in viii. 26, the two epistles of Innocent. Probably his second-hand report about Hilary of Pictavium, v. 13, leans the same way. But on the whole we must allow his profession, which necessitated a knowledge of the law language, to outweigh the lack of original versions in his book.

It is difficult to judge from a solitary work what the degree of an author’s general culture is. Clemens Alexandrinus has multitudinous quotations; it would be easy to conclude that he was a scholar of universal reading, and a genuine polyhistore; but their inaccuracy and frequent infelicity make them rather appear as the excerpts from some florilegium or some rhetorical hand-book. The classical allusions in Sozomen are not very many; and he might well have considered it out of place to indulge in overmuch reference in such a record as he presents; the quality of what appears would not compel a wide range of reading; the dedication is most fertile in familiar illustrations, poetical, historical, and mythological. In i. 6, because of his mentioning Aquilis, he drags the Argonauts in by the ears, hardly from Pseudo-Aristander, but rather from Zosimus, who does the same in mentioning the progress of Alaric. 1045

When he describes Constantine’s tentative search for a favorable site on which to rear his new capital, the mention of the plain of Ilium moves the historian to relate a little tradition about the Trojan town (ii. 3). He mentions Aristotle, in whose philosophy Aëtius was versed (iii. 15); and to whose dialectic work Theophronius composed an introduction (vii. 17). When he dwells on the imitative literature produced by Apolinarius, he alludes indirectly to the Homeric poems, and mentions outright his writing “comedies in imitation of Menander, tragedies resembling those of Euripides, and odes on the model of Pindar” (v. 18). In narrating the history of Daphne under Julian (v. 19), he gives the myth of Apollo and Daphne. Such hints and others are no proof or disproof of any extensive reading, and yet the way in which he alludes to some is more after a cyclopædic fashion than any profound study of the authors themselves. In fact, his confession in the instance of the Apollo and Daphne myth is naive, “I leave this subject to those who are more accurately acquainted with mythology.” This acknowledgment is not born of any puritanic hesitancy,—for he had ventured into the sensual bog a little way already,—but is rather a genuine declaration of his ignorance, and that in the capital where Anthemius and Synesius were authorities. Probably we have a little light in the limitations and illiberality of his early training, by recalling his attitude toward the imitative writings of Apolinarius, which sprang up to countervail the Julian edict, which the Christians interpreted as a prohibition to their enjoyment of the Hellenic culture. While Socrates whole-souledly and forcibly advocates the humanizing effect of the ancient literature (iii. 16), Sozomen says, “Were it not for the extreme partiality with which the productions of antiquity are regarded, I doubt not but that the writings of Apolinarius would be held in as much estimation as those of the ancients,” and he rather sides with the monks in their contempt for classic studies (i. 12). He does not wholly commit himself; he is a bit hesitant,—a characteristic of his make-up. This was an absorbing question in that and previous days, as it has continued to agitate the church, more or less, until our own time. In his time the influence of the monks and the clergy, who were pervaded with the ascetic spirit, was more and more against the humanities; the court fluctuated, while the training of the Valentinian and Theodosian succession had been decidedly monastic, and its sympathies were mainly with the intolerant tendency, the necessities of their position, and the splendid and overshadowing political abilities of men like Libanius, Themistius, Anthemius, Troilus, could not be set aside. Some of them, too, had proved themselves to be the saviours and uplifters of the state. The learning and grace of Eudocia, the empress, 1045 Zos. v. 29.

the spirit of her early training as the daughter of an Athenian philosopher, and her own poetic gifts, were persuasive agents in sustaining a classical survival among the Christians at the court, before she fell under the blight of her husband’s jealousy. Cyrus, the restorer of Constantinople, filled his verses with the same antique flavor. The clergy, whose preliminary training had been in the schools of the sophists, or at the Universities, could not wholly bury their sympathy, although they went through casuistic struggles such as that of Jerome. The Arians, too, were frequently of a larger culture, and on the Germanic side, of signal military skill and political sagacity, whose services the state could not dispense with. The University which even the monastically drilled Theodosius the Younger organized in Constantinople, while seeking to give a Christian tone to the higher education, previously controlled by Athens, made very liberal provision for the languages, if not so much for philosophy. Sozomen, as we see, inclined to a less generous view, and thought Apolinarius had such a universal genius, that his numerous originals might be dispensed with; Homer, Menander, Euripides, Pindar, but for an affectation, need not have been missed. This shows the thin quality of his reading, if not the restricted quantity of it, and lays bare the impotence of his critical faculty. These limitations were doubtless due in large measure to the shrunken ideals of his Palestinian education: it savored of Epiphanius’ temper and impress.

His education on the religious side was in the Nicene faith as professed by the Catholic Church in the East, to which the monks remained, not always thoughtfully faithful, in all that stormy period. As Sozomen says, the people were unable to follow the refinements of theological discussion, and took their cue from those whose lives seemed better than that of the ordinary clergy. He had, however, no close drill in the arguments pro and con, judging from his own declarations of inability to follow the various aspects of Arian discussion. After citing the letter of Gregory Nazianzen to Nectarius, in which the distinctive features of the heresy of Apolinarius are given, he supplements: “What I have said, may, I think, suffice to show the nature of the sentiments maintained by Apolinarius and Eunomius. If any one desire more detailed information, I can only refer him to the works on the subject, written either by them or by others, concerning these men. I do not profess easily to understand or to expound these matters” (ἐπεὶ ἐμοὶ οὔτε συνιέναι τὰ τοιαῦτα, οὔτε μεταφράζειν ἐὐπετές, vi. 27). And when he enumerates the causes of rupture among the Eunomians, “I should be prolix were I to enter into further particulars; and indeed the subject would be by no means an easy one to me, since I have no such dialectic skill” (ἐπεὶ μηδὲ ἐμπείρως ἔχω τῶν τοιούτων διαλέξεων, vii. 17). It would seem, then, that his logical training had not been of a very deep quality, and yet it must be said that such definitions and arguments as he does state in the history of controversy are orderly and lucid. Metaphysics also seems to have had no large place in his earlier studies; but he certainly did become familiar with its later theological terms and distinctions, and he draws a clear line between the various contestants who warred for and against consubstantiality. His reading also covered some philosophical speculations, as one gathers from a sentence in v. 6, “For it is not true, as some assert, that as is the body, so is the soul.” He probably also early learned to distinguish between ontology and ethics, by the practical lines drawn between the clerical disputant and the monastic philosopher. A sentence in his history of Meletius, bishop of Antioch (iv. 28), emphasizes this difference as we seldom find it in early Christian literature: “In his first discourse he confines himself to instructing the people in what we call ethics (τοὺς καλουμένους ἠθικοὺς λόγους), and then openly declared the Son to be of the same substance as the Father.”

His spirit was taught to enslave itself with legalistic fetters, and where he does rise above them, it is with trembling misgivings; he had a side for larger things, like Socrates, due probably to his profession, but he was afraid to venture quite so far, and yet he is magnanimous as compared with the better educated and clerical Theodoret.

To those early school years we must also attribute his statement, that he was a witness to the fidelity of Zeno, bishop of Majuma, the seaport of Gaza. “It is said, and I myself am witness of the truth of the assertion, that when he was bishop of the church in Majuma, he was never absent at morning or evening hymns, or any other worship of God, unless attacked by some malady; and yet he was at this period an old man, being nearly a hundred years of age” (vii. 28). The patriarch’s self-support and industry were in like manner the object of his youthful admiration. The struggle of the bishop of Gaza to assert his jurisdiction over Majuma, the seaport which had its own episcopate, and desired to retain its ecclesiastical autonomy, after it had lost its civil independence, Sozomen speaks of as happening in his day, and was one of the news of his youth; and one catches in his statement an inner satisfaction with the decision of the council which recognized the freedom of the Christian community by the sea (v. 3). In connection with public worship, he had very likely heard in those earlier days the reading of the Apocalypse of Peter. He says in vii. 19, “Thus the book entitled the Apocalypse of Peter, which was considered altogether spurious by the ancients, is still read in some of the churches of Palestine, on the day of preparation, when the people observe a fast in memory of the passion of the Saviour.” And a favorite book he saw in the hands of the monks of his native land, was the Apocalypse of Paul, “although unrecognized by the ancients” (vii. 19). A familiarity with such books gives a key to his later attitude toward prophecy.

There is no evidence as to what persuaded him to study law, nor do we know when he was enrolled as a student. The fact that he mentions the school of Berytus as the place where Bishop Triphylus had prosecuted jurisprudence for so long a while (i. 11) can hardly be taken as a suggestion of Sozomen’s own residence there. It would have been more likely for him to have attended lectures at the University of Alexandria or Antioch, with which cities he shows a considerable acquaintance. His studies were probably based on the Codex Gregorianus, with its supplement, the Codex Hermogenianus; for it was in his own day, and during the writing of his history, that the Codex Theodosianus was begun, and one is sorry to miss his name from the list of its compilers; and it was not until a.d. 439, that it was proclaimed as the text-book of imperial law. That he was admitted to the practice of that profession, we have direct evidence, as in the case of Evagrius, (H. E. vi. 7) while as to Socrates, it is simply an uncertified tradition. Sozomen speaks of his afflicted friend Aquilinus (ii. 3), “who is even at the present time residing with us, and is an advocate in the same courts of justice as that to which we belong.” From the tenor of the legal notices in his history it is likely that he practiced in the episcopal courts as well; for these had assumed form, and the function of an advocate is regulated in several synodical canons. He is more careful and systematic in stating the course of important legislation with regard to religion and the Church, than any other historian. Thus under Constantine, i. 3, 5, 8, 9, 21, 23, ii. 32; under Constantius, iii. 17, iv. 15; under Julian, v. 5, 15, 17; under Jovian, vi. 3; Valens, vi. 12, 19; Gratian, vii. 1; Gratian and Theodosius, vii. 4; under Theodosius, vii. 9, 12, 16, 20, 25, viii. 4; Valentinian, ii. (Justina), vii. 13; Arcadius, viii. 7, 24. There is no instance of his own practice such as Evagrius gives (H. E. vi. 7).

We can only guess at the time of his settlement in Constantinople. One would judge from his narrative, that he was not there during the riots excited by the deposition of Chrysostom, a.d. 404. He may have arrived a little after the elevation of Atticus to the see, as successor to Arsacius, who had followed John, somewhere about 406, a year before the death of the orator, and two years before the decease of the Emperor Arcadius. Under the sage Anthemius, he was finding his way in his profession. Under Pulcheria, one is inclined to suppose that he obtained some recognition. The capital thereafter remained the center of his practice, and he appears to be still in connection with the dikasteries while he is writing the second book of his history (ii. 3). There are a few personal points in his life at the imperial city which he hints at. Thirty five stadia overland from the city, toward the Pontus, was Hestiæ; owing to an appearance of the Archangel Michael, a temple was built there, and, as a consequence, called Michaelium. It became noted for its curative properties, both for physical and mental disorders. Sozomen himself had been afflicted, how, he does not tell us,—whether by reverses, or dangers, or disease, or other suffering,—but he resorted thither and testifies to the benefit he received (ii. 3). There is another personal incident which he records in ix. 2. He was a spectator of the splendid ceremonials connected with the discovery and transfer of the remains of the Forty Martyrs: he saw the costly caskets, the festival, and the procession; he heard the music of the commemorative odes, and beheld the deposit of the relics by the body of St. Thyrus. A number of other spectators whom he knew were there, the greater part of whom were living at the writing of his record. This celebration took place much later, under the episcopate of Proclus; therefore after the year 434. A final personal hint is given in his statements of the overthrow of Uldis. Concerning the remnant of the Sciri, who as a result of that campaign were scattered as slaves over Asia.
Minor, he remarks, “I have seen many in Bithynia, near Mt. Olympus, living apart from one another, and cultivating the hills and valleys of that region” (ix. 5). As to the nature of this tour, we know nothing. He must have been active in many of the later ecclesiastical and secular matters which he narrates, for the first endeavor of his history is to mention the affairs in which he was concerned (μεμνήσομαι δὲ πραγμάτων ὁ ὑπάρχων, i. 1). We can only deplore that he makes no sign, in the unfolding story, possibly some might have been indicated had he completed his ninth book.

The influential circles of the Eastern and Western capital were divided into parties on a variety of themes. One such, on the lines of culture, we have already considered. A second and very decisive one, was the question whether the foreigners, especially the Goths and the Persians, should be admitted into the service of the state. The stronger body believed in the use and incorporation of these new elements. What before was a variable matter, became a fixed policy under Theodosius the Great, and in all directions. His weak sons were controlled by both factions alternately. Anthemius, Pulcheria, and Theodosius II. adhered in the main to the liberal view. Yet the presence of a cry, Rome for the Romans, could overthrow such a man as Stilicho, and elevate such a weakling as Olympius. Sozomen, from his handling of the events, allied himself with the illiberal cabal; and while he sought room for a representation of foreign Christianity in his book, nevertheless opposed the intrusion of at least the northern element into the offices of the empire.

There was a third line of cleavage among the people and the court. A very strong and persistent faction set itself against the admission of pagans and Arians into political position. These two, dying elements often combined to save themselves from extinction. The court itself fluctuated, because the Germanic politicians were mostly Arian, and the best scholars of political science were pagans. Exigencies compelled the recognition of masters like Anthemius and Troilus. Sozomen threw in his lot with the narrower clique. He does not condescend to mention the best statesman of his time, or the wisest political thinker. Socrates does, and with admiration. The portrayal of Alaric is from the estimate of him as a leader in whom the hopes of pagans and Arians revived. Gainas is traduced, because he was the rallying-point of expiring Arianism in the East.

Sozomen, as we have seen, sided also with the majority in honoring the monastic life, which was bitterly opposed by many politicians and ecclesiastics. Naturally, therefore, he regarded life from a more pietistic standpoint, than did the court under the leadership either of Eudoxia or Eudocia. He responded to the puritanism of Chrysostom and Pulcheria.

He is a defender of Chrysostom, and answers such criticisms as Socrates has made. We can scarcely doubt that his heart was with the Johnites, although he may not have entered their separatist communion.

We can gather from intimations in his history that Sozomen had traveled somewhat. He shows a better knowledge of Palestine, than even Epiphanius; he must have kept up his connection with his native land to have been so well informed as to its traditions, places, and customs. Naturally the greater part of this interest centers in Gaza and its neighborhood, as his old home. In ii. 1, 2, his story of the invention of the Cross and the holy buildings erected by Helena, improves on the original, by local detail and color. In ii. 4, he enlarges upon the Eusebian account of Constantine’s purgation of Mamre or Terebinthus, as one familiar with the spot and with its fair. In ii. 5, he gives a bit of history of Gaza and Majuma under Constantine. In ii. 20, he narrates the election of Maximus as bishop of Jerusalem, from a source which no one else has used. In iii. 14, his biographical notices of Hilarion, Hesychas, and others, indicate an exact topographical knowledge. The Julian edict gives occasion to state the dissensions between Gaza and its seaport (vii. 3). Quite graphic is the martyrology of Gaza and its vicinity, given in v. 9. In discussing Julian’s outrage on the image of Christ at Paneas (v. 27), and the miraculous well at Nicopolis, formerly Emmaus, we see signs of local acquaintanceship. In v. 22, Julian is said to write to the patriarchs, and rulers, and people, asking for their prayers for himself and his empire; here is a distinct reference to the then existing patriarchate; so all the details of the attempted restoration betray a well-informed hand, as well as state the fact of direct communication with the witnesses of the phenomena. The biographies in vi. 32 are bound up with Southern Palestine, and particularly with Bethelia and Gerar. Similarities in vii. 28, of those more closely related to him, easily prove that he was near home. In viii. 13, Scythopolis is selected by the fugitive Egyptian monks, because its many palms afforded them their customary means of support,—a circumstance narrated by no one else. Nor are local hints wanting in the story of the finding of Zachariah’s body (ix. 17), with its legends. There is in one sense a disproportionate mention of Palestine, and designedly, not only from patriotic motives, but from a desire to vindicate its historic position in the development of Church history, and to rebuke the prevailing tendency of churchmen and historians to press it into the background. It is a curious juxtaposition, that the councils of Chalcedon should so soon after have vindicated the primacy of Jerusalem. There is also a better acquaintance with the facts and purposes of Jewish history, the relation of Judaism to Christianity (i. 1); the genesis of the Saracens, and their association with the covenant people (vi. 38); the regulations of the paschal season, especially in vii. 18; as well as a greater accuracy in the transliteration of names of places.

It was no inconsiderable journey from Gaza to his school, and from his school to Constantinople. The hints concerning Palestine, already mentioned, indicate personal observation. Beyond these we have suggestions that may look to his having been in Arabia and Cyprus, as, when he speaks (vii. 19) of knowing the custom in both places, to have a chorepiscopus at the head of a local church. So, too, in Alexandria, he was struck with the strange position of the bishop in not rising when the Gospels were read, something he had never known or heard of in other communities,—words which point to familiarity with that city. One would be glad to think of his having visited Tarsus, since he was acquainted with Cilix, a presbyter of that city, whom he consulted about the origin of the Apocalypse of Paul (vii. 19). That he knew Bithynia from the sight of it, we have already seen (ix. 5). He describes or alludes to architectural or topographic features of Alexandria, Antioch, and possibly Edessa, in a way that scarcely leaves a doubt of his having seen those cities; we may suppose that his clientele would compel journeys to and fro.

His work abounds with allusions to structures and regions of Constantinople, to say nothing of its vicinity. The general description of the building of the city by Constantine (ii. 3) already gives some of its principal features. Of the churches, he mentions the first of those dedicated to the Archangel St. Michael (ii. 3), at some remove from the city (Hestiae, Michaelium), and to be distinguished from a later structure on the opposite shore, and one in the city, erected to the same patron angel; 1046—the church of the Apostles, which became the place of sepulture for emperors and even bishops (ii. 34, iv. 21, viii. 10);—the church of Acacius the martyr (iv. 21), to which Macedonius endeavored to remove the coffin of Constantine;—the church of Sophia (iv. 26), begun by Constantine, and dedicated under Const-antius,—with which was connected a baptistery (viii. 21); this great edifice was burned in the tumult which arose after the second exile of Chrysostom was announced (viii. 22);—the house of prayer begun by Chrysostom and completed by Sisinnius, containing the tomb of the martyred Notaries; this was outside the walls, in a spot previously devoted to the execution of criminals, and an object of dread, because of frequenting ghosts (iv. 3);—the church of the Novatians, situated in a part of the city called Pelargum; this was taken down by them and transferred to a suburb named Sycae, hence the edifice was entitled Anastasia; it was restored to its original spot under Julian (iv. 20);—the little dwelling which was converted into a house of prayer for Gregory Nazianzen, and so became a church, also called Anastasia (vii. 5);—the church reared by Macedonius, which received the name of Paul, bishop of Constantinople, when Theodosius removed the confessor’s body to that building; it is described as a spacious and distinguished temple (vii. 10); when Theodosius the Great conveyed the head of John the Baptist to Hebdomas, in the suburbs, where was the seventh milestone, he erected on that site a spacious and magnificent temple, which became a center of imperial devotion and miraculous cures (vii. 21, 24, viii. 4, 14);—the church reared in honor of St. Stephen, the proto-martyr (viii. 24);—the church dedicated to the memory of St. Mocus the Martyr, where Dioscorus was buried (viii. 17);—the place where the body of Thrsus the Martyr reposed, and whither the relics of the forty soldiers were transferred (ix. 2); this was a temple, according to Procopius. 1047 In Chalcedon, he mentions the church of St. Eu-phemia, so glowingly described by Evagrius, and that of SS. Peter and Paul in the Oak (Ruffinum).

