Foundation. Annual Report 2010.

president's letter.

The poet William Blake urged his readers to see the world in a grain of sand. At the Rockefeller Foundation, we see the world in the lives of every individual impacted by our work.

This 2010 Annual Report tells the stories of eight such individuals. They come from different backgrounds and different continents, but their personal struggles and life experiences bring into stark relief some of the most pressing global challenges we face. From food insecurity in Africa to economic insecurity in America, from cities grappling with the impact of climate change and the need for sustainable transportation, the stories in this report will give you our perspective on how critical global issues impact individual lives.

Of course, these stories also illustrate solutions the Rockefeller Foundation brought to bear—and in many cases pioneered—in 2010. Here, you will read about weather-indexed crop insurance and mobile health kiosks in Africa, interactive online tools and pilot infrastructure projects in Asian cities. From public education campaigns and policymaking advice at the state and federal levels in the U.S., to path-breaking methods of harnessing private capital for social gain, the breadth of our work in 2010 was matched only by the scope of the challenges the world faced.

At the beginning of the second decade of the new millennium, the ground is shifting beneath us. The impacts of climate change are accelerating. The global population is growing rapidly and restlessly, and many are moving into cities, accelerating the pace of urbanization. Against this backdrop, the work of the Rockefeller Foundation is urgent, exciting, and continues apace. A full listing of the Foundation's 2010 grants, organized by issue area and initiative, is provided at the end of this report.

Thank you for your interest in our ever-evolving efforts to build more equitable, adaptive, and resilient societies around the world.

Sowing the Seeds of Africa's Green Revolution

seeds of renewal.

Mityana means “40 trees” in Swahili, and for years, the rural Ugandan village boasted little other greenery. Trained agronomists were scarce and many miles away, leaving local farmers like Sebulega John Bosco uninformed about agricultural best practices. For a long time, Sebulega recalls, he neglected to fertilize his bean fields at all.

That was before Annet. Supported by the Alliance for a Green Revolution in Africa (AGRA), “agro dealer” Annet Mubiru has become one of Mityana’s most precious resources, as prized as the rain. The shelves of her modest shop carry an assortment of quality seeds, fertilizers, and pesticides. But Annet herself may be the most valuable asset, a trained agricultural adviser offering guidance to the community’s smallholders. Thanks to Annet’s suggestions and supplies, Sebulega increased his crop yield 150 percent, to 2.5 tons per acre. Mityana’s 40 trees now shelter a healthier, heartier harvest.¹

A Growing Problem

Unfortunately, the vast majority of sub-Saharan Africa's 570 million small farmers² have not been as successful as Sebulega. Where Sebulega and the rest of Mityana have ready access to agricultural advice and customized supplies, millions of others must trek many kilometers to the nearest agro dealer. Once there, they frequently find industrial-sized packages of seeds and other supplies too costly and heavy to bring home. Their fields lie fallow, failing.

Sub-Saharan Africa's rapidly increasing population has outgrown traditional farming systems, threatening the income and food security of millions. Two-thirds of the region³ consists of isolated agricultural communities, consigned to lives of extreme hardship and low-yield subsistence farming. Roughly one in three sub-Saharan Africans is undernourished,⁴ and the only thing growing reliably is the number of people in poverty.

A Foundation for Farming Reform

In 2006, the Rockefeller Foundation partnered with The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation to create the Alliance for a Green Revolution in Africa (AGRA), an Africa-based and African-led organization committed to sustainably increasing the productivity and profitability of small-scale farms across Africa. Chaired by former United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan and working in 13 countries,⁵ AGRA's concerted, system-wide approach has led to tremendous gains in the quantity and quality of crops by producing new seed varieties, new systems of water management and enhanced soil fertility, and more recently a Market Access Program enabling smallholders to better market what they produce. By building new storage and processing facilities, and giving farmers the tools to compete in the regional and global marketplace, AGRA's market program is projected to result in a 50 percent increase in income and a 50 percent decrease in food insecurity for farming families.⁶

