

I guess it's glad to know that I'm not the only person that's getting stonewalled by FOIA officers. Ohio State and the DoE are pretty much ignoring me. I know this isn't legal for them to do, but is there any way to make them cooperate?

Yes, once you have exhausted your FOIA appeals you can file a simple lawsuit in the Southern District downtown and ask a judge to force them to give you what you want.... Like Judicial Watch has done. Those lawsuits are not complicated or that time consuming.

So, if I'm reading this situation correctly, there's an unholy alliance between OSU, the Fed Govt, and Silicon Valley. OSU fired Jon to protect their asses from Title IX (Title IX was stalling their plan to implement MOOC in a 12-university consortium. They needed a quick-end scapegoat... Jon was at hand), which would then allow them to proceed with getting in bed with Silicon Valley. Do you know if the Title IX investigation was a strong arm tactic or a dog and pony show? Excuse to close it. Face saving for feds. I can't seem to figure out which one, but I'm leaning towards the latter.

Regarding Silicon Valley, did OSU reach out to Silicon Valley people and lure them here or did Silicon Valley come here with their checkbooks open? Silicon Valley/Wall Street descended on OSU from about 2002 on when Leader's code was "discovered" by the Battelle crowd. It's not only OSU, but the city of Columbus too. Have you seen this <http://www.theatlantic.com/business/archive/2014/10/when-collaboration-is-more-than-a-buzzword/381580/> ? Collaboration is code word for cronyism. There are a lot of health companies involved, so I'm sure it ties into what you're saying about OSU's medical center. Yes, I am pretty positive about that. "It's about the information, Marty."

I know it's becoming a huge trend across the country for cities to try to emulate Silicon Valley, perhaps this all is a simple story of greed and the consequences that result when that greed causes people to do dumb, short-sighted things. I've seen plenty of evidence that the bureaucrats running OSU are totally unoriginal and are trying really hard to copy other institutions in a variety of avenues. Yes, the look to Kvamme, who is their guru... he stole Leader's code for LinkedIn. He hides a very big sin. He was there with Reid Hoffman and Peter Thiel. They all coached Zuckerberg. They all divided up pieces of Leader's code for different markets, teamed up with crony mutual funds for deal flow, then were off to the races. Wadsworth was sent to Columbus to facilitate the distribution of Leader's code to the three letter agencies...

There seems to be something shady going on with Stanford. Drake, Steinmetz, and Wadsworth all have ties to it. Have you found any person or organization that links all three? Yes, WellPoint, Inc. WellPoint is well-funded by the crony mutual funds. WellPoint's CMO is Drake's Stanford crony firm, Woodrow A Myers.

Did they specifically pick Drake because of his Bay Area connections? Yes, specifically his Stanford and Univ of CA loyalties, and his color....crony of Leader's thieving patent attorney, Professor James P. Chandler, who introduced Leader to Livermore Labs where Wadsworth was working. Livermore is managed by Univ of Calif. He's the hired wind up toy to get things done at Ohio State so that all our data and research is available to their crony network. Business ideas, academic ideas, medical research, everything (Massive Open Onlinr....) It seems that he was chosen for a very, very specific reason and it's not for fundraising like his predecessor. I would also bet that he was chosen before they put together their presidential search committee. Do you know anything about his selection process? Wadsworth pick. All the other trustees are either ignorant or complicit.

Not sure if this means anything, but I found this organization that Drake, Gordon Gee, and former OSU president Brit Kirwin are involved with <http://www.acenet.edu/news-room/Pages/National-Commission-on-Higher-Ed-Attainment-Membership-List.aspx> . This org interfered with Senator McCaskill's sexual assault survey <https://www.insidehighered.com/news/2014/05/13/senator-mccaskill-says-higher-ed-lobbying-group-interfered-her-sexual-assault-survey> . Haven't come across them. If Gee is involved, I'd guess this is a rival group to MOOC, the Facebook Cartel, Wall Street/Washington "progressive" insiders.

I haven't been fond of these bureaucrats since I went to school there. After graduating I felt like I had been a victim of a scam and that my money went into people's pockets instead of my education. Ever since then I've had a critical eye towards elitists. I never imagined they would be dumb enough to reveal what's going on behind the curtain. The break came with Water's firing and our investigation into Steinmetz. That led to MOOC. Then to Wadsworth/Fischer. Then, kaboom, Leader found Wadsworth's signature on a 2002 R&D agreement with Leader. A lot of previously hidden info fell into place.

My documentary is a feature length project and will take a year or longer to complete, depending on what happens with Jon Waters' case. It will be a feature similar to Enron: Smartest Guys In The Room. I would love to interview you or any of your investigators for it. I can keep your identity hidden if needed.

Interested? We'll figure out how to make something work.