1046 Procopius de Ædificis, i. 3, 8.
1047 de Ædificis, i. 4.
While he speaks of the number of monks and nuns, in and about Constantinople (iv. 2, viii. 9), and alludes in a general way to their dwellings (iv. 20), he mentions no particular establishment except that founded by Marathonius, which stood in Sozomen’s time. He also refers to the Xenodochia, the Nosocomia, the Cherotrophia, and the Ptochotrophia (iv. 20, 27, viii. 9), but he does not specialize, not even concerning the group of institutions founded and endowed by Pulcheria (ix. 8). There were residences for the bishops and clergy, but these are only hinted at (vii. 14, viii. 14). The palaces and the forums are mentioned only in a general way, but the splendid council chamber (μέγιστος οἶκος τῆς συγκλήτου βουλῆς), which was burned with the Sophia, is described as south of that edifice. He refers to the Hippodrome in the third region, with a little description of its early form and place (vi. 39, viii. 21). Certain of the eight public baths are mentioned, the commodious thermae called after Zeuxippus (iii. 9) is set forth as a conspicuous and large structure, and the palace as adjoining it near the sea-side. This was in the second region. He speaks correctly of baths bearing the names of Anastasia and Carosa, daughters of Valens, standing in his own time (vi. 9). The baths of Constantius are characterized as very spacious when he tells us how the followers of John resorted thither for the paschal feast (viii. 21).

We have some brief notices of a few friends outside the earlier circles in Bethelia and Gaza. By the advice of some pious acquaintances, who were versed in the mysteries, he decided not to publish the Nicene symbol (i. 20). Among those who experienced relief at the Michaelium, was a fellow-advocate, Aquilinus; the story of his cure is told us from Sozomen’s own observation, and from the statements made by his colleague (ii. 3). He was on good terms with Cilix, the venerable presbyter of Tarsus (vii. 19). He had a friend or friends, who were cognizant of affairs under Theophilus (viii. 12); and similarly with some who had been intimate with Chrysostom (viii. 9). It is not unlikely that he knew Nicarete in her old age, a lady of Bithynia remarkable for her sacrificial life, whose memory is preserved by him alone (viii. 23). The facts which he brings to light concerning Pulcheria, and the submission of his work to the younger Theodosius, shows that he was received graciously by both.
Part II.—Sozomen as Author.

When seized with a desire to write history, Sozomen says: “I at first felt strongly inclined to trace the course of events from the very commencement, but on reflecting that similar records of the past, up to their own time, had been compiled by those wisest of men, Clemens and Hegesippus, successors of the Apostles, by Africanus, the historian, and by Eusebius, surnamed Pamphilus, a man intimately acquainted with Sacred Scriptures and the writings of the Greek poets and historians, I merely drew up an epitome in two books, of all that is recorded to have happened to the churches, from the ascension of Christ to the deposition of Licinius.” This work is unfortunately lost. It was not a simple chronicle, but an abbreviated account of these events; the abridgment was probably from the authors mentioned above. The habit of succinct narration is quite in his later vein. He doubtless commingled secular with the sacred detail. It may be suggestingly asked, whether his words in ix. 1 do not give a hint of another work: “But I willingly for awhile pass over the many separate manifestations of divine favor, that were granted to the sister of the emperor, as proofs that she was loved of God, lest anybody should blame me, for having set out to do other things, and yet had turned to the use of encomiums.” This sudden arrest could not be owing to an intended resumption of such matters at a later portion of the history; for the method was already regarded as irrelevant, and the very reason for citing no more in that vein; is it not likely that he at least purposed an encomium of Pulcheria?

The attempt of Hieronymus, Wolf, Lambech, and Fenzel to ascribe Hermias’ Διασυρμὸς τῶν ἔξω φιλοσόφων (Irrisio gentilium philosophorum) to Sozomen, because of identity of name, is now held by none. The work by which we know him, is the Ecclesiastical History in nine Books. When did he write it? In trying to determine the time of its production, let us look at the data suggested in his work.

(1) In the dedication, the delineation of the emperor’s culture and character discloses a man of fixity and repose; these qualities could not be ascribed to the time of his imperial majority, in his fifteenth year, nor to the time of his marriage (421); they are rather the features of settled experience; hence we would expect in general a period nearer the end of his reign, than one in the beginning or middle; certainly somewhere beyond his thirtieth year, and therefore beyond a.d. 438.

(2) Sozomen says that poets and authors, even those of prefectural dignity, as well as other subjects, celebrated the emperor. The usual literary incense was burned. Olympiodorus dedicated his history to him. Socrates was magniloquent; and more particularly did Cyrus, the friend of Eudocia, who attained the highest offices of the state from 439–441, write epigrams in praise of his monarch.\footnote{See his epigrams in \textit{Anth. Gr.}} This would make a date after 441.\footnote{Güldenpinning thinks there may be a suggestion of the fatal apple in Sozomen’s praise of his sovereign’s abstemiousness. I would like to agree, but cannot. \textit{Die Kirchengesch. des Theodoret von Kyrrhos}, pp. 12, 13.}

(3) In illustration of the practiced self-control of his sovereign, he narrates an incident of the royal journey in the summer heat, through Bithynia, to the fallen city of Heraclea, in Pontus,\footnote{Heraclea Pontica of the maps.} with the view of restoring it. This journey took place in June of a.d. 443.\footnote{Marcell. \textit{Am. Chron. s. d.}; \textit{Chron. Pasch. s. d.}; \textit{Novell. Theod.} xxiii. 5, 21.} This incident is introduced with \textit{πρώην}, which would place the writing quite definitely as not very soon after June 443.

(4) The reign of Theodosius is described as above all others bloodless and pure from slaughter. This could only be moderately just, before the judicial murders connected with the jealous fits of Theodosius, from 442 on, and the united movement of outlying nations upon the East and West, as projected by the political sagacity of Attila.

(5) The professed terminus of his history is the seventeenth consulate of Theodosius: this was the year 439; hence the whole work was written after that time.

(6) The prayer at the conclusion of the proëmium may have in it a point of light; he hopes that through the favor of Christ, the imperium may be transmitted to Theodosius’ sons and grandsons. The only child born to Eudocia was a daughter, Eudoxia, who was married to Valentinian III. It was because of the lack of succession, that Pulcheria married General Marcianus. Eudocia withdrew from the court somewhere between 441–443, but that would not have had to impede the succession, had Theodosius chosen to be divorced; and this prayer rather intimates the desirability of another marriage. This, therefore, must have been written before the hope of sons was removed; certainly, therefore, before the closing years of the emperor’s reign.

(7) In Book ix, Pulcheria’s inclination to virginity is spoken of as expressed in the most solemn way, and with the consecrated gift of a table to signalize it. There is no hint in the work of the marriage with Marcian, suggested by Theodosius on his death-bed, and carried out after his demise. This would indicate that the work was completed before 450.

(8) In ix. 1, he affirms: “That new heresies have not prevailed in our times, we shall find to be due especially to her, as we shall subsequently see.” The heresies are those connected with Nestorianism, 428–444, and possibly the return of the Johannists to full communion by the triumphal restoration of Chrysostom’s remains in 438; these were to fall within the limits of his work. The Eutychian heresy in its first stage was hostile to Pulcheria’s views, while its overthrow was not effected until a year after the death of Theodosius. The close of the Nestorian controversy through the compromise was in 444, and that date would suit well with the fact of mastering the heresy at the very time he was writing this account of Pulcheria.

(9) In ix. 2, he recounts the transfer of the forty martyrs, after a public festival had been appropriately celebrated with fitting honor and pomp, with psalms, “at which I myself was present; and others who were present can also bear testimony that these things were done in the way described, for almost all of them still survive. And the event occurred much later, when Proclus governed the church of Constantinople.” Proclus was elected 434, and continued in office until his death in 447. This transfer must have taken place before 439, the proposed terminus of the history, and very likely a little while after the accession of this long-tried candidate. The time of the writing was at some considerable remove from the event itself, because of his appeal to the survivors as witnesses to the truth of his portrayal, and yet not so far, but that the most of the participants and spectators could still be appealed to. This would correspond very well with the date connected with 443, suggested by the incident in Bithynia, if we allow some interval between the writing of the dedication and Book ix.

(10) In ix. 6, the overthrow of Uldis, 406, is narrated. The settlement of the conquered Sciri as slaves and colonists is enlarged upon. Sozomen himself saw these imperial farmers at their tilling in Bithynia. This may connect itself, possibly, as to the time of the year, and place, with the emperor’s progress to Heraclea Pontica. There is evidently an interval between the capture of the Sciri, and their settled work as colonists, when Sozomen visited that region, and between that visit and the writing of the fact. If it corresponded with the imperial progress, it would of course be 443. Taking all these points together, it would seem that the work was begun about the latter part of 443; and that the dedication was written first, because that states the plan of the whole work, including the ninth book, whose record does not meet the intention, there expressed; moreover, some of the events in Book ix. indicate a considerable interval between the fact and the account of it. When he finished what he wrote, it is not so easy to tell; it would certainly take him a few years, and the end was reached before any considerable outbreak of the Eutychian heresy; therefore probably in 447, or 448, for the reason that Pulcheria did not conquer that heresy until after her marriage with Marcian; this date is supported by the fact that the breaking of her vow was unknown to the writer of ix. 1, 3; also because the Emperor Theodosius was still alive. The work was the fruit and employment of old age; the style is certainly that of an elderly man, and not that of youth or early maturity.

What were the main objects he had in view in his history?

1. He desired to present the truth with regard to the facts and their results. In i. 1, he affirms: “I will readily transcribe fully from any work that may tend to the elucidation of truth.” “Still, as it is requisite, in order to maintain historical accuracy, to pay the strictest attention to the means of eliciting truth, I felt myself bound to examine all writings of this class, according to my ability.” This is his professed purpose; however subjective or churchly his view of truth may be, we must give him the credit for the intention. In i. 1, he appeals to his readers in this wise: “Let not an impertinent or malignant spirit be imputed to me, for having dwelt upon the disputes of ecclesiastics among themselves, concerning the primacy and pre-eminence of their own heresy. In the first place, as I have already said, a historian ought to regard everything as secondary in importance to truth.” And we shall see evidences of his fairness.

2. His history is designed to be a demonstration of Christianity as from God. The vastness of the change wrought by God in the introduction and success of Christianity and the insignificant and mythical themes upon which literature had been wont to exercise itself, prompted him, with his confessed inefficiency, to undertake this line of evidence, in the conviction that God would help his believing incapacity. Hence his work is a record of immediate divine interventions, and extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit; it abounds in visions, miracles, and prophecy. The celestial agents visibly direct affairs; the flow of vaticination does not cease; the power to reverse the expected order of events is not suspended. Thus, as to epiphanies of divine, angelic, or sainted beings: In i. 3, is recounted the appearance of the cross unto Constantine; and in the night during sleep, the manifestation of Christ with a cross, and the instructions given to the emperor. In ii. 1, we have a series of divine interpositions to discover the true cross, and Sozomen remarks in refutation of one explanation, “I do not think that human information is requisite, when God thinks it best to make manifest the same.” In ii. 3, the old name, Hestia, is changed to Michaelium, because of the reported appearance of the archangel there. The monks are favored with such direct counselors; Pachomius obeys an angel, who directs him to assemble young men for instruction; “he was frequently admitted to intercourse with the holy angels.” Apollonius yielded to direct divine advice, and withdrew from the desert to a populous region. The cross reappeared in the days of Constantius (iv. 5); Julian’s life is filled with portents (v. 1, 20, 22; vi. 2). A curious bit of speculation occurs in vi. 2; in interpreting Julian’s alleged use of his blood, he says: “I know not whether the approach of death, as is wont to be the case, when the soul is in the act of being separated from the body, and when it is enabled to behold diviner spectacles than is allotted to men, that Julian might then have beheld Christ. Few allusions have been made to this subject; and yet I dare not reject this hypothesis as absolutely false, for God often suffers still more improbable and astonishing events to take place, in order to prove that the religion named after Christ is not sustained by human energy.” Of Theodore’s confession (v. 20) he remarks: “It is said that he was afterwards asked whether he had been sensible of any pain on the rack; and that he replied he had not been entirely free from suffering, but had his pain assuaged by the attentions of a young man who had stood by him, and had wiped off the perspiration with the finest linen cloth, and supplied him with coolest water, by which he eased the inflammation and refreshed his labors. I am convinced that no man, whatever magnanimity he may possess, is capable without the special assistance of divine Power, of manifesting such entire indifference about the body.” In vi. 29, Piammon sees an angel standing near the holy table, and writing down in a book the names of the monks who were present, while he erased the names of those who were absent. Mark had the elements of the holy table administered to him by an angel (vii. 29). Malachion, while journeying with his brothers, was made invisible, and then reappeared, and pursued his way with them (vi. 32). So the portent at Hebdomas was a sign of divine favor to Theodosius the Great (vii. 24); the heavenly hosts were the real overthrowers of Gaïnas (viii. 4); Basiliscus the martyr appears to Chrysostom (viii. 28). Pulcheria’s celestial directors helps her to find the forty martyrs (ix. 2). The appearance of Zechariah to the serf pointed out the way to the discovery of the prophet’s remains (ix. 17). The demoniacal agencies are equally operant, some of which are alluded to in the above passages, but readily yield to prayer and exorcism, if not immediately overthrown by God.

For a demonstration of the same truth, miracles are wrought to effect physical cures, mental troubles, threatened dangers, casting out of demons, silencing philosophers and wordy ecclesiastics, vindicating orthodoxy, reading the thoughts of hypocrites defeating enemies, sanctifying the sacraments’ raising the dead; and they are the mighty agents for converting philosophers, Jews, pagans, and heretics. They are wrought by the hands of the eminently excellent only; the gift is associated with a high measure of grace; for example the bishops Paphnutius (i. 10) and Spyridion (i. 11) are so endowed; Alexander of Constantinople (i. 14), Eusebius of Emesa (iii. 6), Martin of Tours (iii. 14), Arsacius of Nicomedia (iv. 16), Donatus (vii. 26), Gregory of Neocaesarea (vii. 26), Theotimus of Scythia (vii. 26), Epiphanius of Salamis (vii. 27). In like manner, the monks Antony (i. 13), Amun (i. 14), Eutychianus (i. 14), Macarius the Egyptian, Apollonius, Hilarion, Julian (iii. 14), John, Copres, Helles, Apelles, Eulogius (vi. 28); Apollos, John of Diolchus, Benjamin and Pior (vi. 29). The united prayer of a congregation could effect them (vii. 5). The statue of Christ at Paneas, the fountain at Emmaus, the tree at Hermopolis (v. 21), were all miraculous centers. The spot where the Archangel Michael appeared (ii. 3), the places where the head of John the Baptist reposed (vii. 21), the tombs of monks, martyrs, and bishops,—as of Hilarion (iii. 14), Martyrius and Marcianus (iv. 3), Epiphanius (vii. 27),—were replete with restorative virtues. Sozomen had such a miracle wrought upon himself; he believed thoroughly in an uninterrupted stream of charismata; he deemed it necessary for the maintenance of the faith. He was no more credulous than Socrates, or Theodoret, or Evagrius, or Theodore. To criticise him for his belief in this respect is to forget the Christian consciousness of the age. And the historic school which seeks to eliminate the volume of testimony, in the assumption that miracles do not fall within the province of history, ignores the first law of that science, which requires the reproduction of all facts, in time and place, whatever they may be, that are affiliated with the evolution of the human will; that other older school which dismisses all ecclesiastical miracles on the \textit{a priori} assumption that these energies ceased at a time co-ordinate with the death of the Apostles, or at a point not far removed from their age, violates the spirit of induction. These miracles must be tested by evidence, and the laws of supernatural energy, and in no other way. To Sozomen and all his contemporaries the miracle appeared essential both to the proof of the divine origin of Christianity, and to offset and withstand the influence of the theurgic arts of the philosophers, such as Julianus and many of the Neoplatonists. As he remarks concerning the reply made by Alexander, bishop of Constantinople, when he silenced the philosopher by the simple authority of Christ, “It is then right to consider whether it is a greater miracle, that a man, and he a philosopher, should so easily be silenced by a word, or that a stone wall should be cleft by the power of a word, which miracle I have heard some attribute with pride to Julian, surnamed the Chaldean” (i. 18). The gift of prophecy is also represented as sustained throughout this period, and with the same logical aims in view. The monks are especially thus endowed: Antony (i. 13, vi. 5, 6), the two Macarii, Pachomius (iii. 14), Arsacius (iv. 16), John (vi. 28, vii. 22, vii. 28), Theon (vi. 28), Isaac (vi. 40); so the bishops Athanasius (iv. 10), Chrysostom and Epiphanius, rather abusively (vii. 15); so royal persons, such as the wife of Valens, passively (vi. 16), Pulcheria, directly and passively (ix. 3). The perpetuation of this charism was deemed inherently necessary for the sake of historical continuity, and to prove as well that the faith he loved had been established by God; equally was it requisite as a holy parallel whereby to gainsay the mantic spirit of Paganism; as is best illustrated in the silencing of the oracle at Daphne (v. 19), and by his reflections upon the philosopher’s tripod devised for finding the successor of Valens (vi. 35). Nor are Socrates, Theodoret, Evagrius, and others any more moderate than Sozomen in this respect.

3. Another aim of his history is to prove that Providence or the divine government is promoting the Christian faith directly. The universal order must be interpreting itself distinctly through the Church. The Father must be vindicating the good and punishing the wicked, according to the orthodox category. Sozomen’s history is as insistent in this regard as Eliphaz and his philosophic confreres. One must be able to decide infallibly in each case as to cause and effect; it is a very realistic pragmatism, and is not the exclusive property of Sozomen; it is a characteristic of all these Church historians.