In the next decade, AGRA aims to cut food insecurity in half in 20 African countries, and double the incomes of 20 million small farmers.⁷

Reviving the Revolution

It was the genius of field agricultural scientists like Norman Borlaug—funded by Rockefeller Foundation investments—that unleashed the Green Revolution in Central America and Asia, credited with saving a billion lives.⁸ Simply shrinking a stalk of wheat dramatically grew crop yields and incomes. Over half a century later, the Rockefeller Foundation remains just as dedicated to the belief that productivity growth is a powerful driver of poverty reduction.

Innovative, integrated initiatives like AGRA reach across all sectors of society, leveraging the power of individuals—whether farmers, agricultural researchers, or government officials—to make smarter use of global resources. As Mityana flourishes, as the world works to address the disparities of the 21st century, the Rockefeller Foundation will continue to focus on food security, and AGRA will be part of the answer.

Driving Sustainable and Equitable Transportation Policy

the cost of a commute.

In 2006, buying an SUV and moving to the San Francisco suburbs made sense for Darren. Then he lost his full-time job as a security guard and took two part-time jobs, driving further, seven days a week, for a smaller salary. Public transit cannot get Darren to where he needs to go. The roads and bridges he travels are among the most structurally deficient in the nation,¹ causing delays and costing additional fuel. Every month Darren spends $500 for gas, $515 for car payments, $80 for insurance, and $180 for tolls—over half his salary just commuting to work—and gas prices could rise precipitously at any time.²

A driver with a story like Darren's sits in many of the cars around him on his frustrating morning commute. Each year, traffic takes a toll beyond the tollbooth, costing Americans 4.2 billion hours and $87 billion in productivity and wasted fuel.³ Middle-class households spend more on their cars and gas than on taxes and healthcare.⁴ It is the second highest expense for American families, and the highest for lower income households, who spend a staggering 30 percent of their income on transportation.⁵

The aging transportation infrastructure in the United States fails to service areas where it is desperately needed, lagging woefully behind other countries at great cost to American competitiveness. One out of every nine U.S. bridges needs serious structural repair.⁶ Meanwhile over the last decade, China has invested $3.3 trillion in cutting-edge infrastructure,⁷ much of it in public transportation that is fuel-efficient and gets people to where the jobs are. But instead of meeting these challenges—ensuring that U.S. transportation policy is thoughtful, sustainable, and equitable—Congress is as gridlocked as the roads. When it comes to the systems that help us get where we're going, the U.S. has no focused, financed plan for where it's headed—and, like Darren and millions of commuters, we're going nowhere fast.

Promoting Direction and Drive

The Rockefeller Foundation is working to provide the direction and drive needed to build a 21st century transportation system. In 2010, Rockefeller's Transportation Initiative funded a scenario-planning exercise for key stakeholders to map creative paths toward federal legislative reform in transportation policy. Rockefeller is working closely with policymakers at the state and local level, where significant transportation investments are made. And in September 2010, a Rockefeller-supported campaign to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from cars through expanded public transit achieved a major milestone when the California Air Resources Board approved aggressive standards for the state.

Rockefeller is also committed to increasing the American public's awareness of our transportation crisis. Through a Rockefeller grant, PBS produced and aired a 90-minute documentary, "Beyond the Motor City," which outlined the decline of the transportation infrastructure and the vital importance of rebuilding it. Another Rockefeller-funded initiative, the interactive "Energy Trap" website, highlights stories—including Darren's—to illustrate America's harmful gasoline dependency. To translate awareness into action, Rockefeller also helped launch Transit Score, a free online tool that rates homes in 140 U.S. cities based on their proximity to public transportation. The wheels of reform turn slowly, but Rockefeller is increasing the torque through these and other transportation innovations.

