The TV investigator who exposed Jimmy Savile has claimed there are two other high-profile paedophiles 'on the prowl.'

Mark Williams-Thomas, who exposed the twisted children's TV presenter, has also claimed the alleged celebrities will not be identified until after one of them dies.

Detectives have allegedly investigated the two big names, but the Crown Prosecution says there is not enough evidence to press charges.

minor crime reports, Savile's predatory crimes were not revealed until after he died, aged 84, in 2011.

Investigations into the Savile case after his death estimated he assaulted hundreds of women and children - some as young as just eight.

Much like Savile, Williams-Thomas says the two new high-profile names think they are "untouchable".

He told Media Masters podcast : "There are other people out there. there are two particular high-profile individuals that I know about who I'm convinced are sex offenders.

...this concept of the untouchable still exists. Jimmy Savile put himself in a position where he was untouchable and there are still individuals who fall into that place."