There is properly enough a recognition of God in history; the sovereign will and the human will are jointly working out the world’s order, but it is the attempt to trace the cause and effect immediately and in each case, which is so repulsive and absurd. Some illustrations will show how he brings out this view. In i. 7 the comment made on Constantine’s overthrow of Licinius: “From many facts it has often appeared to me that the teaching of the Christians is supported, and its advancement secured, by the Providence of God, and not the least from what then occurred; for at the very moment that Licinius was about to persecute all the churches under him, the war in Bithynia broke out, which ended in a war between him and Constantine, and in which Constantine was so strengthened by Divine assistance, that he was victorious over his enemies by land and by sea.” More of detail comes out in the life of Athanasius. Thus in ii. 17, of his election he says: “Alexander, bishop of Alexandria, when about to depart this life, left Athanasius as his successor, in accordance, I am convinced, with the Divine will, directing the vote upon him.” And again: “He fled to escape the honor, but he was discovered in his place of concealment by the help of God, who had forecast by Divine manifestations to his blessed predecessors, that the succession was to devolve upon him.” His whole career is so viewed in v. 6. There is a large discussion of this subject in vi. 35, where he argues against the plan of pagan philosophers to foretell the future of the empire: “The philosophers, on the other hand, acted as if the deposition and restoration of emperors had depended solely on them; for if the imperial succession was to be considered dependent on the arrangement of the stars, what was requisite but to await the accession of the future emperor, whoever he might be? Or, if the succession was regarded as dependent on the will of God, what right had man to meddle? For it is not the function of human foreknowledge or zeal to understand God’s thought; nor if it were right, would it be well for men, even if they be the wisest of all, to think that they can plan better than God.” He persists in tracing a connection between God and every event in favor of mechanical goodness or orthodoxy. He follows many opponents, whether heretical or pagan, with the Divine wrath; all these historians do this,—Philostorgius, as well as Evagrius. Sozomen is not nearly so bitter or uncharitable as either of these. He is most atrabilious in the case of Julian, under whom his own family had suffered. As a consequence of this arbitrary pious pragmatism, the most deplorable incompetents are treated as the express favorites of heaven, while the larger-minded pagan or Arian is loaded with contempt. Under this law, too, the evil sides of the orthodox, and the excellences of the pagan, or Arians, are suppressed. The defeats of the Nicene emperors are not mentioned; the victories of the Anti-Nicene are passed by or belittled, while their humiliations are evidence of the impending anger of heaven. In the survey of Helena’s life (ii. 2) he says: “It seems to me that so many holy actions demanded a recompense, and indeed even in this life she was raised to the summit of magnificence.” As to Constantine, in ii. 34 he dares say: “He was more successful than any other sovereign in all his undertakings; for he formed no design, I am convinced, without God.” When Bishop Felix of Rome died, and Liberius became sole occupant of the see, he construes the fact thus: “This event was no doubt ordained by God, that the seat of Peter might not be dishonored by the occupancy of two bishops; for such an arrangement is a sign of discord, and is foreign to ecclesiastical law” (iv. 15). In all the features of Julian’s life, God is visiting him with his unappeasable anger (vi. 35, v. 21, 22, vi. 1, 2). The election of Nectarius, though it was in violation of ecclesiastical order and an accumulation of ignorant blunders, did not take place without the interposition of Divine strength (vii. 8). Theodosius is portrayed as the prime delight of heaven; thus his simple reliance upon God wins him a hopeless battle with Eugenius (vii. 24). It is so with the whole Theodosian line (viii. 1, ix. 1). Pulcheria has Divine love manifested to her in manifold ways, as does her brother, Theodosius the Younger (ix. 1, 3, 16). Even Alaric is driven by an inexplicable impulse to rebuke the luxury, debauchery, and injustice of the Romans (ix. 6). In ix. 1, he says of his own sovereign: “It appears to me that it was the design of God to show by the events of this period, that piety alone suffices for the salvation of princes; and that without piety, armies, a powerful empire, and every other resource, are of no avail. The Divine power, which is the guardian of the universe, foresaw that the emperor would be distinguished by his piety, and determined that Pulcheria, his sister, should be the protector of him and of the government.” In ix. 16, he explains his secular details in the paragraph: “This is not the proper place to enter into details concerning the deaths of the tyrants; but I considered it necessary to allude to the circumstance in order to show, that to insure the stability of imperial power, it is sufficient for an emperor to serve God with reverence, which was the course pursued by Honorius.” While of his patron he says: “It seems as if God openly manifested His favor towards the present emperor, not only by disposing of warlike affairs in an unexpected way, but also by revealing the sacred bodies of many persons who were of old most distinguished for piety.” The whole history is full of this sort of philosophy of its personages. Similarly all natural calamities and the irruption of barbarians are ethically explained, which is correct enough as a general principle; but these phenomena are punitive or vindicatory of particular deeds. Constantius’ course toward Athanasius was heralded by an invasion of the Franks, and by an earthquake in the East (iii. 6). Of Julian he says: “It is, however, very obvious that throughout the reign of this emperor, God gave manifest tokens of His displeasure and permitted many calamities to befall several of the provinces of the Roman Empire. He visited the earth with such fearful earthquakes, that the buildings were shaken, and no more safety could be found within houses than in the open air.” Then follow the inundations of the Nile; the drought and the famine in the empire, and on their heels the pestilences (vi. 2). Under Valens we read: “In the meantime although hail-storms of extraordinary magnitude fell in various places, and although many cities, particularly Nicæa in Bithynia, were shaken by earthquakes, yet Valens the emperor and Eudoxius the bishop paused not in their career, but continued to persecute all Christians who differed from them in opinion” (vi. 10). He does not make the same reflection upon Constantius, when the earthquake at Nicomedia intercepted the meeting of a council (iv. 16); Gaïnas’ attempted revolution is “pre-announced by the appearance of a comet directly over the city; this comet was of extraordinary magnitude, larger, it is said, than any that had previously been seen” (viii. 3). After Chrysostom’s exile, “hailstones of extraordinary magnitude fell at Constantinople and in the suburbs of the city. Four days afterwards, the wife of the emperor died. These occurrences were regarded by many as indications of Divine wrath, on account of the persecutions that had been carried on against John” (viii. 27).
But the earthquakes and famines and invasions that happened under Theodosius the Great and Theodosius Junior are not mentioned directly. By such unfair pragmatism Sozomen, as all his fellow-historians, sought to answer the allegations, now more directly affirmed, in the period of barbarian irruption, that the calamities were due to the desertion of the gods. Sulpicius Severus, Augustine, and Orosius built up a somewhat better apology.

4. Another object he kept before him, we will let him state in his own words: “The doctrine of the Catholic Church is shown to be especially the most genuine, since it has been tested frequently by the plots of opposing thinkers; yet, the disposal of the lot being of God, the Catholic Church has maintained its own ascendancy, has re-assumed its own power, and has led all the churches and the people to the reception of its own truth” (i. 1). Catholicity and Orthodoxy, as defined at Nicaea, are synonymous. The creed of the fathers is final. The Church which spoke in 325 and 381 is the historic and Catholic Church, and the Theodosian line is the Divinely appointed instrument for laying its foundations immovably, the others having failed. Church and State are to be indissolubly wedded. This faith is made mechanically the test of goodness and badness, and this expresses his personal belief.

He speaks of the Scriptures with uniform reverence, and holds to the θεωρία as the method of interpretation, as we see in v. 22, where he says of the Jews: “They were only acquainted with the mere letter of Scripture, and could not, like the Christians and a few of the wisest among the Hebrews, discover the hidden meaning (πρὸς θεωρίαν)”; yet he speaks with respect (viii. 2) of Chrysostom’s way of expounding the sacred records and of his “teacher Diodorus’ method, employed in the many books of that bishop,” in which he explained the significance of the sacred words and avoided allegory (θεωρία). But when bishops and monks are declared to be skilled in the Scriptures, it is in this mystical sense. His own grandfather was a solver of the amphibolies of the Word, doubtless by this convenient key (v. 5).

The dogmatic standpoint, as we have seen, was traditionalism, toward which the Church gravitated under the dictation of the councils, the influence of bishops like Athanasius, the almost uniform ictus of the Roman see, Ambrose, the Gregories, Basil the Great, Ephraim, Eusebius, and Epiphanius, the majority of monks, and finally the whole force of the State. He opposes all shades of Arianism, as also Apolinarianism; had he completed his work, from what he says of Pulcheria’s conquest over heresies, he would have opposed the Nestorian views of the Theotokos. But of Donatism and Cyprianism he has not a word. Of the anthropological struggles of the West there is not a syllable. Here is the place, also, to consider his attitude toward heresies. Sozomen does not assail any phase of Arianism with the intemperate epithets which Eusebius employed to condemn the earlier innovators, or such as abound in Theodoret and Evagrius and later historians. Indeed, he sometimes calls them Christians and members of the Catholic Church. His treatment of the Novatians, while a little offish, is yet generous as compared with other writers, except Socrates, from whom he obtains almost all their history; he devotes much space; he is generally courteous in tone; and when he speaks of the proposed union (iv. 2) between the Catholic Church and that body of believers, he omits the cause of the failure; viz., the reluctance of some legalistic Novatians to acquiesce,—a point which Socrates does not fail to expose. He mentions Montanism (Phrygianism) several times, but with no new facts, save that they were numerous in Phrygia in his day, and had peculiar Paschal usages (i. 6, ii. 18, 32, vii. 18, 19). Of the Gnostic sects, he alludes to the Valentinians only, whose conventicles were repressed by an edict of Constantius (ii. 32). The Manicheans are mentioned only as they are one of the three sects excepted from Gratian’s law of toleration (vii. 1). Of the Pricillianists, whose attempt at a world religion falls so wholly within his time, he says nothing. The Quartodecimarians are still numerous and tenacious (vii. 18). He has a bare allusion to the Encratites (v. 11). Of the Origenistic controversy, he has no more to say than he is compelled to, in order to state correctly the conflict between Theophilus and Chrysostom. Over against the Origenists he places the Anthropomorphists (viii. 12). Of Lucifer’s separatism, he gives only the rise (iii. 15). With all his emphatic adherence to the current orthodoxy, he must be regarded as the most charitable of historians next to Socrates. Mention has already been made of his kindly disposition toward the Novatians. When writing fully and favorably, as was his duty, about Aëtius (iii. 15), he is constrained to make an apology: “Let it not be accounted strange if I have bestowed commendations upon the leaders or enthusiasts of the above-mentioned heresies. I admire their eloquence and their impressiveness in discourse: I leave their doctrines to be judged by those whose prerogative it is.”

On the one hand, we find him insisting on the right of private judgment, as when he discusses the overruling Providence in Julian’s life, and especially on the infatuation which led the emperor to Persia in spite of Sallust (vi. 1): “This observation, however, is only inserted lest I should be blamed for omitting it. I leave every one to form his own opinion.” So, after discussing the use of penance, he remarks in the following chapter (vii. 17): “Such subjects as the above, however, are best left to the decision of individual judgment.” He would also allow latitude in ceremonials (vii. 19), as we shall see. On the other hand, he dreads the progressive and unsettling outcome of the private judgment in exercise. He expresses this fear in iv. 27: “The spirit of innovation is self-laudatory; hence it advanced farther and farther, and crept along to greater novelties. With increasing self-conceit, and in scorn of the fathers, it enacted laws of its own. Nor does it honor the doctrine of the ancients concerning God, but is always excogitating strange dogmas and restlessly adds novelty to novelty, as the events now show.”

Of the threatening strategies of free thought in his own day, he devoutly exclaimed: “That new heresies have not prevailed in our times, we shall find to be due especially to her” (Pulcheria) (ix. 1). Consequently he deprecates the deleterious influence of polemics. On the accession of Jovian, he says: “The presidents of the churches now resumed the agitation... of doctrinal questions and discussions. They had remained quiet during the reign of Julian, when Christianity itself was endangered, and had unanimously offered up their supplications for the mercy of God. It is thus that men, when attacked by foreign enemies, remain in accord among themselves; but when external troubles are removed, then internal dissensions creep in” (vi. 4 and in vi. 25).

“Thus do the private animosities of the clergy from time to time greatly injure the Church and divide religion into many heresies! And this is a proof; for had George, like Theodotus, received Apolinarius, on his repentance, into communion, I believe that we should never have heard of the heresy that bears his name. Men are prone, when loaded with opprobrium and contempt, to resort to rivalries and innovations; whereas, when treated with justice, they become moderate and remain in the same position.” More emphatic still is his protest in vi. 26: “Those varying dogmas are the source of innumerable troubles to religion, and many are deterred from embracing Christianity by the diversity of opinion which prevails in matters of doctrine.” In the beginning of this same chapter, in speaking of the Eunomians, he delineates them thus: “They do not applaud a good course of life or manner of conduct, or mercy towards the needy, unless exhibited by persons of their own sect, so much as skill in disputation and the power of triumphing in debates.” This is a great blow at the sectores cymini, and at pride in polemics; the whole tone is much more liberal than that of the ecclesiastic Theodoret, or even the lawyer Evagrius. Sozomen, like Socrates, represents a generous feeling current among the laymen of Constantinople in court and among the trades and professions. The attitude of the Catholic Church with regard to baptism he sets forth adequately as trivial, and argues against the Eunomian innovation of one baptism and a change in the formula (vi. 21): “But whether it was Eunomius or any other person who first made these innovations upon the tradition of baptism, it seems to me that such innovators, whoever they may have been, were alone in danger, according to their own representation, of quitting this life without having received Divine baptism.” The argument here is an unusually long one; with his generation he held to the magical efficacy of the rite. The theory of the sacraments as mysteries or arcane, was one which controlled him throughout, and even limited his fidelity as a historian. Thus in i. 20: “I thought it necessary to reproduce the very document (the Nicene Creed) concerning these matters, as an example of the truth, in order that posterity might possess in a fixed and clear form, the symbol of that faith which proved pacifying at the time; but since some pious friends who understood such matters, recommended that these truths ought to be spoken of and heard by the initiated and their initiators only, I agreed with their counsel: for it is not unlikely that some of the uninitiated may read this book: while I have concealed such of the prohibited material as I ought to keep silent about, I have not altogether left the reader ignorant of the opinions held by the Synod.” Nor will he repeat the symbol as subjoined to the letter of the council of Antioch (vi. 4); and when the Macedonian commission to Liberius make their statement, and the text is given to show their entire acceptance of the Nicene view, Sozomen will not reproduce it. Again in vi. 29, Mark was a monk of “such eminent piety, that Macarius himself, the presbyter of Celliae, declared that he had never given to him what priests present to the initiated at the holy table; but that an angel, administering it to him, whose hand up to the forearm, he declared himself to have seen.” In viii. 5, in giving the account of a marvelous judgment wrought on a Macedonian wife, who pretended to be a convert to the Nicene views, and thus frequented the orthodox ceremony of the Supper, he remarks, “At the time of the celebration of the mysteries (the initiated will understand what I mean), this woman kept what was given her, and held down her head as if engaged in prayer.” In reciting the disturbances at the Easter celebration over the decree of exile against Chrysostom (viii. 21), he says: “They were charged with the commission of such disorderly acts as can be readily conceived by those who have been admitted to the mysteries, but which I consider it requisite to pass over in silence, lest my work should fall into the hands of the uninitiated.” Here we have a glimpse of the scope of the arcane as well as the weakness of the historian in submitting to the advice of narrow friends; no other historian felt bound to restrict himself in such matters. Sozomen here joined the most extreme sacramentarians of his day. On the weighty matter of discipline, he believes with the Catholic Church in receiving back the penitent into the Church, against Novatian and Donatistic practices. He expresses his opinion at some length, though not so fully as Socrates, in the chapter which relates to the abolition of the penitential presbyter (vii. 16): “Impeccability is a Divine attribute, and belongs not to human nature; therefore God has decreed that pardon should be extended to the penitent even after many transgressions. As in supplicating for pardon, it is requisite to confess the sin, it seems probable that the priests, from the beginning, considered it irksome to make this confession in public, before the whole assembly of the people. They appointed a presbyter of the utmost sanctity and the most undoubted prudence, to act on those occasions: the penitents went to him and confessed their transgressions; and it was his office to indicate the kind of penance adapted to each sin, and then when satisfaction had been made, to pronounce absolution.” He deplores the abolition of the office as the occasion of laxity. The deterrent force of public confession was now lost, and that to the danger of Christian conduct. He sympathizes also with that form of martyrdom which wantonly and ruthlessly assails paganism and is slain in the attempt. The system of relic-worship, so characteristic of any decline of opportunity for heroic action, had set in overwhelmingly, and he believed in it vigorously. Our own age reproduces the same tendency not only in religious, but in secular forms, and among Protestants as well. Thus he commemorates: of Old Testament prophets, Micah and Habakkuk (vii. 29), Zechariah (ix. 17); of the preparatory period, the head of John the Baptist (vii. 21); of the Apostolic Church, St. Stephen (vii. 29, ix. 16); of the martyrs, Babylas (v. 19), Forty Soldiers (ix. 2); of the monks, Hilarion (iii. 14), the four brothers (vii. 9). The most prominent of secondary relics is the cross with its inscriptions and nails (ii. 1). The discovery of these is mainly through prayer and heavenly signs; their possession is an object of imperial ambition; the removal and transportation of them are effected with most gorgeous and reverent pomp; and the sacred treasures become the agents of endless miracles.

Sozomen, like Socrates and Chrysostom, believes in freedom as to old-time ceremonials. He has a chapter on the varieties of religious usage (vii. 19); and the record is largely the result of his own inquiry. He remarks in conclusion: “Many other customs are still to be observed in cities and villages; and those who have been brought up in their observance would, from respect to the great men who instituted and perpetuated these customs, consider it wrong to abolish them. Similar motives must be attributed to those who observe different practices in the celebration of the fast, which has led us into this long digression.” From his point of view, uniformity may not encroach upon individualism beyond a certain point. He is certainly quietly and with dignity attacking a party of narrow uniformitarians, who are already pressing for a harmony of all ceremonials in Christendom.

Another feature of the Catholic system that he traces carefully, is the relation between Church and Empire. He devotes more attention to this aspect of polity than to its internal development; this latter he touches upon incidentally, and not at all carefully. We have seen how painstakingly he cites the imperial edicts with regard to the Church. The state laws, which at first expressed conciliar decisions, were followed by independent imperial enactments. These, indeed, are at first sporadic, but become more and more the rule. The personal views of Sozomen appear in the narrative, but they are fluctuating. He acquiesces in the imperial convocation of councils, as do all his cotemporaries. On the death of Constantine, in commenting upon the hereafter fixed Christian character of the state, he says: “The sacerdotal dignity is not only equal in honor to imperial power, but in sacred places even takes the ascendency” (ii. 34). With the plan of producing uniformity of religion in the empire, he seems to sympathize (iv. 11). He is indignant at Julian’s indifference to the murder of Zeno by the inhabitants of Gaza, and at the deprivations of the Christians, when all their political and personal rights were taken from them (v. 9). To the charge of Libanius, that the man who aimed the dart at Julian was a Christian, and belonged to the race of habitual transgressors of the law, Sozomen replies by defending the regicide: “In the documents above quoted, Libanius clearly states that the emperor fell by the hand of a Christian; and this probably was the truth. It is not unlikely that some of the soldiers who then served in the Roman army might have conceived the idea, since Greeks and all men until this day have praised tyrannicides, for exposing themselves to death in the cause of liberty, and spiritedly standing by their country, their families, and their friends. Still less is he deserving of blame, who for the sake of God and of religion, performed so bold a deed” (vi. 2). This is the highest stand that a lawyer could take in support of individualism. In his view of the exalted prerogatives of the Church, the reply of Valentinian to the bishops, who desired to hold a council, would seem happy. “I am but one of the laity, and have, therefore, no right to interfere in these transactions; let the priests, to whom such matters appertain, assemble where they please” (vi. 7). Theodosius’ compulsory course with regard to paganism and orthodoxy, and the choice of Nectarius, are approved. On the other hand, he selected two instances out of many from the life of Ambrose, for the purpose of illustrating how, in God’s behalf, that bishop conducted himself towards those in power (vii. 25).