Rebuilding a Path to the American Dream

When John D. Rockefeller established the Rockefeller Foundation in 1913, the U.S. was rapidly industrializing. As Rockefeller grew, the foundation directed part of its energies toward the thoughtful planning of this fantastic growth, especially as it impacted cities. When a self-taught urban theorist named Jane Jacobs applied for a grant in 1958, Rockefeller recognized her passion and vision, leading to the creation of the field of urban design.

Among Jane Jacobs' many insights was the belief that, as she put it, "trade in ideas, services, skills and personnel, and certainly in goods, demands efficient, fluid transportation and communication."⁸ That belief guides Rockefeller's commitment to smart transportation policy today. Transportation infrastructure does not just move people from one place to another; it is a path to the middle class dream in countries around the world.

Building Strong Systems for Healthy Communities

on the ground innovation.

India is home to countless global call centers, but residents of the state of Bihar could not easily call an ambulance in emergencies. A sick child or injured worker had to contact a specific hospital, or even dial the ambulance driver's mobile phone—information that was very difficult to obtain. Five years ago, the municipal government and a local computer company created a 24-hour call center integrating existing ambulances into a single network. Now, 102 Ambulance Call Centre puts life-saving transportation just three digits away.¹

On a different continent, Dr. Sam Gwer wrestled with a related obstacle. Health services were few and far between in rural Kenya, where even a simple check-up often meant traveling long distances and forfeiting a day's pay. How, then, to provide adequate medical care to communities unable to sustain full clinics? Dr. Gwer's solution: a set of locally-run health kiosks, M-Afya Kiosks, dispensing basic health services and serving as a first line of defense for ailing Kenyans.²

There are countless stories like these in the developing world—stories of limited access to health care, and new innovations that can dramatically improve health care outcomes. But even as global health spending has increased dramatically, access to healthcare remains a distant dream for millions in the developing world. Achieving healthy communities will largely depend on strengthening health systems—the networks of people, organizations, and governments committed to promoting physical wellbeing—yet global health efforts have primarily targeted specific populations and diseases. These medical advances are vitally important, but it is equally imperative to improve countries' capacities to reach all their citizens for health care.

Because of inadequate coverage and patchwork health systems, the cost of illness is compounded. Travel to doctors and the cost of medicine—on top of work lost due to ill health—take its toll. The world's poorest people pay the highest percentage of their income for health, yet end up with neither. Each year, catastrophic health expenditures force 25 million households into poverty,³ while nearly 10 million children and half a million women die from treatable causes.⁴ We are failing to cover the costs of care at the cost of human life and prosperity.

Strengthening Systems

Only 40 percent of the global population benefits from some form of health coverage. That's why Rockefeller Foundation's Transforming Health Systems (THS) initiative is committed to broadening access to affordable health services in developing countries, with the ultimate goal of doubling by 2020 the number of people achieving close to universal coverage. Throughout 2010, Rockefeller made more than $17.5 million in grants to engage local entrepreneurs, public and private organizations, and global health experts to focus on strengthening or changing approaches in critical but neglected areas: health systems stewardship, e- and mobile health approaches, and private sector integration.

Both the 102 Ambulance Call Centre and Dr. Gwer's M-Afya Kiosks are part of the Rockefeller-funded Center for Health Market Innovations, which consolidates and disseminates information about creative new approaches to health systems. Along with the World Health Organization, the Public Health Foundation of India, and the William A. Haseltine Foundation, Rockefeller is collecting, analyzing, and implementing these innovations, which are being promoted at high-level symposia and on the ground throughout the developing world.

A Public Health Dynamo

From the beginning, Rockefeller has been committed to creative, holistic thinking in the field of public health. Rockefeller researchers at the world's first schools of public health—established by Rockefeller—were dogged in fighting malaria, polio, and countless other public health threats. Today, a century later, Rockefeller continues to devote its resources and energy to strengthening the systems through which life-saving treatments flow, and making access more available and affordable.

Detecting Disease

symptoms unknown.

