David Sarnoff: Timeline

Who was David Sarnoff, Anyway?

David Sarnoff (1891-1971) was not an inventor, an engineer, or a scientist. Instead, as a corporate manager and executive he became technology's champion, especially for broadcast communications, starting at the age of fifteen. He advocated, supported, financed, and oversaw the development of radio in the 1910s and 1920s, and then television from the 1930s through the 1950s.

Sarnoff first posed the concept of broadcast radio in 1915. At that time, more than half of the American population lived in towns of less than 5,000 people; information arrived through newspapers, magazines, mail order catalogs, letters and postcards, and word of mouth. Today, there are nearly 13,000 AM and FM radio stations in the United States, and thousands more abroad, as well as nearly 20,000 internet radio stations.

Sarnoff formally introduced RCA's electronic monochrome television system in 1939 and the world's first electronic color television system in 1946. In 2000 there were over 1,600 television stations in the United States. Only since 1990 have more households acquired complete plumbing facilities than televisions. Some 900 million people watch color TV around the world, and the color picture tube used for television and computer displays was invented at RCA Laboratories.

There is more to Sarnoff's contribution to the electronic revolution of the 20th century. He firmly believed in the possibilities of social improvement through technological progress, and supported the development of RCA's independent research laboratories. Along with Bell Labs in Murray Hill, New Jersey, the RCA Labs in Princeton were responsible for inventing or innovating nearly every device that enabled the birth of Silicon Valley, Asia's dominance of the electronics industry, and the Digital Revolution, from video displays to the integrated circuit, from electron microscopy to CCD cameras. David Sarnoff and RCA can be regarded as basic ingredients of the Second Industrial Revolution in electronics and chemistry, a revolution that continues to play out around the world today.

The David Sarnoff Library

Home | Library Online | Site Map | Membership | Giving | Shop | About Us |

Welcome

The David Sarnoff Library has closed the doors at its original location. The Sarnoff Collection is now open nearby at the College of New Jersey, and we encourage you to visit its wonderful exhibits.

The Hagley Library in Wilmington Delaware is cataloging nearly 3,000 linear feet of archival collections related to RCA and David Sarnoff, and we encourage you to track its progress, or visit and use the archives.

This website now serves as a virtual testament to the David Sarnoff Library and is maintained as a "labor of love" by Alex Magoun and Dave Sica.

The David Sarnoff Library documents David Sarnoff's life; the history of radio, television, electronics, and communications; and the history of the Radio Corporation of America (RCA). Incorporated as the David Sarnoff Collection, Inc., an unendowed 501(c)(3) non-profit organization, the Library is located in Princeton, New Jersey. It is devoted to the study and understanding of the innovative spirit personified in the greatest technological visionary of the 20th century and realized in the accomplishments of Radio Corporation of America (RCA) employees at laboratories, factories, and offices in New Jersey and around the world.

Built in 1967 by RCA, the David Sarnoff Library contains a museum, an archives, a library, and this website. Besides Mr. Sarnoff's papers and memorabilia, the Library's holdings include 25,000 photographs and thousands of notebooks, reports, publications, and artifacts related to the histories of RCA Laboratories and RCA. At this site you will find exhibits, timelines, galleries, links, and references documenting

- David Sarnoff's life;
- RCA, Victor Talking Machine Company, and the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America;
- The history of radio, television, broadcasting, audio and video recording and reproduction, electron microscopy, radar, electron (vacuum) tubes, transistors, solid-state physics, semiconductors, lasers, liquid-crystal displays, integrated circuits, microprocessors, computers, communications satellites, and other technologies RCA played an important role in inventing and developing;

- Some of the many people beside Mr. Sarnoff who made these technologies work.

With this material you can satisfy your curiosity, indulge your interests, gather information, or consider some of the themes and questions in the history and business of innovation:

- What is an innovator, an entrepreneur, an inventor, a genius?
- What is a basic invention, an innovation, a disruptive technology?
- What is required to make an idea a successful product and how long does that process take?
- Who pays for the process of innovation?
- How much innovation is good for a society?
- What are the roles of patents and monopolies in encouraging or discouraging innovation?
- How do those roles change under different circumstances?
- What's the difference between science and technology?
- Does that distinction change over time?
- Can there be a "lone inventor" of a technological system?
- What is the relationship between "lone inventors" and institutional inventors?
- Can "lone inventors" exist or thrive in a corporate environment?
- What are the advantages and disadvantages of corporate research and development (R&D)?
- How do corporations change the nature and goals of R&D in response to economic, political, cultural, scientific, and technological changes?

We and our sponsors would like to know who uses this site, why, and what else you would like to see on it; please email us with your comments. Rest assured that any information you offer about yourself will not be distributed beyond the Library.