Throughout we find him recognizing the practical headship of Rome; he expresses himself unconsciously in vi. 22, “The question having been thus decided by the Roman Church, peace was restored and the inquiry ended.” This ignores the action of the Synod of Alexandria and that of Constantinople itself, for both had decreed the consubstantiality of the Holy Spirit and opposed the christology of Apollinarius, prior to the action of the Roman Synod. The power delegated to Julius by the council of Sardica (iii. 8), the conflict between the East and the West conducted in mutually arrogant epistles (iii. 10), the subordination of new to old Rome (vii. 9), show the drift toward concentration. Sozomen does not seem to understand the rival movements of Alexandria under Athanasius and Theophilus; nor the Eastern imperial attempts to elevate Constantinople to the supremacy, nor the mutterings of Antiochian jealousy.

The Church’s servility toward the orthodox rulers is fairly expressed, and yet with comparative moderation, by Sozomen. He is an apologist for Constantine, and reflects, as do all the historians, and especially Evagrius in his criticism of Zosimus, the adulations and subterfuges of Eusebius. The religious fluctuation of that emperor is masked; his crimes are suppressed; he is made to appear orthodox, even when at his worst Eusebian stage. No wonder that Philostorgius charged the Homoöusians with worshiping Constantine as a god in the ceremonies connected with his image! Constantius, a vacillating, cruel, incompetent, is also apologized for, but to the damage of his intelligence. Julian, for his years in some respects, one of the most promising and earnest rulers of ancient times, is loaded with obloquy, his highest motives and ideals ridiculed, his victories belittled, his death savagely exulted in. Jovian’s and Valentinian’s toleration are not understood, but their personal orthodoxy is in so far praised. Valens is looked at through the eyes of his two fierce Cappadocian assailants. His excellences are entirely ignored; the most inconsequent views are imputed to him while attempting to glorify Basil; in the sad story of the emperor’s dying son, that bishop appears as a brute in his treatment of the agonized father. The stories of heroism attributed to the orthodox are only examples of insufferable insolence; one must marvel at the patience of Valens, if there be any truth in them. Gratian, that beau-ideal of Western orthodoxy, was really a nose of wax in the hands of Ambrose; he was esteemed more moderately by the East, and that rather for having called Theodosius to a share in the throne, than for any quality in himself; but his utter moral collapse, after the magnificent promise of his youth, is wholly veiled from sight. Theodosius the Great is glorified, not for his superior statecraft and generalship, but for his efforts to suppress paganism and heresy. The charges against his private life such as Eunapius and Zosimus suggest, are not hinted at. He is a man of prayer and visions, a relic-worshiper, and a persecutor of pagans and Arians. Great as he certainly was, his distinguishing and conspicuous qualities are passed by. His pitiful children, Arcadius and Honorius, the sorriest quidnuncs of those stormy times, are heroes of piety. Pulcheria, excellent as she was, was not worthy of the excessive flattery poured out upon her; while Anthemius, Troilus, Valerianus, and other noble figures of the day are passed by. The younger Theodosius, with his good training and generally fair endeavor, is delineated in the dedication as the consummate man of all time, while he is a very third-rate soul at best. The eulogies by Socrates (vii. 22 and 42) are just as fulsome. This was the grave sin of the State Church; the Arian State Church did the same for Constantius and Valens; more and more as history reveals the truth concerning many of those idols, does the revulsion increase against a union of two functions which could so degrade both.

Sozomen as Author.

The relation of Church and State involves the question of persecution. It is not the history of the endeavor to enforce uniformity, with which we shall concern ourselves, but rather the views Sozomen sets forth, as to the policy of repression. The laws of Constantine suppressing heretics did not affect the Novatians (ii. 32), concerning which justice, he remarks: “The emperor, I believe, willingly relaxed the rigor of the enactment in their favor, for he only desired to strike terror into the minds of his subjects, and had no intention of persecuting them.” The punishments inflicted in Constantius’ time on the orthodox in Constantinople, both by Macedonius (iv. 23) and Eudoxius (iv. 26), call forth this reflection: “For, if the persecution did not occasion such tortures to the body as preceding ones, it appeared more grievous to all who reflected aright, on account of its disgraceful nature, for both the persecutors and the persecuted belonged to the Church; and the one was all the more disgraceful in that men of the same religion treated their fellows with a degree of cruelty which the ecclesiastical laws prohibit to be manifested towards enemies and strangers.” He spares himself the pain of registering all who were ejected from their sees (iv. 27), for no province was without its list of sufferers. The cruelties inflicted by George on pagan and orthodox, furnish a mournful narrative (iv. 30). On the elevation of Julian, a great dread fell upon the Christian world, intensified by the portents which befell him. The series of edicts soon wrought mutual dissension in the Christian ranks, as well as suffering from without. But while Sozomen attributes the refinements of cruelty to Julian, and lays the miseries of the saints at his door as parts of a subtle plan, he nevertheless cannot conceal from himself the absence of direct interference on the part of the State; these calamities were the results of a restoration of the old religion to its ancient union with the State; it was an imperial act; and he is compelled to confess the seeming magnanimity of Julian in certain cases, but even then maligns his motives. The imperial clemency did not arise from any feeling of compassion, but because persecution would only increase the number of Galilean adherents; because he was envious of their glory, did he resort to argument instead of cruelty, and manifest an unexpected benevolence instead of proceeding to rigorous measures (v. 4, 5). “It may be concluded from what has been said, that if Julian shed less blood than preceding persecutors of the Church, and that if he devised fewer punishments for the torture of the body, yet that he was severer in other respects.” Nevertheless, this statement is followed by a record of suffering in all quarters of the empire and the impression of purposed directness is given, as if the State had inflicted them, especially when we read that the emperor would not listen to the cautions of Sallust (v. 20). He does not comment on Jovian’s toleration, but only rejoices in the return of the Church to ascendancy. Unsparing is his picture of the dastardly measures of Valens against the professors of the faith; he regards that persecutor as the special victim of Divine wrath; while, on the other hand, he does not hesitate to call the Arian Goths, who fell under the anger of Athanaric, martyrs (vi. 37). He does not express an opinion as to the partial toleration of Gratian’s edict (vii. 1); but in explanation of Theodosius’ law forbidding heretics, i.e. all anti-Nicenists, from holding churches and from exercising any clerical function, he says: “Great as were the punishments adjudged by the laws against heretics, they were not always carried into execution; for the emperor had no desire to persecute his subjects; he only desired to enforce uniformity of view about God through the medium of intimidation. Those who voluntarily renounced heretical opinions, received commendation from him.” And it is true that the court practice of persecuting emperors, orthodox or Arian, was utterly in the teeth of their own edicts, and their most intimate counselors were elected without regard to religion. When Justina sought to revive the Arian standard in the West, her treatment of Ambrose is called persecution (vii. 13); but Ambrose’s intolerant procedures against the Arians are not even noticed. No quizzical wrinkle disturbs the flow of his narrative in vii. 15, when Theodosius I. gives a heathen temple to the Christians, and the pagans resolve to defend their rights, and do so effectually; but the Christians who perish in that hateful conflict are crowned as martyrs by an imperial edict! For the religious tyranny of Theodosius the Great he is a warm apologist, and disguises the perversion of that principle of freedom for which he pleads most earnestly, when the Arians hold the reins of power, and abuse their opportunity. The contradictions are perfectly apparent and irreconcilable, because uniformity by force has always been impossible. Yet logical men will state the most contradictory reasons, which no quidnunc can refrain from laughing at. Themistius’ plea for toleration (vi. 36) in matters of intellectual belief, on the ground of secular diversities in philosophy and from the incomprehensible nature of God, shows the existence of a party who believed in this principle. While Sozomen gives it place, and hailed the Gothic Arians who compelled Valens to cease his oppressions, he has no word of approbation for the proposition or the argument.
5. Another design of his history is stated in i. 1: “I have had to deliberate whether I ought to confine myself to the recital of events connected with the Church under the Roman government; but it seemed more advisable to include, as far as possible, the record of transactions relative to religion among the Persians and barbarians.” He regards Christianity as the universal and sole religion, and would trace its extension in all directions. Hence he is the first historian to give us a larger account of religion in Syria and Palestine, introducing us especially to some aspects of Christian life and suffering in Edessa; we are all the more surprised to have no mention of the Church in Africa, and so very little of the Church in the West, except when it comes into close relations with the East, as in the larger controversies, and especially after Arianism threatened to keep its hold upon the Byzantine section of the empire; and the Orient had to cry to the cold and unsympathetic Occident for help, and often in vain. He is also careful to give us some, if not a very original, account of the work of missions. He repeats the story of the Iberians, Armenians, Indians, Saracens, and Goths. He gives us a larger insight into Persia; the errors with which he is charged as swarming, are no more numerous than those of his cotemporaries. Of the large work of Theophilus of Dhu, or the extension of Arianism among the Germanic tribes, he says nothing. Chrysostom’s real missionary enterprises are passed by, excepting his expenditure of the funds furnished by Olympias for the redemption and restoration of Isaurian captives (viii. 27). His reflections on the methods of Church extension are more interesting and numerous. Thus, in ii. 5, of the attempt of Constantine to abolish idolatry and introduce the faith, Sozomen says, “Soldiers were not necessary; the courtiers effected it”; he does not consider it advisable to give all the details as to all the lands then won to the state religion. The barbarians he notices as converted through the instrumentality of Christian captives (ii. 6, 7). Armenian influence carried Christianity into Persia (ii. 8). Prodigies, too, are helpful agents (vi. 5, v. 22). The hieroglyphs and crux-symbols discovered in the Egyptian temples led to the repentance of pagans (vii. 15). Sometimes a kingdom will solicit the instruction of an orthodox monk, as in the case of the Saracens (vi. 38). The legal suppressions of paganism facilitate a change of sentiment on the part of many (vii. 15). The very ambitions of their clergy led numbers of the Arians to embrace Nicene views (vii. 17); and the doctrinal discussions among heretics constrain others to embrace a more uniform system of belief (viii. 1). The efficiency of the monks as evangelists is found in nearly all the biographies of them. On the other hand, he makes confession to the baleful effects of incessant indulgence in polemics. “These varying dogmas are the sources of innumerable troubles to religion; and many are deterred from embracing Christianity by the diversity of opinion which prevails in matters of doctrine” (vi. 26). This thought of universality, then, is a feature of his history.

6. Another design is to dignify monasticism as the true ethical ideal and goal of Christianity,—as the philosophy which is to supplant all the ancient intellectual strivings of reason,—and he announces this purpose as follows: “Nor is it foreign to ecclesiastical history to introduce in this work an account of those who were the fathers and originators of what is denominated monachism, and of their immediate successors, whose celebrity is well known to us either by observation or report. For I would neither be considered ungracious towards them, nor willing to consign their virtue to oblivion, nor yet be thought ignorant of their history; but would wish to leave behind me such a record of their manner of life that others, led by their example, might attain to a blessed and happy end” (i. 1). He is here quietly resisting a school of Christians and politicians who were opposed to the absorbing and destructive qualities of this manner of life; Athanasius, Basil the Great, Jerome, Chrysostom, had to write in its defense for the same reason, and he sided with these supporters of its virtues, very naturally. He is a full believer in the Divine philosophy which nurtured him; monasticism with its practical strivings after conformity to the Divine-human Pattern, and its attempt to enthrone the spiritual over the material has a zealous defender in him, of all its rapt and grotesque forms. He determined therefore to make it a unique portion of his history. The discussion of its aims in i. 12 will give us a clue to his own desire to represent it as almost the resultant force in the progress of the Divine kingdom; one reads the historian’s responsive feeling between the lines. This philosophy was the most useful thing received by man from God; it was superior to all other knowledge, and warranted the neglect of all worldly science; it strove to eliminate the adiaphora from ethics, and to make everything have a moral complexion; one must be doing good, or else he is doing evil. Its great duties are the discipline of self, the worship of the Creator, and the cultivation of a spirit of other-worldness. These canons and goals are the life of the system. It is the philosophy which is to take the place of the old theoretical schemes; and it is the great school to fill up the gap made by the decay of the Hellenic universities. The Christian university founded by Theodosius in Sozomen’s day, was indeed a blow to this educational ideal. While we may have no accord with his view of this ethical phenomenon, we must concede him the merit of discerning its significance and intent, and allow that he was wise to give us so full an account of its elaboration, and so much detail and scrap of biography; for it was a dominant element in the history of this time. It formed men and measures. The reproach of Sozomen on this score is wholly a mistake; he has done us capital service in not neglecting this element, otherwise we could have but little conception of its historical setting, of its patience, its tireless devotion, and we would have to resort to Palladius or Rufinus and the individual biographies. Moreover, it is an uncritical spirit which recoils from dissecting the awful and often repulsive details of legalistic self-denial. After discoursing on the local origin of monasticism and the forms it assumed, we have chapters containing brief sketches of hermits, laurists, and cenobites (i. 12, 13, 14, iii. 14). The people looked to the monks for the color of their theology (iv. 10). Arianism felt its weakness without them and ineffectually sought their suppression (vi. 20). The Nicene faith uniformly received the support of these communities (vi. 27), to which they remained devoted under all persecutions. Another series of biographies follows in vi. 28–34: Theophilus (viii. 12) has a preliminary struggle with them to carry forward his plots against John. The royal court itself under Pulcheria’s leadership reflected its severe discipline (ix. 13). Sozomen seems also to have studied the rules of various bodies, some of whose details he gives, and indulges in a sort of comparative study of their regulations (vi. 30). Yet with all his implied admiration of the heroes of this system, who went to the almost extreme of abstinence, he remarks in reviewing the discipline of Theotimus (vii. 26): “I consider it to be the part of the philosopher to yield to the demand of these appetites from necessity, and not from the love of sensual gratification.” It is to be noted that he omits for the most part the immoral forms of monasticism, such as Evagrius gives us a highly rhetorical account of.

7. A more subordinate aim is to present selected secular matters so-called; he does not consider these to be wholly foreign to the scope of his work. He handles such with considerable largeness in Constantine’s life, and keeps up a thread under Constantius and Julian. He is more sparing until he reaches Arcadius and Honorius, and the chapters 3–15 of Book ix. are largely devoted to the Western struggles with usurpers.

8. A final and subordinate aim is the development of imperial law with regard to the Church; he gives little of purely synodical canons, but remarks, “I consider it necessary, however, to mention the laws enacted for the honor and consolidation of religion, as they constitute a considerable portion of ecclesiastical history.” And in the next chapter, “Having arrived at this point of my history, it would not be right to omit all mention of the laws passed in favor of those individuals in the churches, who had received their freedom” (i. 9). We have already seen how continuously this plan is sustained.

His Method. 1. He is conscious of certain limitations, and expresses them frankly. (a) A modest estimate of his own powers (Proemium, i. 1). (b) The excess of material compels him to a constant process of selection (ii. 3, 5, 14, iii. 14, 15, 16, iv. 4, 27, vii. 17, 28, ix. 1. (c) A sense of incapacity to handle some aspects of doctrine (vii. 17). (d) An occasional insufficiency of data to state a positive conclusion (iv. 2, viii. 16).

2. He acknowledges the need of research, and presents his ideal purpose in i. 7: “I shall record the transactions with which I have been connected, and also those concerning which I have heard from persons who knew or saw the affairs in our own day, or before our own generation. But I have sought for records of events of earlier date amongst the established laws appertaining to religion, amongst the proceedings of the Synods of the period, amongst the innovations that arose, and in the epistles of kings and priests.” His recurring intention was to reproduce the documents just as they were, but he finally decided to epitomize their contents and to present the entire instrument, only when the state of controversy compelled it in order to fairness. The difficulty in the way of consulting these sources lay in the fact of their dispersion in palaces, churches, and the private libraries of the erudite. He anticipates criticism by acknowledging that contradictions are likely to appear in his work, not from any fault of his own, but because of the partisan and arbitrary nature of the documents; he ingeniously confesses that men’s passions and conceptions have shaped many of these writings, and that the factious spirit has often been guilty of the willful omission of material, which was not of its side. He distinctly avers that he felt it his duty to examine all writings of this class according to his ability. Such was his intention. If now we turn to his actual methods, we can group his ways of accumulating material, somewhat as follows:

(a) His own observation by hearing or sight, and hence knowing, as in ii. 3; vii. 19, 28.

(b) By obtaining a personally clear knowledge, the medium being undefined, as in the election of Maximus to be bishop of Jerusalem, and Macarius’ sympathy therewith; here his better information was probably due to his Palestinian origin. Ἐστέον μέντοι ὡς οἱ τάδε ἥκριβωκότες, κατὰ γνώμην Μακαρίου γενέσθαι τε καὶ σπουδασθῆναι τῷ πλῆθει ταύτα, ἰσχυρίζονται (ii. 20). As to Serapion and Severianus τὰ μὲν ὃδε ἔγγυω (viii. 10). As to Zechariah, where the same phrase occurs (ix. 17). At the close of a universal review of monasticism τάδε ἔγνων ὡς συνέγραψα (iii. 14). As to the Syrian and Persian monks εἰς ἡμῶν ἄκριβως ἔχουσιν (vi. 35).

(c) By hearing from those who knew the facts ἀπὸ παρὰ ἀκριβῶς ἐπισταμένων ἥκρικοα (ii. 21). As to Arsacius: οἱ παρὰ τῶν Ἀρσάκιον αὐτὸν θεασαμένων ἀκηκοέναι ἔφασαν (iv. 16). As to the mutual prophecies of Epiphanius and John κἀκεῖνον δὲ εἰσέτι νῦν πολλῶν ὄντα τὸν λόγον ἐπυθόμην (viii. 15). As to Atticus: καὶ τὸν μὲν τοιόνδε γενέσθαι φασίν, οἱ γε τὸν ἄνδρα ἔγνωσαν (viii. 27).

(d) The correction of a false story by inquiring of trustworthy persons. Thus as to the origin of the Apocalypse of Paul. Ἑρομένως δὲ μοι περὶ τούτου, φευδὸς ἔφησεν εἶναι Κίλιξ (vii. 19). As to an accusation against John: τούτοι δὲ πρόφασιν ἑτέραν λέγειν οὐκ ἔχω, πλὴν ὅτι ἀφευδής τις οἶμαι πυθανομένως περὶ τούτου ἔφη, κ.τ.λ. (viii. 9). The true and twofold causes of difficulty between Theophilus and Isadore: τῶν γε μὴν συγγενομένων τούτοις τότε τοῖς μοναχοῖς ἀνδρὸς οἵ τις μεθύοντας ἐπυθόμην, κ.τ.λ. (viii. 12).

(e) To these may be added the very frequent usage of πυνθάνομαι as a means of expressing his knowledge acquired in any form whatsoever, by hearing, by inquiry, by tradition (i. 21, ii. 8, iii. 14, iv. 25, v. 2, 9, vi. 2 bis, 17, 34 bis, 37, vii. 8, 15, 17, 20, 21, 25, viii. 2, 7, 9, 19).