A few miles outside Phnom Penh, a young boy lies in bed, his illness unknown and his parents fearful. Their village has never seen anything like it. Within a week, dozens of people are hospitalized with similar symptoms. Halfway around the world, a group of doctors go about their business, knowing how to treat this disease, but not knowing about its spread in Cambodia. With no network to transfer critical infectious disease information, without open lines of communication, thousands more fall sick. The “new” disease becomes an unchecked pandemic. By the time the right expertise is brought to bear on the problem, it’s too late—the disease has spread around the globe.

In a world of global trade and travel, what’s traded fastest and travels furthest are the microbes in every handshake. Southeast Asia, with its 600 million people and large poultry trade, has been recognized by the World Health Organization as a global hotspot for emerging infectious diseases.¹ When Hong Kong suffered a nine-month outbreak of SARS—severe acute respiratory syndrome—in 2002, it killed nearly 1,000 of the roughly 8,500 infected.² Outbreaks such as avian influenza in Southeast Asia, and Rift Valley Fever in East Africa, can cost countries 2–5% of GDP, in addition to the price paid in human lives.³

The potential pandemics of the past few decades have severely tested the world’s ability to work across human borders. Detection remains weak in many parts of the world. The public health response has frequently been slow and fragmented. The looming threat of infectious disease presents humanity with a new challenge: to communicate and collaborate swifter and with greater efficiency than ever before.

Integration Across Regions and Countries

The Rockefeller Foundation has invested $22 million in its Disease Surveillance Networks Initiative to help contain the spread of infectious diseases and pandemics by strengthening national, regional and global disease surveillance and response systems. Two key Rockefeller programs—the Mekong Basin Disease Surveillance Network and the East African Integrated Disease Surveillance Network—have connected and empowered health care workers, epidemiologists and public health officials throughout the region, leading to a six-fold increase in cross-border disease surveillance sites over the last three years alone. In 2010, Rockefeller expanded on the successful, trans-disciplinary One Health campaign, which USAID and the Asia Development Bank have adopted as models. One Health refers to the integration of medical and veterinary science to tackle these new varieties of zoonotic diseases that move and mutate rapidly from animals to humans. These collaborations have created and strengthened a critical public health regional network, while the lessons learned have been exported across disciplines and countries.

In addition to improving global public health ties, Rockefeller has helped raise the level of expertise and training on the ground. The Field Epidemiology Training Program places graduates in the top levels of government in Laos and Vietnam, while Rockefeller grants have transformed the tools available to doctors, allowing them to harness the power of the Internet to communicate and monitor events, understand local contexts, and analyze new problems. At last, we are applying 21st century tools to combat 21st century health challenges.

A Legacy of Building Bridges

The Rockefeller Foundation is dedicated to harnessing globalization's power to spread expertise and foster collaboration across the globe. With barriers falling, and products, people, and ideas moving faster than ever, Rockefeller has worked to connect health care practitioners, policy makers, and veterinarians in every region. As illustrated by the emerging pandemics of this new century—SARS, avian flu, and swine flu—if we don't move quickly, viruses will. By continuing our drive to invest in systems that coordinate efforts and share information, the Rockefeller Foundation is working to ensure that we have the ability to meet the health challenges of an interconnected world.

Working for a Stronger Safety Net

lifesaving savings.

Like millions of American workers, Teresa struggles to make ends meet. She enjoys her job as an aide in the children's unit of a psychiatric facility, and she works hard. Teresa's daughter dreams of going to college, and Teresa dreams of sending her there. But for Teresa, living paycheck-to-paycheck means that financial security—let alone college for her daughter—remains a distant dream.¹

A new income tax innovation is helping people like Teresa. In 2010, the IRS began to allow taxpayers to check a box on their returns to automatically set aside a portion of their refund for long-term savings. Developed by the Rockefeller-supported Doorway to Dreams Fund, the checkbox savings initiative incentivizes “impulse saving” at the moment low-income workers receive their refunds. Portable, transferable savings bonds offer stability and high interest rates to families struggling to save, and they are just one way in which Doorway to Dreams is enabling families to achieve newfound economic security. Teresa has begun putting away $50 each month—savings that one day may help finance her daughter's education.

Teresa's precarious situation highlights the breakdown of the American social contract at a time of growing economic dislocation. Competition in the global economy has led to the erosion of employer-based benefits, threatening family stability and retirement security. As long-term unemployment persists—the highest since the Depression²—unemployment insurance is running out. Economic shocks require resilience, but today's workers save only a third of what their parents did,³ and have little to fall back on as a result.

These problems are compounded by a surprising shortage of robust, reliable data on the economic insecurity of American workers. As policymakers engage in heated battles over the future of unemployment benefits, Social Security, and health insurance, no index exists to gauge the most important factors determining the economic security of the average American worker. We are flying blind in economic storm clouds that will not clear for the foreseeable future.

Strengthening Worker Wellbeing

To repair the fraying edges of our social safety net, the Rockefeller Foundation has focused on developing quality data and utilizing it to promote evidence-based policy discussions. Supporting researchers at Yale University has led to the development of the Economic Security Index (ESI), which will help address the lack of uniform measurement and understanding of economic security. Another Rockefeller project created a survey seeking to better gauge attitudes towards Social Security and ways to strengthen it for vulnerable populations.

Building on this knowledge base, Rockefeller has established collaborative partnerships for policy reform across a spectrum of worker issues. In addition to the Doorway to Dreams Fund that's helping Teresa, Rockefeller has worked closely with groups advocating expanded access to retirement savings, green jobs for low-income workers, and benefits for independent workers.

Begun in 2009, Rockefeller and the National Employment Law Project have partnered to provide the critical support and technical expertise in 2010 that is needed to keep our gravely threatened unemployment insurance solvent and available for workers. Through these initiatives, Rockefeller intends to help safeguard and strengthen the wellbeing of our workers.

An Opportunity to Make a Living

Our founder, John D. Rockefeller, once stated his belief that “the world owes no man a living,” but “it owes every man an opportunity to make a living.”⁴ In many ways, that has been our guiding principle as we fight to restore and revitalize our nation’s compact with its workers. For the 21st century American, the opportunity to make a living calls for building personal savings, improving retirement security, ensuring secure and portable healthcare coverage, and protecting vulnerable workers from economic shocks. The work of millions of Americans undergirds the success of our country, and we believe it is essential to ensure their dignity and livelihood.

Innovating Within and Across Institutions

finding innovative solutions.

Convicted British criminals are sent to the Peterborough Prison, 75 miles north of London, and after serving their time, they are released. Within one year, six in ten find themselves behind bars again.¹ Other British prisons see similar—staggeringly high—recidivism rates. Instead of rehabilitation, felons experience an endless cycle of incarceration.

Now, a UK-based nonprofit, Social Finance Ltd., is trying to break that cycle. With contributions from the Rockefeller Foundation and other investors,² Social Finance is brokering funding from retail investors for social programs that studies show is helping former prisoners find employment and rebuild their lives and thus reduce recidivism. Social Finance has struck a deal with the British government; if the private social programs funded by investors can measurably reduce recidivism, the government will repay Social Finance's investors back with interest. If these private programs fail to meet certain benchmarks, the government pays nothing. It's an intriguing new compact between the private and public sectors—a “social impact bond”—and it could go a long way toward tackling social ills.³

Even when we know problems are being adequately addressed, changing is challenging. Recently, the Obama administration successfully implemented a federal home nursing program—33 years after studies demonstrated its effectiveness.⁴ Some of the most creative, well validated and potentially ground-breaking approaches to intractable societal issues languish in think tanks or Congress, lacking support or political will. Money is tight, especially in these times, and new solutions mean diverting funds from existing programs with no guarantee of success. It's tough to innovate on the taxpayer's dime.