(f) Also his use of ἀκριβῶς, showing his effort to attain accurate information, and ἰσχυρίζομαι less frequently, to indicate the strongest confirmation. Both these are used with reserve, and not lightly. Several times he acknowledges his resort to tradition, when he uses the word παρειλήφαμεν, but we cannot always be sure of the form of transmission (iii. 15, 30, vi. 38).

(g) Also his reference to those who had more accurate information, or to works whose detail he could not reproduce, or which lay without the province of history (iv. 3).
We see then an ideal and actual plan of research, and a real effort at personal investigation; to deny his frequently iterated language, is to accuse him of deliberate falsehood; and this is palpably unfair; this his honest purpose and work must be borne in mind, in the discussion of his relation to Socrates.

3. As to method in textual criticism, there is none; we find variations in the texts quoted from those of Socrates, Athanasius, and Theodoret, but no more in him than in the rest from one another. When he reports Constantine’s speech, he treats it as Thucydides did the orations of his worthies, and as the high-flying Eusebius and the indiscriminating Theodoret do. When he copies a translation from the Greek, he simply says that he gives it just as he found it. On the whole, one is surprised at so fair an agreement in the readings of the documents.

4. There is an entire lack of genuine analytical criticism; the love of allegory (i. 1, ii. 1), the credence given to the Christic sections of Josephus (i. 1), the unquestioning acceptance of Eusebius’ turgid statements about Constantine’s life, are proofs enough of its absence; and yet Sozomen was careful to present the variety of accounts, so that one might have all points of view, if he did not carefully sift the evidence. This is indeed quite a marked feature of his method. Thus concerning the death of Arius, he gives five different views (ii. 29, 30). He states carefully the varying shades of opinion concerning Marcellus (ii. 33). The two classes of views of the election of Macedonius are recorded and skillfully weighed (iii. 3). The divisions of sentiment after the Synods of Sardica and Philippopolis are accurately grouped (i. 13). Other instances occur in iii. 14, 18, 23, v. 2, 22, vi. 2, 12, 26, vii. 5, 22. These are but a selection of what is habitual with him, and show a desire to present all sides of a question, and to reflect the divergent convictions of his time about men and measures; but he does not always try to find the just opinion and weigh the testimony; he never tests the validity of his documents, and only a few times tries to decide between clashing judgments, as to which of them rests on a solid foundation of testimony. It is, however, to his credit, when he confesses that his research is baffled, as in iv. 2, with respect to the manner of Paul’s death, or suspends his judgment, because the data are insufficient, as in the application to the empress, of Chrysostom’s homily on female peccadilloes (vii. 6). Such language shows that he not only sought to ascertain the truth, but to elicit the facts out of conflicting testimony. We may not always think the game worth the powder, but the temper and intent are commendable.

5. Sozomen has a marked zeal for interpreting the events of history; and we can gather these hints of histories, although they do not seem to have been defined as principles in his own mind.

(a) He criticises by the rules of traditionalism and monasticism; we find small men given undue prominence, and large ones put far below their proper place (iv. 6, 9, 28, v. 7, 12, vi. 17, 26, vii. 12).
(b) He seems to have regarded it his occasional duty to explain the moral intent of a period, of the lives of men, of a special incident; in other words, he used history reflectively and ethically (viii. 4, 12, 17).

(c) He is fertile in suggesting motives for which he has no documentary warrant. The entire history of Julian is replete with the insinuation of mean motives (ὡς συμβάλλω). The solitary commendation of him for lowering the price of provisions in Antioch (v. 19) is only a ground for holding him up to ridicule for want of judgment (iii. 5, 15, v. 2, 4, 5, 11, 19, 15, 22, vi. 12).

(d) He deems it necessary to apologize for his favorites if they are in a questionable position (iii. 18, v. 6, viii. 1).

(e) He thinks it right to give recognition to men or measures who have enlisted his admiration (vii. 10).

(f) He traces cause and effect in a pragmatic way (vi. 16, 38).

(g) He delights in taking prominent figures of a period as the remarkable men who have created a remarkable time, and are Divine instruments, or as objects of Divine protection on account of their piety (iii. 13, 19, iv. 16, v. 13, vi. 17, 26, 27, viii. 3, 4, 6).

(h) He dwells at times on characteristics of human nature at play (vi. 4, 26).

(i) He gives a favorable explanation of the bad actions of the orthodox (iv. 16).

(j) He sometimes introduces speculative explanations or reflections (vi. 2, 4, 37, viii. 5).

6. Chronological method. (1) The imperial reigns are taken as the great periods for the books, and the material is distributed under them; no dates are given, only the names of the emperors. This is stated in the proëmium, and is carried out in the history. (2) He uses the consulates—

(a) To mark the beginning and the end of the entire history.

(b) Also occasionally to indicate the synchronous occupants of the apostolic sees (i. 2); the convocation of a council (iii. 12, 19, iv. 6, 17, vii. 12); the enthronement of a bishop (iv. 26); the death of an emperor (vii. 29, ix. 1); some general but important event (vii. 5, viii. 4).

(c) With this the corresponding year of the emperor is sometimes but rarely given.

(d) Another conspicuous chronological system with Sozomen, as in Eusebius, Socrates, and the church historians in general, is to keep up the roll of succession in the greater sees. This had become an essential note of the visible and Catholic Church.

(e) Occasionally intervals are indicated as so many years after such and such an event (iii. 5, 11, 12, iv. 1, ix. 1).

(f) The length of a reign or of an episcopate, the duration of the life of an emperor or bishop, and of a tendential period are stated, but not often, and without uniformity (iv. 11, v. 1, vii. 5).
An unusual number of particles for indefinite time occur as substitutes for an exact method. Nevertheless, one of his main purposes was to narrate his history in strict chronological order, so as to contain the virtue of a chronicle together with a more developed presentation of events. This is almost entirely forgotten, except that the sequence of occurrences is fairly kept up. Yet he does not hesitate to break through even this sequence, when he thinks the collocation of later facts, under the head that he is writing of, may contribute to clearness and completeness, as he directly avers in iii. 3, 14, iv. 10, 11, 12, v. 11, ix. 2. It is no easy task to make a Regesta of Sozomen’s history; moreover, he often blunders in the very few dates he gives, as well as in the arrangement of the events themselves; these errors are due to the lack of a fixed system.

7. The contributions to geography are mainly confined to Palestine. Passing more familiar ones, we have a list as follows: Helenopolis (ii. 2), Majuma (ii. 5, v. 3, vii. 28), Anthedon, Bethagathon, Asalea, Thabatha (iii. 14), Diocæsarea (iv. 17), Bethelia (v. 15, vi. 32), Besan duca, Capharchobia, Gerara (vi. 32), Botolium (vii. 28), Ceila, Berathsabia with its tomb, Nephsameena (vii. 29), Chaphar Zacharia (ix. 17). Most of these terms are Hebraic or Syrian. Scythopolis is mentioned as abundant in palms (viii. 13). There is no direct, and very little indirect light on the political or ecclesiastical geography of the time; of course the seats of the bishops and of the monks that are enumerated yield a few new names of places. There are equally few hints in the physical features of the empire; the great rains, or hail-storms, or earthquakes are recorded chiefly with regard to their special ethical bearing. The topography of Constantinople has been indicated previously; outside of these, details of Alexandria, Antioch, Caesarea, Cappadocia are given, but none of them new.

8. Statistics. There is of course no method in the presentation of statistics; there are general proportions, as in ii. 6, iv. 27, v. 15, vi. 20; and special detail, as in the enumeration of monks, iii. 14, vi. 29–34. The best illustration one finds in the account of the Persian martyrs, where there was a distinct effort at registration by Persian, Syrian, and Edessan authorities (ii. 13, 14).

9. Biography is one of the chief constituents of his history. He gives us an account of most of the distinguished Christian masters in theology, in monasticism, martyrdom, oratory, scholarship, administration; and he is refreshingly fair in giving a place to those who were not friendly to his view of the faith. Athanasius may be a chief hero, but Arius is not neglected. Here we may observe that Sozomen makes Aëtius the second head of rationalism, and the man who gave it breadth of culture by building the system on the basis of Aristotle (iii. 15, iv. 12); he regards Eunomius as but a reflection of Aëtius (vi. 29). This position accorded to Aëtius is one deserving special note and study. Philostorgius exalted Eunomius both in his special encomium and in the history. Of course the two Cappadocians, as well as Epiphanius and Chrysostom, are liberally sketched. The imperial biography is fairly full, and a large space is accorded Julian. In every book parts are devoted to the vitae sanctorum, as the best way to set before us the inner life of the Church and the fairest exhibition of Christian color; these monastic sketches are, for the most part, mere glimpses of individuals (a line or two suffices); whereas the more conspicuous founders and organizers, such as Antony, Hilarion, Pachomius, the Macarii, Evagrius, receive a larger recognition. He feels the need of selection in the multiplicity of illustrious characters, and after a sketch of Acacius, Zeno, and Ajax, he says: “I have mentioned these as examples of those who served as priests at this period. It would be a task to enumerate all, when the major part of them were good, and God bore testimony to their lives by readily hearing their prayers and by working many miracles” (vii. 28). Prominent as is the biographical element, and earnestly as he endeavors to substantiate its claims, he confesses, as to Ephraim (iii. 16), “it would require a more experienced hand than mine to furnish a full description of his character and that of the other illustrious men, who, about the same period, had devoted themselves to a life of philosophy; and it is to be regretted that Ephraim did not enter upon this undertaking. The attempt is beyond my powers, for I possess but little knowledge of those great men, or of their exploits.”

10. In ecclesiastical culture we have many and important incidental hints, but no direct general chapter except vii. 19; and on special topics, those on the Easter controversy (i. 16, 21, vi. 24, vii. 18, viii. 17) on the penitential presbyter (vii. 16), and on relic worship, are the most significant.

11. Nor is there any methodical statement of growth in the acquisition and exposition of truth; his traditionalism in a measure precluded that, and his acknowledged incapacity to go deeply into the differentiation of these discussions prevented any system; there is no real history of dogma and ethics, except on the external side. He is frank to say: “I leave their doctrines to be judged by those whose right it is. For I have not set forth to record such matters, nor is it befitting in history” (iii. 15); that he does “not profess easily to understand or to expound these matters” (vi. 27); and again, “I should be prolix were I to enter into further particulars, and under the subject would be by no means an easy one to me, since I have no such dialectic skill” (vii. 17). He furnishes us only with such a statement of doctrine, as sprang out of polemics and councils and the variety of creeds.

12. And so with the history of literature there is no such sustained account of Christian writers and works as in Eusebius; the second stage of historians did not see fit to be as complete and accurate as their exemplar in this particular, and Photius was left to gather up the fragments for us. What strikes us as peculiar is his confessed ignorance of the works of the greatest theologians. He passes by all the technical writings of Athanasius; he has no direct knowledge of the works of Hilary, though that might be excused. Of the purely theological works of Basil and Gregory Nazianzen, whom he regards as the pillars of the Nicene faith, he makes no mention; and indeed makes but the slightest use of their letters and special orations. Of the Arian theologians of all shades, he has no closer knowledge; he confesses at the outset that he had not read the Thalia (i. 21), but condemns it on Socrates’ authority; and he speaks of Diodorus, bishop of Tarsus, in language that displays unfamiliarity with his treatises (viii. 2).

13. There are no conceptions of the philosophy of history or of histories in general, other than those which have been discussed before.

14. If we pass to the stylistics of Sozomen, we find the quality of the Greek to be excellent; the dedication is especially studied and rhetorical; the first chapter of the first book is scarcely inferior in these traits, after which the form becomes more abrupt, after the fashion of an epitomizer, and it is obviously affected by his authorities. The likeness to Xenophon is not continuous, any more than Socrates sustainedly imitates Thucydides, although in elevated conception, Socrates is more in the vein of that philosophic master of history, than Sozomen is a reflection of the writer of the Hellenics. The vocabulary, too, is quite meager; the same forms of expression occur again and again, yet Photius considers him superior in diction to Socrates, which only one who admires mere form above spirit, can affirm. Certainly it would not be the view of this more subjective age. Of course he reflects the decline of meaning in particles and prepositional prefixes and participle constructions. He does not begin his books with formal prefaces, such as Socrates indulges in; chapter 1 of Book i. may, however, be regarded as introductory; and it serves to link Christianity with Judaism. In the distribution of his material there is no system agreeing with his own outline of aims or any other order that is discoverable. The main topics are: Secular affairs, relations of the emperor to Christianity, laws and privileges, missions and persecutions, polemics and irenics, biographies; but there is no regular discussion of these, either under the reigns or in the books. None of the historians are any better in this regard.

A characteristic of our historian is the admirable generalization and the summaries he pauses to make here and there. The most notable are in iii. 17, a generalized description of the period of the Constantines. iii. 18, a doctrinal summary. iv. 17–19, conciliar movement in the West. iv. 20–22, conciliar movement in the East. iv. 23–25, united results. vi. 6, a succinct comparison of Valens with Valentinian. vi. 10, geographical centers of Nicenism. vi. 21, geographical centers of Arianism and Orthodoxy. vi. 22, geographical distribution of Macedonianism. vi. 26, genesis of Aëtianism (Eunomianism). vi. 27, geographical distribution of beliefs. vi. 28–34, geographical grouping of the monks. vii. 2, geographical supremacy of Arianism in the East. vii. 4, geographical survey of religion. vii. 17, divisions of Arianism. viii. 1, summary of Apostolic succession. The selective process is often alluded to (ii. 3, iii. 14, 15, iv. 3, 23, 27, vii. 25, 28, ix. 1); and we must confess that he has kept a very just proportion in this way among the subjects he has elected for his narrative.

The Period described.

1053 Myrobib. cod. XXX.
The work was to have covered the time from 323 to 439, a period of 116 years; whereas, in fact, he writes continuously only to the death of Honorius as the latest event, 423, and the accession of Valentinian III. in 425; beyond that in time, but mentioned anticipatively in the narrative (ix. 2), is the transfer of the forty martyrs, which happened certainly after 434, the year of the election of Proclus, therefore probably not far from the proposed limit of his work, say 437 or 438; this would give a period of about 114 or 115 years. He divides the record of this time into nine books, distributed among the emperors.

i. and ii. To Constantine, 323–337=14.

ix. (Honorius) and Theodosius II., 408–437=25.

A noticeable feature, save in the case of Book ix., is the grouping of books by twos, in which the intervals discussed vary from fourteen to thirty-three years. This grouping seems entirely arbitrary.

For whom he wrote.

The question for whom he wrote has been somewhat obscured by those who regard him simply as a plagiarist. He evidently turned himself to this task under the conviction that there was need of some such work as his. He addressed himself chiefly to Christians and not only to monks, because he defers to the narrow views of some friends about the mysteries,—and represses creeds and sacraments, for fear the book might fall into the hands of the uninitiated. He moreover designed his record, not for the more learned classes, but for the instruction of ordinary believers, since he professes uniformly a great modesty in treating the profounder themes of theology and the characters of the more eminent men. Yet he did not hesitate to submit it to the criticism of his emperor and invited the most erasive and final judgment. This is probably as far as we may go in the absence of any direct address to specific readers.

The Sources

1. Those enumerated in his ideal plan (i. 1).

2. The transactions in which he was engaged.

3. The transactions in which others were engaged, who either knew or saw the events in his day, or in prior generations.

4. Laws established concerning religion.

6. Record of innovations.

7. Imperial letters.

II. The sources actually mentioned. (1) Documents.

a. Documents actually quoted with text.
   The retractation, by Eusebius and Theognis (ii. 16).
   The confession of Arius and Euzoïus to Constantine (ii. 27).
   The Epistle of Constantine to the Synod of Tyre (ii. 28).
   Constantine Cæsar to the people of the Catholic Church of the city of Alexandria (iii.
   2).
   Epistle of the Synod of Jerusalem in behalf of Athanasius (iii. 22).
   Ursacius and Valens to Julius (iii. 23).
   Ursacius and Valens to Athanasius (iii. 24).
   George of Laodicea to Macedonius, Basilius, Cecropius, and Eugenius (iv. 13); new.
   Epistle of Constantius to the church at Antioch (iv. 14); new.
   Epistle of the Synod of Ariminum to the Emperor Constantius (iv. 18).
   Epistle of Julian to Arsacius, the high-priest of Galatia (v. 16).
   Epistle of Julian to the bishops, only a phrase quoted (v. 18); new.
   Synod at Antioch, to Jovian (vi. 4).
   Eustathius, Silvanus, and Theophilus to Liberius (vi. 11).
   Synod of Rome to bishops of Illyricum (vi. 23); first with Sozomen; repeated by Theodoret (H. E. ii. 22).
   Innocent to John (viii. 26); also in Palladius’ Dial.
   Innocent to the presbyters, deacons, all the clergy, and the people of the church of Constantinople (viii. 26); also in Palladius’ Dial.

   There are five imperial letters, four synodical letters, seven episcopal letters, one presby-terial letter, making seventeen in all. This is not nearly so large a number as is given by Soocrates, but we must remember the expressed purpose of Sozomen, that, as a rule, he would give abstracts only, and text when in his judgment fairness made it necessary. Of these documents, there are at least three found in no earlier author. In them all, there is only one symbol transcribed, and that is from Arius and Euzoïus!

b. Documentary acts of Synods which are mentioned by name.
   Acts of the Synod of Tyre (ii. 25).
   Acts of the Synod of Seleucia, taken down by tachygraphists (iv. 22).
   c. Acts of those Synods only, of which an abstract is recorded.

   Alexandria.............................. i. 15.
   Bithynia................................. i. 15.
   Palestine............................... i. 15.
   Egyptian............................... i. 16.
   Nicæa................................. i. 17–23.
   Seleucia............................... iv. 22, 23.
   Constantinople....................... iv. 24, 25.
   Alexandria............................ v. 12.
   Antioch............................... vi. 4.
Sozomen as Author.

Antioch................................. ii. 19.
Tyre........................................... ii. 25.
Jerusalem............................... ii. 27.
Constantinople...................... ii. 29, 33.

Lampsacus............................... vi. 7.
Nicæa......................................... vi. 8.
Macedonian, s.l......................... vi. 10, 11.
Sicily.......................................... vi. 12.
Tyana........................................ vi. 12.
In Caria...................................... vi. 12.
Rome.......................................... vi. 23.
Pazucomen................................ vi. 24.
Rome.......................................... vi. 25.
Antioch..................................... iii. 2.
Jerusalem................................ iii. 21, 22.
Antioch..................................... iii. 8.
Tyana........................................ vi. 12.
In Caria...................................... vi. 12.

Sardica................................... iii. 11.
Jerusalem................................ iii. 21, 12.
Antioch..................................... iii. 12.
Antioch (Caria)......................... vii. 2.
Constantinople....................... vii. 7–9.

Sangurum................................... vii. 18.
Constantinople....................... vii. 19.
Antioch..................................... vi. 12.
Sardica................................... iii. 11.
Antioch..................................... iii. 12.