Paying for Success

By transferring risk from the taxpayer to the investor, social impact bonds hold the promise of implementing innovative, results oriented, and cost effective solutions.

The social sector innovates and tests, and the government rewards measurable gains. These are “pay for success” bonds, and their widespread application could lead to tremendous improvements, from increasing kindergarten readiness to decreasing hospital readmissions for the chronically ill.

Understanding the potential of social impact bonds, Rockefeller was a cornerstone investor in Social Finance for their Peterborough Prison pilot.⁵ The Foundation has since committed to promoting social impact bonds in the U.S., funding the Nonprofit Finance Fund to create an online information-sharing platform.⁶ These efforts have created a great deal of publicity and interest; the governments of Minnesota and Massachusetts are exploring social impact bonds, and President Obama has proposed setting aside $100 million for seven pilot programs.⁷

A Century of Innovation

The Rockefeller Foundation has always devoted itself to the pursuit of paradigm-changing approaches to societal challenges. Some of Rockefeller's most successful and gratifying initiatives have taken place by moving freely between the social, private and public sectors, seeding capital, ideas, and solutions. Social impact bonds are just another means to harness the respective advantages of each sector. They formalize and catalyze the bonds between all of us, stakeholders in a new century.

Building Climate Change Resilience

from country to city.

The sun beats down on Suranga and her five children, as they trudge toward the speck of city in the distance. It's hot—much hotter than in previous years—and the children are wilting like the grain the family grew until recently. The great monsoons, called “India’s finance minister” for their critical role in determining crop yields and global commodities prices, come more erratically now, starving some villages and flooding others.¹ Abandoning the family’s ancestral community was hard, but not as hard as survival had become. In the city, the mother wants to believe, all will be secure and successful.

That urban utopia never materializes. Swallowed up by the city, the family finds itself facing new challenges, a different kind of precarious existence. Their fellow migrants throng the thoroughfares, competing for food, water, and jobs. Open sewage carries disease among the densely-packed people. When the next flood comes, chaos will ensue. Despairing, the mother sees that the consequences of the changing climate loom as large in the city as in the country. The right response, she realizes, is not relocation, but becoming more resilient.

An Inescapable Dilemma

As global temperatures rise, sea levels, the frequency and intensity of natural disasters, and agricultural upheaval will rise as well. Crop yields in sub-Saharan Africa are projected to fall 10–20 percent by 2050,² at a time when the region's population will surpass even India's explosive growth.³ By mid-century, the U.N. estimates that climate change will have displaced more than 150 million environmental refugees—including 23 million in the U.S. alone.

They will seek salvation in cities. Already in the developing world, 1 million people are moving to urban centers every five days.⁴ The fastest-growing metropolis in the world—the Chinese coastal city of Beihai—is set to double its population of 1.3 million within just seven years.⁵ By 2050, nine out of ten Americans will live in urban areas.⁶ There, the same climate impacts that drove people into cities will wreak havoc on these dense pockets of humanity. We cannot outrun the problem.

Across the developing world, the pressure on cities to build new industrial, commercial, residential and transport infrastructure has often relegated social and environmental risks and vulnerabilities to the background. While ignoring these perils may have been politically expedient or economically justifiable in the past, the onset of rapid urbanization and climate change compel us to adopt a radically different approach for the future.

Reinforcing Resilience

The Rockefeller Foundation has devoted a significant portion of its work to ensuring that as the effects of climate change are increasingly felt, rural and urban settings alike have implemented strategies to withstand and surmount adverse impacts. Through partnerships with nonprofits and policy experts across the world, Rockefeller is reinforcing resilience.

In sub-Saharan Africa, Rockefeller and its partners are advocating and testing climate adaptation strategies, implementing a weather-indexed crop insurance program, analyzing aid effectiveness, and funding agricultural resilience research. In Asia—where the population is simultaneously the most vulnerable to climate change and the most rapidly urbanizing—Rockefeller has created the Asian Cities Climate Change Resilience Network (ACCCRN) to build robust response mechanisms into infrastructure, water delivery, and healthcare systems. Expanding on successful pilot programs in 10 cities across India, Vietnam, Indonesia, and Thailand, Rockefeller is partnering with donors as well as organizations like Mercy Corps to identify additional cities in which to pioneer replicable models of environmental resilience. In the U.S., Rockefeller and the Resource Innovation Group have launched the Climate Preparedness Learning and Adaptation Network to synthesize resilience models into coherent, executable policy.

The Urban Imperative

When it comes to building the social capital necessary for true resilience, perhaps the most critical lesson to emerge from ACCCRN is that it will take a massive shift in mindset in three respects: first, we need to move from a deeply siloed system of urban management to one in which integration and interdependencies are central to decision-making and coordination; second, we must shift from a culture of planning based on the need for certainty to one in which there is a dynamic capacity to absorb new and changing information on a continuous basis; and third, we need to invest in the understanding that building truly resilient cities in the 21st century requires the resolve to take a series of small steps and solutions—generated through dialogue across and between sectors and actors—to address a broad range of challenges.

Situated for a century at the heart of one of the world's great cities, the Rockefeller Foundation has always made a profound and enduring commitment to enhancing the wellbeing of the urban environment and its people. The effects of a changing climate have only heightened the urgency of these efforts, as it is the urban areas of the world where poverty and climate threats meet and run rampant. Knowing that climate consequences are coming, we have a responsibility to prepare and protect the world's most at-risk populations.

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION'S MISSION TO PROMOTE THE WELL-BEING OF PEOPLE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD HAS REMAINED UNCHANGED SINCE ITS FOUNDING IN 1913. TODAY, THAT MISSION IS APPLIED TO AN ERA OF RAPID GLOBALIZATION. OUR VISION IS THAT THIS CENTURY WILL BE ONE IN WHICH GLOBALIZATION'S BENEFITS ARE MORE WIDELY SHARED AND ITS CHALLENGES ARE MORE EASILY WEATHERED. TO REALIZE THIS VISION, THE FOUNDATION SEEKS TO ACHIEVE TWO FUNDAMENTAL GOALS IN OUR WORK. FIRST, WE SEEK TO BUILD RESILIENCE THAT ENHANCES INDIVIDUAL, COMMUNITY AND INSTITUTIONAL CAPACITY TO SURVIVE, ADAPT, AND GROW IN THE FACE OF ACUTE CRISES AND CHRONIC STRESSES. SECOND, WE SEEK TO PROMOTE GROWTH WITH EQUITY IN WHICH THE POOR AND VULNERABLE HAVE MORE ACCESS TO OPPORTUNITIES THAT IMPROVE THEIR LIVES. IN ORDER TO ACHIEVE THESE GOALS, THE FOUNDATION CONSTRUCTS ITS WORK INTO TIME-BOUND INITIATIVES THAT HAVE DEFINED OBJECTIVES AND STRATEGIES FOR IMPACT. THESE INITIATIVES ADDRESS CHALLENGES THAT LIE EITHER WITHIN OR AT THE INTERSECTIONS OF FIVE ISSUE AREAS: BASIC SURVIVAL SAFEGUARDS, GLOBAL HEALTH, ENVIRONMENT AND CLIMATE CHANGE, URBANIZATION, AND SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC SECURITY. CURRENT INITIATIVES, AS WELL AS AREAS BEING EXPLORED FOR FUTURE INITIATIVES, ARE DESCRIBED ON THE FOUNDATION'S WEB SITE AT WWW.ROCKEFELLERFOUNDATION.ORG, WHICH IS CONTINUALLY UPDATED. EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY GRANTS AND PRIS

GENERAL EXPLANATION

STATEMENT 32

THE FOLLOWING TEXT RELATES TO THE STATEMENT 21, THE EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY STATEMENT, IN RESPONSE TO PART VII-B, LINE 5C.