Ankyra.................................... iv. 13.
Antioch..................................... iv. 8.
Constantinople....................... vii. 18.
Cyprus...................................... vii. 14.
Of the Oak at Chalcedon.......... viii. 17.

Eusebius to Julius........................ iii. 7.
Julius, bishop of Rome, to the bishops of the East....................... iii. 8.
Synod of Antioch to Julius......................... iii. 8.
Constantius to Philip, prefect of Constantinople......................... iii. 9.
Bishops of Egypt in favor of Athanasius......................... iii. 10.
Julius to the bishops of Antioch......................... iii. 10.

488
Constans to Constantius................................................................. iii. 10.
Constans to Constantius................................................................. iii. 11.
Athanasius to Constans................................................................. iii. 11.
Paul, bishop of Constantinople.................................................... iii. 11.
The bishops of Philippopolis to the bishops of the West............... iii.
11.
Constans to Constantius................................................................. iii. 20.
Constantius to Athanasius............................................................. iii. 20.
Constantius to the Alexandrians................................................ iv. 9.
Julius to clergy and people of Alexandria........................................ iii. 20.
Constantius to the bishops, presbyters, and to the people of the church of Alexandria......................................................... iii. 21.
Cyril of Jerusalem to Constantius................................................ iv. 5.
Constantius to Athanasius............................................................. iv. 16.
Constantius to Basil of Ancyra...................................................... iv. 16.
Basil of Ancyra to Constantius...................................................... iv. 16.
Constantius to Basil........................................................................ iv. 16.
Basil to all the bishops................................................................. iv. 16.
Athanasius to a friend................................................................. iv. 17.
Constantius to the Synod of Ariminum......................................... iv. 19.
Reply of the bishops................................................................. iv. 19.
Julian to the Alexandrians............................................................. v. 7.
Titus of Bostra to Julian................................................................. v. 15.
Julian to Jewish patriarchs, leaders, and people............................ v. 22.
Reply of the Jews........................................................................ v. 22.
Julius to Arsacius, king of Armenia................................................ vi. 1.
Jovian to the governors of the provinces...................................... vi. 3.
Basil of Ancyra, Silvanus of Tarsus, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis et al., to Jovian.............................................................. vi. 4.
Liberius and the Western bishop to the East.............................. vi. 12.
Memorial of grievances presented by eighty ecclesiastics to Valens......................................................... vi.
13.
Damasus in behalf of Peter of Alexandria...................................... vi. 39.
Synodical epistles of Rome to Paulinus, bishop of Antioch........ vii.
11.
Western bishops and Gratian to the Eastern bishops................. vii.
11.
Irenic letters to the adherents of Flavian from the priests of Egypt and the West...........
viii. 3.

Theophilus of Alexandria, paschal letter................................................................. viii. 11.
Theophilus of Alexandria to Epiphanius............................................................... viii.

14.
Epiphanius to the bishops and the bishop of Constantinople against Origenism...........
viii. 14.

2. Authors.
(a) Authors from whose works a textual quotation appears.
Apolinarius, the Syrian, on the succession of Athanasius................................. ii. 17, new.

Extract from Athanasius’ Epistola ad Episcopos Aegypti et Libye....................... ii. 30.
Extract from Libanius, the Sophist; in oratione funebri de laudibus Juliani........ vi. 1.
Gregory Nazianzen to Nectarius, on Apolinarius; Ep. ccii...................................... vi. 27.
The first extract alone is known through no other source.

(b) Authors and works directly referred to as used.
The Sibyl........................................................................................................ i. 1, ii. 1.
Josephus........................................................................................................ i. 1.
Clemens (Romanus)..................................................................................... i. 1.
Hegesippus................................................................................................... i. 1.
Julius Africanus............................................................................................ i. 1.
Eusebius Pamphili, Historia Ecclesiastica....................................................... i. 1.
Vita Constantini........................................................................................... i. 3, extract.
Philo (Pythagorean)..................................................................................... i. 12.
Biographies of Monks................................................................................... i. 14.
Eusebius’ Oration....................................................................................... i. 19.
Address of Constantine............................................................................... i. 19.
Collection of Nicene Canons....................................................................... i. 22.
Syrians’ Account of the actions and life of Bishop Milles................................. ii. 14.
Discourse of Eudoxius, extract from............................................................ iv. 26.
Meletius’ first discourses at Antioch............................................................. iv. 28.
Athanasius, on his flight.............................................................................. v. 12.

(c) Authors and their works mentioned, but not used.
Arius, the Thalia, not read........................................................................ i. 21.
Eustathius, bishop of Antioch...................................................................... ii. 19.
Marcellus (de Subjectione Filii Dei)............................................................... ii. 33.
Asterius, a treatise on the defense of the Arian doctrine............................... ii. 33.
Acacius, bishop of Cæsarea, works................................................................. iii. 2.
Eustathius, bishop of Sebaste, an ascetic treatise, also attributed to Basil the Great................................................................. iii. 14.
Eusebius, bishop of Emesa, works................................................................. iii. 14.
Titus, bishop of Bostra, works................................................................. iii. 14.
Serapion, bishop of Ancyra, works................................................................. iii. 14.
Eudoxius, bishop of Germanicia, works................................................................. iii. 14.
Acacius, bishop of Cæsarea, works................................................................. iii. 14.
Cyril, bishop of Jerusalem, works................................................................. iii. 14.
Didymus, works.............................................................................................. iii. 15.
Lucifer, bishop of Calaris, works................................................................ iii. 15.
Hilary, bishop of Pictavium, works................................................................ iii. 15, v. 13.
Aëtius, works.............................................................................................. iii. 15.
Ephraim Syrus, works and translations............................................................. iii. 16.
Bardasanes, poems........................................................................................ iii. 16.
Harmonius, poems........................................................................................ iii. 16.
Photinus, a work before Constantius, and many works................................. iv. 6.
Acacius, literary works................................................................................ iv. 23.
Apolinarius, works, with those against him........................................................ v. 18, vi. 27.
Julian, Misopogon........................................................................................ v. 19.
Eunomius, works, especially Exercises for the Mind, with those against him................................................................................ vi. 27, vii. 17.
Evagrius, works........................................................................................ vi. 30.
Themistius, oration, outline........................................................................ vi. 36.
Ulfilas, translation of Bible into Gothic.............................................................. vi. 37.
Sisinnius, bishop of the Novatians in Constantinople, works......................... viii. 1.
Diodorus, bishop of Tarsus, works................................................................ viii. 2.
Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia, works........................................................ viii. 2.
Chrysostom, Ep. to Theodore........................................................................ viii. 2.
— on Eutropius................................................................................ viii. 7.
— Vices of females................................................................................ viii. 16.
— Extempore discourse after his return................................................ viii. 18.
— About the Silver Statue........................................................................ viii. 20.
Origen, works; especially the one from which Bishop Theotimus read........ viii. 14.
An uneclesiastic but ancient Hebrew document........................................ ix. 17.
(d) Hymns of which a line or thought is given.
Refrain of the odes at Antioch........................................................................ iii. 20.
At procession of Babylas, Antioch................................................................ v. 19.
To Dionysos, by Epiphanius the Sophist........................................................... vi. 25.
Arian hymns.................................................................................................... viii. 8.

Unmentioned Authorities.

Sozomen has refrained in large measure from indicating directly his chief authorities for political or ecclesiastical affairs; he has indicated, indeed, some minor springs, as we have seen, but the major ones are passed by. He imitated neither Eusebius, nor Socrates, nor Evagrius in this omission. He does abound in phrases indicative of authorities; thus of the forms of λέγω, λέγουσι, λέγονται, ἔλεγον, ἐλέγετο are used somewhat sparingly, while λέγεται occurs over eighty times, and λόγος about twenty; of φησί, ἔφησεν and φήμη occasionally, while φησί or φασί introduces about thirty statements; εἰρήσθω and εἰρήται also appear in a few cases. One has no assurance of either the method or the validity of the sources from such vague terms, and it is this uncertain and incautious manner that has so often led critics to impeach his general worth, and it must be conceded with some degree of justice; the endless iteration of such words savors of gossip rather than history; this obscurity is not diminished by his persistent ὅμως and less frequent εἰκάζω.

1. In the discussion of his unmentioned authorities, the first to be considered is Socrates. He is nowhere hinted at, unless under an indefinite “some say,” when Sozomen presents a group of opinions.

Socrates preceded Sozomen by a few years, writing his history not long after 439. Sozomen undoubtedly produced his record later, as we have already seen, and it would be just as likely that Socrates should be in the hands of Sozomen as that Philip of Side’s contemporary Christian History should have been open to the criticism of Socrates; indeed, the predecessor’s work was quite probably an incentive to the task proposed by Sozomen to himself. The internal evidence makes the use sure. We have only to note how Socrates derived his statements about the Novatians from members connected with that body of believers; these very facts are reproduced by Sozomen as Socrates gives them, with the slightest of differences; there is no refutation of this possible. Socrates, therefore, manifestly preceded, and Sozomen employed the material thus amassed.

There are three views of the connection: (1) that Sozomen, excepting a few and not very valuable additions of his own, plagiarized Socrates; (2) that he used the same authorities as Socrates independently, and the points of identity arose from the language of the original in the hands of both; (3) that Socrates was his guide to the chief writers from whom he drew directly with more or less freedom; and when no other light presented itself or was to be found, he would use his path-finder. There is scarcely a more fascinating and genuine field for analytical criticism than this. It should be remarked at the outset that we cannot justly apply this term plagiarism, in its modern sense, to the use of material current in these earlier days of history. There was no more intention to appropriate the work of another in Sozomen, than there was in Socrates, when he fails to note his authority, and yet very evidently has followed him closely; or when Theodoret has taken his stuff from Sozomen, and says nothing about the original. To assail Sozomen as if he were a deliberate thief, and stigmatize him as a feeble reviser of Socrates, is wholly unfair and unwarranted by the general usage of his day and by the facts of the case. In no way can it be proved that Sozomen was a general plagiarist in the opprobrium and iniquity conveyed by the modern use of that term. That Socrates was the finer mind, that he had larger sympathies, that he was concerned to reproduce documents in an ampler degree, that he follows the development of the Church with a sharper and brighter criticism, no one can doubt; he is conspicuously superior in almost every quality of a historian, and confined himself more nearly to the modern idea of which the science should aim to do; but that does not set aside the distinct and supplemental value of Sozomen and his fullness in lines, however zigzag, which had been neglected by others. The acknowledged precedence of Socrates does not warrant us in assailing the fidelity of the lesser light. Since the notes are designed to indicate the relationship between the two, the passages need not be anticipated here. (2) The second view, that Sozomen made an independent use of the same source which Holzhausen revived, Stäudlin supported, Hefele and Nolte have espoused, seems less tenable than the first. The Novatian material cannot, under any possible conditions, be so explained; the arrangement of the details in eight of the books will not permit view. The very corrections of that arrangement require us to be convinced that Socrates was in the corrector’s eye; the close resemblance of language in many places where he might easily have expanded from the originals, but preferred to confine himself to the equally meagre tracings of his predecessor, leave no basis for this solution. (3) The third explanation of the interrelation seems thus far the most accurate. Sozomen took Socrates for a guide in the main, (a) as to consecution of events, (b) as to sources, much as students would use a Church history to base their own studies upon. Socrates was a director to the authorities; these Sozomen would use freely; when they failed him, he would take the facts given by Socrates, precisely as he did those which Eusebius or Sabinus furnished, because he had nothing better, and in spite probably of his own inquiries; for let us remember how he insists that he has investigated the originals, and that he had been conscientious in his researches. Now it must be said in further modification of this statement:

1054  H. E. vii. 48.

(a) That some of the sources obviously consulted by both were doubtless known to Sozomen without Socrates to point them out. Rufinus and Eusebius and Sabinus were known to everybody. In all such cases we may concede an independent reading of those authors, and yet the order in which the subject-matter is arranged is at times more that of his guide-book than of his original.

(b) Moreover, he introduces many new outlines and abstracts, particularly in the transactions of the synods.

(c) He also has independent sources of biography.

(d) His ninth book is wholly unique and entirely out of the leading-strings of the master, for unexplained reasons.

The notes also try to indicate in a measure these more independent traits.

2. The next unmentioned source is Rufinus, in his continuation of Eusebius in two books; this Sozomen certainly read independently of Socrates, very likely in a Greek translation. That author’s Historia Monachorum also was sifted for a few of the monastic biographies; in these cases there is a closer resemblance to Rufinus than to the parallel sketches of Palladius.

3. Eusebius’ Life of Constantine is a primary source for Books i. and ii. In all the events pertaining to that emperor, it is drawn upon freely, just as freely as Socrates employs it, or as Sozomen handles Socrates.

4. Athanasius is also used independently, although in collocating the events, Socrates is followed. There is direct reference to one work only (v. 12), as we have seen. The unmentioned are as follows:

   The Life of St. Antony: Antonii Vita.
   Epistola de Synodis Arimini in Italia et Seleucæ in Isauria celebratis.
   Epistola ad Serapionem, de morte Acrii.
   Synodicon; lost.
   Tomus ad Antiochenses.
   Epistola ad Episcopos Ægypti et Libyæ; ep. encyclica contra Arianos.
   Epistola Encyclica ad Episcopos.
   Historia Arianorum ad Monachos.
   Apologia contra Arianos.
   Apologia ad Constantium imperatorem.
   Epistolæ heortasticae.

5. Philostorgius: Historia Ecclesiastica, also furnished occasional material, as even the excerpts remaining to us indicate.

6. Sabinus: Collection of Synods (Συναγώγη τῶν συνόδων), which is lost; this book was written in the Macedonian and Arian interest; the author is mentioned by Socrates and criticised for his partiality. We can observe how Sozomen used it, where he adds to the statements of Socrates, which the latter had borrowed from that work. These additions are quite frequent in the transactions of the synods; and again a few records of councils, otherwise unknown, are thus preserved for us. We have here a proof of how Sozomen improved on his guide in the details.
7. Philippus of Side; the Christian History (χριστιανικὴ ἱστορία); a few fragments are preserved; Socrates criticises him severely.

8. For the laws, outside of the records alluded to, he probably used the Codex Gregorianus and the Codex Hermogenianus, his old text-books, and not unlikely the Codex Theodosianus (438).

9. Basil the Great: the limited use is indicated by the notes.

10. Gregory Nazianzen: Orationes contra Julianum. Other occasional citations are indicated in the notes.

11. Sulpicius Severus: vita S. Martini was undoubtedly the source, possibly through a Greek translation of the same, for the summary of that saint’s life in iii. 14.

   Historia sacra: sometimes there is a hint as if this work had been before him.

12. Palladius: Historia Lausica was not so constant a companion as some have suggested; Sozomen has rather borrowed from the sources out of which the bishop of Helenopolis gathered his sketches of the monks.

   Dialogus de vita S. Joannis Chrysostomi was used in narrating the incidents of John’s life in Book viii. There is no indication of any large draught of Chrysostom’s own writings: they may have been used for a few suggestions, contained in the orations before mentioned.

   One does not feel sure that Hieronymus or Orosius came under his eye.

   He does not seem to have made any direct use of Ammianus Marcellinus (Res gestæ), nor of the earlier Latin chroniclers. The points of resemblance with Eutropius (Breviarium Historiae Romanae) are very doubtful in my judgment; Eunapius (ex historia excerpta et fragmenta) seems to have been used in his full form; Zosimus (Historia) pretty surely; and for the ninth book, hardly with a doubt the full Olympiodorus, of whom fragments only remain, and yet in that same ninth book there are entirely independent political chapters whose source cannot yet be determined.

   The Ninth Book.

   The most curious feature of all is Book ix., in the entire change of its method; even were the ecclesiastical affairs to have been presented, he has given here in remarkable excess the events affecting the Western state; he has done it nowhere else; to be sure, he proposes it as a demonstration of the value of imperial piety, and of the ever-present Divine grace, but nowhere else has he done this in so cumulative a form. Some wonderful change came over his purpose, whether that were a fuller view of the relation between state and church, or the desire to deepen the impression of his philosophy of history; or did some imperial domestic catastrophe make him reluctant to dwell upon the sad events which darkened the court he had so glorified?

   The grave question arises, Is anything of Book ix. lost?
That it is unfinished cannot be doubted; for (a) In the Proëmium he announces his purpose to carry it to the year a.d. 439, or the seventeenth consulate of Theodosius; but this is not done with any of his ordinary fullness, although his hints reach beyond, as we have seen. (b) In lauding Pulcheria (ix. 1) he remarks, “That new heresies have not prevailed in our time, we shall find to be due especially to her, as we shall subsequently see.” Here is the declared purpose of delineating the history of Nestorianism and its overthrow, but there is no appearance of the struggle in the record itself; he altogether passes by Nestorius, as bishop of Constantinople. (c) The record of the forty martyrs he purposely took out of its normal order, to illustrate the excellence of Pulcheria; a late event is anticipated, but the whole of what would have been its normal setting is not there. (d) One would naturally expect that a book which had thus far treated mainly of state difficulties would have the usual balance, at least, and that ecclesiastical affairs would have preponderated in the remaining chapters; but there is only an initial chapter. Seventeen chapters are not his usual tale for a book; there is an evident break; the discussion of Nestorianism is not written. Most of all would one expect some allusion to the restoration of Chrysostom under Proclus. (e) In ix. 16, he says, “Among other relics, those of Zechariah, the very ancient prophet, and of Stephen, who was ordained deacon by the Apostles, were discovered; and it seems incumbent upon me to describe the mode, since the discovery of each was marvelous and divine;” but he gives only the invention of Zechariah (c. 17). The story of Stephen fails us, and would doubtless have followed immediately. It was his purpose to narrate the story,—this story which Theophanes and Marcellinus mention and Lucianus wrote a book about. (f) In c. ix. 17, this is confirmed; for he says, “I shall first speak of the relics of the prophet”; to his second he does not come. (g) The close is abrupt; one feels instinctively that something is amiss. Hence the work, as we have it, is obviously not complete.

Did he finish it, and is the conclusion lost?

The mistake into which Gregory I. fell in ascribing to Sozomen the commendation of Theodore of Mopsuestia, with which Theodoret really closes his history, led Baronius to maintain that we did not have the whole of Sozomen; and others have asserted the same for reasons which are indeed sufficient to prove that the history is unfinished, but not that anything is lost. That we have all that Sozomen wrote is more likely, because the Tripartite History at x. 24 makes the last use of Sozomen at viii. 25; it would surely have gone further in its dependence upon him had the later controversy been treated of, since he had been already a chief authority. Nicephorus Callistus, Historia Ecclesiastica, xiv. 8, gives the account of the finding of Zechariah in c. 9; the story of Stephen in c. 10; then the story of the forty martyrs. His source beyond is Socrates, until Evagrius takes up the thread of affairs. If Sozomen had written the more recent events parallel with Socrates, Nicephorus would undoubtedly have followed him as before. Of Theophanes, one cannot speak so confidently. Moreover, we cannot help asking, since we have Socrates, Theodoret, and Evagrius complete, why should Sozomen, who was so admired an author, have suffered any loss? Now, if we have Sozomen entire so far as he wrote, why did he stop where he did? There are no sufficient subjective reasons to be offered. It could scarcely have been in any unfavorable criticism of his prince, for the work seems to have been accepted by his imperial patron; and there was certainly nothing as objectionable in Sozomen, as in Socrates or in Olympiodorus. Nor is it likely that the unhappiness which invaded the court, the domestic jealousies, which rent its religious as well as connubial peace, or the quarrels over Cyrus or Paulinus or Chrysaphius, in any way restrained him; for he was beyond some, if not all of these agitations, at the time of his writing, and he had deliberately chosen to ignore such noble personages as Anthemius, Troilus, Synesius, Aurelianus, and Eudocia, so that we can argue little from his silence, save his manifest jealousy for Pulcheria, and his hostility to certain more liberal tendencies developed under Eudocia. The Nestorian controversy would have been a choice field wherein to exalt the influence of Pulcheria, as he himself suggested. On the whole, one is constrained to believe that Sozomen died before he had completed the record which he had proposed to himself. He must have been nearing his seventieth year when thus suddenly arrested in his chosen study.