PROSPECTIVE GRANTEEES ARE ASKED TO FURNISH INFORMATION IN ORDER TO ENABLE THE FOUNDATION TO DETERMINE WHETHER THEY HAVE RECEIVED A DETERMINATION OF 501(C)(3) STATUS FROM THE U.S. INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE OR MAY BE CONSIDERED THE EQUIVALENT OF A TAX-EXEMPT CHARITY, IF FORMED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES. PROSPECTIVE GRANTEEES WITH RESPECT TO WHOM THE FOUNDATION IS BELIEVED TO HAVE "EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY" OBLIGATIONS ARE INFORMED BY LETTER, BEFORE PAYMENT IS MADE ON A GRANT, OF THE RESPONSIBILITIES IMPOSED UPON THE FOUNDATION AND ITS GRANTEEES BY THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986, AS AMENDED. EACH GRANTEE MUST AGREE IN WRITING TO THOSE TERMS AND CONDITIONS, INCLUDING THE OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL AND SUBSTANTIVE REPORTS ON HOW FOUNDATION GRANT FUNDS ARE EXPENDED. THE REPORTS THAT ARE RECEIVED ARE REVIEWED FOR GENERAL ACCURACY, SUFFICIENCY AND COMPLIANCE WITH THE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF THE GRANT. ADDITIONAL INFORMATION IS REQUESTED FROM GRANTEEES IN INSTANCES WHERE REPORTS ARE CONSIDERED INADEQUATE. WHERE THE FOUNDATION HAS NOT RECEIVED FINANCIAL OR SUBSTANTIVE REPORTS FROM A GRANTEE WHEN EXPECTED, FOUNDATION STAFF FOLLOW UP IN SEVERAL WAYS, INCLUDING REMINDERS THAT ARE SENT AT REGULAR INTERVALS AFTER REPORTS ARE EXPECTED AND PERSONAL FOLLOW-UP BY PROGRAM STAFF THROUGH TELEPHONE, MAIL AND E-MAIL.

THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT LISTS GRANT AND PROGRAM-RELATED INVESTMENT EXPENDITURES WITH RESPECT TO WHICH THE FOUNDATION HAS EXERCISED EXPENDITURE RESPONSIBILITY. WHERE THE GRANTEE'S NAME IS FOLLOWED BY AN ASTERISK (*), THE GRANTEE ORGANIZATION IS EITHER A PRIVATE FOUNDATION, A PRIVATE OPERATING FOUNDATION, OR A FOREIGN PRIVATE-FOUNDATION EQUIVALENT. ALL OTHER GRANTEEES ARE NON-501(C)(3) ORGANIZATIONS OR ORGANIZATIONS FOR WHICH THE FOUNDATION HAS NOT MADE A REASONABLE DETERMINATION OF 501(C)(3) EQUIVALENCY STATUS THAT RECEIVED GRANTS FOR CHARITABLE PROJECTS AND MAINTAINED PAYMENTS IN SEGREGATED FUNDS AS REQUIRED BY TREASURY REG. 53.4945-6(C).

THE DATES OF THE REPORTS SHOWN ARE EITHER FINANCIAL REPORTS OR NARRATIVE REPORTS. IF A PARTICULAR GRANT EXPENDITURE IS SHOWN TO HAVE BEEN FULLY EXPENDED BY THE GRANTEE BUT THE FOUNDATION HAS NOT YET RECEIVED ONE OR MORE NARRATIVE REPORTS, THE FOUNDATION WILL REPORT ON THE STATUS OF THE EXPENDITURE ON OUR 2012 990-PF. UNLESS OTHERWISE NOTED, THE REPORTS RECEIVED WERE FOUND TO BE IN ORDER AND TO SHOW THAT THE FUNDS WERE FULLY EXPENDED FOR THE PURPOSE OF THE GRANT.

REPORTING STATUS IS AS OF 10/15/12.