The Major uses made of his Work.

The major uses of him subsequently were by:

(a) Epiphanius Scholasticus, who made a translation into Latin, which Cassiodorus abbreviated, polished, and incorporated in the Historia Tripartita.\(^{1057}\)

(b) The deacon Liberatus, in his Historia Nestorianorum, used the Tripartita.

(c) Theophanes, in his Chronographia.

(d) Theodorus Lector in his Historia Tripartita.

(e) Nicephorus Callistus, in his Historia Ecclesiastica incorporating Theodorus’ Tripartita.

The Errors.

The errors are numerous, as already suggested by Possevin, on dogmatic grounds; Du Pin, and more recently by Harnack, for historic reasons. They are due to the lack of a systematic chronology, and the blind copying of his authority, especially Socrates, and occasionally to his attempts to correct the order given by his authority.

---

1057 See preface of that work.
Part III.—Bibliography.

A. Bibliography of Bibliography.

Gesner: Bibliotheca universalsis. s.v. 1545.

Possenius: Appartus sacer. s.v. 1608.

Sluter: Propylæum Historiæ Christianæ, ix. 6, p. 45. 1696.

Ittig: De bibliothecis patrum apostol. s.v. 1699–1700.

Olearius: Bibliotheca scriptorum eccles. Tom. ii. s.v. 1711.

Nodier: Bibliothéque sacrée gr.-lat. s.v. 1826.

Thuille: Patristisches Handbuch. 1888.

B. Texts.

I. Manuscripts.—It would indeed be a desirable work to have a uniform apparatus of the codices, not only of Sozomen, but of all the Greek Church historians. Admirable as is Heinchen’s survey of Eusebian mss., it is neither uniform nor complete. No editor of Sozomen from Stephen down, has deemed it necessary to work up the detail even as well as Heinchen. Nolte evidently had the material in hand, but the labor remains to be done. The numbers and positions of many codices have been changed since the days of Valesius, Montfaucon, and Hænelius, and it is impossible to bring harmony out of the differences without direct inspection. It would seem as if no one had consulted some of those mentioned by Montfaucon; e.g. in the Inventarium mss. monasterii S. Petri Carnutensis, the title is given without number; Socratis, Sozomenis et Theodoreti historia Ecclesiastica, vol. in fol. notat P. sæculo ix. (ii. 1246); and the two described by Hænelius (a) Socratis, Sozomenis historia ecclesiastica memb. fol. exemp. vetus., at Chartres (Fasc. i. col. 130). (b) iv. 2, Hermiae Sozomeni Salaminis, historicæ ecclesiasticæ lib. ix. (Fasc. iii. c. 93) in the Escorial.

The sole manuscript at the basis of this edition is the Codex Regius bibliothecæ Parisiensis, n. 1437 (Nolte, 1444) Possevin (App. crit.) says: A Græca vero edito proviget ann. 1545, but this seems a mistake.

2. The next edition of the text was accompanied with a Latin translation; Græca et Latine ex interpretatione J. Christophorsoni et recognitione Suffredi Petri una cum variis lectionibus, J. Christophorsoni, Jos. Scaligeri, Jac. Cuiaci, Jan. Gruteri, Jac. Bongarsii, Col. All. (Geneva) 1612. 2 vols. in fol. This was the text of Stephen with marginal notes of the above [see Hussey, Nolte]. The sources of the notes are not sure.

4. The edition of Valesius, 1659–1668, with a new translation by himself. Socratis Scholastici et Hermiae Sozomeni historia ecclesiastica. Henricus Valesius græcum textum collatis mss. Codicibus emendavit, Latine vertit, et annotationibus illustravit. Adjuncta est ad calcem disputatio Archelai Episcopi adversus Manichæum. Parisiis, 1668. Fol. In this edition there are the preface to the reader, explaining his sources; an essay on the life and writings of the historians; and the text is followed by annotations. This edition is conspicuous for the number of codices, more or less accurately collated. The Codex Fuketanus is his chief reliance; the previous annotations were used; he claims to have made no alteration without warrant.

Gulielmus Reading novas Elucidationes, præsertim Chronologicas, in hac Editione adject. Cantabrigiæ, 1720.

He restores readings of Stephen for some changes made by Valesius; uses Valesius’ own manuscript annotations, suggestions of Lowth, Casaubon’s variæ lectiones from the codex Jonesianus, and the codex Jonesianus itself. But there is no general collation.

14. Valesian text as basis; partially new apparatus and emendations.

Hussey died before completing his work; the apparatus was prepared by John Barrow. Besides other not far-reaching collations, Hussey used a codex in the Bodleian, called the codex Barrocinianus (B.), and a partial collation of codex Severniiensis, which is of inferior value.

15. Reproduction of Reading-Valesius:

Patrologiæ Cursus Completus.

C. Textual Criticism.

We have here (1) the apparatus mentioned in the greater editions; (2) the marginal notes and papers of various readings by Bishop Christophorson, Scaliger, Casaubon, Curicius, Gurterius, etc. (3) The solitary work of Dr. Nolte, who, in 1860, wrote a recension of Hussey’s edition of Sozomen. Theolog. Q. Schrift. 1861. iii. 417–451; as he had done for Socrates, and did later for Evagrius. He dwells especially on the valuable readings which could be derived from the translation of Epiphanius Scholasticus and from Nicephorus Callistus.

This shows the urgency of collation de novo, and a new edition of the text.

D. Analytical Criticism.

Besides the meagre apparatus of the editions, the following works assist in the study, although some are not directly related.

Holzhausen, F. A. Commentatio de fontibus quibus Socrates, Sozomenus ac Theodoretus in scribenda historia sacra usi sunt, adiuncta eorum epicrisi, scripta a Friderico Augusto Holzhausen. Gottingæ, 1825.

Rosenstein, J., in Forschung z. deutsch. Gesch. 1862, i., 166.

Sudhans: de Ratione quæ intercedat inter Zosim et Amm. cet. relationes Dissert. Bonn, 1870.

Jeep, Ludwig. Quæstiones Fridericianæ, Dissert. 1881.

The above show the sources and their interrelation.

E. Translations.

1. Latin—1. Epiphanius Scholasticus. At the suggestion of Cassiodorus he translated Theodoret, Socrates, and Sozomen. This version, Cassiodorus polished and selected from, for his Historia Ecclesiastica Tripartita. (See Preface to that work.) This was frequently printed. The first edition, Paris, s. a.; Basle 1523, and after.

4. The same in Basle, 1557. Fol.

The sources for new readings are not given.

   This was on the basis of the H. E. Tripartita.
   3. There was a French version of the Tripartite by Ludovicus Cyaneus. Paris, 1568. Fol.
   3. A third edition: The Ecclesiastical Histories of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodorit Faithfully Translated and Abridg'd from the Originals. Together with A brief Account of the Lives of these Historians, and several Useful Notes and Illustrations, and a copius Index. By Mr. Parker.
   The Third edition, carefully Review'd by the Author, and very much Corrected, Improv'd and Enlarg'd. To which is now added, by a Friend, an Abridgment of the History of Evagrius Scholasticus. The Whole chiefly design'd for Use of young Students in Divinity, and Families Religiously disposed. London, 1729. 4°.
   This is in the Bagster series of the Greek Ecclesiastical Historians of the first six centuries. 1843–46.
   5. A reprint of (4), Bohn's Ecclesiastical Library.
   History of the Church by Sozomen and Philostorgius. The Ecclesiastical History of Sozomen, comprising a History of the Church, from a.d. 324 to a.d. 440. Translated from the Greek, with a memoir of the author.
   Also, the Ecclesiastical History of Philostorgius, as epitomized by Photius, Patriarch of Constantinople. Translated by Edward Walford, Late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. London, 1855. 8°.
F. Historiography.
   The usual Introductions to Church Histories: on the History of Church History; particularly Schröckh, i. 148–9, vii, 188–90.

Ceillier and Harnack as before.

This is also a field that needs scholars.

G. Literature

[This does not pretend to be exhaustive.]

1. Biographical.

Photius: Myrobiblion: codex 30, a few lines of biography and authorship.

Sigebert of Gembloux: de scriptoribus ecclesiasticis (ed Fabricius), c. 11.

Trithemius: de Ecclesiasticis scriptoribus (ed. Fabricius), cxxxvi.

Hoffmann, Jo. Jac.: Lexicon Universale historiam sacram et profanam, etc. Tom. iv. s.v.

Moreri: le Grand Dictionnaire Historique. Tom. vi. s.v.

Michaud: Biographie Universelle. Tom. xxxix. s.v.

Didot Frères: Nouvelle Biographie Générale. Tom. xliv. s.v.

Glaire, J-B.: Dict. univ. des Sciences Ecclesiastiques, s.v.

2. Historical.

(a) Theodorus Lector was the first to have used Sozomen for a Tripartite history, and doubtless alluded to him (cf. Nic. Call. H.E. i. 1).

Evagrius Scholasticus: H.E. i. Preface.

Epiphanius Scholasticus and Cassiodorus in the preface to H.E. Tripartita.

Gregory the Great mentions him by mistake for Theodoret in Book vii. of his letters;

Ep. 34.

Nicephorus Callistus: H.E. i. 1.

(b) Holder, Alf.: Inventio sanctæ crucis: Actorum Cyriacus, pars i. lat. et gr. &c. Leipzig, 1889.
Nestle, Eberh.: De Sancta Cruce, ein Beitrag z. christl. Legendengeschichte. Berin, 1889.
ZwTh. xxxii. 108–120.
——Des Apollinarios v. Laodicea Schrift. wider Eunomius. ZKG, xi. 1, 1889.
——Phôbadius von Agennum und seine Schrift gegen die Arianer. ZWL, 335–343; 391–407. 1889.
Batifoll, P.: Studia patristica. Études d’ancienne littérature chrétienne. Fasc. 1 (v.d., Wilpert; röm. Quartalschrift 1890, 1; v. Funk; TQS, 1890, 2).
Gwatkin, H.M.: Studies of Arianism chiefly referring to the character and chronology of the reaction which followed the council of Nicæa. 1882.

Birt, Thdr.: De fide christiana quantum Stilichonis ætate in aula imperatoria occidentali valuerit. Marburg, 1885.

Bright, Wm.: Notes on the canons of the first four general councils. London, 1882.

Mariano, R.: Constantino Magno e la chiesa cristiana (Nuova Antologia, xxv., fasc. 10; 16 maggio, 1890, pp. 271–299).

King, C.W.: Julian, the emeror; containing Greg. Nazianzen’s two invectives, and Libanius’ Monody with Julian’s extant theosoph. works. London, 1888.

Küpke, Rud.: Deutsche Forschungen, Die Anfänge des Königums bei den Gothen.

Berlin, 1859.

Leipzig, 1827.

Krüger, Gust.: Monophysitische Streitigkeiten im Zusammenhange mit der Reichspolitik.

Jena, 1884.

— — : Notitia dignitatum, accedunt notitia urbis Constantinopolitanae et laterculi provinciarum. Berlin, 1876.

Part IV.—Conclusion.

The original translation, with its many excellences, seems to belong to an earlier school. It is free both in enlargement and in compression; words at times, and occasionally clauses, are inverted. The editor felt the difficulty of recasting such a flowing style; yet, in spite of the resulting infelicity, he felt constrained to make every possible correction, and these have been very numerous and extended in caption and text.

Sozomen uniformly describes the ancient heathen cult, of whatever form it might be, as Hellenism, and its followers, Hellenists. It seemed advisable to retain the rendering “paganism,” which the first translator used toward the middle and the end of his work, although he had not been uniform in the beginning; any other translation would cause a constant confusion between nationality and religion.

In order to give a better impression of the author and text, the spelling of the proper names indicated by the text has been adhered to; the orthography “Novatus” is not a real exception. Where the spelling of a proper name in the caption differs from that of the text, the differences of origin between the two must be borne in mind. To the Pseudo-Nicephorus are due the headings; these variations have been preserved purposely.

The notes have been for the greater part limited to the sources, previous or contemporary. It has not been deemed necessary to load the text with references to the literature, ancient or modern, sufficiently indicated in the Bibliography. It is just for the editor to say, that while the literature is not unfamiliar to him, he does not believe in the modern German method of annotation and allusion to every book under the sun, to the grave impediment of individual study. Similarly, the dictionaries show the biography and archaeology in a better form than can be compressed into a note. Nor did the editor think it best to introduce into the translation any technical discussion as to the errors of Sozomen.
Hermias Sozomen practiced the law at Constantinople, at the same time with Socrates. His ancestors were not mean; they were originally natives of Palestine, being inhabitants of a village near Gaza, called Bethelia. This village was very populous in times past, and had most stately and ancient churches. But the most glorious structure of them all was the Pantheon, situated on an artificial hill, which was the tower as it were of Bethelia, as Sozomen relates in chap. xv. of his fifth book. The grandfather of Hermias Sozomen was born in that village, and first converted to the Christian faith by Hilarion the monk. For when Alaphion, an inhabitant of the same village, was possessed with a devil, and the Jews and physicians, attempting to cure him, could do him no good by their enchantments, Hilarion, by a bare invocation of the name of God, cast out the devil. Sozomen's grandfather, and Alaphion himself, amazed at this miracle, with their whole families embraced the Christian religion. The grandfather of Sozomen was eminent for his expositions of the Sacred Scriptures, being a person endowed with a polite wit, and an acuteness of understanding; and besides, he was well skilled in literature. Therefore he was highly esteemed by the Christians inhabiting Gaza, Ascalon, and the places adjacent, as being useful and necessary for the propagating of religion, and could easily unloose the knots of the Sacred Scriptures. But Alaphion’s descendants excelled others in their sanctity of life, in kindness to the indigent, and in other virtues; and they were the first that built churches and monasteries there, as Sozomen says in the passage above cited, where he also adds, that some holy persons of Alaphion’s family were surviving even in his own days, with whom he himself conversed when very young, and concerning whom he promises to speak more afterwards. Most probably he means Salamanes, Phusco, Malchio, and Crispio, brothers, concerning whom he speaks in chap. xxxii. of his sixth book. For he there says that these brethren, instructed in the monastic discipline by Hilarion, were, during the empire of Valens, eminent in the monasteries of Palestine; that they lived near Bethelia, a village in the country of the Gazites, and were descendants of a noble family in those parts. He mentions the same persons in the fifteenth chapter of book viii., where he says that Crispio was Epiphanius’s archdeacon. It is evident, therefore, that the brothers were of Alaphion’s family. Alaphion, too, was related to Sozomen’s grandfather, as we may conjecture; first, because the grandfather of Sozomen is said to have been converted (together with his whole family) to the Christian religion, upon account of Alaphion’s wonderful cure, whom Hilarion had healed by calling on the name of Almighty God. Secondly, this conjecture is confirmed by what Sozomen relates, viz., that when he was very young, he conversed familiarly with the aged monks that were of Alaphion’s family. And, lastly, from the fact that Sozomen took his name from those persons who were either the sons or grandchildren of Alaphion. For he was called Salamanes Hermias Sozomenus (as Photius declares in his Bibliotheca), from the name of that Salamanes who, as we observed before, was the brother of Phusco, Malchio, and Crispio. Wherefore Nicephorus, and others, are mistaken in supposing that Sozomen had the surname of Salaminius because he was born at Salamis, a city of Cyprus. But we have before shown from Sozomen’s own testimony, that he was not born in Cyprus, but in Palestine. For his grandfather was not only a Palestinian, as is above said, but Sozomen himself was also educated in Palestine, in the bosom (so to say) of those monks who were of Alaphion’s family. From this education Sozomen seems to have imbibed that most ardent love of a monastic life and discipline, which he declares in so many places of his history. Hence it is, that in his books he is not content to relate who were the fathers and founders of monastic philosophy; but he also carefully relates their successors and disciples, who followed this way of life both in Egypt, Syria, and Palestine, and also in Pontus, Armenia, and Osdroëna. Hence also it is, that in the twelfth chapter of the first book of his history, he has proposed to be read (in the beginning as it were) that gorgeous account of the monastic philosophy. For he supposed that he should have been ungrateful, had he not after this manner at least made a return of thanks to those in whose familiarity he had lived, and from whom, when he was a youth, he had received such eminent examples of a good conversation, as he himself intimates, in the opening of his first book. It is inferred that Sozomen was educated at Gaza, not only from the passage above mentioned, but also from chap. xxviii. of his seventh book, where Sozomen says that he himself had seen Zeno, bishop of Majuma, for this Majuma is a sea-port belonging to the Gazites. Although Zeno was nearly a hundred years old, he was never absent from the morning and evening hymns, unless sickness detained him. After this Sozomen applied himself to the profession of the law. He was a student of the civil law at Berytus, a city of Phœnicia, not far distant from his own country, where there was a famous school of civil law. But he practiced the law at Constantinople, as himself asserts, book ii. chap. iii. And yet he seems not to have been very much employed in pleading of causes; for at the same time that he was an advocate in Constantinople, he wrote his Ecclesiastical History; as may be concluded from his own words in the last-mentioned passage. Before he wrote his nine books of Ecclesiastical History, Sozomen composed a Breviary of Ecclesiastical Affairs, from our Saviour’s ascension to the deposition of Licinius. This work was comprised in two books, as himself bears witness in the opening of his first book; but these two books are now lost.

In the composure of his History, Sozomen has made use of a style neither too low nor too high, but one between both, as is most agreeable to a writer of ecclesiastical affairs. Photius prefers Sozomen’s style to that of Socrates, and we agree with him in his criticism. But though Sozomen is superior in the elegance of his expression, yet Socrates excels him in judgment. For Socrates judges incomparably well, both of men, and also of ecclesiastical business and affairs; and there is nothing in his works but what is grave and serious, nothing that can be expunged as superfluous. But on the contrary, some passages occur in Sozomen that are trivial and childish. Of this sort is his digression in his first book concerning the building of the city Hemona, and concerning the Argonauts, who carried the ship Argo on their shoulders some furlongs, and also his description of Daphne without the walls of the city Antioch, in chap. xix. of his sixth book; to which we must add that observation of his, concerning the beauty of the body, where he treats of that virgin at whose house the blessed Athanasius was concealed a long while. Lastly, his ninth book contains little else besides warlike events, which ought to have no place in an Ecclesiastical History. Sozomen’s style, however, is not without its faults. For the periods of his sentences are only joined together by the particles δὲ and τέ, than which there is nothing more troublesome. Should any one attentively read the epistle in which Sozomen dedicates his work to Theodosius junior, he will find it true that Sozomen was no great orator.

It remains, that we inquire which of these two authors, Socrates or Sozomen, wrote first, and which of them borrowed, or rather stole, from the other. Certainly, since both of them wrote almost the same things of the same transactions, inasmuch as they both began at the same beginning, and concluded their history at the same point (both beginning from the reign of Constantine, and ending at the seventeenth consulate of Theodosius junior), it must needs be true, that one of them robbed the other’s desk. This sort of theft was committed by many of the Grecian writers, as Porphyry testifies, Eusebii Præparatio Evangelica, bk. x. But which was the plagiary, Socrates or Sozomen, it is hard to say, in regard both of them lived in the same times, and both wrote their history in the empire of Theodosius junior. Therefore, in the disquisition of this question, we must make use of conjecture. So Porphyry in the above-mentioned book, since it was uncertain whether Hyperides had stolen from Demosthenes, or Demosthenes from Hyperides, because both had lived in the same time, decided to use conjecture. Let us therefore see upon which of them falls the suspicion of theft. Indeed, this is my sentiment, I suppose that the inferior does frequently steal from the superior, and the junior from the senior. But Sozomen is in my judgment far inferior to Socrates; and he betook himself to writing his history when he was younger than Socrates. For he wrote it whilst he was yet an advocate, as I observed before. Now, the profession of the advocates amongst the Romans was not perpetual, but temporary. Lastly, he that adds something to the other, and sometimes amends the other, seems to have written last. But Sozomen now and then adds some passages to Socrates, and in some places dissents from him, as Photius has observed, and we have hinted in our annotations. Sozomen therefore seems to have written last. And this is the opinion of almost all modern writers, who place Socrates before Sozomen. So Bellarmine in his book “De Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis”; who is followed by Miræus, Labbæus, and Vossius. Amongst the ancients, Cassiodorus, Photius, and Nicephorus name Socrates in the first place. Although Cassiodorus is found to have varied; for in the preface of the Tripartite History, he inverts the order, and names Theodoret first, ranks Sozomen in the second place, and refers to Socrates as the last. So also Theodorus Lector recounts them in his epistle which he prefixed to his Tripartite History. Thus far concerning Sozomen.
Little more than cursory allusions to Sozomen occur in the works of contemporary writers; and the materials for a memoir of his life are therefore at best but few and scanty. We should, in fact, be destitute of almost all knowledge as to his birth, education, mode of life, and private history, had not some information on these points been furnished by himself. In the work before us, the only one which has caused his name to be handed down to posterity, he draws aside the curtain which would otherwise have concealed his origin and parentage, and makes known to us a portion of his family history. He tells us (book v. chap. xv.) that his grandfather was a native of Palestine, and of Pagan parentage; that he, with all his family, was converted to Christianity on witnessing a miracle wrought by St. Hilarion; and that, being possessed of great mental endowments, he afterwards became eminently useful to the men of Gaza and Ascalon, by his extraordinary power in expounding the most obscure passages of Holy Writ.

Our author himself seems to have been born about the beginning of the fifth century. He tells us that in his youth some of the founders of monasticism in Palestine were still living, although they had reached a very advanced period of life, and that he had enjoyed opportunities of intercourse with them. To this circumstance may probably be attributed the tone of reverential admiration in which Sozomen invariably speaks of the ascetic inhabitants of the desert.

The education of Sozomen was conducted with a view to the legal profession; and he studied for some years at Berytus, then noted for its school of law. He afterwards established himself at Constantinople, and, it has been conjectured, held some office at the court of Theodosius the Younger. He is reputed to have possessed some skill in the law, but it is certain that he never attained any eminence in his profession. It is only in the character of an historian that he has rendered himself conspicuous. His first work was an abridgment of Ecclesiastical History, from the ascension of our Lord to the deposition of Licinius (a.d. 324), but this is not extant. The work before us seems to have been commenced about the year 443. It embraces a period of 117 years; namely, from a.d. 323 to a.d. 439. It is generally admitted to have suffered many alterations and mutilations; and this may, in some measure, serve to account for the frequent inaccuracies in point both of narrative and of chronology which pervade the nine books of which it is composed. It is evident, from the very abrupt termination of this history, that it is but a fragmentary portion of a larger work. The precise object of Sozomen in undertaking to write this history is not apparent, as exactly the same ground had previously been gone over by Socrates, if we except the ninth book of the former, which is almost entirely devoted to the political history of the times. The learned Photius prefers the style of Sozomen to that of Socrates; yet Sozomen frequently evinces great deficiency in point of judgment, and on many occasions enlarges upon details which are altogether omitted by Socrates, as unworthy of the dignity of Ecclesiastical History. To us, there is manifest advantage in possessing these separate chronicles of the same events. Facts which might perhaps have been doubted, if not rejected, had they rested upon the sole authority of a single writer, are admitted as unquestionable when authenticated by the combined testimony of Socrates, of Sozomen, and of Theodoret. And, indeed, the very discrepancies which, on several minor points, are discernible in the histories of these writers, are not without their use, inasmuch as they tend to the removal of all suspicion of connivance or collusion.
Address to the Emperor Theodosius by Salaminius Hermias Sozomen, and Proposal for an Ecclesiastical History.

The popular saying is, that the former emperors were zealous about some useful matter or other; such as were fond of ornaments, cared for the royal purple, the crown, and the like; those who were studious of letters, composed some mythical work or treatise capable of fascinating its readers; those who were practiced in war, sought to send the weapon straight to the mark, to hit wild beasts, to hurl the spear, or to leap upon the horse. Every one who was devoted to a craft which was pleasing to the rulers announced himself at the palace. One brings a precious stone not easily susceptible of polish; another undertakes to prepare a more brilliant color than the purple robe; one dedicates a poem or treatise; another introduces an expert and strange fashion of armor.

It is considered the greatest and a regal thing for the ruler of the whole people to possess, at least, one of the homely virtues; but no such great estimate has been made of piety, which is, after all, the true ornament of the empire. Thou, however, O most powerful Emperor Theodosius, hast in a word, by God’s help, cultivated every virtue. Girt with the purple robe and crown, a symbol of thy dignity to onlookers, thou wearest within always that true ornament of sovereignty, piety and philanthropy. Whence it happens that poets and writers, and the greater part of thy officers as well as the rest of thy subjects, concern themselves on every occasion with thee and thy deeds. And when thou presidest as ruler of contests and judge of discourses, thou art not robbed of thy accuracy by any artificial sound and form, but thou awardest the prize sincerely, observing whether the diction is suitable to the design of the composition; so also with respect to the form of words, divisions, order, unity, phraseology, construction, arguments, thought, and narrative. Thou recompensest the speakers with thy favorable judgment and applause, as well as with golden images, erection of statues, gifts, and every kind of honor. Thou showest greater personal favor toward the speakers than the ancient Cretans did toward the much-sung Homer; or the Alevadæ did to Simonides; or Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicily to Plato, the companion of Socrates; or Philip the Macedonian, to Theopompus the historian; or the Emperor Severus to Oppianus, who related in verse the kinds, nature, and catching of fish. For after the Cretans had rewarded Homer with a thousand nummi, they inscribed the amount of the gift on a public column as if to boast of their excessive munificence. The Alevadæ, Dionysius, and Philip were not more reserved than the Cretans, who boasted of their modest and philosophical government, but quickly imitated their column, so that they might not be inferior in their donative. But when Severus bestowed upon Oppianus a golden gift for each line of his moderate verse, he so astonished everybody with his liberality, that the poems of Oppianus are popularly called golden words to this day. Such were the donations of former lovers of learning and discourses. But thou, O Emperor, surpassest any of the ancients in thy liberality to letters, and thou seemest to me to do this not unreasonably. For while thou strivest to conquer all by thy virtues, thou dost also conduct thine own affairs successfully, according to thy thorough knowledge of the story of those ancient affairs, so prosperously directed by the Greeks and Romans. Rumor says that during the day, thou takest military and bodily exercise, and arrangest affairs of state by giving judicial decisions, and by making note of what is necessary, and by observation, both in public and private, of the things which ought to be done; and at night that thou busiest thyself with books. It is a saying, that there serves thee for the study of these works, a lamp which causes the oil to flow automatically into the wick, by means of some mechanism, so that not one of the servants in the palace should be compelled to be taxed with thy labors, and to do violence to nature by fighting against sleep. Thus thou art humane and gentle, both to those near, and to all, since thou dost imitate the Heavenly King who is thy pattern; in that He loves to send rain, and causes the sun to rise on the just and unjust, as well as to furnish other blessings ungrudgingly. As is natural, I hear also that by thy various learning, thou art no less familiar with the nature of stones, and the virtues of roots, and forces of remedies, than Solomon, the wisest son of David; while thou excellest him in virtue; for Solomon became the slave of his pleasures, and did not preserve to the end, that piety which had been for him the source of prosperity and wisdom. But thou, most powerful Emperor, because thou settest thy restraining reason in array against levity, art not only an autocrat of men, but also of the passions of soul and body, as one would naturally suppose. And this, too, ought to be remarked: I understand that thou dost conquer the desire for all food and drink; neither the sweeter figs, to speak poetically, nor any other kind of fruit in its season, can take thee prisoner, except the little that thou dost touch and taste, after thou hast returned thanks to the Maker of all things. Thou art wont to vanquish thirst, stifling heat, and cold by thy daily exercise, so that thou seemest to have self-control as a second nature. Lately, as is well known, thou wast anxious to visit the city of Heraclea in Pontus, and to restore it, prostrated by time, and thou tookest the way in the summer season through Bithynia. When the sun about midday was very fiery, one of the body-guard saw thee, heated with much sweat and clouds of dust, and, as if to do thee a favor, he anticipatingly offered to thee a bowl which reflected brilliantly the rays of the sun; he poured in some sweet drink, and added cold water thereto. But thou, most powerful Emperor, didst receive it, and didst praise the man for his good will, and thou didst make it obvious that thou wouldst soon reward him for his well-wrought deed with royal munificence. But when all the soldiers were wondering with open mouth at the dish, and were counting him blessed who should drink, thou, O noble Emperor, didst return the drink to him and didst command him to use it in whatever way he pleased. So that it seems to me that Alexander, the son of Philip, was surpassed by thy virtue; of whom it is reputed by his admirers, that while he, with the Macedonians, was passing through a waterless place, an anxious soldier found water, drew it, and offered it to Alexander; he would not drink it, but poured out the draught. Therefore, in a word, it is appropriate to call thee, according to Homer, more regal than the kings who preceded thee; for we have heard of some who acquired nothing worthy of admiration, and others who adorned their reign with scarcely one or two deeds. But thou, O most powerful Emperor, hast gathered together all the virtues, and hast excelled every one in piety, philanthropy, courage, prudence, justice, munificence, and a magnanimity befitting royal dignity. And every age will boast of thy rule as alone unstained and pure from murder, beyond all governments that ever existed. Thou teachest thy subjects to pursue serious things with pleasure, so that they show zeal for thee and public affairs, with good will and respect. So that for all these reasons, it has appeared to me, as a writer of Ecclesiastical History, necessary to address myself to thee. For to whom can I do this more appropriately, since I am about to relate the virtue of many devoted men, and the events of the Catholic Church; and since her conflicts with so many enemies lead me to thy threshold and that of thy fathers? Come thou, who knowest all things and possessest every virtue, especially that piety, which the Divine Word says is the beginning of wisdom, receive from me this writing, and marshal its facts and purify it by thy labors, out of thy accurate knowledge, whether by addition or elimination. For whatever course may seem pleasing to thee, that will be wholly advantageous and brilliant for the readers, nor shall any one put a hand to it after thine approval. My history begins with the third consulate of the Caesars, Crispus and Constantine, and stretches to thy seventeenth consulship. I deemed it proper to divide the whole work into nine parts: the first and second books will embrace the ecclesiastical affairs under Constantine; the third and fourth, those under his sons; the fifth and sixth, those under Julian, the cousin of the sons of the great Constantine, and Jovian, and, further, of Valentinian and Valens; the seventh and eighth books, O most powerful Emperor, will open up the affairs under the brothers Gratian and Valentinian, until the proclamation of Theodosius, thy divine grandfather, as far as thy celebrated father Arcadius, together with thy uncle, the most pious and godly Honorius, received the paternal government and shared in the regulation of the Roman world; the ninth book I have devoted to thy Christ-loving and most innocent majesty, which may God always preserve in unbroken good will, triumphing greatly over enemies, and having all things under thy feet and transmitting the holy empire to thy sons’ sons with the approbation of Christ, through whom and with whom, be glory to God, and the Father, with the Holy Spirit forever. Amen.

1058 This marks the proposed limits, a.d. 323 to a.d. 439, but he did not carry the narrative further than a.d. 425.
The ECCLESIASTICAL History, of salaminius hermias sozomenus.

———

Book I.

Chapter I.—The Preface of the Book, in which he investigates the History of the Jewish Nation; Mention of those who began such a Work; how and from what Sources he collected his History; how he was intent upon the Truth, and what other Details the History will contain.

My mind has been often exercised in inquiring how it is that other men are very ready to believe in God the Word, while the Jews are so incredulous, although it was to them that instruction concerning the things of God was, from the beginning, imparted by the prophets, who likewise made them acquainted with the events attendant upon the coming of Christ, before they came to pass.\textsuperscript{1059} Besides, Abraham, the founder of their nation and of the circumcision, was accounted worthy to be an eye-witness, and the host of the Son of God.\textsuperscript{1060} And Isaac, his son, was honored as the type of the sacrifice on the cross, for he was led bound to the altar by his father and, as accurate students of the sacred Scriptures affirm, the sufferings of Christ came to pass in like manner. Jacob predicted that the expectation of the nations would be for Christ, as it now is; and he likewise foretold the time in which he came, when he said “the rulers of the Hebrews of the tribe of Judah, the tribal leader, shall fail.”\textsuperscript{1061}

This clearly referred to the reign of Herod, who was an Idumean, on his father’s side, and on his mother’s, an Arabian, and the Jewish nation was delivered to him by the Roman senate and Augustus Caesar. And of the rest of the prophets some declared beforehand the birth of Christ, His ineffable conception, the mother remaining a virgin after His birth, His people, and country.\textsuperscript{1062} Some predicted His divine and marvelous deeds, while others foretold His sufferings, His resurrection from the dead, His ascension into the heavens, and the event accompanying each. But if any be ignorant of these facts it is not difficult to know them by reading the sacred books. Josephus, the son of Matthias, also who was a priest, and was most distinguished among Jews and Romans, may be regarded as a noteworthy witness to the truth concerning Christ\textsuperscript{1063}; for he hesitates to call Him a man since He wrought

---

\textsuperscript{1059} Cf. Eus. \textit{H. E.} i. 4.

\textsuperscript{1060} Cf. Gen. xviii.

\textsuperscript{1061} Cf. Gen. xlix. 10.

\textsuperscript{1062} Isa. vii. 14, foretells that "a virgin shall conceive and bear a son"; but he does not declare, in words, the perpetual virginity of the mother of God. The Roman Catholic Church, however, infers the doctrine from certain types in the Old Testament: such as that of "the bush which burnt with fire, and was not consumed" (Ex. iii. 2).

\textsuperscript{1063} See Joseph. \textit{Antiq.} xviii. 33; xx. 9, 1.
marvelous works, and was a teacher of truthful doctrines, but openly calls him Christ; that He was condemned to the death of the cross, and appeared alive again the third day. Nor was Josephus ignorant of numberless other wonderful predictions uttered beforehand by the holy prophets concerning Christ. He further testifies that Christ brought over many to Himself both Greeks and Jews, who continued to love Him, and that the people named after Him had not become extinct. It appears to me that in narrating these things, he all but proclaims that Christ, by comparison of works, is God. As if struck by the miracle, he ran, somehow, a middle course, assailing in no way those who believed in Jesus, but rather agreeing with them.

When I consider this matter it seems reasonably remarkable to me, that the Hebrews did not anticipate, and, before the rest of men, immediately turn to Christianity; for though the Sibyl and some oracles announced beforehand the future of events concerning Christ we are not on this account to attribute unbelief to all the Greeks. For they were few, who, appearing superior in education, could understand such prophecies, which were, for the most part, in verse, and were declared with more recondite words to the people. Therefore in my judgment, it was the result of the heavenly preknowledge, for the sake of the agreement in future events, that the coming facts were to be made known, not only by his own prophets, but in part also by strangers. Just as a musician, under pressure of a strange melody, may treat the superfluous tones of the chords lightly with his plectrum, or add others to those already existing.

Having now shown that the Hebrews, although in the possession of numerous and more distinct prophecies concerning the coming of Christ, were less willing than the Greeks to embrace the faith that is in Him, let what has been said on the subject suffice. Yet let it by no means be hence accounted contrary to reason that the church should have been mainly built up by the conversion of other nations; for in the first place, it is evident that, in divine and great affairs, God delights to bring to pass changes in a marvelous manner; and then, be it remembered, it was by the exercise of no common virtues that those who, at the very beginning, were at the head of religious affairs, maintained their influence. If they did not, indeed, possess a language sharpened for expression or for beauty of diction, nor the power of convincing their hearers by means of phrases or mathematical demonstrations, yet they did not the less accomplish the work they had undertaken. They gave up their property, neglected their kindred, were stretched upon a cross, and as if endowed with bodies not their own, suffered many and excruciating tortures; neither seduced by the adulation of the people and rulers of any city, nor terrified by their menaces, they clearly evidenced by their conduct, that they were supported in the struggle by the hope of a high reward. So that they, in fact needed not to resort to verbal arguments; for without any effort on their part, their very deeds constrained the inhabitants of every house and of every city to give credit to their testimony, even before they knew wherein it consisted.

The Preface of the Book, in which he investigates the History of the Jewish...
Since then so divine and marvelous a change has taken place in the circumstances of men, that ancient cults and national laws have fallen into contempt; since many of the most celebrated writers among the Greeks have tasked their powers of eloquence in describing the Calydonian boar, the bull of Marathon and other similar prodigies, which have really occurred in countries or cities, or have a mystic origin, why should not I rise above myself, and write a history of the Church? For I am persuaded that, as the topic is not the achievements of men, it may appear almost incredible that such a history should be written by me; but, with God, nothing is impossible.

I at first felt strongly inclined to trace the course of events from the very commencement; but on reflecting that similar records of the past up to their own time had been compiled by those wisest of men, Clemens and Hegesippus, successors of the apostles, by Africanus the historian, and by Eusebius, surnamed Pamphilus, a man intimately acquainted with the sacred Scriptures and the writings of the Greek poets and historians, I merely draw up an epitome in two books of all that is recorded to have happened to the churches, from the ascension of Christ to the deposition of Licinius. Now, however, by the help of God, I will endeavor to relate the subsequent events as well.

